16 WEEKS OF TV PLAYING TIME

TV's Choice Sat. Nite Most Direct Challenge to B.O.

Television is challenging films for the choicest entertainment night of the week. Video networks are massing their heaviest talent and production forces in a concentrated onslaught to keep the public at home on Saturday nights. Result is expected to be a head-on collision with exhibitors, who have traditionally counted on that night, with its teen-age dating and family sorties to the nabe filmeries, as their best of the week.

While TV's actual impact on the film boxoffice is still a matter of speculation among most exhibs, the new video emphasis on Saturday night programming may provide them with a yardstick to determine exactly how much TV is responsible for the current attendance slump. Recent surveys have revealed that Saturday is the one night when video setowners still go out most often for their entertainment. If that now turns into the loneliest night of the week for exhibs, the blame can only be placed on TV's competition.

Swing towards Saturday night might also prove the acid test for

COIN-OPERATED TV, JUKE COMM'LS KEY TO MEET

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Aside from concentrating on current problems besetting coin-machine industry, Music Operators of America will set its sights on at least two new moneymaking ideas at annual convention March 6-8 here at the Palmer House.

First question on the agenda is plausibility of setting up coin-controlled television in taverns. Second is possibility of installing commercials in jukeboxes, to be played while machine is idle. Both are in for intensive discussion.

Key item of current problems will be a report by Sidney Levine, MOA national counsel, on copyright legislation which may come before Congress this year. Under such legislation, jukeboxes would be subject to copyright charges. Also scheduled are discussions on merchandising and public relations between operators and location-owners, and a programming clinic for operators. George A. Miller, MOA national chairman and trustee, arrives here tomorrow (1) to set up actual program and arrange for speakers.

New coin bills in Congress will receive attention. Operators have gone on record as supporting minting of a 7½c coin, claiming that a nickel is not enough. Also to be discussed is work of state groups to place industry under Fair Trades acts of individual states.

There will be a committee report on depreciation, and showings by 25 exhibitors. Approximately 500 operators are expected to attend.

Farmer's Generator To Rescue for Ill. Concert

Wheaton, Ill., Feb. 28.

With Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson asking legislature for a 25% cut in electric power due to the coal shortage, concert of English soprano Kathleen Ferrier scheduled here for last night (Mon.) was cancelled by local managers Friday night (24).

Singer's N. Y. manager, Columbia Artists Mgt., however, decided to meet the emergency. They engaged a portable electric generator powered by gasoline, such as the farmers use; moved it to the sidewalk outside the hall, and the concert went off last night as advertised. Artist bureau plans to do the same for its artists wherever power is cut.

Washington, Feb. 28.

Legit situation in Washington has broken wide open, with indications that two and possibly three theatres may soon be available for touring shows. On one hand, the Committee of Theatrical Producers has entered the picture in a move to take a long-term lease on the Strand there. On the other, Broadway producers Harald Bromley and Eunice Healey have taken an option on the Gayety, for the presentation of a series of recent New York hits that have not played Washington. Meanwhile the American National Theatre & Academy is continuing negotiations to lease the Belasco from the Government.

The CTP, in cooperation with ANTA, has raised $60,000 so far for the Strand deal. Gilbert Miller, treasurer of ANTA and member of the CTP, is in charge of lining up necessary finances. The idea of ANTA and the CTP is to have two regular houses for touring legit shows in the Capital. The Belasco, excellently situated but with a seating capacity of only about 1,300 or so, would be used for lighter-production straight plays, while

Gertie Lawrence Slated For R&H 'Anna' Tuner

Gertrude Lawrence is the likeliest bet to play the feminine lead in a Broadway legit-musicalized version of "Anna and the King of Siam," the Margaret Landon book which 20th-Fox filmed some years ago with Irene Dunne and Rex Harrison. Indications are that Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein, II, will do the book and score, though there's nothing definite set on that, either.

Miss Landon has expressed interest in having Cole Porter as composer of the score, though Porter's selection of the librettist would be a factor. Rodgers and

VAUDEO GROWS; LEGIT'S DITTO

The TV Circuit today is big time. The swing around the vaudeo playing dates for pop entertainers has become a booker's delight, with probably more activity focused on the TV marts in New York than on any other facet of entertainment.

On the basis of a one-shot-a-week engagement, there are now 16 weeks of major TV playing time. There hasn't been a circuit to match it since vaudeville started to hit the skids.

The swing around the TV vaude circuit now encompasses such attractions as:

Milton Berle's Texaco Star Theatre
Ed Sullivan's Toast of the Town
NBC's Saturday Night Revue
54th Street Revue
Cavalcade of Bands (for name band attractions)
Cavalcade of Stars
CBS' The Show Goes On
Abe Burrows Almanac
This Is Show Business
Inside USA With Chevrolet
Ken Murray Show
Perry Como's Chesterfield Show
ABC's Paul Whiteman Show
Bonnie Maid Show
Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts

As for dramatic actors, because of the mounting number of video dramatic shows, they are now in a position to earn a livable year's pay by concentrating on TV alone.

According to Fred Coe, exec producer of NBC-TV's "Philco Playhouse," a good supporting actor is paid from $200 to $500 for each performance and, he said, there is nothing to prevent such players from doing up to 26 shows a year.

Lead roles, of course, draw more

CHAPLIN BALLET SET FOR MARKOVA-DOLIN

London, Feb. 21.

Charles Chaplin has written a ballet for Alicia Markova and Anton Dolin, and is at present completing the music.

Title of ballet is "Death of Columbine." English dance team expects to include it in their repertoire when they return to England next month.

Dither About Zither

Capitalizing on the zither boom being cued in by Anton Karas' musical score for "The Third Man," WNEW, N. Y., will launch in three weeks a 15-minute zither stanza. Indie is auditioning the nine zither players in Local 802, American Federation of Musicians.

Problem the station faces is that while Karas plays the Austrian type of zither, some of the AFM instrumentalists use a Bavarian variation.

Plan Negro Troupe For Legitless Negro Auds

An untapped audience composed of southern Negroes may soon get a looksee at their first legit. The formation of a colored company to tour Negro sections in the south is being worked on by Warren Coleman, actor currently appearing on Broadway in "Lost in the Stars." Coleman is also angling for sponsorship of the project by a major corporation. Productions would be new and established works.

Coleman feels that at a $1 or $1.50 admission fee a large number of the Negro population would attend the offerings. Touring company would be an outgrowth of Coleman's recently organized Harlem group, Actors Theatre.

Arnall Cites Need For Pix Program In Truman Pitch

Gov. Ellis Arnall, who spent almost an hour with President Truman last week discussing film matters, said this week that the industry's next step must be preparation of a specific program for presentation to the administration to get the Government's support on international film problems.

Prexy of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers stated that he would be in touch shortly with Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Assn. of America topper, in order to get together on a group of specific requests that can be submitted to the Government. Arnall said he intends to follow through the huddle with the President by holding sessions with other Administration officials.

Arnall's confab at the White House was at the request of the President. The invitation, of course, followed considerable ground work which the former Georgia governor has carried on in Washington over the past year. That included a session with the President about a year ago, at which time Secretary of State Dean Acheson was present.

Cantor, Romberg in 40th Anni N.Y. Shows This Mo.

Two show biz vets will celebrate 40th anniversaries in their fields with special appearances in N. Y. this month.

Eddie Cantor will appear at Carnegie Hall March 21 in a personal cavalcade of songs and anecdotes, with program titled, "My 40 Years In Show Business." Sigmund Romberg will likewise bring his concert orchestra, and a quartet of vocalists, to Carnegie Hall March 17, for a typical "Evening With Romberg." Second half of the program will be devoted solely to Romberg compositions. Composer will baton the evening.

Gambling Nix Also Kayos Those Wild Fla. Cafe Salaries

Miami Beach, Feb. 28.

Florida's uncertain political situation, caused by the battle between reform and "wide-open" elements, resulted in a sudden clampdown on gaming which closed La Boheme, Hallendale, and the Golden Shore, both near Miami Beach. Loss of these cafes, plus the probable cutdown on talent buying resulting from the merger of the Beachcomber and Copa City, has forced a situation which may mean the end of the reckless talent buying in this area. Without gambling those $10,000 to $25,000 per week salaries are not justified. Furthermore, those $7.50 and $10 minimums are not as popular with the masses nowadays.

Situation is regarded as serious by the major talent offices. In fact, the William Morris Agency dispatched Sam Bramson to this resort late last week. Joe Sully,

PAR JOINS WB, RKO IN NOSTALGIC CAVALCADES

Three-cornered race among major film companies has started to cash in on the public's nostalgia via newsreel clips pieced together to make a feature. Latest derby entry is Paramount, preceded by both Warner Bros. and RKO. Par is now mapping a five-reeler which will cover the history of World War II by the use of newsreel shots and a running commentary.

Film is planned to run 50 minutes or so. It will be widely distributed in double-feature territory for the second half of a dualer. Pic will be a project of the Paramount Newsreel unit with A. J. Richard, reel editor, as producer. Richard previously brought out "World in Flames," another feature based on clips.

Film will vie with Warners' "I Can See It Now" and the March of Time feature, "The Golden Twenties," which RKO will release. The Warner pic, turned out by Warner Pathe News, draws from newsreel shots to give a sweeping story of the past 50 years. Produced by Alfred Butterfield, Richard's opposite number at WB, film will be the first feature tryout of the reel.

M of T's opus, produced by Louis de Rochemont, employs stock reel shots to depict the public well-knowns and events of the 1920s. Company releases its regular shorts through 20th but has pacted with RKO for the feature pic.

If the newsreel-feature idea clicks at the b.o., it should prove to be a heavy moneymaker. Films are figured to cost somewhere between $50,000-$100,000 since most of the footage is already in company bins and only editing and commentaries are required.

Boris Morros, Back From Moscow, Details Russia's Bullish Show Biz

Paris, Feb. 28.

Boris Morros, American indie film producer and former maestro, declared on his return to Paris from Moscow last week that he had closed a deal for sale to the Soviet of 50 independently-produced Hollywood films at $20,000 each. Arrangement also allows, he said, for the Soviet to agent the pix to satellite countries for supplementary coin subject to his approval.

(In New York both major and indie distrib execs expressed great surprise at Morros' statement. The indies individually, as well as the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, said that no proposals for sale of their films to Russia had been received from Morros.

(They opined that, at best, the Kremlin's offer of purchase was "subject to screening." That's the same as the arrangement Eric Johnston negotiated for the majors in November, 1948, when the Soviet was said to have agreed to take 20 films at $50,000 each. Difficulty in that deal is that the Russians, after scanning hundreds of pix, claim they can't find a sufficient quantity they like.)

Morros has a number of relatives in Russia, including two brothers who are reputedly high in the Kremlin hierarchy. A principal reason for his trip to Moscow, aside from seeing them, is said to have been an effort to obtain U. S. rights to Russe music in exchange for giving the Soviet rights to "Carnegie Hall," the musical pic he produced in 1947.

Morros is said to feel there is much coin to be obtained in the U. S. for the works of such world-famed composers as Khatchaturian and Shostakovitch. Their music is now played in America despite legal differences between the U. S. and Russia over copyright arrangements. Morros apparently aims to clear this up.

'Anxious?'

Morros declared that the Russians are anxious to make a deal and play American pictures, but that officials claim the arrangement made through Johnston is cold because he and Irving Maas, v.p. and general manager of the Motion Picture Export Assn., didn't give Talent Racketeer Jailed for Year in L.A.

Los Angeles, Feb. 28.

First conviction in the campaign against fake talent agents was slapped on Boone Hazlett, Indian actor, who was sentenced to a year in county jail by Judge Charles W. Fricke in Superior court.

Hazlett was found guilty of posing as a producer and nicking Mr. and Mrs. Jack Hicks for $309 under promise of getting them screen jobs. He was also ordered to return the $309.

Friars Rehearsing

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Local Friars went into rehearsal with an all-star cast for their annual Frolic, to be staged April 22 at the Shrine Auditorium.

Troupe lined up thus far consists of Bob Hope, George Jessel, Al Jolson, Broderick Crawford, Abbott and Costello, Jack Benny, Paul Douglas, Tony Martin, George Burns and Dan Dailey.

Monty Banks Leaves All to Gracie Fields

Los Angeles, Feb. 28.

Will of the late Monty Banks named his wife, Gracie Fields, as sole beneficiary of his estate, valued in excess of $200,000.

Miss Fields asked the court to appoint attorney Joseph L. Reina and the Bank of America as executors.

AVC SALUTES SAG FOR HOSPITAL SHOWS

Washington, Feb. 28.

Screen Actors Guild has been cited here by the American Veterans Committee for its work providing entertainment to hospitalized veterans. National committee of the AVC, in a meeting this week, declared for the SAG for its "magnificent record of service to hospitalized veterans of both wars." Guild entertained in every vet hospital in the U. S. during 1949 under auspices of Veterans Hospital Camp Shows.

In citing the SAG, chairman Michael Straight said that "it is one thing to provide entertainment during the pressure of wartime and quite another to remember not to forget these same men five years later."

Vagabonding With Vandy

By CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, Jr.

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

This town alive with rumors again, most of them warlike, and some incredulous. Some of these rumors:

War pictures are all being slanted with a recruiting angle because of proximity of World War III.

The True magazine yarn about the flying disks is on all tongues. Many claimants contend the disks are actually rays from another comet. Some believe they are "hemispheric-signals" from the Soviet. Others feel they are thrown from enemy submarines cruising off the west coast. The disks therefore are said to be the real reason for re-activation of air-raid warning-system in Washington, Oregon and California as of Feb. 13.

Internal Revenue Bureau believed to be on the verge of crackdown on the safety deposit boxes. The Drew Pearson yarn on the change of the color of cash thought by many a scarce-threat to force hoarded money into the open.

D-Day for the gangster believed set by FBI, whom many claim is getting ready a nationwide crackdown.

N.Y. BILL VS. BIAS

Albany, Feb. 28.

Senator Nathaniel T. Hellman, Bronx Democrat, has introduced (23) a bill making those in control of places of public assembly liable for discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin. It increases from $500 to $1,000 the maximum that may be recovered in a civil action.

The measure requires the Attorney General of the state to prosecute.

Ask $36,645,000 For 'Voice' B'casts

Washington, Feb. 28.

State Department is saking $36,645,000 for its "Voice of America" radio program and $3,886,285 for informational motion picture work, for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next. The requests and testimony by officials of State Department's Public Affairs Division before a House Appropriations subcommittee have just been disclosed by the committee.

The "Voice" request is $10,000,000 below the $47,300,000 for the current fiscal year. However, this year's money included about $11,000,000 for erection of new shortwave broadcasting facilities. Thus the mount asked for operating expenses is about the same. The motion picture request was just a shade over the $3,800,134 for the current year.

Herbert Edwards, chief of the International Motion Picture Division, testified that the next fiscal year will see his unit turning out 97 reels of film, comprising 65 different subjects; this is the same as output for the present year. State Department will produce 13 subjects under contract, and will acquire another 40 from American industrial firms which make promotional films. There will also be 12 issues of a news magazine of the screen, composed of partly original and partly acquired clips.

"Voice of America" spokesmen plan to expand their service next year by adding broadcasts in nine new languages—eight from Eastern Europe and Hebrew. The new European languages are all in Iron Curtain countries.

Lauder's Many Firsts

By WILLIAM MORRIS, Jr.

It is not familiarly known, but Sir Harry Lauder, more than any other artist in the profession, did more to develop the mechanical projection of entertainment.

He was one of the first artists to make gramophone records.

He was the first to make commercial singing and talking motion pictures which were presented nationwide in America in 1911.

His was the first entertainer's voice heard across the Atlantic by radio

He made the first plane-to-earth telephone call in South Africa in the early '20s.

He gave the first ship's concert from ship to shore en route to England with small audiences in New York and Lands End listening with ear phones.

One of Lauder's favorite sayings was: "The actor will gather the most bawbees when his personality can be projected 'rooned the worrrld."

In 1926 he visited the New York laboratories of Lee De Forest to take part in an experiment in television.

Just before he was stricken in 1949, he was preparing a program to be kinescoped in Scotland and broadcast from Alexandria Palace in London.

A Bonnie Laddie

By JOE LAURIE, JR.

Sir Harry Lauder has made his final farewell tour!

Hearing of his going "Upstairs" makes you wink back the tears for this accomplished and loveable man who used a coal mine as a springboard to fame and Knighthood!

Harry Lauder was born in Portobello, Scotland, on Aug. 4, 1870. He took an early thrashing from life, working in flax mills, then as a pithead boy at the Hamilton Mines, became a miner's assistant, then trapper at the Eddlewood Colliery. During his work as a miner he appeared one amateur night and won a goldless watch. He tried a few more amateur appearances then got stage-struck. He received 35 shillings a week for his first regular stage job. He got enough jobs singing to save $60 and went back to the mines, practically a capitalist! A short time later Moss & Thornton, vaude agents, offered him a solid route of six weeks and he gave up the coal pits for good, a decision that was just a miner loss for the coal pits and a major gain for the amusement world. 'Arry (as he was called by his audiences) became the songster of the poor, with the language of the miner. In a short time he was a big card in the Provinces, but he was anxious to play London. He asked for booking there from a Mr. Gattis, who claimed that many Scotsmen played London but always proved a failure. He finally listened to 'Arry's plea and booked him against his better judgment. Harry Lauder was a terrific London hit!

Lauder took the speech and the wisdom and the humor of Scotland and clothed it with melody and home-made laughs. He always did a monolog between choruses . . . good solid homey stuff . . . always clean . . . clean as a kitten's gum! He was an honest comedian who played to honest people. No tricks, just pure talent and personality! He wrote many of his own songs, and collaborated with any good man that had an idea. He wrote songs with R. Beaton and J. D. Harper. With Sandy Melville of Glasgow he wrote "Risin' Early In the Mornin'." The immortal "I Love a Lassie" was written with Gerald Grafton. He became a headliner in England but it wasn't until he came to America (a booking he was very much afraid of not making good and losing his standing in England) that he became one of the world's greatest minstrels!

It was 1907 when Klaw & Erlanger started their opposition circuit against Keith and the United Booking Office. William Morris, Sr., one of the greatest showmen of our time, was the booker for Advanced Vaudeville (as the K & E Circuit was called). He booked Harry Lauder for $2,500 a week at the New York theatre (Broadway and 44th street, where the Criterion now stands). Lauder was on the stage over an hour. The audience just couldn't keep their ears off him. After the first show he was the talk of all of show biz. And he remained all through the years as one of the greatest, if not the greatest, one-man show that graced our shores and theatres.

But it was the great showmanship of William Morris, Sr., who made Lauder the great drawing card he was. In 1908 when Morris became an independent manager he signed Lauder for $3,000 a week besides paying $1,000 a week to the English managers who had Lauder under contract. Bill Morris sent Lauder on the road in a special Lauder train, covering 15 cities in 26 days. Show consisted of Vasco, Yamamoto, Three Constantine Sisters, Virginia Varrell, Willie Zimmerman and Emila Frassinisi. The salary and transportation cost $2,500 daily—the 26-day tour cost $65,000. Ted Marks was the manager of the show, Hugo Morris (Bill's brother) was the office rep. They carried an orchestra of 15, with Scotch pipers giving a street parade daily. An army of six advance men led the tour. Lauder played to $7,200 in Toronto one day, Philadelphia two shows $5,000, Detroit $6,000, Chicago (five shows) $18,000. He refused to work on Sundays, claiming people he played to were very religious. When Bill Morris took over the American theatre in N. Y., and changed its name to the American Music Hall, with smoking allowed all over the house, his attraction was Harry Lauder. Campstools had to be placed on the stage to accommodate the crowds at $1.50 a stool.

Harry's success prompted his brother Alec Lauder to come over in 1909 and see if he, too, could gather some of the American shekels. He opened at the Fifth Ave. theatre in a skit called "The Christening," and was closed after the evening performance. He made another try in 1915 at Hammerstein's with some Scotch songs; he just managed to stay out the week. There was only one great Lauder—Harry.

Jack Lait's Great Job

You can't write about Lauder's success in America without mentioning Jack Lait (ex-VARIETY mugg and now editor of the N. Y. Mirror). He did a terrific job of press agentry for Lauder. He gathered all the old Scotch jokes and pinned them on his charge. 'Arry played along and soon had Lauder known as the stingiest Scotsman in the world, a la Jack Benny, who came many years later with the same gimmick. The "stingy" gags preceded Lauder and also left a trail behind him . . . it was terrific publicity. This, coupled with Lauder's great natural talent, made him the greatest boxoffice attraction of his time.

It was in 1910 that Lauder made another tour. This time in the private car of President Teddy Roosevelt (bad publicity, eh?). It was on that tour that an incident occurred at Seattle that gives one a slant at the little Scot. He was playing at the Armory, to an audience of about 4,000 in a big terrific hall—no microphones in those days. The Seattle Times reported the incident like this: "Some one yelled 'louder' and Lauder stopped his performance and said, 'I'm not going to talk any louder. If you're deaf that's your own fault. I have appeared all over the United States in halls twice this size and this is the first time I've been interrupted. Now I want you to understand that my reputation extends further than the back of this hall. If I came to this coun-

Actors' Income Tax Deductions

By J. S. SEIDMAN, C.P.A.

Actors are entitled to many income tax deductions that do not readily meet the eye. The following is a list of some of the items. However, to get the deductions, mere say-so or "guesstimate" is not enough. There must be some proof of the amounts spent, and that they are professional, not personal, items.

Preparation expenses—Research, cost of material, dialog, gags, music; special coaching lessons; costumes, wigs, shoes, makeup; repair, pressing, cleaning, dyeing, and rental of professional wardrobe, wardrobe valet; studio rentals, tips to studio employees; recording of voice or program;

Booking expenses—Scouting for engagements, agent's commissions, legal expenses on contracts;

Traveling expenses—Transportation, board and lodging away from home, automobile upkeep and depreciation; cabs from one engagement to another;

Public relations expenses—Development of public following, handling of fan mail, photographs; complimentary tickets, entertaining press, playwrights, critics, backers, agents, directors,etc.; club membership dues; advertising and publicity; press agent's fees;

Miscellaneous expenses—VARIETY and other trade papers; Equity and other union dues; telephone exchange; accompanist; accountants' fees; rent, secretary, and office expense; household expenses, like rent, maid service, utilities, telephone, insurance, etc., if household is used actively for conferences with authors, writers, agents, or other professional matters; expenses on trips taken to get material, background, or ideas for professional work; beautifying, physical culture, bodyguard; income taxes paid abroad on foreign bookings.

MUST REVIVE WANT-TO-SEE HABIT

'Nothing to Fear But Fear'

FDR's wartime classic, "There's nothing to fear but fear itself," today has its counterpart in show business. The same veteran showmen who are trying to square the immediate problems of the boxoffice realize that this is where they came in 25 years ago. They realize they must first inspire confidence—erase the growing fear within the industry.

Joe Schenck will be the first to tell how, at one time many years ago, showmen thought radio would put pictures out of business. He recalls how he and Nick Schenck took a memorable walk around the latter's Great Neck, L. I., home in those pioneer radio days, and were shocked as they saw the many homes around them dark, save for one room—the living room. It was all lit up, and members of the families huddled around the then very visible loudspeakers. Was this new keep-'em-home, 20th century scientific contraption going to kayo that great American family institution of "going to the movies?"

The same alarmists over television's possible inroads on the boxoffice are the first to realize that that's what they went through with radio. Then night sports. And there were other oppositions to the boxoffice. History tells that not only did the picture business survive but profited still more as result of one or another segment of these at first feared inroads. Hope and Crosby, for instance, remain as two shining contributions of radio-made commodities for benefit of the boxoffice.

None the less, the bugaboos persist. There are seasonal things such as Lent, or economic stringencies such as the coal crisis which (1) has created vast unemployment and (2) caused a brownout on Broadway. Plus other elements, all of which are not accepted for their basic values. Nor is the fact accepted that, fundamentally, the poor shows should not be expected to sell as well as a want-to-see commodity.

A certain Hollywood producer has on his pinup board, prominently spotlighted, VARIETY's annual chart of All-Time Top-Grossers. His point is that these boxoffice bests—films which have grossed $4,000,000 and better—prove that each illustrates the six basic emotions: love and hatred, fear and hope, pleasure and pain. The fact that a cheap western also has these emotions and is happy to gross 10% of that is something this producer doesn't want to accept. Towards the bottom of the list of $4,000,000 grossers are such good but obviously not particularly conflicting themes as "Smoky," "Night and Day," "Holiday in Mexico" and "Dolly Sisters," to name a few, but this producer—and he's a good one, admittedly—persists that his pet formula, as above-stated, is fully illustrated in every one of these. The fact that some of these fancy grosses were reaped in the lush war days, or through some extraordinarily strategic merchandising, seems to be of little concern to him.

Which brings us to the current push by 20th-Fox on merchandising. None is more video-minded than Spyros Skouras, but quite obviously he's biding his time until Hollywood must go steady with television. Right now his company has only one business: selling pictures. His top echelon thinks it can prove to the industry at large how to sell that product. That's through aggressive showmanship.

It reminds of a film pub-adman who was "called" by his president for something that didn't come off. The ad executive wisely told his boss, "I feel we're in a business of taking chances. Nobody can bat 1.000. We're all bound to make some mistakes; in our taking chances I'd say that a 500% batting average would be very good. If you want me to play it safe I feel I'm not in the showmanship spot you really want me to be, and perhaps you had better get yourself a new boy." The company president wisely saw it that way, too.

Taking chances doesn't mean a realistic recognition of the conditions that prevail. Television prevails, so do night sports, new autos, refrigerators, building, etc. But it doesn't mean show business must resign from the world just because some new gadgets have come into being.

It has been forgotten by many that, at one time, radio almost kayoed the automobile industry. It was in the day when a new Freed-Eiseman or a Stromberg-Carlson for the average American family was a $400-$500 item, and you could get a car for $700-$800 in those days. It was a choice between the new super-heterodyne receiver or the family car. Today many a lower middle-class family is putting its year's amusement budget into a $300-$400 television receiver.

But it is only a matter of a short time when TV will be accepted as a modern convenience, another in the many modern home appliances to the better American living. The new TViewers are much less interested in going out than before, but then the novelty wears off.

Americans are gregarious. Even seeing pictures at home, despite all the obvious conveniences of shoes-off, shirt-open-at-the-collar, no parking problems, etc., hasn't the appeal of going to the neighborhood or downtown picture theatre. The best answer about the b.o. downbeat, in relation to TV, is that the ratio of drop is exactly the same in non-television territories. Give 'em the right shows and they'll fight the storm, sleet, etc. to get there.

Zukors West

Adolph Zukor, Paramount board chairman, shoves off over the weekend for the Coast accompanied by his wife. Zukors will spend a short time at the studio before heading for Tucson to visit their daughter.

No significance is attached to the trip which is the Paramounter's annual visit to the Coast.

Maps Negro 'Aida' Pic

Jack Goldberg, vet producer of Negro films, has registered "Aida" with the title registration department of the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

FILM INDUSTRY'S NO. 1 PROBLEM

With the national b.o. suffering another sinking spell, industry execs are disturbed by mounting evidence that "going to the movies" has become increasingly less routine to the American family and is rapidly moving into the category of "something special." How to combat that tendency — and whether it can be successfully combated at all—is seen as the problem facing the industry.

The trend is evident in any analysis of current b.o. economics. First point that becomes clear is that films are becoming more and more a holiday entertainment. Biz shoots up at Christmas, Easter, Washington's birthday, etc., with the peaks on the graphs much higher at those periods in comparison with the rest of the year than at any previous time in film history.

Secondly, a closer study of the peaks and dips in the graphs shows that films are becoming increasingly a weekend business. Grosses continue to get relatively higher Saturdays and Sundays than during the rest of the week.

A further factor is the growing selectivity by the public in choice of films. It has resulted in the phenomenon of a handful of pictures doing top business, while everything else is weak. There are practically no longer any in-between pictures. Tendency is for everything to be either a hit or a flop.

Conclusion to be drawn from this series of basic facts is that Joe and

BULLS AND BEARS ON 3 PICTURE STOCKS

Wall street bears are pulling out of the new United Paramount circuit after an early flier in the new stock. Short holdings on UP common have dipped from 4,250 shares to a bare 195 over the past 30 days. At the same time, bears unloaded UP certificates of interest. Total is down to 200 C. I.s from a previous high of 2,300. Stock has been holding strongly on the New York exchange.

Short holdings in Warner Bros. continue to climb. They now have reached a total of 15,015 from a former total of 12,325. Universal short interests titled to 4,540 shares over the same 30-day stretch from a previous 860 shares.

Variety Club in Rome

Rome, Feb. 28.

Plans for formation of a Variety Club Tent in Rome are currently underway. Commander Fred Pittera, associated with the Italian film industry, consulted recently with Bob O'Donnell, club's chief barker, on the establishment of a club here.

Pittera has notified O'Donnell that about 50 Italian filmites have agreed to join. VARIETY has other international tents in Mexico City and London.

Early Anglo-U.S. Talks Mapped By Execs in Miami

Miami Beach, Feb. 28.

Since it now appears virtually certain there will not be another election in Britain before the current Anglo-U. S. film pact expires next June 13, top echelon industryites are of the opinion that renegotiation meetings with the British government should be held as quickly as feasible.

That is understood to have been the predominant thinking at a huddle of the industry's highest brass here yesterday (Monday). Attending were Barney Balaban, Spyros Skouras, Nicholas M. Schenck, Eric Johnston and Johnston's exec aide, Joyce O'Hara.

That group, along with Ned E. Depinet and Joseph H. Hazen, who were on the Coast and unable to be present, comprises the Motion

Storms Hit Trade; 'Samson' Winner for 5th Week In Row; 'Cinderella,' 'Francis' Next Best

Severe cold and snowstorms continue to cripple biz this week in many key cities covered by VARIETY but the weather is not holding back the smash totals being rung up by "Francis" (U) and "Cinderella" (RKO). Bad weather on Washington's Birthday cut into trade that holiday.

Leading the national sweepstakes for fifth successive week is "Samson and Delilah" (Par), with the most money and best all-round showing, despite its being extended-run in many spots. Second place is a toss-up between "Cinderella" and "Francis," these two new champs going down to finish wire neck-and-neck. Former may wind up ahead by a nose, with one record smashed and top biz in many keys. In Boston, it likely will finis ahead of first smash week.

"Francis," sans bookings on any major affiliate circuits, is leader in four of the five cities currently playing, with sock or smash biz in the majority. Fourth best is "Key to City" (M-G), making a much better showing than it did in N. Y.

"Willie Comes Marching Home" (20th), also getting a lift this stanza, is copping fifth position, with several brisk to solid sessions. "Malaya" (M-G) is winding up in sixth while "12 O'Clock High" (20th) looks seventh best. "Stromboli" (RKO) is taking eighth money, with "Chain Lightning" (WB) a disappointment in ninth slot. Several strong runner-up pix include "Foolish Heart" (RKO), "Battleground" (M-G), "Third Man" (SRO), "Ambush" (M-G), and "Red Shoes" (EL).

Besides "Francis" and "Cinderella," "Three Came Home" (20th) shapes as a top newcomer. It is doing smash trade at N. Y. Astor, where it preemed, despite generally sluggish trade on Broadway. "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th), heading into N. Y. Roxy this week, looks sturdy in Seattle, light in L. A. and nice in Portland, Ore. "Mule Train" (Col), another newcomer, looms fine in Chi. "Stage Fright" (WB), which drew nice reviews, is only fair on initial round at N. Y. Music Hall.

"Quicksand" (UA), also new, shapes fair in Chi. "Paid in Full" (Par) is not paying off so well in N. Y. on second round. "Dakota Lil" (20th), while mild in Philly, is big in Louisville. "Outside Wall" (U), good in Cincy, is still hefty on second Philly week. "Guilty of Treason" (EL) looms trim in Chi. "Capt. China" (Par) is oke in Buffalo. "Iwo Jima" (Rep) is setting new record in Minneapolis. "Intruder in Dust" (M-G) is only fair in Toronto.

Despite Tax Ultimatum, Looks Like Rank Will Continue as a Producer

London, Feb. 28.

J. Arthur Rank has dropped all plans to ditch production activities after the June deadline set by him in his annual financial report. Regardless of the ultimate payoff on the recent British election, Rank has already set a number of pix for shooting at the Pinewood studios during the summer and early fall. Fixing of the production schedule is regarded as the final abandonment of a proposal to halt filmmaking if the British entertainment tax is not eased.

When he issued the org's annual report showing a substantial loss in production, Rank declared that the company was seriously considering calling a halt unless the government moved to cut the high entertainment bite. However, without waiting out the final upshot of the election, he is definitely committed to longrange production, according to reliable reports.

Two films have already been slated for production after June. These are "Tony Draws a Horse," produced by Brock Williams and W. A. Smith, and "Waterfront," film starring Robert Newton with Paul Sochin producing. Number of others, besides several film proj-

PAR AS 'BULLY' CITED IN RAP AT TELE AD

A New York ad agency, which had been plugging a radio client's television sets for sale at a rate "less than the cost of two movie tickets per week," charged yesterday (Tues.) that Paramount is trying to censor it by "bullying and intimidation."

Budd Getschal, head of the Getschal & Richard agency, made his claims in a letter of protest to Par prez Barney Balaban. He charged that a top Par official threatened radio stations that the company would stop all film advertising on the air unless the copy were altered to eliminate the above phrase. Agency chief in-

Brit. Insists on Own Prod.-Director As Swap for Johnson-Negulesco OK

British government may be launching something new in the way of restrictions against American film companies. Ministry of Labor, it was learned this week, insisted that 20th-Fox agree to exchange of production talent before issuing the necessary work permits to producer Nunnally Johnson and director Jean Negulesco. Duo are scheduled to turn out "Mudlark" for 20th in England and, now that they have received the necessary British clearance, will sail Saturday (4) aboard the Queen Mary.

Under terms of the agreement, which were finalized over the weekend, 20th must at some future date import a British producer and director to lens a major film in the U. S. Deal is believed to be the first of its kind insisted upon by the British, who heretofore have levied no restrictions on top production personnel. New tactics probably reflect the attitude of the British film unions, who have long been claiming that American production in England throws their members out of work.

Johnson and Negulesco expect to be gone about four or five months, since "Mudlark" is to be lensed in its entirety in and around London. To date, Irene Dunne is the only talent signed for the film, with casting for the role of Disraeli presenting difficulties. Both Alec Guinness, current in the Broadway production of "Cocktail Party," and Sir Ralph Richardson have been mentioned for the role, but Johnson said that he would conduct tests in England before deciding. Most of the surrounding talent will also be recruited from among British actors.

Johnson declared he would also spend time in England working on his script for a film biog of German Field Marshal Erwin Rommel, which is to be next on his 20th production schedule. While 20th is mulling the idea of lensing that picture in North Africa, site of much of Rommel's military activity, Johnson said a definite decision on that has not yet been made.

'3 Husbands' Ruled Not Infringing on '3 Wives'

Indie producer I. G. Goldsmith won the right Monday (27) to use the title "Three Husbands" over 20th-Fox's objection that it infringed on its "Letter to Three Wives." Goldsmith got his green light from an arbitration committee in New York set up by the Motion Picture Assn. of America title registration bureau.

"Wives" was an adaptation by Vera Caspary from John Klempner's novel of the same name. "Husbands" is an original by Miss Caspary, who is the wife of Goldsmith. Arbitrators held that the similarity in labels was not sufficient to cause confusion.

Goldsmith came into New York from the Coast over the weekend for the arbitration hearing and returned yesterday (Tuesday). "Husbands," which United Artists will distribute, is about half completed. Goldsmith puts "The Dungeon" before the cameras March 21 with John Ireland, Mercedes McCambridge, James Barton and Emlyn Williams.

Financing on the pix was arranged by Joseph Justman, head of Motion Picture Centre studios. Goldsmith, in addition to deferments, put up some coin of his own. Rest of it comes from Walter E. Heller & Co. of Chicago, with Justman putting up completion bonds and guarantees and giving studio deferments.

Goldsmith was repped at the arbitration hearing by Robert J. Rubin, counsel for the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, and Harry Buckley of United Artists.

REX MAYS BIOPIC

A deal is currently being negotiated by publicist-author John Barclay for a biopic of the late auto racer Rex Mays. Film will be based on Barclay's yarn, "The Rex Mays Story," which appeared in Speed Age mag.

Barclay was recently given the right to peddle the story by Mays' widow.

British Commies' Blast

London, Feb. 28.

The British Communist Party conducted a vitriolic campaign against the American film industry during the recent elections but the Commies received a complete setback at the polls. Aiming at British cinema workers, the Communist pitched up statistics purportedly showing that the influx of Hollywood pix caused local unemployment among studio technicians.

J. Arthur Rank was also castigated for "selling out" to Hollywood by cutting its film production to a minimum. Both private producers and the Labor Government were pilloried for yielding to "American pressure" during the pre-election stumping. All Communist candidates, however, went down to defeat.

Selznick-Korda Tiff Breaks Out In 2 More Suits

The David O. Selznick-Sir Alexander Korda tiff broke out into a new rash of moves and countermoves this week when all possibilities of burying the hatchet were abruptly ended. Former U. S. Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson was named by the N. Y. Federal district court as arbitrator of the tiff between the two producers after they failed to agree on a substitute for Joseph M. Schenck, originally named in distribution contracts.

Hearings in Patterson's office begin today (Wed.) Timed with this development, Selznick went to court yesterday (Tues.) with a cross-motion against the British filmmaker, demanding in his turn an injunction barring Korda from showing the present version of "Gone to Earth" in the eastern hemisphere. DOS also brought a complementing action in London's Chancery court asking the same relief.

After a verbal clash before N. Y. Federal Judge Irving Kaufman, temporary stay pending arbitration on Korda's suits against Selznick was extended to the present plea of DOS. Repping Selznick, James Hayes, of Donovan, Leisure, Lombard, Newton & Irvine, asserted that "Earth" will be a "flop" in Europe and that the bad notices would hit both the earnings of the film in the U. S. and the reputation of Jennifer Jones (Mrs. Selznick), who stars in the pic.

Louis (Schwartz &) Frohlich, Britisher's attorney, countered with the argument that Selznick has no right to supervise the eastern version of "Earth." Hayes claimed that under distribution pacts, the film must conform to the story line laid down in the agreement. Court was told by Frohlich that there is no danger of the film being released before arbitration decides the dispute one way or the other.

As the legal score now stands, Selznick wants Korda stopped

ZOLTAN KORDA SET TO SHOOT PATON'S 'CRY'

Zoltan Korda, who will produce "Cry, the Beloved Country" under the banner of his brother, Sir Alexander Korda, planed out of New York for London over the weekend. He was accompanied by Alan Paton, author of the book from which the picture is being adapted. They expect to go to South Africa in mid-March to begin production on the film.

During his two weeks' stay in New York, Korda shot tests of 12 Negro actors for roles in the film. He took the tests back to London with him and will decide there on which of the players will be inked. Two or three will be selected. While in New York he also saw "Lost in the Stars," the legit musical version of "Beloved Country."

MPAA Thinks Crime Pays Too Well for 'Bike Thief'

"Bicycle Thief," prize-winning Italian film of 1949, won't get the Production Code seal unless certain sequences are deleted. Motion Picture Assn. of America execs are reportedly withholding approval primarily because the actual bicycle thief doesn't get his comeuppance before the fadeout.

Mayer-Burstyn, handling distribution of the film in the U. S., are caught in the middle due to refusal of the pic's producer, Vittorio De Sica, to accede to the MPPA suggested cuts.

Spiegel New MPAA Rep in Germany

Marc Spiegel, former special rep abroad for RKO, was officially named this week as the Motion Picture Assn. of America's representative in Germany. Marion Jordan, who currently holds that post, is leaving in June to join 20th-Fox.

Spiegel sails on the Ile de France March 11 to take up his post at Frankfurt. He'll work with Jordan until the latter leaves. Jordan, incidentally, will not be assigned to Germany by 20th, but after a stretch at the h.o. will probably be sent to some other area.

Spiegel announced his resignation from RKO a couple of weeks ago in order to accept the MPAA spot. He was in Germany during the last three months of 1949 setting up RKO's staff and organization there and serving as secretary of the American film board, which consists of the chiefs of the various companies.

On his return he'll become ex officio topper of the board and watch out for the interests of the American industry. That includes negotiations with the U. S. High Commissioner's office and with various German governmental organizations.

A native of Milton, Mass., Spiegel went to school in Germany, France, England and Switzerland.

Congress 'Unopposed' To 20% Tax Reduction, Sez Secretary Snyder

Washington, Feb. 28.

The Administration has taken a roundabout way of informing Congress that it is not really opposed to a reduction in the 20% admissions tax. Carter Barron, Loew's rep here and a member of the taxation and legislation committee of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, has been "authorized" by Treasury Secretary John Snyder to make clear that he is not unfriendly to some relief for the picturegoer.

Snyder, who pointedly omitted to mention films as a subject rating downward revision of its wartime excise rate when he testified recently before the House Ways and Means Committee, made his new position clear in a session with Barron.

"Secretary Snyder," declared Barron in a statement, "authorized me to say that the attitude of the Treasury toward relief from this tax was not frozen and that he testified to this effect before the Ways and Means Committee. Secretary Snyder pointed out his statement before that committee in which he said, if it is clearly shown that someone has failed to come forward and show us a very distressing situation, we would be glad to consider it.

"Because this 20% tax on admissions has become increasingly unpopular with our patrons, and has so sharply affected the business of every motion picture theatre in the nation, we have found most members of Congress most sympathetic with our problem. It is good to know that the Secretary of the Treasury shares this concern on the part of the Congress."

CSU Suit Delayed

Los Angeles, Feb. 28.

Damage suit for $47,000,000, filed by the Conference of Studio Unions against IATSE and the major film lots, has been set back to May 31 in U. S. district court.

Judge William C. Mathes, originally assigned to hear the case, will be shifted to another Federal district early in May.

16 Film Groups Now Among the 44 Orgs Going Before FCC on Theatre TV

Film industry, with television's rapidly-mounting competition confronting it, has marshalled its forces in a mass endeavor to promote theatre TV and thus try for a revenue-producing ally. Sixteen different organizations, representing all phases of the industry, have signified their intentions to participate in the upcoming hearings on large-screen video before the Federal Communications Commission in time to meet the Monday (27) deadline.

Unification of so many varied segments of the industry for a common cause has seldom been equalled in industry history, which underscores the determined interest in theatre TV by all participating groups. Once the FCC has set a date for the hearings, each of the 44 organizations will have to prepare testimony and demonstrations for their appearances. Requisite time, money and effort which will thus be expended means that the exhibitors, distributors, equipment manufacturers, etc., want to stake out their claims for theatre TV, even though they might not be able to provide the service to their customers for some time to come.

That the industry might be preparing to shoot the works on theatre TV is also pointed up by the four different manufacturing groups which have signified intention of taking part at the hearings. One of the chief bottlenecks in development of the medium to date has been in getting equipment orders filled. At least 12 exhibs, for example, have signed orders for equipment on which they are still

Washington, Feb. 28.

The objective of the current film industry legislation campaign is total repeal of the 20% admission tax, according to Abram F. Myers, chairman of the taxation committee of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

Warning industry members against the use of the term, "war excise taxes," Myers is pointing out in letters to industry leaders that there was a 10% admission bite before the wartime rate was imposed. Repeal of the war tax would still leave the industry saddled with a 10% ticket tax. Only complete abolition of the 20% bite will correct the "wholly unjustified" method of taxation, Myers claims.

House Members Assure Filmites Of Amus. Tax Cut

Washington, Feb. 28.

Following the effective presentation last week of the industry's case for a reduced or abolished Federal admissions tax, filmites have received private assurances from members of the House Ways & Means committee that this influential group will recommend a substantial slash in the tax. Equally important is the fact that industryites have been told that the committee will recommend the cut "on the rule."

This is a parliamentary term which means that the tax bill cannot be amended on the floor of the House. The bill must then be either approved or voted down in toto without any change which could cut the ground from under an admission tax reduction. Moreover, President Truman will not be able to veto the bill in part if the committee takes this action. He can only approve or disapprove the bill, including his own recommendations, as a complete measure.

Plea for a repeal of the tax was made by Abram F. Myers, National Allied board chairman, and Gael Sullivan, exec director of the Theatre Owners of America. Sullivan has sent out a further appeal to TOAers to keep up the fight in a communication which tags indus-

Selznick Would Release Up to 10 Pictures a Year

David O. Selznick is aiming for distribution by his Selznick Releasing Organization of 10 pictures a year. He hopes to achieve that goal, he revealed in New York last week, within two years.

The pix will be made in this country and abroad, DOS said, by indie production units working under his banner. Setup would be similar in many ways to pattern used by Sir Alexander Korda in England. Individual producers made the films with supervision, financing, distribution and some of the talent provided by Korda.

Selznick hopes to have several units operating under that format in the U. S. before he leaves for Europe in April. He'll set up further units in England, France and Italy.

Films made by these producers will be for general American distribution. They will not overplay the art house product that Selznick hopes to acquire abroad in completed form for distribution by a special SRO unit to be headed by Manny Reiner. These pix will also be released by SRO in some foreign countries via a growing foreign setup. Selznick said he now has seven branches in France (having bought out his partner Perrier) and is releasing British, French and Italian product there.

SRO also recently opened offices in Brussels, Manila, Santiago, Chile, and Mexico and plans six exchanges in Germany.

BIG 5'S THIN DISTRIB PAYOFF

$6,500,000 in Bank Loans Face RKO On D-Day; $10,000,000 Due From Theatres

On its D (for divorcement) day, now scheduled for May 8, RKO must meet bank obligations totaling approximately $6,500,000. After protracted attempts, RKO has failed to win a new production loan agreement from the three banks holding its notes which would permit the split into two companies without the loan falling due. The banks have refused to go for an amended agreement without imposition of stricter terms and a higher rate of interest and RKO has adamantly rejected those demands.

Because of the impasse, plus the fact that other banking houses are shying away from film financing at present, RKO's high brass may plot out a course of operations without the revolving credit now available to it. In lieu of the $6,500,000 which the company must pay up on divorcement, it will be receiving $10,000,000 from the RKO theatre chain.

Reorganization plan provides that the circuit make an extraordinary distribution to the production-sales unit of that sum in cash. Payment is by way of both a dividend and a reduction of capital by the chain. At the same time, RKO's operations may be somewhat crimped since the original plan of operation took into account both the divvy from the circuit and the revolving fund.

Three holdout banks are the Bankers Trust Co., First National Bank of Boston and Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles. Original revolving credit, reduced $500,000 yearly from a 1947 high of $10,000,000, will be $8,500,000 in May. Notes call for 2½% interest.

When the three banks made their original demand for tougher terms, RKOers were inclined to discount the threat since it was felt that the company could substitute one loan for another without too much trouble. Extensive feel-

RKO Nixes More Time on Breakups

No further delay beyond the March 6 deadline set by the N. Y. federal district court last week for the breakup of theatre partnerships will be asked by RKO. Company's top-echelon believes RKO has already complied with the requirements of its consent anti-trust decree in all respects but one revolving around its minority holdings in Metropolitan Playhouses. Those interests will be trusted on on the March 6 date.

Compliance on the requirement to end all joint interests has been met, it is said, by sale of two houses in Cincinnati; unloading of West Virginia interests; and suits now pending for dissolution of joint interests with Walter Reade and George Skouras. Bringing these two suits in court is said to meet the court's order on partnership breakups.

Meanwhile, talks will continue with Skouras although RKOers refuse to predict any amicable deal in light of the on-and-off nature of previous gabbing. Renewal of negotiations with Reade is also on tap following return of Walter Reade, Jr., this week from a Swiss vacation.

Deadline has been stalled several times with Government consent because of the dickering with RKO's pards. However, if a deal is not reached by next week, company will file a statement of compliance.

Mrs. Stagg's 3d Encore

Mrs. Carolyn Stagg returned to Samuel Goldwyn's New York office last week as eastern story editor. It is her third engagement in the job.

She last left the post last June after an 18-month stand. She had previously been there for two years, starting in 1945.

'Shanghai' B.O. Gesture

Syracuse, Feb. 28.

Because the current Chinese situation is hot headline news, RKO circuit is testing the b.o. potential of two Paramount reissue pix which focus on the Chinese scene. RKO Syracuse theatre is booking "Shanghai Express," Marlene Dietrich starrer, and "The General Died at Dawn," co-starring Gary Cooper and Madeleine Carroll, for an April showing. If the package clicks, RKO will groove the pix through the rest of its chain.

Circuit induced Par to reissue the oldies.

Par's Dividend Status Waits On Balaban's Return

One of the questions currently being mulled by both Wall Streeters and industryites—whether Paramount will continue paying regular 50c per quarter dividends following its divorcement— will be answered early in March. On the return of Barney Balaban, company prexy, from a Florida vacation in the next couple of weeks, Par's board will meet to decide the dividend question. At that time it is expected that first-quarter distribution returns will have developed to the point where they can be studied with reference to the poser.

Board is also expected to fix a date for the company's annual stockholder meeting which is generally held late in the spring. At that time, stockholders will vote their first new board of directors for the recently-emerged production-distribution company. Consideration of offers for the purchase of Par's holdings in DuMont television will probably also be on the agenda of the March session.

Par has been paying regular dividends for a number of years. Question became hotter last week when United Paramount, its former theatre chain, declared for a 50c divvy in April

According to latest figures aired, only 114,924 certificates of interest in UP have been converted into shares, while 3,148,352 CIs are still outstanding. This means that the great majority of UP stockholders are also stockholders of the production-distribution company. Action by Par on the dividend question is believed will be a determining factor in whether stockholders will go for the production stock and unload their theatre holdings or vice versa.

U.S. Pictures In New L.A. Suit

Los Angeles, Feb. 28.

Mrs. Annie Fastenberg, a stockholder in Warner Bros., filed suit in superior court demanding an accounting of profits on six films made by United States Pictures, headed by Milton Sperling. Mentioned in the suit, in addition to Sperling, are Harry, Jack and Albert Warner.

Complainant declares the defendants conspired in 1945 to provide unfair financial aid to Sperling, a relative by marriage, to the detriment of the Warner corporation.

REP MEETS APRIL 4

Republic's annual stockholder meet is slated for April 4.

Stockholders of record March 10 will be eligible to vote for directors of the company at the meet.

DIVORCE SPURS NEW FORMULAS

After two years of intensive effort, the Big Five has failed to crack the problem of making distribution a solidly profitable venture. That bald fact, viewed against the approaching loss of theatre revenues by divorcement, is now a matter of top concern among the company prexies.

The odds are heavy, according to inside reports, against any of the big distribs collecting a bare 6% return on their production investment in current operations. One of the Big Five, RKO, is plunged into deep red while the other companies are either breaking even or knocking out a profit that is small compared to the gross business.

Twentieth-Fox is a prime example. Understood that 20th boosted its worldwide distribution gross in 1949 to a peak total of $95,000,000. Backed by strong b.o. entries, 20th's revenues were boosted an approximate $6,000,000-$7,000,000 during the year over the previous year's total. Company, however, netted only $2,500,000 despite its gains in revenue for a thin profit of less than 3% on its business.

Company toppers are working feverishly on the problem and hope to lick it before the theatres are cut from under them. The smaller distribs, such as Columbia and Republic, have already forged into the black with solid gains during the past couple of quarters. The bigger companies are still baf-

Shavian Oldies Still Potent at B.O. Despite For-Free Telecasting

Film exhibitors need have no fear that the playing of old films on television hurts their boxoffice. That's opinion of indie distributor Jack Ellis, based on the performances in theatres of two films he's now distributing, both of which are playing concurrently on TV throughout the country.

Ellis has exclusive theatrical distribution rights in the U. S. and Canada to "Pygmalion" and "Major Barbara," among others. Both films are among a group now being syndicated to video stations in all parts of the country by the N. Y. Daily News' WPIX. In Washington, Ellis said, "Barbara" played on video four days before it opened at the DuPont, an art house there, and yet it ran three weeks at the

Metro's Legal Maneuvers May Stall Divorcement Possibly Four Years

Metro's forthcoming appeal from the Federal court's anti-trust decree may win for that company a longer time for divorcement than the three years provided in the Government decision. First delaying step in the form of a 60-day stay on the time to file a divorcement plan has been granted the company on its statement of intentions with reference to another appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court. Longterm delay will be up to the high court, once the company files.

If the Supreme Court grants the Metro application to halt all proceedings, company may stall divorcement for a total of four years. That is, of course, if it loses its appeal on an affirmance of the lower court decision. It is figured that a one-year delay is involved in bringing the case up to the high court and awaiting a decision after argument.

Neither the Government nor company attorneys are certain whether the time consumed in pushing the appeal will be deducted from the three years now provided for divorcement. However, court's granting of a 60-day stay without attaching conditions is viewed as promising for Metro.

Court order provides that the need for Metro to prepare a plan of divorcement is halted for the 60-day stretch. If the company appeals during that period, it gets another 30 days after filing in order to press an application for a

TOA Sifts Exhib Squawks on Film Rental Jockeying

Theatre Owners of America will sift charges by its members that distribs are using competitive bidding as a price-jockeying device rather than an above-board way of selling their product. That claim and others collected by TOA in the form of letters come up for discussion today (Wed.) in the opening session of a two-day exec committee meet at the Hotel Astor, New York. Some 20 committee members from N. Y. and the hinterlands are expected.

TOAers will piece together a proposed selling code to present to the major companies from a number of suggestions compiled by a subcommittee headed by Walter Reade, Jr. Meet plans to inaugurate a drive to limit competitive bidding to specified situations where exhibs specifically demand the widely-criticized method. Followup in the form of a roundtable huddle with sales toppers is an expected demand after the confab ends.

One big gripe in the TOA files is the charge that distribs frequently use competitive bidding as a way of hoisting rentals by inciting exhibs to vie with each other on choice pix. It is contended that product is then awarded on a preplanned split without regard to the highest bid. The bidding, according to these complaints, was used only as a device to jack up the price from the exhib already chosen by secretly advising him of the terms offered by his rival.

Also looming large at the conclave is the business of ratifying the Council of Motion Picture Or-

Par Miffed at Other Chains Not Supporting Big-Screen Theatre TV

Paramount may call a halt to its production of large-screen theatre television equipment unless the industry wakes up to the need for installing TV apparatus in its theatres within short order. Top Paramounters feel that the company is bucking for the whole industry without either recognition or the essential orders necessary to put the operation on a sound going basis. As matters now stand, Par's television wing is just about breaking even on its equipment activities.

Company has been the first in the field with its film intermediary system of large-screen video. System now is in operation at the Paramount theatre, Broadway showcase of United Paramount, and the Chicago theatre, the Balaban & Katz Loop house. Paramount Television Productions, Inc., the major's TV wing, has only four orders to fill for the installation of theatre apparatus. Moreover, none others appear to be in sight.

Company expects to complete two installations, those ordered by UP for Boston and Detroit, in April. Two others for UP houses in Minneapolis and San Francisco will probably be delivered in June. Aside from the continuing interest of UP in large-screen video with the expectation of further orders from that chain, no other exhib has appeared on the scene to keep the TV wing in full operation.

Paramount execs, headed by Paul Raibourn, who acts as president of the television subsid, are aiming to reduce the price tag on equipment now in the neighborhood of $25,000 per set. These officials, however, continually stress the need for large orders as the only economic way of slashing the per-set cost. Without these orders, no decrease in price is feasible.

It is the belief of Par's biggies that concerted action by 1,000 theatres would solve the main hurdles blocking effective inauguration of large-screen television. Stream of orders would bring down the price sharply, thereby bringing installation within the reach of all midding-to-big houses. Additionally, it would clinch the ability of exhibition to put on attractive exclusive programs.

Incentive % On Tough-to-Sell Pix

New practice of incentive bonuses to sales forces to spark increased bookings on given pix is apparently taking hold. Following inauguration of the system several weeks back by 20th-Fox, Eagle Lion has now set up the same sort of deal for "Boy from Indiana," indie-produced pic of Frank Melford and John Rawlins. Two producers have agreed to cut in the entire sales force on the profits of the film currently in release throughout the country.

Proposal calls for salesmen in each branch to collect 20% of the take over a "nominal quota" fixed by the sales org. When any branch has hit over the quota, 20% of all further revenue will be divided among the exchange's personnel.

Twentieth has set a similar plan for four British-made pix, Sir Alexander Korda's "Anna Karenina" and "Ideal Husband" and 20th's "The Fan" and "Forbidden Street." Sales personnel will get 10% of all further revenues on the quartet. Distrib hit on the melon-splitting device to push the pix which have been booked in only 23% of all available spots.

Mrs. Brandt Exits Metro; Olin Clark Adds Chores

Mrs. Carol Brandt, Metro's eastern scenario chief, exited the company Friday (24) instead of remaining on until expiration of her contract July 5. She turned in her resignation about a month ago, at which time it was announced she would remain active until the July date. No reason was given for her premature departure.

Mrs. Brandt's leaving makes Olin H. Clark active operating head of Metro's eastern story department. His new duties will supplement those he has been performing during the past eight years, prior to and during Mrs. Brandt's tenure. Clark will report directly to Kenneth MacKenna, head of the studio scenario department at Culver City.

Mrs. Brandt is going into the agency biz in New York in the fall.

Hollywood, Feb. 23.

Warner Bros. release of Alfred Hitchcock production. Stars Jane Wyman, Marlene Dietrich, Michael Wilding, Richard Todd; features Alistair Sim, Kay Walsh, Dame Sybil Thorndike. Directed by Hitchcock. Screenplay, Whitfield Cook; adaptation, Alma Reville; added dialog, James Bridie; based on novel by Selwyn Jepson; camera, Wilkie Cooper; music, Leighton Lucas; editor, Emard Jarins. Tradeshown Feb. 21, '50. Running time, 110 MINS.

Eve Gill	Jane Wyman
Charlotte Inwood	Marlene Dietrich
Smith	Michael Wilding
Jonathan Cooper	Richard Todd
Nellie	Kay Walsh
Mrs. Gill	Dame Sybil Thorndike
Bibulous Gent	Miles Malleson
Freddie	Hector MacGregor
Shooting Gallery Attendant	Joyce Grenfell
Inspector Byard	Andre Morell
Chubby	Patricia Hitchcock
Commodore Gill	Alistair Sim

Favorable audience response is assured for this latest Alfred Hitchcock thriller. Made in England with a predominately British cast, it has names of Jane Wyman and Marlene Dietrich to brighten domestic marquees and help ticket sales.

Hitchcock doesn't stress melodrama throughout. He plays a surprising number of sequences strictly for lightness. Also, he has a choice cast to put through its paces, and there's not a bad performance anywhere. The dialog has purpose, either for a chuckle or a thrill, and the pace is good despite the 110 minutes of footage. However, it could be trimmed without hurting overall effect.

Plot is theatrical in that it is played off against a theatre background. Miss Wyman is a drama student who is sought out by a friend, Richard Todd, to save him from the police. Todd is fleeing from the charge of murdering Miss Dietrich's husband. Miss Wyman and her father, Alistair Sim, hide Todd and turn amateur sleuths in an attempt to prove Miss Dietrich is guilty of the crime. It works out to a surprise ending that effectively wraps up the intricate story threads.

Miss Wyman is delightful as embryo actress but the choice femme spot goes to Miss Dietrich. As the musical comedy queen, flamboyant and alluring, she would walk away with the picture were it not for so many other good performances. In the song department she sells "The Laziest Gal in Town" for a sock bit of the show within a show.

Michael Wilding clicks as a debonair detective who has to contend with the baffling aspects of the case as well as a yen for Miss Wyman. Todd has a diffcult assignment and puts it over with wallop. Finale reveals him as the actual killer, a fact that is well cloaked by his trouping and the writing until the final scenes.

Plot is peopled with a lot of colorful minor characters, some with only single scenes, but they all come to life and add flavor. Standout in the featured parts is Alistair Sim. As his flighty wife, Dame Sybil Thorndike is excellent. Among others contributing strongly are Kay Walsh, Miles Malleson, Joyce Grenfell.

Hitchcock had the advantage of a smooth scripting chore by Whitfield Cook, with added dialog by James Bridie. Alma Reville did a good adaptation of a novel by Selwyn Jepson. There's an extremely fluid lensing contribution by Wilkie Cooper that helps the story's mood, as does the music score by Leighton Lucas. Full advantage has been taken of the English settings, particularly the London street and theatre scenes in dressing up the sight values of the production. Brog.

Miniature Reviews

"Stage Fright" (WB). Hitchcock melodrama with Jane Wyman, Marlene Dietrich as marquee lures; b.o. outlook okay.

"Perfect Strangers" (WB). Adult fare, tastily produced, and aimed for important takes in the keys.

"Stars in My Crown" (M-G). Joel McCrea in excellent human interest story of preacher and a small town after the war between states.

"Quicksand" (UA). Mickey Rooney in okay crime meller; moderate b.o.

"Buccaneer's Girl" (U) (Songs-Color). Yvonne De Carlo in standard pirate swashbuckler; fair b.o.

"The Kid from Texas" (Color) (U). Another Billy the Kid western, with mild b.o. chances.

"Tyrant of the Sea" (Col). All right yarn about a tyrannical sea captain for dualer spottings.

"Blonde Dynamite" (Mono). Fairly amusing entry in the "Bowery Boys" series.

"Young Daniel Boone" (Color) (Mono). Good filmfare for juves and action fans in smaller situations.

"Range Land" (Mono). Okay Whip Wilson oater for the action market.

"Morning Departure" (GFD). Fine British thriller about a submarine disaster.

Perfect Strangers

Hollywood, Feb. 24.

Warner Bros. release of Jerry Wald production. Stars Ginger Rogers, Dennis Morgan; features Thelma Ritter, Margalo Gillmore, Anthony Ross. Directed by Bretaigne Windust. Screenplay, Edith Sommer; adaptation, George Oppenheimer; based on play by Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht; camera, Peverell Marley; score, Leigh Harline; editor, David Weisbart. Tradeshown Feb. 23, '50. Running time, 87 MINS.

Terry Scott	Ginger Rogers
David Campbell	Dennis Morgan
Lena Fassler	Thelma Ritter
Isobel Bradford	Margalo Gillmore
Robert Fisher	Anthony Ross
Timkin	Howard Freeman
Harry Patullo	Alan Reed
Judge Byron	Paul Ford
Bailiff	Harry Bellaver
Lester Hubley	George Chandler
John Brokaw	Frank Conlan
Lyle Pettijohn	Charles Meredith
Eileen Marcher	Frances Charles
Mrs. Moore	Marjorie Bennett
District Attorney	Paul McVey
Mary Travers	Edith Evanson
Defense Attorney	Whit Bissell
John Simon	Sumner Getchell

Cramming the Ben Hecht-Charles MacArthur legiter, "Ladies and Gentlemen," into a fast-stepping film was a tough trick. It has been done admirably by scripter Edith Sommer and slammed home forcefully by director Bretaigne Windust. The Ginger Rogers-Dennis Morgan starrer is an unusual comedy-drama sparked tremendously by a carefully selected cast including Thelma Ritter, Anthony Ross and Margalo Gillmore, latter making her film bow. "Perfect Strangers" is a class offering, with key situations looming as the most important bookings b.o.-wise.

Stars are spotted as jurors in a murder trial. Morgan is a married man with two children, Miss Rogers a divorcee. They fall in love. Miss Gillmore, whose husband has deserted her, holds out for the death sentence because the accused had asked his wife for a divorce before she was pushed, or fell, from a cliff. Miss Gillmore has no patience with philandering husbands. Suspense mounts neatly, hand-in-glove with the love story, to a gripping climax in which Miss Gillmore sees the error of her ways and the leads satisfy the Production Code by taking off in different directions.

Picture is another top credit for producer Jerry Wald — different, provocative, adult. Morgan and Miss Rogers are in top form. Jury types are all gems of characterization, including Miss Ritter as a pregnant housewife, Ross as a masher, Howard Freeman and Charles Meredith as bullheaded characters, Alan Reed as barber, Marjorie Bennett as a placid knitter, and George Chandler, Frank Conlan and Sumner Getchell in minor but acidly etched niches. Ned Glass, unbilled, is a sock pressroom lout, and there are important contributions also by Paul Ford as judge; Harry Bellaver, bailiff, and Edith Evanson, sister of the dead woman.

Lensing by Peverell Marley is an eloquent job, outdoors and in, but especially in pinpointing the many personalities involved. Leigh Harline's amusing score and David Weisbart's ace editing top the smart credits. Mike.

Stars in My Crown

Hollywood, Feb. 25.

Metro release of William H. Wright production. Stars Joel McCrea, Ellen Drew, Dean Stockwell; features Alan Hale, Lewis Stone, James Mitchell, Juano Hernandez, Charles Kemper, Amanda Blake. Directed by Jacques Tourneur. Screenplay, Margaret Fitts; based on novel and adaptation by Joe David Brown; narrated by Marshall Thompson; camera, Charles Schoenbaum; musical score, Adolph Deutsch; vocal arrangements, Robert Tucker; editor, Gene Ruggiero. Tradeshown Feb. 24, '50. Running time, 89 MINS.

Josiah Doziah Gray	Joel McCrea
Harriet Gray	Ellen Drew
John Kenyon	Dean Stockwell
Jed Isbell	Alan Hale
Dr. D. K. Harris, Sr	Lewis Stone
Dr. D. K. Harris, Jr.	James Mitchell
Faith Radmore Samuels	Amanda Blake
Uncle Famous Prill	Juano Hernandez
Prof. Sam Houston Jones	Charles Kemper
Sarah Isbell	Connie Gilchrist
Lon Backett	Ed Begley
Perry Lokey	Jack Lambert
Chloroform Wiggins	Arthur Hunnicutt

"Stars in My Crown" tells a story of a preacher and the people in his adopted town. Though good entertainment, it lacks anything verging on the spectacular to use as a ticket-selling gimmick. It will have to depend upon the spell it casts by its own charm and sound story-telling to develop word-of-mouth.

Script by Margaret Fitts, based on Joe David Brown's adaptation of his own novel, is crammed with human interest, from the comedy of everyday life to the drama of prejudice, greed and ignorance. Jacques Tourneur directed with a full realization of these fundamentals, and the cast troupes it to the hilt.

The plot depicts Joel McCrea's entry into a small village just after the war between the states, Bible in hand and determined to become the town's man of God. There's no Holy Joe-ing in the story. McCrea is as human and likeable as any of his flock. He's ready with a quote or a fist to settle trouble or injustice, and has the wit to handle problems without physical might when needs be.

The Brown novel has such things as natural resistance of a town to a young doctor; greed and prejudice trying to oust an elderly Negro from his small plot of land; a typhoid epidemic to create havoc among the families; romance and courtship; all good, honest slices of life that never get out of hand under the understanding direction of Tourneur or the equally sympathetic production guidance by William H. Wright.

The count of strong dramatic moments is high. Among them as the topper is the parson's shaming of a masked mob, just about to lynch an old Negro. Lighter, but equally sound in dramatics, is the relationship of McCrea and his wife, Ellen Drew; the romance between James Mitchell, the young doctor, and Amanda Blake; the large, hearty and lusty family bred by Alan Hale; and the many little incidents, such as Charles Kemper's travelling medicine show.

Trouping is uniformly excellent. Outside of McCrea's excellent performance can be found what Miss Drew should count as just about her best to date. Dean Stockwell is excellent as the moppet member of the parson's family. The late Alan Hale shines. Lewis Stone gifts his scenes as the old village doctor with an exceptional interpretation of the good writing. Mitchell scores as the young medico. There's another standout film chore by Juano Hernandez as the elderly Negro. Miss Blake, Kemper, Connie Gilchrist, Ed Begley, Jack Lambert and Arthur Hunnicutt, and the others, uncredited, all add their measure to making this one worthwhile.

Title of the picture comes from the old hymn, and with several others, is reprised during the footage to warm up the village "come-to-the-meeting" flavor and homespun, but not bucolic, air of the story. Narrator who ties the story together is Marshall Thompson, and he does his unseen chore well. Adolph Deutsch has given the picture a good musical score, and the vocal arrangements of the church tunes benefit at the hands of Robert Tucker. Lensing by Charles Schoenbaum; the editing by Gene Ruggiero and other technical credits are in keeping with entertainment values. Brog.

The Winslow Boy

"The Winslow Boy," British-made, being tradeshown in New York tomorrow (Thurs.) was reviewed in VARIETY from London Sept. 29, 1948. Pic, according to reviewer Myro, "With its star-studded cast, moving story and emotional appeal, is a certain boxoffice winner for the home trade and should do substantial business with American audiences." Written by Terence Ratigan, yarn was originally offered on the London stage in 1946, followed by a Broadway production in 1947. Latter presentation met with moderate success, while the former was in the hit class.

Film, being released in the U. S. by Eagle Lion, stars Robert Donat, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Francis L. Sullivan and Margaret Leighton.

Quicksand

United Artists release of Samuel H. Stiefel production. Stars Mickey Rooney; features Jeanne Cagney, Barbara Bates, Peter Lorre. Directed by Irving Pichel. Screenplay, Robert Smith; camera, Lionel Lindon; editor, Walter Thompson. Tradeshown N. Y. Feb. 23, '50. Running time, 79 MINS.

Dan	Mickey Rooney
Vera	Jeanne Cagney
Helen	Barbara Bates
Nick	Peter Lorre
Harvey	Taylor Holmes
Mackey	Art Smith
Chuck	Wally Cassel
Moriarity	John Galludet
Landlady	Minerva Urecal
Millie	Patsy O'Connor

"Quicksand" is an okay meller with a crime-does-not-pay moral that's clearly hammered home. With Mickey Rooney the sole marquee name, pic has moderate chances for the key firstruns but will likely do better on top of nabe dual bills. Simple yarn of an honest kid trapped into a life of crime by a single slip also has natural selling pegs for the exploitation circuit.

Robert Smith's screenplay is a fast, straightforward vehicle that makes no detours for characterizations. Plot has several implausible stretches but overall speed sustains interest throughout. Irving Pichel directs in a positive key while the modest but neat production is buttressed by good performances.

Rooney plays a garage mechanic who falls for a gold-digging blonde, Jeanne Cagney. Strapped for cash on his first date, Rooney taps the boss' till for $20 with intentions of putting it back on payday. Long arm of coincidence works overtime, however, as the accountant makes an early visit and Rooney is forced to raise the money immediately. Rooney slides in more deeply with an installment purchase of an expensive watch and then immediately pawning it. He's finally forced into a couple of stickups, a near murder and a getaway over the Mexican border. En route, however, he kidnaps a kindly lawyer who advises him to go back and take his medicine.

Rooney portrays the hard-luck mechanic in convincingly sombre tones without once having the chance for any comic capers or mugging. As a dramatic actor, Rooney is competent but fails to show wide range. Miss Cagney registers strongly as the hard-boiled gal while Peter Lorre plays with his usual menace as a penny arcade operator who blackmails Rooney. Barbara Bates also impresses nicely in her role as the smalltown girlfriend who sticks by Rooney to the end.

Camera work is crisp while tight editing keeps the film rolling at smooth clip. Herm.

(COLOR-SONGS)

Universal release of Robert Arthur production. Stars Yvonne De Carlo, Philip Friend; features Robert Douglas, Elsa Lanchester, Andrea King, Norman Lloyd, Henry Daniell. Directed by Frederick de Cordova. Screenplay, Harold Shumate and Joseph Hoffman, based on story by Joe May and Samuel R. Golding; camera, Russell Metty; special effects, David S. Horsley; editor, Otto Ludwig; songs, Walter Scharf and Jack Brooks; dances, Harold Belfer. Tradeshown N. Y., Feb. 24, '50. Running time, 77 MINS.

Deborah McCoy	Yvonne de Carlo
Fredric Baptiste	Philip Friend
Narbonne	Robert Douglas
Mme. Brizer	Elsa Lanchester
Arlene Villon	Andrea King
Patout	Norman Lloyd
Jared Hawkins	Jay C. Flippen
Captain Duval	Henry Daniell
Captain Martos	Douglas Dumbrille
Dowager	Verna Felton
Vegetable Man	John Qualen
Vegetable Woman	Connie Gilchrist
Tom	Ben Welden
Kryl	Dewey Robinson
Cleo	Peggie Castle

"Buccaneer's Girl" is a melange of most of the Technicolor pirate films that have been turned out by Hollywood during the last several years. But it has Yvonne De Carlo for marquee bait and enough swashbuckling pirate antics to please the action fans, for whom it was obviously grooved. It won't stir up much boxoffice action in the key city first runs but should hold its own in most other situations.

Miss De Carlo demonstrates no great thesping talents. Her role of a wandering entertainer who winds up with a gentleman pirate in old New Orleans, however, doesn't make too many demands so that she gets by adequately. In addition, she looks well in Techni and handles her trio of tunes competently. British actor Philip Friend, as a modified Douglas Fairbanks character, is the pirate chief and does an okay job with his devil-may-caring, fencing, etc. Rest of the cast, comprising many familiar faces, make the most of none-too-original situations and dialog.

Screenplay by Harold Shumate and Joseph Hoffman, based on a story by Joe May and Samuel R. Golding, has some gaping holes but also enough of a twist to sustain audience interest. Friend, really a Robin Hood at heart, concentrates all his piracy on one shipowner who had ruined his father, turning over all his loot to a seamen's fund. On shore, he successfully masquerades as the philanthropic administrator of the fund.

Film is replete with the standard pirate accoutrements, including running battles at sea between sailing vessels, the hand-to-hand fights when the pirates board their ship of prey, etc. It also features a fine knock-down, drag-out between Miss De Carlo and Andrea King, who plays the snobbish fiancee. Film carries an apparent broad sweep and lush mountings, which rate a nod for producer Robert Arthur, director Frederick de Cordova and special effects lenser David S. Horsley whose skillful work makes it look like a top-budgeter.

Supporting cast is good. Robert Douglas and Norman Lloyd are sufficiently despicable as the villain and his treacherous secretary, respectively, while Elsa Lanchester turns in another of her first-rate performances as the operator of a school for "genteel" entertainers who takes Miss De Carlo under her wing. Miss King, beauteous in Techni, makes for a nice villainess, but Henry Daniell, Jay C. Flippen and Douglas Dumbrille don't have much chance to show in lesser roles.

Trio of tunes by Jack Brooks and Walter Scharf, all thrushed by Miss De Carlo, probably won't be heard again after the film, but suit their purpose. Russell Metty's color lensing is good and editor Otto Ludwig has kept the running time down to a tight 77 minutes. Stal.

The Kid From Texas

Hollywood, Feb. 21.

Universal release of Paul Short production. Stars Audie Murphy, Gale Storm; features Albert Dekker, Shepperd Strudwick. Directed by Kurt Neumann. Screenplay, Robert Hardy Andrews, Karl Kamb; camera (Technicolor), Charles Van Enger; editor, Frank Gross. Previewed Feb. 21, '50. Running time, 78 MINS.

Billy the Kid	Audie Murphy
Irene Kain	Gale Storm
Alexander Kain	Albert Dekker
Jameson	Shepperd Strudwick
O'Fallon	Will Geer
Minniger	William Talman
Morales	Martin Garralaga
General Wallace	Robert H. Barrat

Pat Garrett	Frank Wilcox
Major Harper	Dennis Hoey
Sheriff Rand	Ray Teal
Morgan	Don Haggerty
Copeland	Paul Ford
Sid Curtis	John Phillips
Matt Curtis	Harold Goodwin
Lucas	Zon Murray
Denby	Tom Trout
Marita	Rosa Turich
Lupita	Dorita Pallais
Margarita	Pilar Del Rey

UI's "The Kid from Texas" is another link in the seemingly endless chain of Billy the Kid pix. But producer Paul Short missed his entertainment mark in putting this one together. A slow, draggy screenplay, with direction along the same lines, makes this minor league despite some impressive color lensing of beautiful backgrounds.

The Robert Andrews-Karl Kamb screenplay deals with that phase of Billy's career that took place in Lincoln County, N.M., when range wars forced the U. S. to appoint a governor for the territory. It treats Billy as sympathetic character who tries to go straight when a rancher gives him a helping hand and a job. When the rancher is killed, however, Billy returns to the six-gun for vengeance and runs his string of killings from eight to 21. It climaxes with the Kid's death at hands at Pat Garrett.

War hero Audie Murphy handles the Kid assignment in commendable fashion although not too strong a screen personality. Gale Storm impresses as wife of frontier legal-eagle, played in first-rate fashion by Albert Dekker, who is idolized by the Kid for her kindness and beauty. Shepperd Strudwick tastefully handles rancher friend of Billy. Will Geer and Martin Garralaga score as his pals. Robert Barrat gives dignity to his role of territorial governor. Frank Wilcox is also effective in a lesser part.

Kurt Neumann's direction failed to get the most out of the slow yarn. In handling characters Neumann came through okay, but in matter of pacing the action he fell far short.

Best is the colorful backgrounds brought to vivid life by camera of Charles Van Enger, assisted by Technicolor consultant William Fritzsche. Art direction of Bernard Herzbrun and Emrich Nicholson is also first-rate. Decorations of Russell A. Gausman and Oliver Emert lend authenticity to frontier sets.

Music of Milton Schwarzwald fails to stir up much emotional excitement to key film. Film editing of Frank Gross is on the loose side.

Tyrant of the Sea

Columbia release of Sam Katzman production. Features Rhys Williams, Ron Randell, Valentine Perkins, Doris Lloyd, Lester Matthews, Harry Cording, Terry Kilburn. Directed by Lew Landers. Screenplay, Robert Libott and Frank Burt; camera, Ira H. Morgan; editor, Edwin Bryant. At Strand, Brooklyn, dual, week Feb. 22, '50. Running time, 70 MINS.

Capt. William Blake	Rhys Williams
Eric Hawkins	Ron Randell
Betsy Blake	Valentine Perkins
Elizabeth Blake	Doris Lloyd
Lord Nelson	Lester Matthews
Sampson Edwards	Harry Cording
Dick Savage	Terry Kilburn
Phillipe Domer	Maurice Marsac
Shawn O'Donnell	William Fawcett
Howard Palmer	Ross Elliott
John Moriarity	Don Harvey
Oliver Sibley	James Fairfax

A road company "Mutiny on the Bounty" in theme, this Columbia entry should do all right in dualer situations.

Centered around a sea captain, obsessed with power, pic hinges its 70 minutes running time on the part played by one British ship during England's war with France. The captain, a likeable chap on shore, rules his ship with an iron hand that eventually leads his men to mutiny. An inconsequential love story between the captain's daughter and an officer abroad his ship is brought in for a brief play, while there's a fair amount of footage devoted to a couple of sea battles.

MEDIUM-BUDGETERS' B.O. DIMOUT

Hughes OKs 'Outlaw' Ad Change When Fox, Atlanta, Threatens to Cancel

RKO boss Howard Hughes allowed the first concession this week on his ruling that not a word be changed in advertising on "The Outlaw." Rather than lose the booking for the Fox theatre, Atlanta, which refused to play the pic if it had to stick to the original ad copy, Hughes permitted RKO to work out a compromise with William H. Jenkins' Georgia Theatres Co., operators of the house.

No actual change was made in the copy, but the Jenkins circuit was permitted to insert the line "By Popular Demand" over top of the ad to mitigate the impression this was the first time the pic had played Atlanta. Originally, the chain wanted to put "Returning by Popular Demand," but Hughes wouldn't go for "Returning."

The new line precedes the catch phrase. "Finally, at last, after a 3-year delay, you can see . . .", which Jenkins and his staff said was "misleading." They declared that implied the Fox's playdate was to be the first Atlanta showing. Actually, the film played Loew's Grand there about three years ago and then 21 subsequent houses.

Jenkins' staff squawked to RKO's branch manager that it wouldn't run the ad as is, and the protest went right up the line to sales chief Robert Mochrie. Mochrie's hands were tied by Hughes' order forbidding any change and, as of last weekend, he had no alternative but to pull the date. Subsequently the compromise was worked out.

Denver Another Compromise

The only other compromise was in Denver, where "Outlaw" had played only about 18 months ago. Hughes in that case permitted the "3-year" line to be removed.

Extent to which Hughes is going to insure that there will be no changes in the copy is that the advertising plates are being shipped directly to newspapers from the Coast. They are made up there by Foote, Cone & Belding, agency on the account. Ordinarily they'd be shipped from New York or an exhib would order locally the ad mats he had selected from the press book or he'd make up his own copy. Plates are being sent to all key papers, rather than mats, to insure best reproduction. Posters are also being lithographed by a

Lopert Sues Pathe For 100G, Seeks To Nip Pact on 'Shine'

Pathe Industries, Inc. (Eagle Lion) deliberately failed to devote its best efforts to exploit and sell "Shoe Shine," Lopert Films charged in a $100,000 damage suit filed in N. Y. Federal court Monday (27). Seeking rescission of a Dec. 20, 1947 distribution contract, the plaintiff claims it was fraudulently induced to sign the deal and wants the court to restore it all rights to the Italian-made film in territories covered by the agreement.

Following acquisition of exclusive distribution rights to "Shoe Shine," Lopert inked the 1947 pact with Pathe which called for the latter to handle the picture in Mexico and certain Central and South American countries. Pathe, the complaint states, failed to launch the film in general release in all territories and also falsely represented that it was establishing exchanges in all areas stipulated in the agreement.

In addition, Lopert asserts that Pathe entered into sub-distribution pacts without its consent. Besides damages and rescission of the agreement, Lopert also wants all prints and copyrights returned plus an accounting and a permanent injunction. The 1947 transaction called for a 60-40 split of the film's earnings with Pathe on the short end. Pic is said to have picked up $1,500,000 in the western hemisphere.

Purity's Big Payoff

With all the fanfare surrounding "Stromboli" and "The Outlaw," RKO execs are finding, to their surprise and comfort, that sex is paying off second best to a children's story. Walt Disney's version of the classic fairy tale, "Cinderella," which went into release two weeks ago, is far outstripping—without a trace of lurid publicity—the grosses on "Stromboli" and "Outlaw," although the latter continues to do well.

Disney pic, on the basis of the handful of engagements played so far, looks certain to be the biggest draw the producer has turned out since "Snow White." Incidentally, Judge Igoe in Chicago unwittingly gave RKO a break recently when he denied its request to extend the two-week Loop run limitation on "Stromboli," and, instead, granted "Cinderella" an unlimited stay. "Stromboli" did a quick brodie at the b.o., while the Disney cartoon is doing exceptionally strong biz.

Seattle Upset Of 'Stromboli' Ban Buoys Industry

Following its success in blocking a municipally-imposed ban on "Stromboli" in Seattle, RKO is planning similar court action in the five other cities which have nixed the Ingrid Bergman-Roberto Rossellini film. The Seattle decision, handed down last Thursday (23), was widely-applauded in the industry as considerably widening the right of films to freedom from censorship.

RKO attorneys, convinced that any ban on the pic is unconstitutional, particularly when based not on content but on alleged personal moral infringements by a player or director, are ready to carry their fight to Memphis, Nashville, and Lowell, Lawrence and Holyoke, Mass.

Aside from other considerations, the court battles should prove valuable from a boxoffice standpoint. Pic opened in Seattle the day following the court decision and did proportionately better biz than in other cities throughout the country. Failure of the pic to hold up b.o.

New Nashville Censors' Sweeping Powers vs. Pix

Nashville, Feb. 28.

Aimed specifically at banning the exhibition of "Stromboli" in Nashville, the city legislature has set up a permanent film censorship board with sweeping powers. Appointed by the Nashville mayor, the board is empowered to go beyond any pic's content before putting its stamp of approval on it.

Wording of the bill setting up the censorship body provides for the ban of a pic if its director, producer or star "has gained by his or her personal conduct a reputation for laxity in morals or conduct or for loose and immoral living and conduct." The bill was raced through the city legislature in double-quick time with the Mayor signing it only two days after its first reading.

New censor board is composed of 11 members, including four Negroes, who will serve without pay for one year terms. A previewing system for pix to be screened in Nashville is being set up by exhibs under the law's provisions.

HIT-OR-MISS BIZ STYMIES INDIES

One of the problems facing indie producers is the lack of market currently for pix between the real quickie category and those in the lower-budgeted "A" classification. That is generally in the field of product costing between about $120,000 and $500,000.

Lack of market for this type of film is a reflection of changing public b.o. habits. No longer are many medium quality pix doing sufficient biz to pay off. Films are increasingly falling into the hit or flop category, with no in-between.

Prevalence of this situation hits the lower-medium cost product hardest. The westerns and actioners that can be made by the shoestring-row contingent under the $120,000 figure have a ready market in subsequents and as dual-bill fodder in many situations. Their budgets are designed in the recognition that they are going to be sold to exhibs at flat rental. They can show a profit on that basis. Furthermore, there's small chance taken in making them since variations in quality are minor and mean little.

Producers are discovering that if they want to make anything better than that style of canned goods, they've got to jump to a budget classification that will allow their product to qualify as at least a "lazy A." That's in contrast to pre-war and the early war years when considerable profit was made in the category of pix which were frankly "B's" and would now come in for $250,000 to $350,000 or thereabouts.

There are occasional exceptions, of course, to the rule now that nothing between $120,000 and $500,000 will pay off for indies. A

Par's Production Staffer Layoffs

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Paramount has swung its economy axe with the result that 14 studio execs in lower brackets have been pink-slipped and a larger number laid off because of a seasonal slowdown in production. Art department was hardest hit although notices also ranged to assistant production managers and directors. Scattering of service employees were also lopped.

Some production help were given 90-day leave of absence without pay, subject to call any time during the period. Par has one pic definitely scheduled for production in March, the Alan Ladd starrer "Montana Rides." However, several other films may start rolling in that month.

Cuts are attributed to the supervision of Hal Pereira, one of the heads of the art dept., who has been here since last year. Pereira is acting as Barney Balaban's personal rep on the lot with instruc-

FTC Rule Stymies 'Our Gang' Reissues

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Monogram ran into legal complications in its project for the reissue of 39 "Our Gang" shorts, filmed years ago by Hal Roach. Idea was to release them under the general title, "Little Rascals," starting March 1 with four films in the first batch.

Johnston Office called a halt, informing Monogram that the Federal Trade Commission has a rule that all reissued pictures must bear their original titles, or that the original titles must be used in prominent type. Monogram acquired the films from Auerbach Film Enterprises, Ltd., under a deal which stipulates that they may not be mentioned as reissues of the "Our Gang" series.

Justman-Heller-Loew-Leserman-UA All Set; James Nasser Active Again

Fromer's B.R. Quest

New sources of bank coin for indie production financing are being sought in the east by Irving Fromer, who has associated for the past three years with James Nasser, at General Service Studios on the Coast. Fromer, an attorney, has left the Nasser organization to set up his own offices in New York.

A New York lawyer before going to the Coast some years ago, Fromer is planning to specialize in legal work connected with indie financing and production. He is understood already to have sounded out a number of banks in the east, but outside of New York City. These have never before gone into picture loans, but are said to be showing some interest.

Justman deal, on which United Artists prexy Grad Sears is now putting the finishing touches, is unique in that UA is guaranteeing production loans made by primary investors to the extent of 7½% of the budget. DeLuxe Labs is guaranteeing a similar amount.

Deal calls for production within one year of six films for UA release. There are no banks involved. Walter E. Heller & Co., Chicago factoring outfit, is in the first money position, while David Loew is providing bonds and some guarantees and Joseph Justman, head of Motion Picture Centre studios, is giving a studio deferment.

UA's guarantee of part of Haller's portion of the loan is evidence of efforts now being made by distributing companies to line up product. Film Classics and Eagle Lion, for instance, have been giving deferments of distribution fees. UA has been adamant against that practice, but has made a minor concession in giving the guarantee.

While the terms of the new setup have been rather closely guarded, it is understood that Heller will put up 75% of the budget of each picture. Through the guarantees of 7½% by UA, Heller's "exposure," in banking terminology, is only 60%.

Producers who are financed under this formula are supposed to provide deferments to the extent of 25% of the budget, which, with the Heller money, makes up the 100% financing. Since it is almost impossible to amass 25% deferments, the producer usually has to make up the difference with cash. This he has to borrow from an outside source and give a chunk of his piece of the pic for it. Net result generally is that the pro-

Collarites In Middle of 3-Way Jurisdictional

A three-way fight for jurisdiction over home-office film whitecollarites is looming among the AFL, CIO and the independent United Office & Professional Workers of America, which was recently expelled from the CIO. Battle lines are currently being drawn in the two UOPWA film locals, the Screen Office & Professional Employees Guild and the Screen Publicists Guild.

Initial shot was fired last week when a group inside the flack guild blocked a proposal to merge SPG and SOPEG. Forcing a tabling of the motion sponsored by the union leadership, the dissidents are expected to launch a movement to move out of UOPWA. UOPWA was expelled by the CIO executive board on charges that it followed the Communist line. Expulsion will formally be effected today (Wed.).

The CIO, meantime, has set up an organizing committee to cover the fields now controlled by UOPWA. CIO leaders in the N. Y.

UA Shuts Cal. Office With Bagnall's Exit

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

United Artists discontinued its California office following the resignation of George L. Bagnall as veepee in charge of production. Departing with Bagnall were Cecil Coan, pub-ad liaison; Hugh Ratliff, comptroller, and three secretaries.

Bagnall's former duties will be assumed by Gradwell Sears, prexy; Arthur Kelly, veepee, and Paul Lazarus, Jr., assistant to Sears. One of the three will be in Hollywood to handle production affairs whenever the occasion demands it. Selmer Chalif will maintain offices in Beverly Hills to handle preliminaries on production deals and other company affairs.

Haendler's $9,596 Win

Ile de France Films last week was nicked with a $9,596 default judgment in N. Y. supreme court after it allegedly failed to pay A.W. Haendler 15% of all distribution earnings of the French film, "Volpone," collected in territories outside France.

Under a 1940 agreement Haendler loaned the firm 250,000 francs, and was supposed to receive a percentage of the picture's overseas earnings. He brought suit in 1948 charging the company had failed to observe the pact.

Kramer's Lettuce-Grower Backer Gets Up Enough Lettuce to B.R. 'Cyrano'

Financing for his next film, "Cyrano de Bergerac," is all set, producer Stanley Kramer disclosed in New York yesterday (Tuesday). Coin again will be advanced in its entirety by Bruce Church, millionaire lettuce-grower of Salinas, Cal., who similarly provided 100% financing for "The Men," which Kramer just completed.

Kramer and George Glass, v.p. and public relations chief of Stanley Kramer Productions, Inc., arrived in the east Monday (27) from Hollywood. They'll be in New York about two weeks to deliver a print of "The Men" to United Artists for distribution and discuss distribution plans with prexy Grad Sears and pub-ad chief Howard LeSieur.

Current idea is to hold the film for release until August, in order to permit time for a long-range publicity and advertising buildup. In the meantime, Kramer will put "Cyrano" before the cameras this spring, with Jose Ferrer starred and Michael Gordon directing.

In discussing his financing, Kramer disclosed that he has no intention of dissolving his production corporation for tax purposes after one or two pictures, as has been customary among indie filmmakers, but will continue it to build up an equity in the label. Federal revenooers have been objecting to "one-picture corporations," but Kramer asserted that that in any case was not his plan of operation.

One of the reasons for his desire to build up the name of his corporate setup is the unique financing arrangement with Church. This gives the moneyman no stock in the company itself, but merely a percentage of profits on each film he finances. Kramer in this way is able to wield full control of the policies of his unit.

Stockholders, aside from Kramer, are all operating associates. They are Glass, scripter Carl Forman and attorney Sam Zagon.

Los Angeles, Feb. 28.

"Francis" and "Stromboli" are making the boxoffice noise here this session, both running well above normal for their respective units. Elsewhere, biz is lagging. "Francis," in five theatres, mostly small-seaters, is looking for handsome $45,000 or better. "Stromboli," in two spots, shapes to hit very good $40,000.

Third new bill, "Mother Didn't Tell Me," shapes light at about $41,000 in five sites. Fourth week of "Samson" at two Paramount houses looks nice $25,000. Second round of "Chain Lightning," three locations, looms mild $23,500. Final four days of second week for "Malaya," playing in two houses, is only $16,500.

Estimates for This Week

'Cinderella' Sets Pace In Prov., Hotsy $22,000; '12 O'Clock' Lofty 18G

Providence, Feb. 28.

Very heavy opening day is giving RKO Albee smash week with "Cinderella." Not feeling usual Lenten slowdown is Majestic's "12 O'Clock High" and Loew's State's second week of "Battleground." Strand going into third sesh of "Samson and Delilah" only fair at high scale.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 44-65)—"Cinderella" (RKO). Single bill and quick turn has house looking for smash $22,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO) and "Tattooed Stranger" (RKO), fairly active $17,000.

Fay's (Fay) (1,400; 44-65)—"Beyond Glory" (Indie) (reissue) and vaude onstage. Fair $5,500. Last week, "Riders in Sky" (Col) and vaude, nice $7,500.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 44-65)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th). Very nice $18,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB), $16,000.

'Francis' Wham $14,000 in Omaha

Omaha, Feb. 28.

High pressure exploitation embracing many old and new tricks, plus appeal of an unusual theme, is giving "Francis" at the Orpheum a rousing $14,000 for this week, Boxoffice lines at opening were tipoff that city was going for this comedy with one of top straight film grosses likely.

"Stromboli" sagged a little on second week at Brandeis but in six days is not bad. Paramount's "Mrs. Mike" is very good.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,500; 25-74) — "Stromboli" (RKO) (2d wk). Sagged to oke $3,600 in 6 days. Last week, smash $8,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (3,000; 16-65)—"Francis" (U). Socko $14,000. Last week, "Free For All" (U) and Sammy Kaye orch onstage, near record $29,000 at 20-80c scale.

Paramount (Tristates) (2,800; 16-65)—"Mrs. Mike" (UA). Nice $11,000. Last week, "Samson and Delilah" (Par) (2d wk) (50-$1.20), great $18,000, best second week in years.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,100; 16-65)—"Stampede" (Mono) and "Bomba on Panther Island" (Mono). Rousing $9,000. Last week, "Red Light" (UA) and "Siren Atlantis" (UA), okay $9,000.

State (Goldberg) (865; 16-65) — "Bagdad" (U) and "The Guilty" (Mono). Opened today (Tues.). Last week, "Battleground" (M-G) (6th wk), big at $4,000.

'Ambush' Rugged $12,500, Seattle; 'Mother' 14G

Seattle, Feb. 28.

New bills predominate this week, with "Ambush" great at Liberty. "Mother Didn't Tell Me" also is big at Fifth Avenue. "Foolish Heart" shapes solid at Music Box. "Stromboli," originally set for big-seater Orpheum, went into small-seater Blue Mouse, where doing well.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; 59-84)—"Stromboli" (RKO). Opened first day after court okayed showing and started off big with great $7,000 possible. Last week, "Woman in Hiding" (U) and "Beyond Rio Grande" (Rep) (m.o.), only $500 in 2 days.

Coliseum (Evergreen) (1,877; 59-84) — "Sundowners" (EL) and "Palooka Meets Humphrey" (Mono). Good $8,000. Last week, "Port of

'Francis' Lusty $12,000, Balto; 'Key' Strong 16G

Baltimore, Feb. 28.

Biz is uneven all along the downtown sector here this week with "Key to City," faring well and riding into a second round at Loew's Century. "Stromboli" after very brief flurry on opening is sliding into a slump and tight session at the Town. Very solid take is being registered by "Francis," on heels of strong bally, at Keith's.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Loew's-UA) (3,000; 20-60)—"Key to City" (M-G) (2d wk). Starts second round tomorrow (Wed.) after very substantial $16,000 opener.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,240; 20-80) — "Threat" (RKO) plus vaude headed by Jack Carson, Janis Paige and Robert Alda. Stage layout getting all credit for excellent $18,000. Last week, "Port New York" (EL) and vaude with Fran Warren, fair $13,200.

Keith's (Schanberger) (2,460; 20-60)—"Francis" (U) (2d wk). Starts second sesh today (Tues.) after solid preem at $12,000.

Mayfair (Hicks) (980; 20-65) — "Deadly Is Female" (UA). Opening tomorrow (Wed.) after "Capt. China" (Par) held well enough to go into an unexpected second round at $4,400 after steady opener of $5,800.

New (Mechanic) (1,800; 20-60)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th) (3d wk). Winding up at indicated $7,000 after good second session of $9,600.

Stanley (WB) (3,280; 25-75) — "Montana" (WB). Mild $10,000. Last week, "Samson and Delilah" (Par) (3d wk), at $1.20 top, brought total of $57,700 for run.

Town (Rappaport) (1,500; 35-65) —"Stromboli" (RKO). Went sour after slight spark on opening day with thin $9,000 for eight days. "Eiffel Tower" (RKO) opens tomorrow (Wed.).

'Iwo Jima' Aces In Mpls., $20,000

Minneapolis, Feb. 28.

Major newcomers include two such strong contenders "Key to City" and "Sands of Iwo Jima." "Iwo Jima" looks socko at State after biggest opening day in five years. "Key" shapes solid at Radio City.

Estimates for This Week

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 50-70)—"Pinky" (20th) (m.o.). Second stand and third loop week. Still healthy at $6,000. Last week, "Port New York" (EL), light $4,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,000; 55-70)—"Key to City" (M-G). Well-liked and lauded picture. Good $15,000. or near. Last week, "Dear Wife" (Par), $14,000.

RKO-Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 50-70) — "Chain Lightning" (WB). Mild $10,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO), collapsed after strong start and finished at very good but disappointing $13,000.

RKO-Pan (RKO) (1,600; 50-70)—"Father Is Bachelor" (Col). Slow $6,500. Last week, "Guilty Bystander" (EL), okay $7,000.

State (Par) (2,300; 50-70)—"Sands Iwo Jima" (Rep). Lots of praise for this one and it had benefit of fine bally. Terrific $20,000. Last week, "Pinky" (20th) (2d wk), good $9,000.

World (Mann) (400; 50-70)—"Facts of Love" (Indie). British film given loud advertising. Light $2,000. Last week, "Germany, Year Zero" (Indie), same.

Snow Sloughs Det.; Hampton Boosts 'Bystander' 40G, 'Backfire' Light 15G

Detroit, Feb. 28.

Continuance of Chrysler strike and winter's worst snowstorm will make greater inroads this week into downtown film biz. Lionel Hampton's band at Fox may boost "Guilty Bystander" to neat $40,000. Two oldies, "Bengal Lancer" and "Beau Geste" are getting a solid total at the United Artists. Only other bright spot is "Samson and Delilah," shaping a trim $15,000 in sixth week at Madison.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Mich) (5,000; 85-$1)—"Guilty Bystander" (FC) plus Lionel Hampton orch onstage. May hit neat $40,000. Last week, "12 O'Clock High" (20th) (2d wk), $26,000.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; 70-95) — "Borderline" (U) and "Blonde Dynamite" (Mono). Slim $14,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB), $17,000.

Palms (UD) (2,900; 70-95)—"Backfire" (WB) and "Silent Conflict" (UA). Light $15,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO), disappointing $14,000 after early heavy play, and way below expectancy.

United Artists (UD) (2,000; 10-95) —"Bengal Lancer" (Par) and "Beau Geste" (Par) (reissues). Swell $18,000. Last week, "Mrs. Mike" (UA) and "Satan's Cradle" (UA), $16,000.

Madison (UD) (1,800; 75-$1.20)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (6th wk). Solid $15,000. Last week, $19,000.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; 70-95)—"Red Shoes" (EL). Thin $8,000. Last week, "Battleground" (M-G) (6th wk), $7,000.

Downtown (Balaban) (2,900; 70-95)—"Ambush" (M-G) and "Cry Murder" (PC) (3d wk). Oke $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

'Francis' Socko $25,000, Frisco

San Francisco, Feb. 28.

Holdovers are off sharply this session, and some of newcomers are not getting very far. Outstanding is "Francis," which got off to a great start, and looks smash on initial week at Orpheum. Paramount pushed its opening ahead to last Tuesday, ahead of Feb. 22 holiday, and got extra trade as a result with "Backfire." "Chain Lightning" is very slim at the Fox. "Stromboli" fell with a thud in second Golden Gate week after strong opener.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,844; 60-85)—"Stromboli" (RKO) (2d wk). Slipping to $14,000. Last week, strong $23,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; 60-95)—"Chain Lightning" (WB) and "Unmasked" (Rep). Weak $17,000 or more. Last week, "Willie Comes Home" (20th) and "Bomba Panther Island" (Mono), $16,500.

Warfield (Loew's) (2,656; 60-85) —"Malaya" (M-G). Big $28,000 in 10 days. Last week, "Ambush" (M-G) (2d wk), 4 days, nice $12,000.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 60-85)—"Backfire" (WB) and "Capt. China" (Par). Hefty $21,000. Last week, "Blue Grass Kentucky" (Mono) and "Killer Shark" (Mono), only $11,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; 85-$1.20) —"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (6th wk). Down to $9,000. Last week, husky $15,000.

Orpheum (No. Coast) (2,448; 55-85)—"Francis" (U). Socko $25,000. Last week, "Father Is Bachelor" (Col) and "Traveling Saleswoman" (Col), only $10,800.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,207; 55-85)—"Deadly Is Female" (UA). Thin 4,500. Last week, "Never Fear" (EL), $7,500.

Stagedoor (Ackerman) (370; 85-$1)—"Saints and Sinners" (Indie). Nice $6,500. Last week, "Fallen Idol" (SRO) (8th wk), $5,500.

Clay (Roesner) (400; 65-85)—"Chips Are Down" (Indie) (3d wk). Off to $2,500. Last week, oke $3,000.

Larkin (Roesner) (400; 65-85)—"Devil in Flesh" (Indie) (9th wk). About $2,000. Last week, fine $2,600.

'On Town' Great $12,000, Port.; 'Mother' Neat 13G

Portland, Ore., Feb. 28.

Big news here this week is split-up of Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres. "On the Town" looks tops with smash session at United Artists. "Mother Didn't Tell Me" looks okay in two spots.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,832; 50-85) —"Malaya" (M-G) and "Challenge to Lassie" (M-G) (2d wk). Down to $9,000. Last week, smash $13,000.

'Samson' Mighty $30,000, Pitt; 'Key' Clicks With 20G, Bergman Slow 14G

Pittsburgh, Feb. 28.

"Samson and Delilah" is proving a real strong man at the Warner boxoffice. It is rolling up sensational daily grosses with wow first session. "Key to City" looks solid at Penn but "Stromboli" teed off dismally at Stanley. "12 O'Clock High" is holding up very well at Harris.

Estimates for This Week

Barry (Skirball) (1,100; 45-80)—"Red Shoes" (EL) (6th wk). Tag end of the run and down to $4,000. Last week, nice $6,000.

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 45-80)—"Dancing in Dark" (20th). Competition is too tough righ now, and musical won't do over $7,000. Last week, "Willie Comes Home" (20th) (2d wk), good $7,200.

Harris (Harris) (2,200; 45-80)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th) (2d wk). Academy Award nominations gave this one a shot in arm, $13,000 and may hold again. Last week, big $18,500.

Penn (Loew's) (3,300; 45-80)—"Key to City" (M-G). Clark Gable back in form again and this shows it, rousing $20,000. May stay. Last week, "Ambush" (M-G), $15,000.

Stanley (WB) (3,800; 45-80)—"Stromboli" (RKO). Highly-publicized Bergman picture didn't even get an opening and will be lucky to do very ordinary $14,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB), $12,000.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 70-$1.25)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par). Terrific $30,000 on opening stanza; insures healthy run. Last week, ((reissues) "Beau Geste" (Par) and "Lives Bengal Lancer" (Par) (reissues) okay $8,000.

Final Oscar Ballots Out

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Final ballots were mailed yesterday (Mon.) to members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the lowdown on the Oscar Derby, to be held March 23 at the Pantages theatre.

Ballots will be turned over to Price, Waterhouse Co., certified public accounts, who have been deciding photo finishes in the Oscar Derby for years.

'Cinderella' New High 41G, Tops Chi's New Pix; 'Intruder' Fat 14G, 'Treason' Loud 13G, 'Stromboli' Snappy 16G, 2d

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Poor weather all week is cutting into most holdovers, but new films are doing excellent biz. "Cinderella" opened by breaking house record at Palace last Wednesday (22) with $9,000 on first day, and all-time high of $45,000 looms. "Intruder in Dust" looks fast $14,000 at United Artists. "Guilty of Treason" is snappy $13,000 at Roosevelt.

"Mule Train" and "Down Dakota Way," should bring a sharp $8,000 to Garrick. "Quicksand" and a disk jockey revue at Oriental is fair $40,000.

Three holdovers continue okay. "Third Man" at Selwyn is shaping up to tall $13,000 in second frame. "Bicycle Thief," at World, is terrific $7,500. "Stromboli," at Grand on second week, should do hefty $16,000, largely because advanced admissions are in effect. "Battleground" continues crisp $17,000 in third week at State-Lake. "Chain Lightning" with June Havoc onstage at Chicago is mediocre $33,000 for second week.

Estimates for This Week

Chicago (B&K) (3,400; 50-98)—"Chain Lightning" (WB) with June Havoc onstage (2d wk). Light $33,000. Last week, $50,000.

Century (20th Cent.) (3,000; 40-70)—"My Foolish Heart" (RKO) and "Stampede" (Mono). Good $13,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO), $12,000.

Bliz Bops Indpls. But 'Key' Hefty at $14,000

Indianapolis, Feb. 28.

Biz here is being slugged by winter's first blizzard and heavy interest in state highschool basketball tournament. However, "Key To City," at Loew's, is strong enough to hold. "Montana," at Indiana, and "Dancing in Dark," with Eddy Duchin show on stage at Circle both are disappointing.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Gamble-Dolle) (2,800; 50-90)—"Dancing in Dark" (20th) with Eddy Duchin orch, Vivian Blaine, others onstage. Slow $17,000. Last week, "Hasty Heart" (WB) and "Live By Night" (RKO), tepid $8,000 at 44-65c scale.

Indiana (G-D) (3,300; 44-65)—"Montana" (WB) and "Sarumba" (Indie). Thin $8,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO) and "Tattooed Stranger" (RKO), $7,800.

'Francis' Robust $19,000 in Philly

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.

Snow late Sunday afternoon and icy roads cut heavily into weekend biz, with long list of holdovers also hurting on current session, "Willie Comes Marching Home," getting most coin of newcomers, looms sturdy at Fox. "Francis," with terrif ballyhoo, looks nice at the Boyd while "Dakota Lil" shapes mild at the Stanton. "Outside the Wall" is solid in second frame at Aldine.

Estimates for This Week

Aldine (WB) (1,303; 50-99)—"Outside Wall" (U) (2d wk). Hefty $15,500 after smash $20,000 opener.

Boyd (WB) (2,360; 50-99)—"Francis" (U). Big matinee trade with nice $19,000 likely. Last week, "Battleground" (M-G) (6th wk), neat $12,000.

Earle (WB) (2,700; 70-$1.25)—"Samson and Delilah" (4th wk). Sturdy $22,500. Last week, $28,000.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 50-99)—"Willie Comes Marching Home" (20th). Solid $21,000. Last week, "12 O'Clock High" (20th), $12,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,200; 50-99)—"Stromboli" (RKO) (2d wk). Off to $11,000 after great $18,700 opener, over hopes.

Karlton (Goldman) (1,000; 50-99)—"Red Shoes" (EL) (6th wk). Good $6,000. Last week, $6,200.

Mastbaum (WB) (4,360; 50-99)—"Chain Lightning" (WB) (2d wk). Dull $12,000 after light $18,000 opener.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,500; 50-99)—"Key to City" (M-G) (2d wk). Good $16,000. Last week, sturdy $25,000.

Stanley (WB) (2,950; 50-99)—"All King's Men" (Col) (3d wk). Down to $13,000. Last week, nice, $22,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 50-99)—"Tight Little Island" (U) (3d wk). Plenty of profit at $6,000. Last week, great $8,000.

Toronto, Feb. 28.

Three-day blizzard has slowed up biz, but it picked up latter half of week. Leading and still in second week is "12 O'Clock High" at Imperial. "Heiress" at two houses is big; ditto "East Side, West Side." Holdover of "Jolson Sings Again" still is in chips.

Estimates for This Week

Downtown, Glendale, Scarboro, State (20th) (1,059; 955; 698; 694; 35-60)—"Savage Splendor" (RKO) and "Threat" (RKO). Okay $10,000. Last week, "Crash Dive" (20th) and "Man Hunt" (20th) (reissue), big $13,000.

Eglinton, Victoria (FP) (1,080, 1,140; 40-70)—"Heiress" (Par). Good $14,000. Last week, "Jolson Sings Again" (Col) (4th wk), nice $10,000 at University and Eglinton.

Fairlawn, Odeon (Rank) (1,200; 2,390; 50-$1.20)—"Hamlet" (EL).

Weather Slows B'way; 'Cinderella' No Orphan at 53G, '3 Home' Bright $39,000, 'Stage Fright' Modest 115G

Severe winter weather, the start of Lent and continuance of the brownout all are contributing towards generally dull Broadway first-run business this session. The boxoffice had been very sluggish even before the state edict shutting off all advertising lights, but the darkened condition of Broadway, along with near-zero cold, snow, rain and sleet, accentuated the slow trade.

The storm on Wednesday (Washington's Birthday) pared the expected take on this big holiday for theatres, with Thursday (23) turning into the worst day of the stanza. Slippery streets took a heavy toll, with night trade dipping drastically.

Outstanding newcomer, "Cinderella," is faring well in the face of all these handicaps, with smash $53,000 likely in first week at the Mayfair. Initial frame has been topped in recent years only by "Iwo Jima."

"Three Came Home" also is doing remarkably sock business in view of conditions, with $39,000 on initial week ended Monday (27) at Astor. In contrast, "Malaya" with Blue Barron band, Benny Fields, Gene Sheldon onstage, likely won't get more than $50,000, mild, at Capitol. "Woman in Hiding" also is swinging low, despite holiday opening (22) with $12,000 at Criterion.

Opening on the slowest day of current session (Thurs.), "Stage Fright" and stageshow is merely fair $115,000 in first week at the Music Hall. General downbeat apparently held this back despite some nice crix appraisals.

Best holdover in a week that witnesses most second-week bills on the skids is "Third Man," which is heading for fine $28,000 in fourth round at the Victoria. Rivoli, Roxy and Strand all took drastic tumbles from previous weeks.

Biggest news among newcomers opening this week is start today (Wed.) of Bob Hope's two weeks of personal appearances at the Paramount with "Capt. China." Hope has Jane Russell, who was with him in "The Paleface," and Les Brown band in his supporting stageshow. He plans to have different stage, screen and radio personalities doing "guest shots" during his engagement, with Arthur Godfrey supposed to be on with Hope today. Roxy opens "Mother Didn't Tell Me" Friday (3).

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 60-$1.50)—"Three Came Home" (20th) (2d wk). First week ended Monday (27) night hit rousing $39,000. In ahead, "Battleground" (M-G) (15th wk-4 days), $7,500 after okay $12,000 for 14th week.

Bijou (City Inv.) (589; $1.20-$2.40) — "Red Shoes" (EL) (71st wk). Staying up very well in view of conditions at around $8,500, nice, after $8,800 in previous week, which was helped by holiday biz. Stays on.

Capitol (Loew's (4,820); 55-$1.50)—"Malaya" (M-G) plus Blue Barron orch, Benny Fields, Gene Sheldon (2d wk). Initial session ended last night (Tues.) was mild $50,000. In ahead, "Mrs. Mike" (UA) and Gordon Jenkins orch, Marion Hutton-Jack Douglas (2d wk), $30,000.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 50-$1.75)—"Woman in Hiding" (U) (2d wk). First round ended last night (Tues.) failed to help house out of sluggish trend, with only slight $12,000 or near. "Borderline" (U) opens Saturday. In ahead, "Stromboli" (RKO), $19,000, cold hurting on final two days.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 50-$1.20)—"The Outlaw" (RKO) (2d wk). Holding fairly well at $26,000 after smash $42,000 opener, best here in a year. Continues.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 50-$1.20)—"Cinderella" (RKO) (2d wk). Terrific $53,000, in first week ended last night (Tues.), all the more remarkable in view of weather conditions; one of biggest weeks at house. In ahead, "Iwo Jima" (Rep) (8th wk-5 days), okay $10,000, to round out smash run.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 55-$1.20)—"Father is Bachelor" (Col) and vaude. Way off to fair $18,000 for 8 days, house going back to regular Thursday opening day tomorrow. Last week, "Mark of Gorilla" (Col) with vaude (6 days), broke even at $17,000.

Paramount (Par) (3,664; 55-$1.50)—"Capt. China" (Par) with Bob Hope plus Jane Russell, Les Brown orch onstage. Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Paid in Full" (Par) with Johnnie Johnston, Lina Romay, Boyd Raeburn orch heading stageshow (2d wk), was down to $50,000 or near after fair $59,000 opening round.

Park Avenue (U) (583; 90-$1.50)—"Astonished Heart" (U) (3d wk). Second week ended last Monday (27) held very well at $10,000 after good $11,000 first frame.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 80-$2.40)—"Stage Fright" (WB) and stageshow. Looks only fair $115,000, and holds. Had tough break opening on stormy Thursday (23), but built somewhat after reviews came out. Last week, "Young Man With Horn" (WB), with stage bill (2d wk), mild $112,000, below expectancy.

Rialto (Mage) (594; 44-98)—"Mafia" (Indie). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Peddling in Society" (Indie), mild $7,000 on single week.

Rivoli (UAT-Par) (2,092; 90-$1.80)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (10th wk). Slipped sharply to $20,000 or under. Ninth week was $29,000, Feb. 22 holiday failing to help as much as expected.

Roxy (20th) (5,886; 80-$1.75)—"Willie Comes Home" (20th) plus Allan Jones, Betty and Jane Kean, Irving Fields Trio topping stageshow (2d-final wk). Despite favorable crix appraisal, failed to come through as hoped, with initial holdover frame down to light $50,000 after moderate $78,000 opener. "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) opens Friday, with Beatrice Kay, Buck & Bubbles, Beatrice Kraft and her dancers, the Dunhills onstage.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-$1.50)—"Key to City" (M-G) (5th-final wk). Down to $10,000 or less in fourth stanza ended last night (Tues.) after $14,400 for third week, both very slow and disappointing. "Annie Get Your Gun" (M-G) was set to open here next but won't be available until Easter, with house opening "The Outriders" (M-G) on March 8.

Strand (WB) (2,756; 55-$2)—"Chain Lightning" (WB) and Latin Quarter Revue onstage (2d wk). Down to dull $31,000 or bit better this round after disappointing $45,000 opener. Set to stay past second week.

Sutton (R & B) (561; 90-$1.50)—"Fallen Idol" (SRO) (16th wk). For 15th week ended Monday (27) this held up to $8,200 with help of Washington's Birthday trade after $8,700 last week. Continues on.

Trans-Lux (60th St.) (453; 74-$1.50)—"Tight Little Island" (U) (10th wk). With some help from Feb. 22, doing nicely at $7,500 in ninth week ended last Saturday (25) after $8,000 for eighth stanza. Stays on.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 95-$1.50)—"Third Man" (SRO) (4th wk). Still doing strong business at $28,000 after big $33,000 for third round. Continues indef.

'Willie' Marching Home L'ville Champ at 15G; 'Lil' Lands Big $7,000

Louisville, Feb. 28.

Strong lineup of product at all firstruns this week and biz is reflecting it by big takes. Leading the parade is "When Willie Comes Marching Home," sturdy at the Rialto. "Dakota Lil" at the Strand is moving at a fast clip. Holdovers of "Key to City" at Loew's State and "Chain Lightning" at Mary Anderson, are grabbing excellent second week biz.

Estimates for This Week

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,200; 45-65)—"Chain Lightning" (WB) (2d wk). Looks strong $6,500. Last week, solid $8,500, above expectations.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 45-65)—"Willie Marching Home" (20th) and "Palooka Meets Humphrey" (Mono). Sturdy $15,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO), caught big press comment and word-of-mouth but biz sagged after sock opening to dull $7,500, far below expectancy.

State (Loew's) (3,000; 45-65)—"Key to City" (M-G) (2d wk). Good $11,000 after last week's fine $15,000.

Strand (FA) (1,200; 45-65)—"Dakota Lil" (20th) and "Treasure Monte Carlo" (Indie). Big $7,000. Last week, "Dancing in Dark" (20th) and "Tough Assignment" (Indie), about same.

There's No Business Like 20th CENTURY-FOX Business

U.S.-British Hassles Delaying UFA Breakup; Propaganda Danger Seen

Frankfurt, Feb. 21.

Bickering between American and British officials in Germany is blocking the breakup of the Hitler-created monopoly that UFA holds on the German film industry. Although five months have now passed since the tri-partite occupation of western Germany ordered a dissolution of UFA, no action has been taken to carry out the terms of the legislation. Even the preliminary procedural apparatus required has not yet been agreed upon by tiffing officials.

American officials are freely charging the British with using deliberately dilatory tactics to sabotage the entire program. It is claimed that the British are counting on an Allied stalemate as an excuse for turning the entire program back to the Germans. This action, it is said, was strenuously advocated by important British influences that tried to block the enactment of the regulation calling for the liquidation of UFA.

Some 250 of the most important theatres in Germany, all the studios and all of the outstanding German features are owned by UFA. These were consolidated into that company's hands when the Nazis took over and forcibly amalgamated the industry into a Reich-owned monopoly directed by Joseph Goebbels. These interests are presently being administered by American and British officials but conceivably could revert to active UFA control.

Under the terms of liquidation law, a German liquidation committee, subject to direction of the occupation authorities, was to sell the various properties within 18 months to the highest eligible bidders. Not more than one studio or

Claudio Arrau, Chilean pianist, is filling dates abroad but he's pegged to Mexico by $13,000 of his coin, and the pic he was inked to play in here has a most uncertain future.

Arrau is being sued for $13,000 here by Samuel Alazraki, local pic producer. Pianist could only quit Mexico by depositing that sum with the court which is handling the suit. Alazraki says he inked the artist for the lead in a pic in Spanish and for its English version and advanced Arrau $3,000. Alazraki added that when he shopped in Hollywood, after inking Jean Negulesco to meg the pic, he found no nibbles for a film featuring Arrau. He decided to produce only the Spanish version. He said he tried to tell Arrau that but was told by the pianist's secretary that Arrau didn't like the pic's script. Alazraki declared Arrau nixed refunding the 3G advance.

Alazraki wants $10,000 damages for breach of contract and the $3,000 back. When Alazraki got tough, Arrau moved his headquarters into the Chilean embassy here, presumably for protection.

Mex Radio Station XEBJ Shutters in Pay Hassle

Mexico City, Feb. 28.

Radio station XEBJ at Torreon, Mexico, cotton metropolis in the north, is shuttered indefinitely. Manager Alexander O. Stevenson, when informed by the federal board of conciliation and arbitration that the station's help were aiming a strike to enforce demands for an 85% pay hike, fired all employees and announced closure of the station.

The board had been trying to settle the work dispute.

Paris Unrest

Paris, Feb. 28.

Political and economic conditions, resulting in deep social unrest and promoting paralyzing strikes and rampant gangsterism, are damaging boxoffice grosses here.

Brit. Scripters Win Suit On 'Inadequate' Billing

London, Feb. 28.

Two film scripters, who complained that their credits were given in the West End in small type and not appropriate to their standing, were together awarded damages of $8,400 by a high court jury last Wednesday (22.

They were Rodney Ackland and Arthur Boys, who were awarded $2,800 and $5,600 respectively, in connection with the production of "Queen of Spades," which they adapted from a Pushkin shortstory. The defendants were Anatole de Grunwald's World Screen Plays, Ltd., which contested only on the question of damages.

Sir Alexander Korda, giving evidence for the defendants, said that he would judge a writer by the quality of his work and wouldn't take much notice of the credits.

French Filming Still a Gamble

Paris, Feb. 28.

Recent statement on the French pix industry reveals that in 1947 producers invested $8,000,000 and got back $4,300,000. Figures for 1948 show an investment of $10,500,000 and return of $6,300,000. Production here is still a gamble. A good deal of the money comes from the government fund called Credit National, which in 1948 partly financed 55 films out of a total of 92 for the year. Average cost of a run-of-the-mill pic was about $100,000, and slightly over double that amount for a picture considered of international value.

Production of a film, which averaged 11 weeks in 1948, was reduced to eight and a half in 1949. Business is bad in spite of this, with plenty of layoffs in technicians and actors.

Total grosses, which were $40,000,000 in 1947, reached $56,000,000 in both 1948 and 1949. This despite reduced attendance, with 411,000,000 admissions in 1947; 387,000,000 in 1948 and 370,000,000 in 1949. Prices were upped in 1947.

There are currently 2,500,000 seats in the 5,700 French picture theatres. This compares unfavorably with Italy, where 5,000,000 seats are in 9,750 theatres.

COIN TOSS TO SET BRIT. PIC CIRCUIT RELEASE

London, Feb. 21.

A flick of the coin will decide which of the three major British circuits will show the independently made Pilgrim picture, "Chance of a Lifetime," the first subject decreed by the Board of Trade Selection Committee as being worthy of a circuit release.

Since its inception more than two years ago, the Selection Committee has been more or less moribund, and the first films submitted to it were withdrawn because the producers feared an adverse decision might have affected subsequent bookings. A number independently made quota productions were rejected in the early part of this year.

"Chance of a Lifetime," made by the company with which Filippo Del Giudice was formerly associated, was filmed entirely on location. It is directed by and stars Bernard Miles.

JAP PIXERS BUILDING

Tokyo, Feb. 18.

Excavation work has started in Tokyo for erection of the Nikkatsu International building, a nine-story structure being built by the Nikkatsu Motion Picture Corp. which will be Japan's first postwar office building.

Nikkatsu outfit operates one of Japan's biggest theatre chains and is a leading distributor of American pix. Structure should be ready by May, 1951.

Sid Weiner, formerly sales chief for Globe Film Distributors, has joined Films International of America, Inc.

Belfast Lifts 'Pit' Ban

Belfast, Feb. 14.

Belfast Corp. which, against the advice of its Police Committee, banned "The Snake Pit" from exhibition in Northern Ireland capital three months ago, has reversed its decision and given the greenlight to 20th-Fox for showings. Change of mind was caused when local 20th-Fox reps secured attendance of group at special screening of the film. Original ban was imposed on the grounds that film was not suitable for public exhibition.

"Pit" has already played leading situations in Eire without any spectacular cleanup.

French Song Stars Help SACEM to Reap $700,000 In Foreign Coin in 1949

Paris, Feb. 21.

Concurrent with the celebration of the 100th year of its founding, the French SACEM (Societe des Auteurs, Compositeurs et Editeurs de Musique) discloses that, thanks to its ambassadors of song like Jean Sablon, Charles Trenet, Edith Piaf, Maurice Chevalier, et al., French composers reaped 250,000,000 francs (around $700,000) solely from foreign revenue in 1949.

These foreign monies, for the most part emanating from America in badly needed dollar credit, formed one-fourth of the entire year's revenue of the Society.

Of the 11 songs listed as having brought in the most foreign currency, five of them are identified with Sablon, having been popularized by him in his radio and night club appearances. The 11 songs, as listed by the Society, include "Le Petit Vin Blanc," "Parlez-Moi D'Amour," "L'Air D'Accordeon," "Cheveux Au Vent," "Vous Qui Passez Sans Me Voir" (Why Do You Pass Me By?"), "Ma Mie" ("All of a Sudden My Heart Sings"), "La Vie En Rose" ("You're Too Dangerous, Cherie"), "Symphonie," "Imaginez," "Couches Dans Le Foin" and "La Madelon."

Credit for the strong popularity of French songs, especially in America, is given for the most part to radio shows by the French singers. Although Miss Piaf is reported saying how difficult it was to get a regular radio show in the States, three French artists have had regular radio series in America, Sablon, Chevalier and Lucienne Boyer. Sablon having been the only one who had a commercial show. Large audiences guaranteed by a network show have contributed immeasurably to success enjoyed by French melodies.

SACEM, which keeps a strict eye on all French musical works, was founded in 1849, after an experience of composer Paul Henrion turned the spotlight on the exploitation of French composers. Henrion, visiting Les Ambassadeurs one evening, heard the rendition of one of his works, for which he had received no money. He refused to pay his check, as a means of protest. Other composers followed his suit, and finally they decided to band together to form an organization like ASCAP, to protect their rights.

The Society consists of 20,000 members and is presided over by Albert Willemetz.

Large Quota Default By British Exhibs Confirmed

London, Feb. 21.

Official figures released by the Board of Trade confirm the mass exhibitor default forecast for the first year of the 45% quota. Of 4,689 returns, 1,474 defaulted on the first feature quota, and 1,381 failed to meet the supporting quota of 25%. First feature defaulters include 1,135 indie exhibs who had been refused relief and had been ordered to play the full 45%.

Returns of the three major circuits show that they exceeded their quota by 2.6% and played British supporting product by more than 6% of their requirements. Altogether, 2,708 theatres either met or exceeded their obligation, and of those who defaulted 587 were to the tune of 5% or less below their obligation.

Brit. Election Stalemate Snafus Pix Further; Niteries in Boom on Eve

By HAROLD MYERS

London, Feb. 28.

The stalemate result of the general election will add to the uncertainties of the British film industry. Had there been a decisive majority one way or the other, the trade would have had a shrewd idea of its fortunes and known what to expect. As it is, the only thing certain about the present situation is that the new Labor government will not be able to stay the course for long, and that there must be another election in a few months. And that will mean another lean period at the boxoffice.

With the political strength of the new House of Commons equally divided, the Laborite government has no mandate from the people for controversial legislation. At the most, it will be able to deal only with urgent financial estimates, and the routine day-to-day questions of administration.

Accepted view among British film chiefs had been that the return of a Conservative government would have favored the industry. Party leaders had been impressed, for example, with the trade's case on entertainment tax, and a promise of early relief had been made. They are known, too, to take a realistic view on quota, and would have had no truck with some of the fanciful proposals that have come from the left. And finally, they would have been expected to take a long-term view in dealing with Hollywood on remittable sterling.

As things are, it is unlikely that Labor will take any action which will make it more unpopular with the industry than it is at present. In the last four and a half years they haven't stopped meddling with the affairs of the trade, and in that period the industry has passed from its peak to its deepest and most prolonged crisis. The industry wants to be left alone to manage its own affairs.

First major industry decision which the government will have to make will be to set the quota for the third year, commencing October. The Films Council recommendation that it should be sliced to 30% has been sent to the Board of Trade prez, and so has the protest from the Assn. of Cinematograph and Allied Technicians. This

'12 O'Clock' Hits High 14G Wk. in Dual London Bows

London, Feb. 21.

"12 O'Clock High," the Gregory Peck starrer which received unanimous praise from British critics, has achieved the second best result ever recorded by 20th-Fox for a dual pre-release run at the Gaumont, Haymarket, and the Marble Arch Pavilion.

Opening week at the two theatres resulted in a boxoffice gross upwards of $14,000, with 43,940 customers checked in through both pay boxes. The alltime high for Fox was created by "The Dolly Sisters" in the early boom postwar period.

Philippines OK 72% Pix Coin Thaw

After slamming the door on all film remittances for the past three months, the Philippine Islands government this week advised American distribs that they will be permitted to remit 72% of their total 1949 dollar shipments. Since total revenues from PI amounted to approximately $3,000,000 in '49, the new regulation clears the way to remittances of $2,200,000 during the current year.

Specifically, government ukase provides that 6% of 1949 remittances can be sent by Yank distribs monthly to the U. S. PI also ruled that films will be treated as other commodities not coming under import control regulations. Foreign dept. execs, while not entirely clear on the significance of the ruling, believe that it removes films from imports which are subject to restrictive licenses.

At no time did the PI government move directly against films. It slapped a blanket ban on dollar remittances after the islands experienced a dollar shortage late last year. American pix fell victim to the ruling, along with all other imports.

American pix reps have been negotiating with the government since the ban was handed down. However, relaxation of the regulation did not result from a negotiated settlement but rather unilateral action of the government. Philippines represent one of the most important American film markets in the Far East.

'FIG,' 'FLOWERS' FAIL TO IMPRESS IN LONDON

Emile Littler's production of "The Purple Fig Tree," which opened at the Piccadilly Friday (24), was warmly received and generally praised. But despite an interesting theme, it's insufficiently gripping and stands a modest chance of survival.

Written by George Ralli, play laid in postwar Greece is an involved story of intrigue and revenge. Directed by Joe O'Brien, show is splendidly acted with Valerie White, Jack Hawkins and Margaret Rawlings in the leading roles. Others in the cast include Arthur Hill, Gibb McLaughlin and Antony Holles.

"Flowers For the Living," which reached the West End two years after its Lindsey Theatre Club tryout, is obviously dated, and as a result its chances are limited. Its theme of life in the raw in an East End slum in the immediate postwar period is more documentary in character than pure theatre. Kathleen Harrison shines as the mother in a raucous household, but other members of the family are not too happily cast. Barry Morse stands out as a returned ex-soldier with high ideals of the future. Play opened at the Duchess Feb. 21.

Sessue Hayakawa, film star who recently returned to Japan after 13 years in Europe, and who stopped off en route in Hollywood to play roles in "Tokyo Joe" and "Three Came Home," is currently at work on his first postwar Japanese picture at Dalei studios, Tokyo.

Rank Opens Gala Deluxe House in Lisbon; $8 Top Is New Portugal Record

Lisbon, Feb. 28.

The new J. Arthur Rank deluxe cinema, Saint George, in central Lisbon, opened Feb. 24 with showing of "Red Shoes." Public had bought tickets for the first two weeks almost a month in advance. Firstrun 2,000-seater, the largest in the Iberian peninsula, is the first of a series that the Rank organization intends to build in Portugal and Spain. There will be three shows a day with top price of $1. House has latest equipment in aircondition, organ, sound, etc.

Opening for the general public was preceded Feb. 23 by a charity gala with top price at $8—the highest price ever asked for a show in Portugal. The President of the Republic was present together with Ministers of State, British and American Ambassadors and the diplomatic corps, the ex-King of Italy, ex-King Carol of Rumania and Mme. Lupescu, Count de Paris, pretender to the throne of France, and other royal exiles in Portugal. The American and English colonies were present in force, and all the best of Lisbon society.

The gala, which was sponsored by Lisbon's two big dailies, the Diario Noticias and the Seculo, made about $12,000, which was distributed to various local charities.

Continental Newsreels Going for Second-Runs

Paris, Feb. 21.

Newsreel theatres here are mostly reverting to second-runs or reissues. The Cineac Co., incepted years ago by Reginald Ford, is running six theatres in France, four in Belgium and three in Holland.

The popcorn biz, or its French equivalent (ice cream "Esquimaux"), is now the clearer source of revenue of local newsreel theatres.

Russ Pix Still Leading on Tito Screens But U.S. Films Inching Up

Washington, Feb. 28.

Despite the split between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union, Russian films continue to be the most widely shown in the Balkan country, reports the Motion Picture Photographic Branch of the U. S. Dept. of Commerce. The comprehensive survey, released today (28), shows however that there has been some tapering off of Russian pix and that American films are moving into an increased share of the market. Most popular Hollywood product appears to be cowboy and jungle subjects.

Yugoslavia is building up its industry and shooting for an annual production, by next year, of 40 features, 100 documentaries and 112 monthly newsreels. Various sources in the country have given divergent figures on production up to now and the Commerce Dept. warns that the figures must be taken with a grain of salt.

Centre of the industry continues to be at Belgrade, where the Serbian Avila Film Co. and Federal Zvezda Film have been merged. Construction of a film city near Belgrade, for the use of Zvezda, continues. The production industry continues under strong government control and even exhibition is government-supervised, with the government setting admissions prices for each theatre.

Other countries reported on:

Pakistan: One studio is operating in Western Pakistan. Its output is about four features and 20 shorts annually. Government may extend financial assistance because of the need for documentaries. Country has about 400 theatres with a seating capacity of 200,000. Bulk of the equipment in the houses comes from the U. S.

Angola: Marked increase of robberies and assaults in the native quarter of Luanda is being blamed on cowboy pix and other American films showing plenty of gunplay. Hence legislation is under way to provide for censorship in this Portuguese West African colony. American westerns are expected to be either sharply cut or banned. Country has 15 theatres and most of the pictures are American-made.

U.S.-Brit. Hassle

three theatres could be sold to any one person. Entire purpose was to decentralize the industry, thereby insuring it as a free medium.

Anglo-American squabble first arose when the British demanded an expansion of the three-man liquidation committee to seven. Without notice, British produced four custodians in their area instead of one. Action creates a widely-dispersed group rather than the compact unit envisaged. British have turned down three U. S. compromise proposals, thereby hamstringing further action.

Bureaucratic Setup

As a further complication, two advisory bodies, one Allied and the other German, have been created. German group is to be named by the Bonn government. It would consult with the liquidation committee along with the Allied unit. The German group was created on British insistence, it is said, after the American authorities compromised on their opposition to the move.

Yank officials feel convinced that any German advisory group will be unsympathetic to the breakup of UFA. Moreover, it is maintained that naming of the advisers by the Bonn government in itself is inconsistent with the purposes of the legislation—that is, to remove all government control from films as a propaganda medium. It is also argued that the action imposes an unnecessary bureaucratic structure on the implementing machinery.

Americans here fear that if the program is turned back to the German government the UFA monopoly will stand. No German government, it is asserted, will show any enthusiasm for surrendering large properties. German authorities are hostile to any de-concentration whatsoever. Moreover, the government would seek to retain films as a powerful propaganda instrument.

India Censor Suits

Madras, Feb. 14.

The new censorship legislation, which substitutes one national censorship board for the conflicting boards in the different provinces, is being hailed by the Indian press as a long overdue reform.

Charges have also been made by several Indian producers that the censors have been more lenient with imported pictures than with the homemade product.

Brit. Election

quota has to be determined by Parliament before the end of March, and although some Laborites had been hoping that the return of the Socialists would mean a higher percentage, there is little likelihood of this materializing in the present state of the Commons.

Implementation of any of the major recommendations in the exhaustive Plant Report can now be ruled out, and it is extremely dubious whether the government will be prepared to replenish the coffers of the Film Finance Corp., whose reserves are now below the $1,000,000 mark. And there will certainly be little prospect of a subsidy for producers, or a tax cut for exhibitors.

No Surprises

There were no surprise results among the trade candidates in the election, and the industry strength in the new House of Commons is unchanged. Eric Fletcher, director of Associated British Picture Corp.; Tom O'Brien, general secretary of the National Assn. of Theatrical and Kine Employees, and John Diamond, the news theatre director, held their Labor seats, and Norman J. Hulbert, also with news theatre associations, retained his Tory seat. Three members of ACT, R. J. Minney, John Curthoys and Reg Groves, who sought election on the Labor ticket, were defeated. New aspirants for Parliamentary honors, Sidney K. Lewis, of A.B.P.C., and filmactor James Robertson Justice, were also unplaced. Lady Archibald, wife of the Rank producer, failed to become an M.P. by slightly more than 2,000 votes. A. Beverly Baxter, Evening Standard dramatic critic, was returned as a Conservative.

The neck-and-neck tussle between the two principal parties has vindicated the pollsters. Almost unanimously they had insisted that the chances were even, although when the overnight score was out it looked as if they were again off the beam. The only forecast that went haywire was a poll conducted among the editors of local newspapers, which estimated a Tory majority of more than 100.

It may have been a quiet election, but Thursday night gave the night spots their biggest take for many years. The majority report that liquor sales were substantially up on New Year's Eve, but the early results which led to the conviction that Labor was retaining its grip, was not conducive to a gay atmosphere. The only late night revellers in hearty spirit were the thousands of Londoners who were lured to Piccadilly Circus and Trafalgar Square, where the results were displayed on an illuminated screen. The Trafalgar Square crowds outside VARIETY'S London office were televised in a special late night election program, and the reception attained a remarkable clarity. Radio also offered an all-night service, and hundreds of cinemas were open for a free show until the early hours.

But it remained an election without incident, and the excitement only came as the two parties were drawing close. The tempo of a British election, in contrast to an American poll, was aptly summed up by an American publicist now in London. "In England," he said, "a candidate stands for Parliament. In America he runs for Congress. That is the difference between a British and American election."

Brisbane exhibs have been granted an admission rise by Aussie price control authorities. It's the first upping okay for many years.

'ANNIE DU FAR WEST' SMASHEROO IN PARIS

Paris, Feb. 28.

"Annie du Far West," Maurice Lehmann's presentation at the Chatelet Feb. 21 of the Irving Berlin musical, "Annie Get Your Gun," is a smash hit here. Show netted $17,000 for seven performances. Musical, according to the hep American colony here, is every bit up to Broadway standards. Much credit goes to Lily Fayol, in the Ethel Merman role as Annie, ably supported by Marcel Merkes. Show also has excellent comedy and dancing.

Dancing, costumes and sets are French-made and striking. Lavish Douking sets introduce an Eiffel Tower background into the first act for a Frenchified finale. Adaptation by Mouzyeon and Albert Willemetez's lyrics are commendable.

Berlin Gets Show Biz Names Back

Berlin, Feb. 21.

Berlin is once again attracting famous names it once knew so well. During the past six months many oldtimers have returned, and others are planning to.

For instance, Rudolph Forster is at the Kurfurstendamm theatre playing Strindberg's "Totentanz." Kathe Dorsch is at the Komodie in Maugham's "Theatre." Fritz Kortner is at the Hebbel playing Strindberg's "The Father." Paul Gordon is directing Victor Clement's "Bad Angel" at the Renaissance. Gustaf Grundgens is negotiating for next fall. Ludwig Stossel is coming into play Paul Gordon's "Lucky Joe" in March. Hermina Korner is playing the title role in "Madwoman of Challiot" at the Hebbel. Werner Egk is now managing director of the Music Academy of Berlin.

Yehudi Menuhin played seven concerts at the Titania Palast last fall. Elisabeth Bergner appeared at the Titania for one night in November. Albert Basserman did Ibsen's "Ghosts" at the Renaissance last week. Edward G. Robinson, Jeanette MacDonald, Gene Raymond, Donald O'Connor, Yvonne DeCarlo, Jackie Coogan and a host of others were here as guests of the U. S. Air Force.

Anatol Litvak is here in search of talent for "Call It Treason." Jan Kiepura and Kirsten Flagstad are under contract for the Stadtische Oper this winter. Robert Stolz is here to discuss the world premiere of his new musical comedy. Mr. and Mrs. Kurt Goetz are in town to attend the opening of his latest picture," Dr. Preatorius," and Ralph Benatzky is here to finish the score of his musical comedy, "Colette."

Brit. Exhibs Hope U.S. Will Drop Unit Plan; See Little Chance for Tax Cuts

London, Feb. 21.

If the 30% quota recommended by the Films Council is implemented by the new Board of Trade prexy, British exhibitors are hoping that the American industry will respond by withdrawing the unit plan, introduction of which coincided with the start of the 45% quota in October, 1948.

When the unit program was first conceived during Eric Johnston's visit in August, 1948, there was no opposition to its introduction by organized exhibiting interests, who appreciated the logic of this form of American protest and protection. That its effect has been two-way is freely admitted, but it has been a constant source of hardship to exhibs who have been unable to bolster up an inferior quota picture, which the law required them to screen, with a good supporting Hollywood feature.

On the other hand, many independents found themselves in the favored position of playing first run on some of the top Hollywood product, the distributors having been squeezed out of circuit playdates by the 45% and 40% quotas.

Future of the unit plan will be one of a number of subsidiary issues which Johnston and his associates will discuss with the government and the trade on their forthcoming visit to Britain.

Apart from the new monetary agreement, which is basically the justification for the forthcoming jaunt, the Hollywood negotiators will anxiously watch the trend for implementing the quota recommendation. The protest from the Assn. of Cine & Allied Technicians isn't regarded as a serious obstacle, as the 40% quota is already breaking down, and the product is not available, nor can it be made available to meet an artificially-created figure.

Tax On U. S. Product?

Another important issue for Johnston and his colleagues will be the various proposals that have been mooted around the industry and political circles for a discriminatory form of the entertainments tax against American product. This idea was conceived as an alternative to subsidy demands from the entertainments tax pool, which have been intensified during the past year on behalf of British producers. The Plant report published in the latter part of last year suggested that one way of helping British production financially might be a general lowering of entertainments duty, with the imposition of a new ad valorem tax when American product was being screened, thus retaining the benefit solely for British studios. The ad valorem duty proposed, it was emphasized, should not be confused with the confiscatory tax which led to the 1948 boycott, but was a nominal duty ranking on a par with the present rate of entertainments tax.

Informed political opinion tends to the belief that the current entertainments tax campaign will prove to be abortive when the budget is published in April. The new government which moves into Parliament next Monday (6) will be faced in a short while with supplementary estimates requiring nearly $600,000,000 in cash.

Dunham in Repeat Rome Visit; Troupe Makes Film

Rome, Feb. 22.

The Katharine Dunham troupe is back in Rome for the second time within a year. Last May she came here with her "Caribbean Rhapsody," replica of the Broadway production, and made quite a sensation. She's returned from Paris with a new show this time, more of a concert type. The new Palazzo Sistina is the site of her 17-day stay in Rome.

From here the show goes on to Florence, Bologna and Milan. In March troupe will sail for New York for a few weeks only, before going on to South America. Fernando Lambrosio is the Italian impresario.

The troupe recently appeared in a French-Italian film, "Botta e Risposta" Film was produced by Dino De Laurentis of Lux Films in Rome, and hasn't been issued yet.

Others in the same picture were the Nicholas Bros. and Louis Armstrong. The first two sequences mentioned were filmed in Paris, while Armstrong's was made here in Rome at the new M-G sound studios.

Oslo, Feb. 21.

Six new films are planned for production this year at Norway's only studio, Jar, outside of Oslo. Pix include "Andrine Og Kjell" ("Andrine and Kjell"), dealing with life in a Norwegian reform school; "Vi Gifter Oss" ("We'll Be Married"); "Dei Svarte Hestane" ("The Black Horses"), revolving around Norwegian country life at the turn of the century, and "Orkanen" ("The Hurricane"), which will probably be made in association with a French producer. The other two will be biographies of Marcus Thrane and Hans Nielsen Hauge.

"To Mistenklige Personer" ("Two Suspected Persons"), a crime meller starring Swedish actor Peter Lindgren, has just been completed by Norsk Film. Of a total of 293 films preemed here last year, 157 were U. S.-made; 40, British-made, and 51, French-made. The others were either of Austrian, German, Danish, Russian, Italian or Czech origin.

Only three domestic films were shown during 1949. These were "Doden Er Et Kjaertegn" ("Love Will Be My Death"), a Calmar production, and "Vi Flyr Pa Rio" ("We're Flying to Rio"), a joint production of Oslo's Europa Film and Stockholm's Svea Film. The third was the documentary, "Jorden Rundt Pa To Timer" ("Around the World in Two Hours").

See Salzburg Fest Snarl In Sparse Hotel Setup

Vienna, Feb. 14.

The Salzburg Festival management has announced program for the 1950 season, July 27 to Aug. 31. It includes six operas; eight symphonic concerts; four serenades; five cathedral concerts; four evenings of chamber music, and two dramatic productions. Latter will be the traditional "Everyman," done in the cathedral square, and a revival of Nestroy's "Spendthrift," with a top Viennese cast.

Town's ability to receive festival guests will be even worse than in previous postwar years. U. S. forces have moved considerable additional personnel to Salzburg from Vienna in past months. Army still occupies several of the town's best and largest hotels and palaces and shows no signs of letting go. With newly devalued schilling (official rate now 26 to $1 for tourists, against black market of 30), Austria will be one of cheapest tourist attractions this year. A luxury double hotel room will cost 100 schillings a day with bath (if you can get it).

MAGNANI DUE ON COAST FOR 'VOLCANO' DUBBING

Rome, Feb. 28.

Anna Magnani, who is scheduled to sail for the U. S. in March, has been receiving offers from both stage and screen producers in America, but isn't inking any deals at present since she doesn't feel sure of herself in the English language. Actress is making the trip to confer with William Dieterle, who directed "Volcano," in which she stars with Geraldine Brooks and Rossano Brazzi.

Picture was made in both English and Italian, with leading characters speaking English. With a view to eliminating all the Italian lingo for the U. S. market, dubbing is slated to get underway in Hollywood soon under Dieterle's supervision. Miss Magnani and the other cast principals are expected to participate in the dubbing chore. Renzo Avanzo, exec of Panaria Films, producers of the pic, is accompanying her on the junket.

Keep Your Campaign Going Strong To Kill The Movie Tax!

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Charles Alldredge, Washington public relations counsel, whose recent rather startling figures on video's effect on filmgoing in the capital, were challenged by Paramount v.p. Paul Raibourn, made a vigorous defense of their accuracy this week. "All that I can say," he declares, "is that if Mr. Raibourn has discovered a better way of finding out what people think than by asking them directly, everybody who engages in surveying public reaction will be interested in hearing about it. . . . The results of this survey have been checked in every possible way for accuracy. The results have been borne out by these checks."

Alldredge's survey, sponsored by theatre, newspaper and TV interests, showed tele cutting into film attendance by video-owning families in Washington by as much as 72%. Raibourn said that a continuing survey by Paramount showed the drop in New York to be between 20% and 30%. Raibourn objected to the Alldredge technique on the basis that it involved recall by the person questioned of what he did before he got the set. Par exec said his company's survey was based on current habits of families queried actually before and after they owned a TV receiver.

Involved in Paramount's current negotiations with three non-industry concerns for liquidation of the company's frozen sterling holdings in Britain is approximately £1,000,000. The crux of any deal made for the purchase of these blocked funds by the payment of dollars would be the approval of the Bank of England and other governmental agencies. Par is ready for a deal providing the burden of winning the essential okays is shouldered by the purchaser. Latter must convince the government that its use of the frozen coin would serve the economy of the country. All dickerings so far refer to Par's pound accumulation, less the needed funds to back a joint production of "Trio" with J. Arthur Rank. It does not cover future pound earnings.

For the fourth successive year, there was no reportable fire loss in any of the more than 400 regional film exchanges of the Motion Picture Assn. of America's member companies, according to the MPAA conservation department's 1949 annual report submitted this week to the organization's prez, Eric Johnston. Member company exchanges, the statement notes, also had spotless records in nine other years in the conservation department's 24-year history. With the average annual fire loss from 1926 to the end of 1949 only $202, CD director John B. McCullough attributes the extraordinary safety record to thoroughness of the MPAA's field work along with cooperation of regional directors and exchange personnel.

King Bros. are restoring its original title, "Gun Crazy," to their United Artists release which has been playing under the moniker "Deadly Is the Female." The switchback marks a victory for the Kings, but an expensive one which was proved the hard way. They wanted to stick with the "Gun Crazy" tag and it took much argument before they agreed to change it on the basis that the title was "not big enough" for the quality and scope of the film. A number of test engagements, however, have apparently proved the producers right.

try prospects as "bright." House committee, he said to TOA members, "warmly received" the Myers-Sullivan testimony.

Wary of Local, State Govts.

Members of Congress who favor reduction or elimination of the tax apparently are earful that the loss of that income to the Federal government will be no help to the entertainment industry. They think that state and local governments will jump in the moment Congress has lifted the 20% yoke and grab off the taxes for themselves.

Evidence of this feeling is seen in replies sent by Representative Walter A. Lynch, of New York City, to industryites who have written and wired him for support in the tax battle. In acknowledge these communications, Lynch writes back:

"I wish to say that I am in favor of the removal of excise taxes on admissions. I fail to see where any benefit will come from such removal to the industry if the proposal of Governor Dewey and the Conference of Governors to have the State impose the excise tax instead of the Federal government is carried out. It seems to me that the industry should carefully watch this development."

Council of Motion Picture Organizations, which is spearheading the drive for tax relief, is fully cognizant, of course, of the danger Lynch cites. COMPO execs' stand is: "Let's get rid of the federal tax first. Then we can take care of the state and municipal threats on a local level."

Many local exhib organizations are already working on their own city and state officials to impress on them that overall relief is needed and that any reimposition of the levy by local governments will be exceedingly harmful. In any case, feeling is that there will be a large gain if the Federal taxes are removed, since not all the political subdivisions will jump in to impose their own taxes.

There is no doubt, however, that a lot of them will attempt it. That was evident in the resolution passed recently at the Conference of Governors which Lynch referred to and by an association of Mayors. It is further seen in introduction of a bill in Albany recently that, if passed, would permit local governments in New York State to impose a special levy on admissions.

St. Loo Action

St. Louis, Feb. 28.

The admish scale of most movie houses in St. Louis will be reduced by 5c if the Federal 20% amusement tax is slashed or eliminated, according to Joe Ansell, chief barker of the St. Louis Variety Club. Addressing a joint meeting of the Variety Club and the St. Louis Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Assn., Ansell pointed out that the larger houses increased the scale to include the tax while many of the nabes are absorbing the tax repeal probably would not affect the latter group.

L'ville Tax, Film

Louisville, Feb. 28.

Film showing some of the uses of Kentucky income-tax money are being shown in Louisville first-runs. The color film, titled "Cheerfully Support Your State," runs a minute and a half. Between March 2 and 15 it will be shown in every house in the state which has membership in the Kentucky Assn. of Theatre Owners. Arrangement was made by Guthrie Crowe, prez of the KATO.

RKO Bank Loans

ers in other directions, however, have failed to raise a favorable response.

Differs From Par

RKO's blueprint for divorcement differs from that put through by Paramount. The latter company received $17,500,000 in cash from the banks, including the payoff of a revolving production loan, all of which was guaranteed and assumed by United Paramount, the new theatre company. Hence, no difficulties were experienced with the banks. On the other hand, Par received no funds directly from UP in a manner similar to the $10,000,000 going to RKO from its divorced circuit.

Terms of the RKO loan prohibit the parent company from divesting itself of any assets. Loan falls due on that contingency. Naturally, divorcement represents a violation of the loan's conditions.

Malco Buying Away From Par, Erstwhile Partner

Memphis, Feb. 28.

Malco circuit, headed by M. A. Lightman, is feuding with both Paramount and the United Paramount circuit over product and terms. Malco, which recently split away from Paramount in a partnership liquidation, has refused to book Par product since the breakup. Lightman trekked to New York during the past week in an attempt to reach an understanding with Alfred W. Schwalberg, Par's distribution veepee.

In those spots where Malco operates the only first-run house, circuit is buying away from Par because there is plenty of other product available to run the houses. Execs of the chain are understood to be insisting that some "fair break" on product in locales where the circuit competes with UP be worked out before it will book the major's pix in the non-competitive spots.

Detroit Judge Grants Restrainer to United Det.

Detroit, Feb. 28.

United Detroit Theatres, Inc., which has 16 theatres in the metropolitan Detroit area, filed a test case in circuit court last week to determine whether it must pay the chain store tax on candy sold in the lobby. As a result, Circuit Judge Chester P. O'Hara granted a temporary order restraining the State Internal Revenue department from enforcing tax collections from the theatre chain under the "chain-store act."

United Detroit last year paid $5,220 in taxes from 1943 through 1949 on lobby candy concessions. Under protest, the firm paid $970 for its fiscal year ended March 31.

United Detroit contends that the candy booths are a customer service and not taxable under the act. A hearing will be held Friday (3).

pay, with top-name talent getting as high as $1,000 to $1.500 on the Philco stanza. But, Coe pointed out, the talent commanding such high fees is usually drawn from films or legit, in which they can make far more money, so that they don't appear too often on TV. In addition, he said, while a supporting actor, through varying characterizations, can be seen often, the public might tire of the same faces cast in the top roles each week. Exceptions, of course, are the dramatic serials, in which the same cast does a continuing story each week.

Number of the actors drawing the most assignments on video, according to Coe, are those who have been working in the medium for four or five years. Such thesps as Vaughn Taylor, John McQuade, Vinton Hayworth, etc., often do at least one show a week, spreading their talents among the Philco program, "Kraft TV Theatre," etc. Despite the number of young hopefuls trying out for TV each week, Coe cited his persistent difficulty in finding young ingenues. He scouted all over N. Y. to find the right girl for the title role in "Bethel Merriday," which finally went to Grace Kelly, who was drawn from the Broadway cast of August Strindberg's "Fathers."

While development of new writing talent for TV is still a pressing problem, Coe said it's unlikely that new scripters will be developed in the hour-long dramatic stanzas, such as Philco and Kraft. Any playwright who can pen an acceptable script for an hour program, he pointed out, would probably have little trouble in expanding it into a two-hour length for films and legit. As a result, Coe is looking to the weekly half-hour stanzas, which usually depend on short, one-act plays, as the developing ground for tyro writing talent.

Phonevision Pitches Woo But Pix Cos. Noncommital to Chi TV Outfit

Faced by a blanket silence on the part of the major companies to his request for product to supply a Phonevision 90-day test, Eugene F. McDonald, Jr., prez of Zenith Corp., owner of the video system, has turned to J. Arthur Rank in a bid for British films. McDonald dispatched a letter last week to the British producer. His chances of getting this product are regarded as extremely light.

Contrary to reports, Rank has no understanding with McDonald to supply his company with films. Moreover, it is understood that the British filmmaker will make no move in that direction without consulting both Universal and Eagle Lion, distribs of his pix in the U.S.

Understood that when Rank was in the U. S. last year he huddled with the Zenith topper who then demonstrated his wired-television setup and made a plea for films to be used on the test run. Britisher did not commit himself to any particular course, merely confining himself to an expression of interest.

McDonald's offer to Rank is believed the same as that to American distribs. He is willing to pay the equivalent terms ordinarily granted by an exhib. This would be some percentage on the $1 per-showing charge Zenith intends making on the householder using the system. Under his plan, some 300 sets are to be installed in Chicago homes for a 90-day test run. Program could be picked up by calling the telephone company and that utility would also bill the subscriber each month.

Meantime, McDonald offered strenuous denials of reports that he had made no specific request to the American majors for product. Check among the companies disclosed that they have received numerous letters from the Phonevision topper suggesting that the time was ripe for letting him have test films, but that these were not couched in terms that they considered formal requests. In any case, they have no enthusiasm for making pictures available.

McDonald declared in Chicago this week that he made a specific request on Feb. 9 "to all important producers" and wrote them again on Feb. 20. He stated in the latter letter: "So that there will be no embarrassment to you in supplying us with your share of feature films for this 90-day test in the theatre of the home, Zenith will not ask you to loan us your films. Zenith will gladly pay each producer, for each film used, the same fee that would be paid by any other theatre having an equivalent audience."

VARIETY last week quoted producer opinion that Phonevision can only pay off with topflight pix which would be good enough also to pay off in theatres. "May I point out," McDonald declared in reply, "that we have not asked studios to confine film to new first-run features, and instead of using the readily available film from a few studios, have invited the entire industry to participate in order to present in our test a true cross section of all Hollywood production."

Zenith topper declared he has no intention of pushing an anti-trust suit against the majors in the event he doesn't get film from them, as has been suggested in trade circles. Film companies, fearing such action, have been taking pains to point out that even if they wanted to they would be prohibited from making pix available because of music restrictions. Their deal with the American Federation of Musicians prevents sound track being used on TV.

Danny Kaye Slated For 20th's 'Riviera'

Danny Kaye will star in "On the Riviera" at 20th-Fox. Sylvia Fine (Mrs. Kaye) will write some special material, with Valentine Davies doing the screenplay.

William Perlberg is producing.

Mid-Century Film Fest With a One World Idea

One-World Award Committee will stage a Mid-Century Film Festival on the Continent as part of the organization's international meeting in San Remo on the Italian Riviera, Aug. 13-27. Several U. S. film companies, including Paramount, United Artists, Film Classics, United World Films and Louis de Rochement, have already submitted a list of over 50 feature pix and shorts to be shown at the festival.

Awards will be made to pix presenting a "one world" approach and promoting "better understanding among nationality groups." Citations will be made for current releases as well as the standout film since 1900. Other awards will be made in the field of radio, legit and music.

Honored pix will be selected by delegates of business, labor, student groups and public service organizations from various countries. J. Arthur Rank is participating in behalf of England, while Italian, Hungarian and Polish producers will also be represented. Jacques F. Ferrand, exec secretary of the One World Award Committee, will leave for Hollywood this month to line up a U. S. committee for the festival.

UA-Justman

DeLuxe, of course, as the result of its guarantee, is assured of the lab work on the pix. Justman is charging the usual 17½% of the budget for studio facilities and getting a piece of the pic for deferring that sum. The films will be made on the MPC lot by various producers.

Sears has been on the Coast during the past week confabbing with Justman, Loew, Carl Leserman, who reps Heller, and Steve Broidy, who reps De Luxe, on selection of producers and properties. UA's continuing interest will be supervised by Selmer (Sunny) Chalif, Sears' personal rep on the Coast, who has been absorbing the duties of George Bagnall. Bagnall resigned last week as v.p. on the production end.

Nasser Loosening Up

In the meantime, another source of indie financing is beginning to free up somewhat. That is the General Service Studio, headed by James Nasser. Nasser had been pretty well tied up for a while by the fact that, in order to get production for the studio, he had guaranteed loans and completion bonds on about a dozen films. This requires liquid assets deposited with the banks, and Nasser had about $2,000,000 thus corralled.

In addition, Nasser in 1947 bought the studio for $2,500,000 from Benedict Bogeaus, and was to have paid for it in cash over a period of years. Bogeaus, however, involved in his own production, required the money faster than he had anticipated, and Nasser has been paying him off in advance.

Thus, with so much cash involved, Nasser had to go slow on making further guarantees. Now, however, coin is coming in on all but one of the 12 pix (this one will show a loss and require payment to the bank out of the guarantee), and so the Nasser funds are gradually being released by the banks and are increasingly available for further indie production use.

General Service, as do Motion Picture Centre, the Nassour Studios and other rental lots, generally holds between 20% and 25% of the profits of pix made there. They get that in return for guaranteeing the bank loan, guaranteeing completion and deferment of the 17½% studio facilities charge.

Barbara Day's Doubling

Barbara Day, who has been doubling as chief flack for the Motion Picture Sales Corp. and the Fred Astaire Dance Studios, has been upped to national sales and promotional director of the terp schools. Both the MPSC and Astaire setups are largely owned by Charles Casanave, who's v.p. of MPSC and exec v.p. and general manager of the dance studios.

Miss Day will continue handling MPSC publicity, as well as that for the 43 terperies. She's been in films since 1936, being former associate story ed for Grand National and scripter of 35 shorts She's daughter of E. L. McEvoy, former shorts sales chief for Universal.

Tyrant of the Sea

the film occurs when the British sailors board a French vessel and go in for some healthy sword play in proper swashbuckling fashion. Rhys Williams turns in a capable job as the tyrannical captain, while the rest of the cast handle their roles with average competence.

Lew Landers' direction shows up well and helps to overcome a drab production, obviously the result of a tight budget.

Blonde Dynamite

Monogram release of Jan Grippo production. Stars Leo Gorcey; features Huntz Hall, Adele Jergens. Directed by William Beaudine. "Blonde Dynamite," latest in Jan Grippo's "Bowery Boy" series, shapes up as passable fare for the lesser twin-billers. Comedy and the situations of the Charles Marion script are rather forced, but nevertheless achieve frequent chuckles.

Script hands Leo Gorcey his familiar ungrammatical lines and he makes the most of them for maximum effect. Joining the general buffoonery are Gorcey's cohorts—Huntz Hall, Garbiel Dell and William Benedict. Laughs get underway when the group converts Bernard Gorcey's icecream parlor into an escort bureau.

With the stage now set, bank messenger Dell finds himself on the spot with his employer when he lets blonde siren Adele Jergens con him out of $5,000 of the institution's funds. Complications obviously set in and Miss Jergens' confederates move into the escort bureau's premises to pull a job on the adjoining bank. Yeggs' plan, however, falls through when they tunnel into a police station.

Brash and earthily amusing, Gorcey moves through his role with a minimum of effort. Although giving the film a pulchritudinous lift, Miss Jergens isn't able to do much else due to the limited possibilities of her part. Lengthy supporting cast helps project the more amusing sequences and director William Beaudine wraps up the overall yarn in smooth fashion. Marcel Le Picard's lensing, William Austin's editing and Grippo's production are standard. Gilb.

Young Daniel Boone

Hollywood, Feb. 24.

Monogram release of James S. Burkett production. Stars David Bruce; features Kristine Miller, Damian O'Flynn, Don Beddoe, Mary Treen, John Mylong. Directed by Reginald LeBorg. Screenplay, Clint Johnston, Reginald LeBorg; story by Johnston; camera (Cinecolor), G. Warrenton; editor, Charles Craft. Previewed Feb. 23, '50. Running time, 71 MINS.

"Young Daniel Boone" is a promising action title to which the film contents measure up. Movement is dressed up in some very good Cinecolor, the Indians and early-day frontiersmen supply the fighting and results are satisfactory for its market. Juve ticket-buyers and action fans will like it.

The colonial frontier of the mid-18th century furnishes the setting for this tale of action intrigue and hokum when the white man was taking over from the Indians. Daniel Boone, capably played by David Bruce, has as his chief misson the rescue of two girls captured by the redskins, plus the unmasking of a French spy. After the script by Clint Johnson and Reginald LeBorg once gets started it plays at the proper pace to bring about the happy ending when Boone looks to a future in Kentucky with Kristine Miller, one of the rescued girls, as his wife.

LeBorg's direction concentrates on keeping the action running high but doesn't do as good a job on handling the majority of the players. However, the ten-twent-thirt style of scenery-chewing fits okay into the frontiersmen-versus-Indians plotting. Bruce and Miss Miller appear to the most advantage among the cast. Damian O'Flynn is an okay French spy, and the others are adequate to demands.

Range Land

Monogram production and release. Stars Whip Wilson; features Andy Clyde. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Screenplay, Adele Buffington; camera, Harry Neumann; music, Edward Kay. At New York theatre, N. Y., dual, week of Feb. 21, '50. Running time, 56 MINS.

Whip	Whip Wilson

Red	Reed Howes
Mosley	Stanley Blystone
Pete	Dee Cooper
Spike	Carl Mathews
Guard	Michael Dugan

Steadily improving in his thesping, Whip Wilson injects sufficient snap and dash into "Range Land" to make this oater an agreeable filler for the action houses. Story is no gem of originality, but it unreels briskly in the film's less-than-60 minutes running time.

Wilson, a former U. S. marshal, again becomes a lawman when bandits attempt to attack a stage in which he's a passenger. Investigation shows that the outlaws are members of a ring which periodically lift a fortune in gold bars from millowner Steve Clark.

Determined to nab the brains of the gang, Wilson poses as renegade and succeeds in joining the thieves. With that accomplished, the rest is easy. He bags several of the brigands and the sheriff's posse cleans up the rest.

While obviously a formula western, "Range Land" has performances a shade above average. Top acting honors go to Wilson. Andy Clyde clicks in the comedy spot, Leonard M. Penn is a creditable gang boss and Reno Browne, Clark, William M. Griffith and John L. Cason are okay in supporting roles.

Lambert Hillyer's direction gives the film a boost. Camerawork of Harry Neumann is good while other technical credits are in keeping with the picture's modest budget. Gilb.

A new independent British production unit has kicked off with a winner. "Morning Departure" is a fine film in the best tradition of the British studios and packs a hard dramatic punch throughout its 102 minutes. Here is a solid boxoffice attraction and one which in foreign markets, particularly America, should enhance the prestige of the British industry.

This is a story of a submarine disaster, told with stark realism. There is no attempt at mock heroics or false bravado. Instead, it's a faithful interpretation of the way a handful of trapped men spend their last few days hoping against hope. It is a gripping situation, rich in poignancy and with just the correct amount of relief to ease the tension.

The picture opens as the submarine "Trojan" is leaving for a routine day exercise. The skipper had previously debated with his wife whether he should retire from the service; the young stoker is a little uneasy at his philandering wife; and there is the usual assorted complement of officers and men. A few minutes out at sea and a magnetic mine strikes the sub and brings disaster. Only 12 men survive the first impact and there is rescue equipment only for eight.

Although bearing an uncanny similarity to a recent disaster, there is not a word in the film to which exception could be taken. On the contrary, the simple story of hope and courage can be regarded as a permanent testimonial to those who lost their lives when the "Truculent" went down. The hazards of rescue work and the dangers inherent in lifting a sunken sub from the sea-bed provide not only tense drama, but illustrate that mere skill alone isn't sufficient to achieve success. In this case they are cheated of victory by only a few hours, and the start of a heavy gale makes final disaster inevitable.

The acting is always on a quiet, restrained note. There are moments of hysteria, of course, but these are only incidental. John Mills sets the standard by a smooth, dignified performance, which is matched by Richard Attenborough, who displays quiet courage and devotion after first breaking down. Nigel Patrick as the first lieutenant, and James Hayter as the irrepressible cockney cook, complete the doomed quartet who were left to die by the turn of a card. The other members of the crew play with genuine conviction, but the women in the film have only the smallest of bits. To all intents and purposes, it's a 100% male film about the men of the senior service.

Roy Baker's direction merits high praise, and Desmond Dickinson's camera and lighting work are topgrade. The main submarine setting has the stamp of the genuine article and adds much to the general effect of realism achieved. Myro.

Seraphin

(FRENCH-CANADIAN)

Montreal, Feb. 28.

Quebec Productions release of Paul L'Anglais production. Stars Hector Charland, Nicole Germain; features Guy Provost, Suzanne Avon, Henri Poitras, Antoinette Giroux. Directed by Jean Boisvert. Screenplay by Claude-Henri Grignon; camera, Drummond Drury; music, Paul Colbert. At St. Denis, Montreal. Running time, 105 MINS.

Seraphin	Hector Charland
Donalda	Nicole Germain
Alexis	Guy Provost
Artemise	Suzanne Avon
Jame de Bois	Henri Poitras
Wabo	Arthur Lefebvre
Le Cure Labelle	Eddy Tremblay
Le Bebe	Alain Boisvert
Le Dr. Cyprien	Marcel Sylvain
Delima	Jeannette Teasdale
Mlle. Angelique	Antoinette Grioux

A followup to "Un Homme et Son Peche" with the same cast and location, "Seraphin" fails to pack the punch and clarity of its predecessor. Like "Peche," the latest effort of Quebec Productions revolves around the miser Seraphin and his lust for money. Adapted from the popular radio serial by Claude-Henri Grignon, the current effort lacks pacing and becomes at times nothing more than a series of episodes that have little or no connection.

The film starts with the colonization of the Laurentians in 1890 and a small group who are rallied by the ever-present cure Labelle to overcome their hardships. These hardships never materialize as the film drifts off into the amiable argument sand bickerings with Seraphin over money matters.

Love interest is maintained throughout by Alexis and Artemise, whose creditable performances are only overshadowed by Le Bebe, who provides the only real comic lift in the offering. Hector Charland plays the role of Seraphin with all the masterly touches brought on by over 10 years of starring in the radio version and as the lead of last year's "Peche." Nicole Germain is the long-suffering wife of the miser, who gets little or no chance in this picture to do anything.

Camera work by Drummond Drury is slick. But too many interiors, and the fact that the company rushed the film to completion in 20 days, shows up in the abrupt lighting of following scenes. Pic captures much of the French-Canadian idiom but the leisurely treatment shows definite signs that much cutting could still be done without harming general effect.

Film will be distributed by France Film throughout Quebec and in the French speaking towns of New England. Newt.

Le Grand Rendezvous

(The Big Meeting)

(FRENCH)

Paris, Feb. 18.

Corona release of Adolphe Osso-Olympia production. Directed by Jean Dreville. Screenplay, Guy Calvet, Jacques Remy; dialog, Andre Tabet. Features Pierre Asso, Rene Blancard, Francois Patrice, Paula Dehelly, Vera Norman, Jo Dest, Charles Fawcett. Camera, Andre Thomas; editor, Lamy. At Rex, Paris. Running time, 100 MINS.

Francois	Francois Patrice
Colette	Vera Norman
John	Charles Fawcett
Forestrier	Pierre Asso
Yvette	Paula Dehelly
Stoffstal	Jo Dest
Vichy Official	Rene Blancard

Film may well cash in on the recent b.o. popularity of war pix. This deals in the little-known series of events leading up to the Allied invasion of North Africa. Film is based on fact and is told in a brisk, semi-documentary manner interspersed with newsreel footage. Film devotes most of its time to the intrigue of the Free French in Algiers to pave the way for the American entry. It brings together a group who finally arrange the clandestine meeting with General Clark. There is no marquee appeal, and film will have to be pushed by exploitation. It is above average for second-run spots.

The story picks five characters out of a swirling hotel lobby who conspire to hand Algiers to the Allies, with the help of the American Ambassador. Then follow secret meetings, sabotage, a love affair between an American G.I. and a French girl, and the meeting with Clark and the ensuing liberation. The partisans promise to have Algiers paralyzed so the Allies can just walk in. They take over the communications and give the signal. However, the Americans are late, and there is scuffling with Vichy officials and Germans until they arrive.

Director Jean Dreville has kept the film moving, and glossed over the characters. The acting is wooden except for the full-bodied work of Francois Patrice as the young idealist, and Rene Blancard as the wry Vichy official. Editing and photography are above-average, and the music helps sustain the suspense. Mosk.

Gefaehrliche Gaeste

(Dangerous Guests)

(GERMAN—SONGS)

Berlin, Feb. 14.

Allianz release of Geza Trebitsch-Real Film production. Stars Vera Molnar, Wolf Albach-Retty, Paul Kemp. Directed and written by Geza Cziffra. Music, Michael Jary; camera, Ekkehard Kyrath. At Luxor, Frankfurt. Running time, 85 MINS.

Peter Anders	Wolf Albach-Retty
Inge	Vera Molnar
Inge's uncle	Paul Kemp
Peter's aunt	Kaethe Haack
Peter's uncle	Albert Florath
Franz	Hans Schwarz
August	Bobby Todd
Poldi	Ludwig Roeger

Real's latest pic has a good yarn, which could stand a lot more exploitation than given to it by the weak script.

Plot deals with a young man, Wolf Albach-Retty, who tires of playing around and decides to sell his house and retire. Three hoodlums move in, as self-styled servants and a charming miss (Vera Molnar) adds complications. The gang is eventually caught, and there's a romantic ending.

The slow-moving plot hampers pic from developing into a full-fledged comedy, in spite of the few bright spots. Albach-Retty doesn't show much talent, but Paul Kemp is very funny as a pianist. Bobby Todd and especially Ludwig Roeger and very good as two members of the gang.

A newcomer, Miss Molnar is cute, and a very potential import item for Hollywood talent scouts. Michael Jary's musical score is good and so are his two songs, though mostly for European taste. Camera work is average, but sets and costumes are generally good. Gaal.

Danza de Fuego

(Dance of Fire)

(ARGENTINE)

Buenos Aires, Feb. 15.

Interamericana release of Emelco production. Directed by Daniel Tinayre from his adaptation of story by Andres Legrand; script by Alejandro Verbisky and Emilio Villalba Welsh. Camera, Humberto Peruzzi. Orchestra conducted by Jose Maria Castro. At Gran Rex, Buenos Aires. Running time, 95 MINS.

Elena	Amelia Bence
Zaldivar	Francisco de Paula
Barrera	Enrique Diosdado
Inspector	Alberto Closas
Felipe	Otto Sirgo
Painter	Floren Delbene
Elena (child)	Norma Key

Made in the hope of capturing foreign markets, this picture misses fire by following a technique designed to facilitate dubbing in other languages. This detracts from entertainment value to local audiences, as it makes for extremely slow and dragging action, apart from a weak story. There is a total lack of humorous touches. The unusually tasteful and lavish settings deserve outstanding mention and the costuming also, especially on the male side, shows distinct improvement for an Argentine production. Nevertheless, an outstandingly costly cast and production have had telling local boxoffice impact.

Story is that of a femme pianist who as a child had aroused the worst instincts of the circus clown (Enrique Diosdado). Following a criminal assault he makes on her, against a background of Manuel de Falla's "Ritual Dance of Fire," she becomes a psychic case, with the Falla music driving her inevitably to crime, while in subconscious state. Dominated by the erstwhile clown, who becomes her impresario, the girl becomes a world-famous pianist and a femme fatale. Her shooting of one suitor puts her under suspicion by Police Inspector Alberto Closas. The psychiatrist (Francisco de Paula), who takes her under his wing, teaches her to love and overcome fear, but on her wedding night she learns the truth of her criminal instincts from the evil impresario, so hurls herself to death from a window.

As the pianist, Amelia Bence is more favorably photographed than usual, but she poses rather than acts for the camera. The three principal male characters form a distinguished looking and fine acting trio. Closas is outstanding. Otto Sirgo, as a heavy, succeeds in providing the only comic relief, albeit unwittingly. Photography and camera work are very good; musical sequences are interesting, but sound not well balanced.

the cinema ministry proper notice of their arrival, coming in on what were termed "surprise visits.

(Reference here is apparently to Maas' recent visit to Moscow. He was there for 18 days without being able to contact the necessary top echelon in the film ministry. He finally got a call just an hour before his plane took off.)

Soviet officials added, according to Morros, that the MPEA deal was never finalized because prints submitted were not 35m originals, but were subtitled, old, scratched, dirty or 16m.

Morros said that in three weeks in Moscow he saw 42 Russe pix, some in an excellent, improved version of Agfacolor. He saw 19 live shows, which included legits, ballets, opera, revues, two circuses and Shakespeare. He said there were 47,000 theatres and 200,000 cineclubs, with show biz thriving. Tickets for shows are sold all over Moscow, including subway stations, Morros stated.

Producer added that there was much radio broadcasting and some video with small-size receivers.

sisted the ads, placed both in newspapers and on radio for Frost TV Stores, are "truthful and factual."

Ads also claim TV provides "greater entertainment" than do films. According to Getschal, "Whether TV or the movies are greater entertainment is a question—if there is a question—that should be left to the people to decide. But intimidation can only bring the motion picture industry into disrespect when it is striving mightily to win public goodwill. Perhaps this is only a single instance, but it is based upon a principle that . . . should be protected from unwarranted and thoughtless attack."

Par denied the charges of intimidation, but admitted it had sent out a letter of protest to several New York radio stations. Letter, making no threats of withdrawing Par advertising from the stations, questioned the advisability of the stations' running copy inviting listeners to attend filmeries, while accepting copy on the other hand advising listeners "how foolish it is to go to the movies."

ganizations. Because big circuit ops fear that the present proposal to finance COMPO via a percentage of rentals would tip off their film expenses, some modification of the money-raising plan is likely. Narrower definition of COMPO's initial aims may be requested.

Plans for TOA's participation in the upcoming hearings of the Federal Communications Commission on large-screen theatre television channels will be developed. Report of Nate Halpern, Fabian circuit video expert, and Robert H. O'Brien, secretary-treasurer of United Paramount, will be presented. Two theatre execs have cased the chances of winning channels and have outlined the strategy to be used at the hearings.

Exhibs definitely slated to attend are Leonard Goldenson, Si Fabian, Sam Pinanski, Arthur Lockwood, Robert Coyne, Walter Reade, Jr., Sherrill Corwin, Claude Mundo, Robert Livingston, Morris Loewenstein, J. O'Leary, Ben Strozier, Nat Williams and Mitchell Wolfson. Gael Sullivan, exec director, and Herman Levy, general counsel, will also sit in. Ted Gamble and Robert O'Donnell may be on hand.

Techni Customers, Via Decree, Get Right to Cancel Future Prod. Pacts

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Technicolor's consent decree gives the tinting outfit's customers the right to cancel current pacts on future productions. It does not end any contracts or otherwise change them where shooting and processing has either been completed or has already been started. Decree, recently agreed on by Techni and the Dept. of Justice, has been submitted to Federal judge William C. Mathes for his approval.

Judicial okay would end the long anti-trust action by the Government. Certain contracts between Techni and Eastman Kodak are terminated in the decree. Two companies have not operated under these pacts for several years, according to Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, prez of the company.

Another proviso of the judicial book-of-rules requires Techni to grant licenses under its patents. List of 92 patents are set forth in the decree under which the color firm will grant each applicant a non-exclusive license without royalty or know-how. Another list sets forth patents on which non-exclusive licenses are handed out on a reasonable royalty basis with know-how. Applicant must apply in good faith and accept court ruling as to amount of royalty in event a rate cannot be reached otherwise.

On royalty-paying licenses, Techni will set forth the know-how in the form of manual or equivalent statement of methods and technical info know to and used by the company in its commercial practice at the date of the decree. Nothing in the decree permits the use of the label "Technicolor" without permission from the company.

Statement of Kalmus declares: "Technicolor has agreed to the entry of this decree because it believes it affords a practical basis for a settlement of its diffi;culties with the Government and to avoid the time and expenses of a long protracted trial. As set forth in the decree, Technicolor has not and does not admit that it has been a party to any violation of the anti-trust laws."

notable example is the Ida Lupino-Collier Young production, "Not Wanted," which was made for $160,000 and cleaned up under Film Classics distribution.

Where the Real Risk Begins

As a rule, however, the higher budgets are needed in order to get a name or other factor which will win a pic acceptable playing time in first grade situations. And when a producer gets into the $500,000 or over class, there's definitely plenty of risk. That means that the pic has to gross somewhere around $850,000 to break even—and that's no longer easy unless the film catches on pretty well.

Result of this new phenomenon of hit-or-flop is further revolution of an industry which is already in the throes of tremendous change. It means the finale of a whole, large class of films which formerly were not only important profit-makers for producers, but have been a necessity to theatres. Furthermore, while it hits the indies harder, lack of return on the medium-low budget product is also important to the lesser of the big studios. They have to go on making pix in this category because of overhead and other problems, but they must depend on hits among their bigger films to bring them real profits. They're happy if the smaller ones just break even.

Incidentally, the cheapie market has turned into a bonanza for at least one producer who has taken low-budget filmmaking out of the shoestring category and put it on a big business basis. That is Robert Lippert. He's turning out actioners for about $60,000 and showing a profit of somewhere around $15,000 each on them. That gives him a nice return, considering that he makes 10 or more a year, plus the fact that his own distributing company also makes a good fee for handling them.

U's 'Francis' Into N.Y. Par Augurs More Outside Pix

Increasing bookings of non-Paramount product by the Paramount theatre, Broadway flagship, is seen for the future unless the studio boosts its production schedule substantially. With the major lot sticking to its output of 20 or so pix annually, and Broadway runs still showing a decline, Par's output cannot meet the demands of the big house, United Paramount execs note.

Moreover, likelihood is that lesser Paramount product will find its way to smaller houses. In the light of divorcement, UP toppers are balky on booking the half-dozen smaller pix which the lot turns out yearly.

In line with the new situation, showcase has booked Universal's "Francis" for March 15, the first non-Paramount pic to play the house within almost one year. "Francis" will also be the first Universal film to tenant the theatre in almost 10 years.

Par Layoffs

tions from Par's topper to keep overhead at a minimum in view of reduced income because of divorcement.

Studio policy emerging from the sudden layoffs is one in which employees of various departments will be carried only so long as there is production. Practice for years has been to carry these workers from one picture to another.

WB's Theatre Layoffs

Warner Bros. made another personnel slash over last weekend when it dropped an additional 26 employees in its theatre division. In last two weeks, Warners has laid off a total of 35 staffers in its cut-off, department which handled accounting of individual grosses of each Warner theatre. Homeoffice execs explained the cutbacks on the basis of the Federal anti-trust decree which bans the blocks purchase of pix for circuits and provides for theatre-by-theatre buying.

An additional reason for the cuts is reportedly based on an economy campaign by h.o. execs. Warner staffers by and larger escaped the shaking out of payrolls which took place in most other film offices in 1947 when the postwar slump was first felt. Currently local union execs are anticipating further cuts in the distrib as well as theatre departments. All employees are receiving severance pay under the company's agreement with collarite Local H-63.

France, England and Switzerland. Following graduation from Harvard he went into the Army as a private and came out of the war a lieutenant colonel. He was on General Eisenhower's staff, where, because of his youth, he was dubbed "The Baby Colonel." He later was on the War Dept. general staff and after VE day served with the Army at Frankfurt. He was decorated 12 times.

Spiegel joined RKO in 1946 as assistant to Robert Hawkinson, assistant foreign manager. He later was aide to Jack Osserman, Latin American supervisor, and then became special h. o. rep.

Carl York, MPAA's rep for Scandinavia and Finland, planed out of New York for Stockholm Monday (27), following six weeks of huddles in the U. S. One week of his stay was spent on the Coast, familiarizing himself with studio foreign problems.

York was named to the new spot shortly before his recent trip to America for the purpose of orienting himself. He's one of several new MPAA international reps in addition to Spiegel. He was with Paramount for 25 years before joining the MPAA.

Distrib Payoff

fled by the continuing high cost of production and the expense of giant sales forces.

Par's $1,800,000 Average

As an example of how difficult it has been for a big outfit to slash its production overhead, it has been learned that Paramount's average per-pic cost is at $1,800,000. This despite the fact that prez Barney Balaban has been able to chop his studio overhead on a per-picture basis from a high of 40% to its present 28%. High cost of Paramount product continues, although a number of proportionately low-budgeters of the Pine & Thomas kind are included to haul down the average.

RKO's distribution plight is still challenging its top execs. During the past 12 months its sales end has lost in the vicinity of $4,000,000. Company will probably emerge with a small overall profit because its theatre chain turned out a profit of $5,000,000 during the year. RKO's overall gross for the final quarter of '49 was down to $22,990,000. This compares with $27,500,000 for the comparative quarter of '48, pointing up the company's continuing difficulties.

Mighty 'Samson'

With the help of its strong entry, "Samson and Delilah," Par is ekeing out a small profit for its first quarter as a production-distribution outfit. Without "Samson," Par would be in the red for its initial try. To drive this fact home to his sales force and spark bigger returns, Balaban has insisted that grosses on "Samson" be kept separate from other returns in reports from the field. He contends the epic is being booked by the h.o. and should not be credited to the exchanges.

While no inside figures are available for Warner Bros. or Metro, there is no doubt among industryites in the know that neither of these two companies is knocking out sizeable distribution profits. In each instance, their theatre chains have been coming up with the sizeable end of their net take.

Because of the pressing need to build profits from sales, Metro has been driving for a better break in rentals from theatres. It is currently battling that point out with Fox-West Coast in the west and the Century, Skouras and Brandt chains in Metropolitan New York in a drive to break the mold that has held down terms from the big circuits.

Unless there is a sudden easing down-the-line, the Big Five will undoubtedly engage in a furious fight to cop a higher proportion of the total b.o. from the circuits. Because business generally has been on the off side, it is expected that exhibs will prove to be that much tougher to crack.

Hughes OKs

special, extra-costly process to get finer reproduction.

Atlanta date was set for March 2-8. In a statement announcing cancellation, Georgia Theatres declared: "Position of the Fox management was that the advertising is misleading to the public and therefore detrimental to the reputation for truthful advertising and good public relations of Georgia Theatre Co., as well as the motion picture industry as a whole. . . . Advance advertising had already brought a written protest to the theatre management from Atlanta city officials who protested that the text of the publicity was misleading and entirely false."

Advertising on "Outlaw," which was made independently by Hughes about 10 years ago, long before he acquired RKO, has been a repeated source of difficulty. Hughes' insistence three years ago that there be no change in the ads he had designed resulted in withdrawal of the film's Production Code Administration seal and subsequent filing of a multi-million dollar anti-trust suit against the Motion Picture Assn. of America, which operates the PCA. That's still pending, although the seal was restored.

New ads have been causing trade comment, but not on the point that Jenkins advanced. The art shows a guy trying to pull a gal into a barn. That the ads pull is evidenced by the picture doing tremendous biz in every date, even in those cities where it had previously been widely seen.

HAMRICK, EVERGREEN THEATRES IN SPLIT

Portland, Ore., Feb. 28.

The Hamrick-Evergreen houses were divided into the John Hamrick and Evergreen Theatres here last week. For the first time since 1935 Evergreen Theatres Corp. took full control of the Paramount, Orpheum, and Oriental theatres in downtown Portland. The change in operation is being made in compliance with the Federal court decree.

In addition to the three downtown houses, which are first run, the Evergreen group will include the Hollywood, suburban house. M. M. Mesher, district manager, will continue in charge of the four.

The Oregon district, under the direction of Mesher, incorporates eight theatres, including the McDonald and Rex in Eugene, and Castle and Kiggins, Vancouver, Wash.

John Hamrick Theatres resumed management of the Liberty, Music Box, Playhouse, and Newsreel theatres. Officers in addition to Hamrick include Will Conner, executive v.p., and Herbert Sabotka, v.p. in charge of operations. Robert Anderson has been appointed Hamrick city manager.

In addition to Portland and Seattle, Evergreen Theatres operate in a number of Washington cities, including Spokane, Olympia, Bremerton, Wenatchee, Bellingham, Hoquiam, and Everett. Hamrick's operations include Tacoma, Washington.

The status of the Mayfair theatre, jointly operated by the Evergreen Corp., and J. J. Parker will not be affected.

Arnall Pitches

with VARIETY from his home in Nunan, Ga., said the President had called him in to discuss international film problems. When that phase of their discussion was closed, however, the SIMPP prexy disclosed, he (Arnall) brought up the question of domestic monopoly as it affects indie producers. The President showed considerable interest in the subject, Arnall said.

Arnall asserted that the discussion on foreign matters had been general. The impending talks with the British government on renewal of the Anglo-U. S. agreement of 1948 had not been specifically mentioned, nor had the possibility of the State Dept.'s taking a hand in them, Arnall added.

SIMPP has long been pressing for all negotiations on behalf of the industry with foreign nations to be carried on by State, with industryites sitting in as expert advisers. Johnston, SIMPP feels, is less anxious for such a policy. State has been reluctant to take an active hand and, in the opinion of some observers, has been using lack of industry unity on the matter as a convenient reason for staying out.

Arnall gave the impression this week that if the MPAA and SIMPP got together and presented to the President or Secretary of State a specific program, State's active support might be forthcoming on Truman's order. "We have failed in the past," Arnall said, "because we have never gone to the Administration with sufficiently specific requests."

He plans to present such a program whether or not the MPAA goes along with him on it, Arnall indicated. He left Georgia for the Coast yesterday (Tuesday) and will be there a week confabbing with his members. He stated he has a number of recommendations to make to the indie producers and expects to wind up the week's sessions with a program in hand.

Regarding the domestic monopoly situation, Arnall said he pointed out SIMPP's fears that the Dept. of Justice might close out present litigation without cleaning up all the sore spots. The Society has been particularly concerned over Fox-West Coast's alleged hold on territories where it operates and a number of other spots where it claims indie producers cannot get a fair price for their films because of concentration of theatre ownership.

"We must intensify the monopoly fight. The time is propitious now and we must do or die within the next few months, before the Government winds up its litigation," Arnall said he told the President.

SIMPP topper will be in New York from the Coast next week.

ects jointly planned with American companies, are now in the blueprint stage.

Rank and his chief aide, John Davis, gave the cue to the company's decision several weeks ago at a dinner for the outfit's top production and theatre execs. At that time, Rank and Davis told their guests that the period of production cuts in personnel had ended. "The major portion of the reorganization is over," Davis said, "and each one of you can know that your job is secure and that by and large the staff working under you are in the same position."

Rank's about-face, regardless of action by the oncoming government on entertainment taxes, reportedly was brought about by his recognition that the company's tremendous theatre holdings must be supplied with British films. Without a steady output of celluloid by Pinewood, the Odeon and British-Gaumont circuits could be faced with a constant problem of rental costs on American films.

ARI's 4% Dip

tive period of '48 by 11%. Weekly attendance for the kickoff month in '50 is computed at 64,600,000 against 67,100,000 in '49.

In another of its series of probes on television, that medium's inroads on theatre grosses is discounted by ARI as the cause of the continuing slide in attendance. From "what appear to be the most reliable estimate," ARI sees a 25% decline in filmgoing by tele set owners. Pollster outfit points out that its early survey in November, 1948, found the same percentage of decline.

"It would appear doubtful that much of the drop in motion picture attendance since 1946 can be attributed to TV," ARI says. "While unquestionably among set owners movie-going, as well as other leisure time activities, has been seriously affected, today's 4,000,000 sets are still not enough to account for more than a small share of the drop in attendance during the past four years." Increased number of sets will cause greater inroads, ARI notes.

In a further analysis of theatre attendance, survey shows a sharper rally in the traditional December-to-January climb this year than last. January of '50 gained 23% over the December figure, whereas there was only a 13% improvement in the preceding year. Comeback from the normal sharp drop in December ticket sales was much stronger than previously, ARI declares.

Shavian Oldies

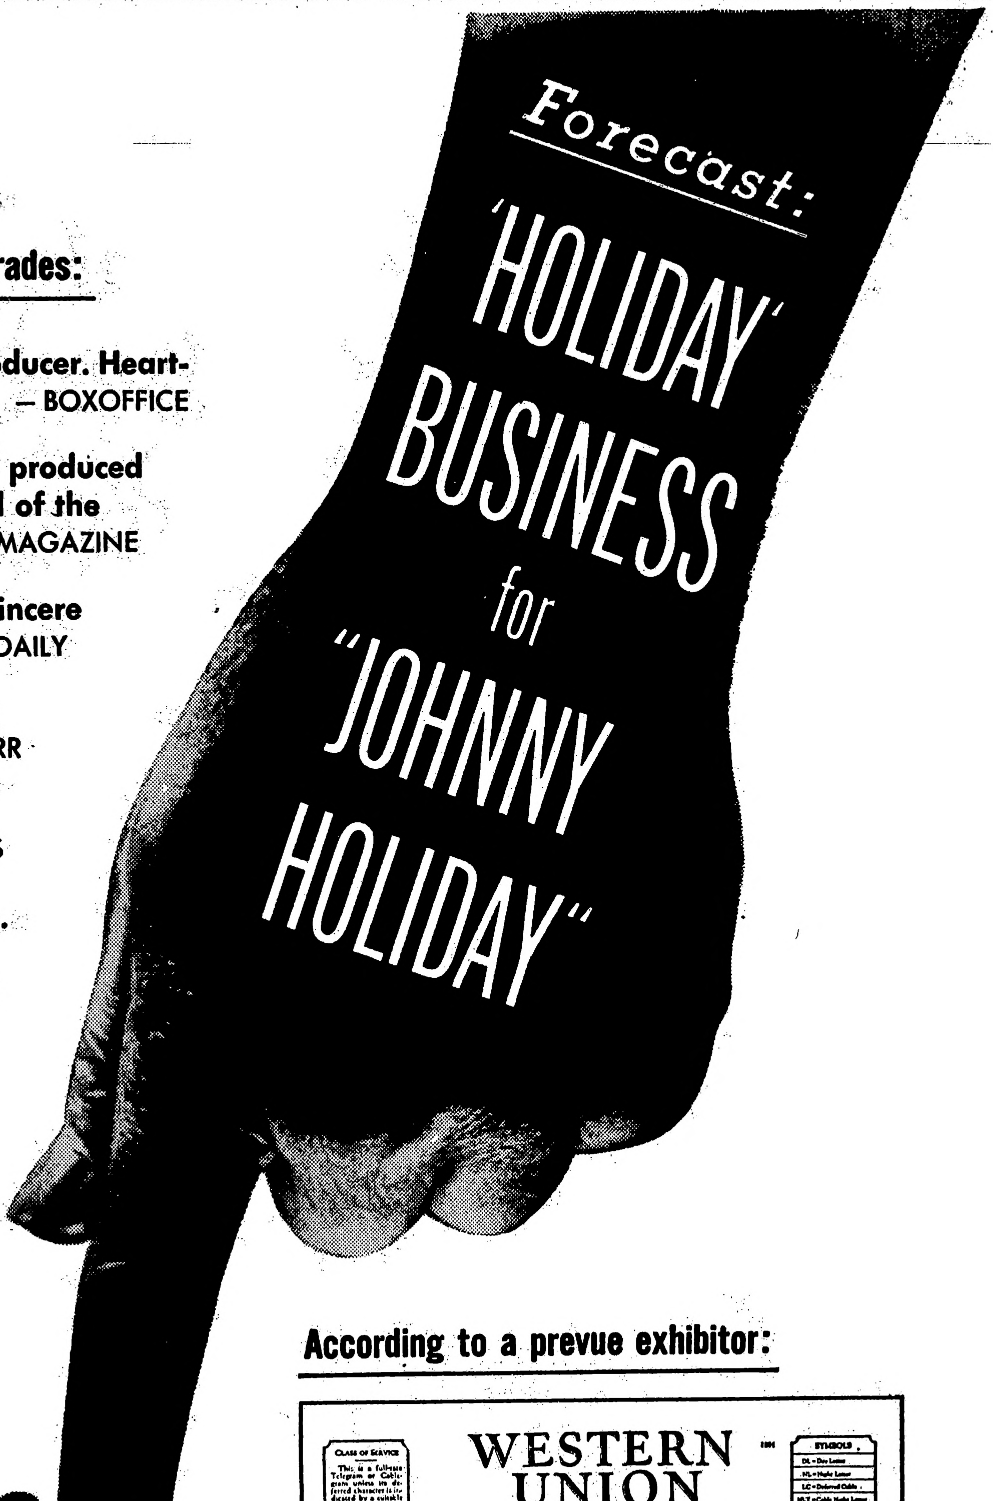
theatre. In addition, he said, the film outgrossed five of the six preceding films at the DuPont and four of the five which played the house subsequently — none of which was televised.

Opportunity to study TV's effect on the boxoffice was even better in New York, the distrib said. "Barbara" played the Trans-Lux 85th Street at the same time it was aired on WPIX, and yet did average business. Film subsequently played the Normandie theatre in Manhattan, racking up another three good days' business. Film also ran for two weeks in Boston after it was televised and a week in both Cincinnati and Dayton, in neither of which city was it found that televising it in advance hurt the gross.

Ellis, who was associated with RKO's sales department for 18 years and served as a district manager for United Artists for five years before entering indie distribution, has his own reasons why TV has not hurt the grosses of his films. Chief among these is the fact that even in N. Y., with its 1,050,000 video receivers, the number that will probably be tuned into one channel at the time it is airing a particular picture is too few to mean much at the boxoffice. But even when video set circulation increases to the point where a single station can draw a top-heavy audience, there will still be enough people wanting to see a film to support it on both TV and at a theatre, he believes.



Forecast: 'HOLIDAY' BUSINESS for "JOHNNY HOLIDAY"

According to the columnists and the trades:

Extension of Coal Emergency Not Expected to Close N.Y. State Theatres

Albany, Feb. 28.

Extension of emergency measures by State Coal Administrator Bertram D. Tallamy, made necessary by the continued softcoal strike, is not expected to force a directive from him for the closing of theatres. Only an unforeseen development would bring such action.

Tallamy was reported satisfied with the report given him by a five-man committee, representing 1,250 theatres in the state, that 87% of them burn oil and 13% commercial heat—a byproduct of coal burned in generating electricity—or anthracite coal.

The conference with Tallamy, who is state superintendent of public works and who is acting in the coal crisis under sweeping powers granted by the legislature to Governor Thomas E. Dewey, probably averted an official command to shut down theatres. They had been given the lowest priority and preference status, with grills, dancehalls, skating rinks and other places of amusement in the first order issued (16) by Tallamy for the rationing of soft coal.

The cooperation of theatres, metropolitan and upstate, in the brownout order, effective Feb. 18, has been complete. From the outset, theatres observed to the letter the decree limiting marquee lighting to 200 watts. They did so though the major part of theatre business is done in the evening and the darkening of their fronts is psychologically bad for patronage. Exhibitors say the brownout, particularly, affects attendance by unaccompanied women.

The committee, which huddled with Tallamy, had no spokesman. It consisted of Joseph R. Vogel, v.p. of Loew's.; Harry Brandt, head of Brandt Theatres, and Brock Pemberton, president of the League of New York Theatres; Robert Dowling, president of City Investing Co., and Benjamin Fielding, former New York City license commissioner and now an executive of Loew's, Inc.

Theatre executives told Tallamy that if it became necessary, temperatures could be reduced. They also stated that playhouses stocking coal would turn it over to top priority consumers — hospitals, homes for the aged, municipal water works, sewage systems and processing plants — should the shuttering of theatres for some reason become imperative.

James F. Reilly, secretary of the League of Theatres, protested against the "careless grouping" of theatres with taverns, bowling alleys and skating rinks. Tallamy's assistant, Holden Evans, said: "We had no idea of placing theatres in the same category with grills, so far as the respective contributions of both are concerned. On a purely cultural basis, legitimate theatres would have a place near the top. In this emergency, however, we have to place public welfare first and to keep operating institutions and enterprises necessary to people living and eating."

The Governor denied a midnight curfew would be ordered for taverns, but indicated some restrictions might be necessary later. There is said to be no shortage of oil. In fact, before the softcoal crisis became acute, oil consumption in the state was running five or six % below normal. The mild winter was believed to be a reason for this.

Gertie Lawrence

Hammerstein, however, are believed to have the inside track. Miss Lawrence, flanked by her attorney-personal adviser, Fanny Holtzman, has been talking the deal during the past few days, and she has expressed a desire to do the show for R&H, who may also produce it.

The whole setup is expected to be ironed out this week. Marty Jurow of the William Morris agency is handling details for both Miss Landon and Miss Lawrence.

Both Miss Dunne and Harrison had been mentioned for the leads. Harrison is still considered a strong possibility for the male lead.

"Anna" presumably would reach the boards next winter.

3 DISTRIBS SCORE AGAINST KY. EXHIB

Lexington, Ky., Feb. 28.

Columbia, United Artists and Universal have won orders here from the Federal district court requiring Price Coomer, operator of the New Harlan theatre, Harlan, Ky., to throw open his books to the three distribs. Coomer is defendant in percentage-chiselling suits brought by these majors.

Court also refused to dismiss the actions for lack of jurisdiction or to compel the distribs to file further particulars on their claims.

Miami Meet

Picture Assn. of America's committee for renegotiation of the $17,000,000 British agreement. They'll be accompanied to Britain by Ellis G. Arnall and James A. Mulvey of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers.

Committee was faced with new and unexpected problems as result of the narrowness of Labor's victory in last week's election. Government is extremely shaky, which means there will undoubtedly be another ballot in coming months. Question facing the Yank filmites is when, under such circumstances, it would be most advantageous to go to London.

Thinking at the Miami Beach confab is understood not to have been completely crystallized. As far as can be ascertained, however, out of the hush-hush that surrounded the session, idea is to start negotiations as quickly as possible after the Labor government has reorganized itself. That probably means some time between March 26 and April 15.

Matter of Timing

There's no use going before that time, since the government will be under terrific pressures in the present state of things. On the other hand, its greatest strength will be during the early part of its tenure. As time goes on and more Parliamentary issues come up, dissension with the Conservatives will increase and the government may get shakier.

Question for the Yank filmites then becomes whether it is advantageous to deal with the government while it is still relatively strong or after its position has been weakened. Masterminding at Miami Beach is understood to have been along the line that more favorable terms would be obtainable from a stronger government.

Thought is that as the Labor party's Parliamentary position deteriorates, it will have to be increasingly conciliatory to various British factions. This means particularly the labor vote. And film labor, led by Tom O'Brien, member of Parliament and topper of the National Association of Kine Theatrical Employes, has been rough in its attitude on the U. S. pact.

One of the proposals sure to come up from the British negotiators is the direct tie in of frozen American coin with financing of English producers. Labor pressure is for such a compromise and the Yanks want to avoid it. The sooner the talks, the better chance of heading this off, it is thought.

Confabs in Miami Beach, however, were in no way final. Conclusive decisions will have to be made at a full-dress meeting of the MPAA member company prexies, at which the Miami Beach recommendations will be considered. SIMPP must also be consulted and agree to the date.

Also, of course, the British will have to agree. Reports from London yesterday were that no decision as to a date had been made there. Apparently one area of doubt is removed for the Americans in that London has it that Harold Wilson will again show up in the new cabinet as president of the Board of Trade. B. of T. prexy comprises the chief British negotiator.

Johnston and O'Hara flew to Washington from Miami Beach today (Tues.). The company prexies who met with them are continuing Florida vacations.

Still After 'Pinky'

Mobile, Feb. 28.

The Martin chain, Talladega, Ala., has been requested not to show the controversial "Pinky." Request came from Chief of Police Willis Dean of Talladega.

Dean said the opinion of most of those with whom he talked was that it would be inadvisable to show the picture, which deals with Negro-white relationships in a small southern city. Picture had been booked for March 1-3.

'Stromboli' Ban

wise in most spots, incidentally, has led to a great tapering-off of the widespread campaigns by religious and civic groups against playing it.

Among the ordinances that RKO plans to fight is one in Nashville, passed Feb. 11, which creates a board of censors. It instructs the board specifically to ban films "which the board may determine . . to have been produced or directed by, or in which there appears any person who has gained by his or her personal conduct a reputation of laxity in morals or conduct or for loose and immoral living and conduct."

Court Nixes Ban

Seattle, Feb. 28.

When Acting Mayor David Levine, backed by a 5-1 vote of the city council, nixed showing of "Stromboli" here, he acted beyond his legal powers. So decreed Judge James Hodson in superior court, when a temporary injunction was granted RKO last Thursday (23). The city counsel agreed to make the injunction permanent.

The film had been given the greenlight by the censorship board. Then Levine and the council acted, due to many protests, they said.

The legal point at issue was whether any official has a right to ban a poem, book, film or musical composition in itself not offensive or objectionable, because of the character of the person or persons producing it.

The ordinance under which Levine acted, said the judge, specifically referred to the moral character of any picture and not to personal morals of any persons connected with its production.

The Judge asked Mayor Levine: "Where in the law does it say a public official may use such discretion? It sounds like echoes of a police state to me." Declaring the situation an astonishing one for a democracy, he added: "Why do you suppose we have objective laws in this country?"

Weak in Pitt.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 28.

It was pretty obvious here that "Stromboli" was strictly a one-week bloom. Opening here at Stanley on Saturday (25), 10 days after nationwide simultaneous release of Rossellini-Bergman picture, it got away to a limp start, doing only around $3,000, which is very ordinary at 3,800-seat WB deluxer, and at that figure doesn't look to do more than sluggish $14,000.

Front-page publicity of film kept coming right up to its opening when council of suburban borough of Wilkinsburg voted unanimously to ban "Stromboli" from the several theatres in that community. Wilkinsburg has more churches per capita than any town in Pennsylvania and is frequently referred to as "The Holy City."

Philly Presbytery's Rap

Philadelphia, Feb, 28.

A resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, largest in the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., called upon its members and Christians everywhere to refrain from patronizing "Stromboli."

Admitting that none is without sin and that "Christians should emulate their Lord in the exercise of mercy," the resolution held that "when seekers after profit would capitalize on such betrayal of the sanctity of marriage, it needs to be branded for what it is—adultery of the most flamboyant kind."

"Stromboli, after terrific opening at the Goldman, failed to win attendance. It winds up today after a brief (for the Goldman) two-week run.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (654; 44-80)—"Foolish Heart" (RKO) (6th wk). Steady $5,000 after $5,200 last week.

SCTOA's Al Fresco Panel On Industry Problems

Los Angeles, Feb. 28.

Southern California Theatre Owners Assn. is inviting all exhibitors—whether members or not—to sit in on a series of panel discussions to be held here March 28. Meeting's agenda calls for an analysis of such vital topics as taxation, legislation, how to combat audience apathy, effect of TV on the b.o., and sundry other posers.

Besides the roundtable probe, Sherrill Corwin, first veepee of TOA, will also report on latest TOA development following the organization's March 1-2 meetings. In addition, SCTOA counsel Ezra E. Stern will dissect latest legal developments which are likely to affect theatremen.

Snow Fails to Hobble Cincy; 'Key' Big $16,000, 'Ambush' OK at $13,000

Cincinnati, Feb. 28.

Downtown trade is maintaining above-average pace in face of weekend traffic hurt by season's first snowfall here. "Key to City" is fatso and leading three other firstruns in larger houses, "Ambush," "Chain Lightning" and "Outside the Wall." Holdovers of "Malaya" and "Willie Comes Marching Home" are both sturdy.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 55-75)—"Chain Lightning" (WB). Fairish $11,000. Last week, "Montana" (WB), $10,000.

Keith's (Mid-States) (1,542; 55-75)—"Malaya" (M-G) (2d wk). Holding strong at $10,000 on heels of smash $14,500 preem, theatre's best in months.

Lyric (RKO) (1,400; 55-75)—"Stromboli" (RKO) (m.o.). Nosedived and replaced after fourth day by "Desert Command" (Indie) and "Burma Convoy" (Indie) (reissues). Light $4,000 outlook for week. Last week, "Guilty of Treason" (EL) (m.o.), $5,000.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 55-75)—"Ambush" (M-G). All right $13,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO), $14,000.

Shubert (Mid-States) (2,100; 55-75)—"Outside the Wall" (U). Good $7,000. Last week, "Stormy Weather" (20th) (reissue), tame $4,000.

'KEY' WELCOME 15G, K.C.; 'BORDERLINE' 12G

Kansas City, Feb. 28.

Week's best here continues to be "Samson and Delilah" held over at Paramount with $1.20 roadshow scale, pace being only slightly off from first week. Missouri with vaude and "Tell To Judge" is sturdy. "Key To City" at the Midland is best new straight-filmer with healthy session.

Estimates for This Week

Kimo (Dickinson) (550; 45-65)—"My Foolish Heart" (RKO) (3d wk). Continues in this little house, after two weeks day-and-date with Avenue last week. Good $2,400. Last week, including three days at Avenue (800 seats), $4,200.

Midland (Loew's (3,500; 45-65)—"Key To City" (M-G) and "Challenge To Lassie" (M-G). Welcome $15,000. Last week, "Mrs. Mike" (UA) and "Daring Caballero" (UA), dull $11,500.

Missouri (RKO) (2,650; 55-75)—"Tell To Judge" (Col) with Palace-type vaude bill onstage. Big $16,000. Last week, "Eiffel Tower" (RKO) and "Black Shadows" (EL), so-so $9,000.

Orpheum (Fox Midwest) (1,912; 55-75)—"Red Shoes" (EL) (2d dk). Moderate $9,000. Last week, satisfactory $12,000.

Paramount (United Par) (1,900; 75-$1.20)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (2d wk). Holding near last week's giant returns with great $21,000. Last week, smash $26,000.

Tower - Uptown - Fairway (Fox Midwest) (2,100, 2,043, 700; 45-65) —"Borderline" (U). Only average $12,000. Last week, "Willie Comes Marching home" (20th), $13,000.

TORONTO

Smash $19,000. Last week, "Woman in Hiding" (U), okay $12,000.

Hyland (Rank) (1,500; 50-70)—"Chiltern Hundreds" (EL) (10th wk). Fine $4,000 after last week's $4,500.

Imperial (FP) (3,373; 40-70)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th) (2d wk). Great $18,000 after last week's $20,000.

Loew's (Loew) (2,096; 40-70)—"East Side, West Side" (M-G). Big $11,000. Last week, "Battleground" (M-G) (2d wk), $7,500.

Nortown, University (FP) (959; 1,556; 40-70)—"Jolson Sings Again" (Col) (5th wk). Fine $10,000, being first week at former. Last week, Norwood had "King's Men" (Col) (3d wk) at oke $11,000.

Uptown (Loew) (2,743; 40-70)—"Intruder in Dust" (M-G). Fair $7,500. Last week, "Kid From Texas" (U) (2d wk), $3,500.

Want-to-See Habit

his girl or ma and pa and the kids are no longer just taking off for their local theatre as a random method of entertainment. They're going only during those periods when they have extra leisure, as a holiday treat or when there's a special picture that they very much want to see.

The tremendous success of films in America has been, of course, that they became an institution, the most popular and accepted form of mass entertainment. With somewhere around 75,000,000 admissions a week still being paid, pictures without a doubt continue to be the nation's basic amusement medium. But there can also be no doubt that they are losing ground. Finding the key to meet that threat is seen as the great problem of the moment.

Television—of Course

Why they've lost ground brings up a variety of considerations. One reason certainly is the competitive pressure of other forms of entertainment. Television is the first in everyone's mind along this line and probably rightly so. Figures compiled by Paramount researchers over the past four years and cited in VARIETY last week show that ownership of a TV set knocks family attendance off by 20% to 30%. Importance of those figures as set sales zoom cannot be overlooked.

The admission price structure is still another factor for consideration. When "going to the movies" becomes something special, it is undoubtedly at least partly a reflection of increasing caution in expenditure. The family is saving its pennies or just doesn't have them to spend.

That raises the question of whether bringing down prices would increase attendance. It no doubt would prove some stimulant, but most theatres that have experimented along this line have discovered that the increase in the number of patrons isn't sufficient to compensate for the loss in per-ticket income.

Prices and Quality Pix

The cost structure in both exhibition and production are now both so high that it just isn't feasible to make admission price reductions large enough so that they might really make a difference. A nickel or a dime seems to have insufficient effect, although there's hope that a reduction in the 20% entertainment tax might help.

Quality of product is still another item getting attention. Better pictures obviously would provide some answer to the b.o. riddle, but there's a lot more to the public apathy than that. There are plenty of pretty good pictures which are doing relatively little biz.

Furthermore, a study of releases during the past six months shows product to be as good or better than it ever was. But the things that have attracted audiences in the past have lost their hold. Public taste has undoubtedly been improved and demands are higher—especially when there's so much competition from other entertainment forms.

Lack of a new crop of strong stars is another point that keeps coming up in consideration of the b.o. The number of old reliables is getting too old and too unreliable. Are the majors doing enough to create a new group and has public taste or circumstance changed so that the star system will never regain its former importance are two questions in every thinking industryite's mind.

Ballyhoo

Is film advertising doing its job is still another item under the microscope. As has been suggested, perhaps there's too much Johnny One-Note emphasis on sex and sadism in the ad copy. Test campaigns almost invariably prove that those are the themes that pull best, but some execs are questioning whether sufficient imagination is being used in finding alternates.

Industry public relations, primarily as highlighted in scandals surrounding private lives of stars, is likewise a point for questioning as it affects the b.o. General feeling is that this type of publicity—viz., the business done by "Stromboli"—helps more than it hurts, although the cumulative effect on the "lost audience" may be greater than believed.

The "lost audience" is that segment of the population over 30 years old that attends films very infrequently. How to make regular theatregoers out of these people is, of course, another important point in any consideration for increasing the b.o.

All of these factors—and perhaps plenty more—are likely to come up for discussion at the showmanship meeting of 200 exhibs called by 20th-Fox in Chicago March 8 and 9. Industry execs are hoping that some wide-open talk there may provide a few answers to the problem—if there are any.

Metro's Maneuvers

longer stay with the Supreme Court.

Metro intends to challenge Section 4 of the decree covering both divorcement and divestiture, affidavit of J. Robert Rubin, company's veepee and general counsel, declared. Apparently, it will not attack the selling provisions of the decree.

Preparation of a plan of divorcement in itself would be a "complex, costly, and time-consuming" stint, Rubin said. As an instance, he noted that Metro has a funded debt of $46,000,000 held by eight insurance companies. This debt covers all the company's integrated holdings in the fields of production, distribution and exhibition. To divide the company into two units would therefore require extensive negotiations with these insurance outfits, Rubin added.

EXPECT 1,000 AT 14TH VARIETY CONVENTION

Dallas.

Approximately 1,000 visitors from out-of-town tents are expected here from the 14th annual Variety International Convention to be held in New Orleans, April 26-29. Advance registrations, since the first announcement of convention three weeks ago, have gone over 300, indicating that past records for attendance will be broken this year. It's also the biggest advance since the 1940 meet here.

Only registrations being accepted are those accompanied by the registration fee of $35 for members and $15 for femmes.

Albany Tent Fetes Ullman

Albany.

A large contingent of filmites, headed by Si Fabian, are scheduled to arrive here Friday (3) to attend the dinner honoring Saul J. Ullman, retiring chief barker of Albany's Variety Club. On hand to fete Ullman will be Ted O'Shea, Al Schwalberg, Charles Reagan, John O'Connor, Norman Ayres, Irving Wormser, Al Lichtman, Charles Boesberg, Leon Bamberger, Joe Bernhart, Grad Sears, Bill Heineman, George Skouras, Abe Dickstein, Nate Nathanson and Sid Deneau.

Other toppers in attendance will be Ted Gamble, Robert Coine, Eric Johnston and Gael Sullivan. Charles Smakowitz, Warner Bros. zone manager, and Leo Rosen, replacing Ullman as chief barker, are jointly chairmaning the dinner.

awaiting delivery. Now RCA, Paramount, General Precision Labs and Skiatron have all filed to appear at the hearings, signifying that when and if the FCC gives the go-ahead, the equipment will be forthcoming.

Behind the industry's interest, of course, is the lure held out by large-screen video in the way of increased grosses. While not enough theatres yet possess the equipment to form the requisite theatre TV circuit, it has long been argued that the gross potential of such a circuit for a single event would be enough to provide the best in either entertainment or sports programming on an exclusive basis. Thus, the theatres see in large-screen video a lucrative ally eventually to their standard film exhibition.

Also among the list of participants at the hearings are some of the major film companies. While the Motion Picture Assn. of America will appear as a group, Metro, 20th-Fox and Paramount have filed to testify individually. That would mean, consequently, that the other companies are still straddling the video fence, either refusing to see it as a threat or nixing theatre TV as the best answer to that threat. Exhibs, on the other hand, are showing the most interest in the projected new medium.

Exhibitor groups filing include the Theatre Owners of America, comprising 17 member circuits from all parts of the country; Fabian Theatres; United Paramount, including five subsidiary circuits; Publix Theatres of Scranton; Metropolitan Motion Picture Theatres Assn., and Allied States. In addition to the equipment manufacturers, the MPAA, 20th, M-G and Paramount, the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers and American Telephone & Telegraph will also testify. Participating also will be TV Broadcasters Assn., National Assn. of Broadcasters, American Guild of Variety Artists, National Bus Communications Institute and American Trucking Assn. FCC is expected to set a date for the hearings for late summer or early fall, which will determine whether special channels are to be set aside for theatre TV.

DOS-Korda

from releasing his version of "Earth" in the east while Korda is asking a ban against Selznick releasing both that pic and "The Third Man" in the western hemisphere. Litigation was uncorked several weeks back when the Britisher filed his Federal court suit via Frohlich as attorney.

In the course of the fruitless settlement negotiations of the past few weeks, Selznick had asked Korda for two weeks of retakes in "Earth" to be inserted in both the eastern and western versions. Korda disclaimed any necessity for the eastern pic and would not reshoot scenes for the western version without payment.

Edward J. Mannix, Metro production exec, and other industryites were listed as potential arbitrators in the distribution pact as well as Schenck, who headed the panel. When Schenck stepped out because of personal plans, the two disputants failed to agree on another filmite and put the matter to the court.

Dispute stems from an agreement under which Korda made "Third Man" and "Earth" with participation by Selznick. Pact provided that Korda was to take eastern hemisphere rights to Selznick's "Portrait of Jennie" and "Paradine Case" in exchange for handing DOS western rights to "Third Man" and "Earth." Britisher was also given services of Miss Jones, Joseph Cotten and Alida Valli, three Selznick players.

Korda is apparently motivated by a feeling that the deal is unfair. He wants some cut in the U. S. business of his two films. His suit, now waiting results of arbitration, demands calling off the deal entirely and offers to pay for the thesping services of the Selznickites.

To back his demands, Korda asserts that Selznick refused to produce the "Jennie" negative in time. Added charge is that DOS failed to release funds from the British income of "Paradine" being held in escrow.

M-G SETTING BALLYHOO ON A FLOCK OF FILMS

Metro has drafted elaborate plans for a full swing to bally and exploit its upcoming product during the next four months. After a series of h.o. huddles now under way, Howard Dietz, M-G's ad-pub veepee, takes off for the Coast shortly to join William F. Rodgers, distribution chief, who is currently at the Culver City lot. Dietz, Rodgers, Dore Schary, Louis B. Mayer and other studio biggies will confab on final touches to the countrywide campaign.

Already on deck is a big Hollywood preem set for "Annie Get Your Gun" and special pre-release engagements in New York, San Francisco, St. Louis and Atlanta in April. Extensive tieups with manufacturers of femme western clothing and novelties are being negotiated.

For "Yellow Cab Man," company is sponsoring cross-country hack tour in conjunction with National Safety Council. Actress Bridget Carr will present awards in every city covered for safest driving. Mother-daughter contest is mapped to bally "Nancy Goes to Rio" with the payoff in the form of prize cruises. Preem of "The Duchess of Idaho" is slated for Boise with personal appearances of the cast, headed by Esther Williams, on tap. Prize contests in collab with Union Pacific railway will beat the drums for the pic.

Other Metro thespers to hit the road will be Richard Powell and June Allyson booked for Little Rock, where "The Reformer and the Redhead" opens. Joel McCrea shows up at Salt Lake City along with "Outriders." "Stars in My Crown" gets pre-release openings in Concord, N. H., Lancaster, Pa. and Richmond.

Wide merchandising campaigns are also in the works for "The Father of the Bride" in a tieup with Ralston-Purina products.

Other Majors' Pub-Admen Concede 20th's Ballyhoo Forum a Good Idea

Twentieth-Fox's plans for an exhibitor showmanship meeting, to promote more ballyhoo, is a good idea, according to ad-publicity chiefs of competing major companies, but none of them has a similar plan now in the works. In a survey among ad-pub execs, each concedes the necessity for more aggressive film merchandising because of the currently slumping boxoffice in most parts of the country.

Twentieth's meet, to which over 150 of the 200 exhibs invited have already signified their intentions of participating, is scheduled for Chicago March 8-9. In addition to kicking around ideas for more exploitation and ballyhoo, the company also is now working on a specific plan to achieve that purpose, which it will present to the exhibs. Top 20th execs, including Spyros P. Skouras, Al Lichtman, Andy W. Smith, Jr., and Charles Einfeld, will lead the discussions.

In addition to N. Y. Times film critic Bosley Crowther, Theatre Owners of America prez Sam Pinanski and National Allied prez Trueman Rembusch will also be guest speakers at the two-day meet.

Roundup of the other companies discloses they are going after more exhib merchandising via renewed emphasis on co-op advertising and by sending their field exploiteers out to huddle personally with exhibs in as many situations as possible. Paramount ad-pub chief Max Youngstein said he wished every company would hold some such meet as the upcoming 20th session but has no plans for Par at this time. He declared, however, that Par is extending its co-op promotion into the smaller situations, as well as the key city first runs, adding that recent tests have proved beyond a doubt that even a minimum of extra ballyhoo pays off in better grosses.

Under Par's co-op plan, the company will share ad-pub costs on a 50-50 basis with exhibs over what he termed a "fair house budget," which would vary with each situation. Youngstein said he has now 23 field men on his staff who are writing to exhibs or calling on them personally to help them sell Par product. "We're perfectly willing to spend a dollar to build the subsequent runs," he said.

Metro veepee Howard Dietz also agreed that the necessity is present for more aggressive selling. M-G, however, will go for co-op advertising only in the key cities. To push the plan into the smaller situations, Dietz said, would "run into too high a budget." Metro probably has the biggest staff of field exploiteers, with 30 now on the payroll.

Warners' ad-pub veepee Mort Blumenstock claimed his company is holding showmanship meetings with its own theatre groups all the time. He said WB will go in for co-op advertising "wherever feasible" and said the company now has a field exploitation man in each of its eight sales districts to help exhibs promote WB product.

area are giving all-out support to the new group which already has gained the affiliation of several disaffected UOPWA chapters. If filmite collarites step up their campaign to exit UOPWA, the CIO unit will step in to sign up as members as possible.

Rather than join any CIO unit, however, many film collarites are leaning towards Local H-63, white-collarite division of the International Alliance of Theatre Stage Employees. Sentiment is gaining for Local H-63 on grounds that the IATSE, which is solidly entrenched in the entertainment industry, can give support in contract negotiations.

NOW IT'LL READ: 'WHAT'S YOUR NIELSEN?' AS HOOPER TAKEOVER DEAL IS PACTED

C. E. Hooper and A. C. Nielsen last week came to terms on Nielsen taking over Hooper's radio and television network rating operations. Only routine remaining was for the stockholders of the two companies to affix their okays, which came in time for an official joint statement which was made yesterday (Tues.).

Both Hooper and Nielsen finally agreed on all details of the deal, which will find Hooper bowing out of the network picture, so that henceforth the air comics, who have parlayed the name of Hooper into a household word, will refer to the Nielsens. In addition to relinquishing the AM-TV network services to Nielsens, the Pacific ratings will also move over. Hooper is scheduled to change the name of his organization, continuing the city nose-counting for individual stations and putting increased emphasis on the sales effectiveness sphere of his operation.

The Hooper Pocketpieces radio ratings will revert to Nielsen, with the latter bringing them out. It's understood that the Hooper TV Pocketpiece will continue at least for several months, until Nielsen steps up that phase of his operation.

It's estimated that the delays encountered by A. C. Nielsen over the past several months due to the bottleneck on his audimeter production resulted in the researcher blowing a flat $1,000,000. This in turn, it's reported, resulted in the overall Nielsen operation (Food, Drug and Radio-TV Indexes), winding up '49 in the red.

Chief snafu was caused by faulty inspection of the new audimeters, resulting in constant shipments back to the Long Island factory. In turn, Nielsen lost out on good chunks of biz from potential subscribers because of the "old hat" overtones of his five-weeks-behind ratings.

Rushing Expansion

Amount of coin involved in the switchover is not known. Oddly enough, ABC-TV only last week subscribed to the Hooper service (NBC is already in), at an additional annual cost of $12,000. Nielsen takes over the account along with the other Hooper biz. CBS is expected to come in also on the national TV rating service.

Meanwhile, Nielsen is rushing expansion of his audimeter service in an effort to match the more speedy Hooper returns. The fact that he's been five weeks behind in ratings has been a deterrent in romancing agency advertiser biz.

Meanwhile, Nielsen has effected an administrative reshuffle, with J. P. Napier named exec veepee. He was founder and first president of A. C. Nielson Co. of Canada, Ltd., and is a director of the company. However, he'll concentrate on the Food and Drug Indexes. Arthur Nielsen, Jr., has been appointed to the post of administrative veepee. Previously he had been assistant to the president.

'Opry's' Alaska Junket

Nashville, Feb. 28.

WSM's Grand Ole Opry, headed by Roy Acuff and Hank Williams, will fly for the U. S. Air Force on March 19 to entertain troops at eight Alaskan bases. Group of 14 will be in the troupe for the two-week junket.

Opry performers made an air force hop to Europe last Christmas.

Key MBS Stations Accept Credit Plan

Mutual, in order to get more working capital, has reportedly got its stockholder stations to agree to take part of their income from web time sales in credit rather than cash. Affiliated stations get cash for carrying network commercials; but the stockholders, including WOR, N. Y., WGN, Chicago, Don Lee and Yankee Networks, are now letting MBS use their revenue from sponsored airers for programming and operations.

Policy, said to have been adopted at the recent MBS board meeting in Washington, is primarily a bookkeeping practice. Web operates on a deficit financing plan, object of which is not to make profit but to turn income into services to affiliates and stockholders. Under this setup, deficit has to be made up at the end of year by the stockholders. With the chain holding on to stockholder stations' web billings, it gives MBS use of the coin, part of which it would be given anyway at the end of the fiscal year. Stockholders, however, are paid for use of facilities and programs fed to the net.

Anahist's Checkout On 'Falcon' Tips Drug As a Seasonal Plug

Question of whether the antihistamines will take their business off the airwaves during the spring and summer is causing talk in the industry, with first sign of the new drugs getting out for the non-cold seasons being Anahist's decision to drop "The Falcon" on Mutual. Latter show, a low-budgeter, which Anahist picked up in January, has hit a 9.2, only stanza making a show against Jack Benny's ratings on CBS.

Webs have noted that new copy on the antihistamines has been slow in coming through, which may indicate the drug outfits are worried about possible federal or American Medical Assn. moves against their advertising slants, or a policy of suspending campaigns during warmer weather. On the other hand, field has been so competitive, with consumers asking for the drugs rather than for brand names, that some manufacturers may continue in broadcasting to establish their trade marks.

KLZ Promotion Manager

KLZ has long been noted for its promotional efforts . . by keeping a heavy accent on merchandising helps for clients plus audience promotion for KLZ—Denver's No. 1 Hooper Station.

Fred Allen Wants To Play Circuit Next Season, Too

Fred Allen returned from the Coast last week, after completing a cycle of guest shots on coast-to-coast shows which fetched him in the neighborhood of $5,000 to $7,500 per airing. (He also did a cuffo stint for Father Peyton's Mutual program—"and Jack Benny dug out of his vault a notation that I owed him a for-free shot.")

With Allen under contract to NBC for exclusive radio-TV services starting with the '50-'51 season, it looks fairly certain that the comedian will not commit himself to any longrange show, but will circuit the major TV airers as a guest performer. It's considered equally certain that he won't return to radio with a permanent program, although it's recognized that such a move would provide a considerable programming hypo for NBC. The network has practically given Allen carte blanche in naming his own time and night.

Meanwhile, practically every top agency in the business it pitching up video formats and program ideas for Allen's return in the fall. However, it's no trade secret that whatever idea Allen projects into TV will be his own. (That longstanding invitation for Allen to move into Benny's operation as chief idea man still holds.)

Allen has at least one more guest shot on the current season's agenda; that's for a repeat with Bing Crosby, when the latter comes to N. Y. in April.

AMA'S 'BEST YET' SERIES

American Medical Assn. is cutting a series of 13 recorded air shows, titled "The Best Is Yet to Be" (over the age of 45).

Martin Magden is producing.

WNEW's Ambitious Peace Series

Major figures in show business, the arts and political life will "speak their piece for peace" in a new public service project being launched by WNEW, N. Y., early next month. Series, to be aired for 52 weeks on Sundays at 5 p.m., will present persuasive VIPs, including Robert E. Sherwood, Helen Hayes, Carl Van Doren, Clifton Fadiman, Billy Rose, Carlos Romulo, Trygve Lie, Norman Cousins, Quentin Reynolds, Mrs. Wendell Willkie, Lillian Smith, Anne Petry, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., James P. Warburg and others.

Idea is to have business, labor, religious, entertainment and political leaders make simple 15-minute talks documenting the need for peace and outlining their personal philosophies of how it can be achieved. UN delegates and foreign statesmen such as Indian Prime Minister Nehru and French Prime Minister Bidault are also being invited, with UN Radio Division, Radiodiffusion Francaise and the British Broadcasting Corp. handling overseas arrangements.

Ted Cott, WNEW program veepee who is producing the series, says the indie will make platters available to other stations at cost. Program's message is so vital, station feels, that it will be promoted via full-page ads in N. Y. dailies and on-the-air plugs. Hy Zaret and Lou Singer, who composed WNEW's "Little Songs on Big Subjects," are writing a special jingle for "Peace." At-home listener discussion groups will also be organized.

Gabber Quits, Blasts WJW Skedding Horse Race Airer Next to Kids' Show

Cleveland, Feb. 28.

Walter Kay, six-year veteran, resigned from WJW following a Friday eve (24) rhubarb. Station wanted to begin Monday five-minute "call to post" sports stint in last five minutes of his long-standing half-hour 6:30 juvenile "Krusin Kays Korner." Signing off Friday's program, dedicated to Brotherhood Week, Kay announced the change, saying it would be "to allow broadcasts of horse race results, perhaps so that the bookies of Greater Cleveland can better determine their daily winnings. In spite of the possible threat to my position with this station, I should like to make public my opinion of placing such a broadcast next to a program designed for children."

Statement was followed by many protests, letters and phone calls, with Cleveland Press editorializing, "Kay acted with more courage than discretion in criticizing his employer, but he has performed an important public service. A lot of mothers are in his corner."

Kay had received notification of change earlier via office memo. Program Manager Charles Hunter denied reports that a beer sponsor was taking the five-minute sport sponsorship, saying that the time was the only spot available for evening sports program featuring race results. Kay is unsponsored.

Hullabaloo was climaxed Monday with Kay request that he be permitted to say in his 6:30 program his horse racing remark was not an offside crack, but was "of pure motive to question the propriety of placing such a broadcast next to a program designed for children." Kay gave station until 15 minutes before air time to accept request or else he'd resign. Station rejected Kay's offer and resignation followed.

Bartlett's Politico Bid

Atlanta, Feb. 28.

John Bartlett, former program director for WAGA, Local CBS outlet, and now operator of his own station at Quitman, Ga., is an announced candidate for the governorship of Georgia.

Bartlett, 34, has already done some political spadework in connection with his candidacy and plans to open his formal campaign April 8 in McRae, Ga., home of present Gov. Herman Talmadge.

Historical Series On Tap at CBS

CBS may soon produce its first elaborate "public service" series in the last couple of years. Program board is mulling a series of historical panorama broadcasts to be assigned Werner Michel, chief of the network's documentary unit. Latter has been inactive since last September.

Immediately prior to the decision to cancel the $150,000-a-year "School of the Air" in 1948, board chairman William S. Paley was on the point of okaying such a series as is now contemplated. It went to the point at that time of recording a number of sample scripts written by Arnold Perl.

Denove's V.P. Stripes

Jack Denove, Lucky Strike account exec, has won his veepee stripes at BBD&O.

Fred B. Manchee was elected exec veepee in charge of merchandising and marketing and Chet Oehler, research director of BBD&O's Chicago office, also got v.p. status.

COLE IN MPLS. POST

Minneapolis, Feb. 28.

M. John Cole has been appointed radio director of the Minneapolis office of Erwin-Wasey, supervising both AM and TV.

Illinois Stations Cut Wattage in Fuel Crisis And Eye FCC Reaction

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Keeping their fingers crossed on FCC reactions, radio and television stations in the state cut down their wattage Monday (27) to comply with the Illinois Commerce Commission order for a 25% reduction in electricity consumption because of the coal shortage. The order runs this week with the possibility of extension if the fuel emergency continues.

Most major stations have reduced their power the full 25%, figuring that non-transmitter cuts in juice use would have little effect. So under present plans most of the state's 50,000 watt stations are operating this week, at least, at 37,500 watts, FCC licenses notwithstanding. Smaller stations are attempting to avoid a full 25% power cut by savings in other departments.

Harold Safford, WLS program director and newly elected prexy of the Illinois Broadcasting Assn., spent a busy first day (24) in office, checking compliance of the order among broadcasters around the state and warning them to notify the FCC of their temporary power reduction.

NBC'S '15-MONTHS-AFTER' STORY

Four-Network January Business

(Estimated Gross Time Sales)

	1950	1949
CBS	$6,100,000	$5,850,000	+4
NBC	5,735,000	5,875,000	—2.5
ABC	3,600,000	4,070,000	—13
MBS	1,660,000	1,875,000	—10.5

CBS' 4% January Billings Increase Gives Web Head Start for '50 Laurels

Figures on January gross time sales for the four major networks give CBS a headlong start toward copping the No. 1 laurels for 1950. Columbia is the only network to show an increase (in this instance a substantial 4%) over the preceding January, whereas the other webs took a billings nosedive, with ABC coming up with a 13% minus.

Mutual was 10.5% under January of '49, with NBC 2.5% under.

CBS's $6,100,000 gross for January, in contrast to last year's $5,860,000, reflects the payoff accruing to Bill Paley & Co. in the wake of its top programming ascendancy. The CBS coin upbeat actually set in during '49, when the network closed out the year wiping out a $7,000,000 gap in billings in its competitive race with NBC.

ABC's 13% nosedive for the month is indicative of a situation that finds the network with only 50 minutes of sponsored time on Monday nights, 80 minutes on Tuesdays and 30 minutes on Saturdays (though the rest of the nights show a brighter picture). Mutual, on the other hand, has but 60 minutes of sponsored time Monday nights, 60 on Tuesday, 35 on Wednesday, 60 on Thursday, only 20 on Friday and 30 on Saturday. Sunday picks up with 135 network bankrolled minutes.

'Luigi' Bests Hope In New Nielsens

The new Nielsens released this week have brought to light one of the major upsets of the season. This involves Bob Hope's Tuesday night NBC show for Lever Bros and "Life With Luigi," the CBS-built package in the competing time segment.

Hope, who for more than a decade has had a permanent grasp on the top rating lists, is completely out of the Top 20 running in the latest Nielsens. On the other hand, "Luigi" has moved into the Top 20 picture, winding up in the No. 18 spot with a 16.4 tally.

This is in sharp contrast to the year-in-year-out "Tuesday story," when the Hope-Fibber & Molly NBC sequence ruled the rating roost, with CBS abandoning the competing Tuesday time slots to sustainers.

"Luigi" is sponsored by Wrigley Gum.

'Free Pass' Situation On Toscy-NBC Symph Tour Riling Web Affiliates

NBC affiliates have been registering some squawks with the network over the "free pass" situation in connection with the projected cross-country tour of Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

As some of the affiliates point out, they are called upon to go all out on promoting the tour involving out-of-the-station pocket expenses, but station personnel are required to buy their own tickets for the RCA-sponsored concerts.

On the other hand, they point out, there is ample supply of cuffo ducats for newspapers, while the stations, who are actually building up the Toscy appearance, are getting the go-by.

Ladies' Day

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

What started as a gag by Walter O'Keefe has blossomed into a full blown project for March 14 broadcast of "Double or Nothing." Complaining that he had little time to get his income tax in order, his wife, the former Roberta Robinson of N. Y. musicals, volunteered to do the show and give him the day off. The same from the fraus of Harry Spears, director, and Lou Crosby, announcer.

So the show to be taped March 10 will be a distaff version of the Campbell soup strip.

Soft-Pedal On Lever Tag Till New Line Is Set

The ad agencies and networks involved in Lever Bros. programming are in a quandary at the moment as to how far they can go, if at all, in publicizing and promoting the company in connection with its multiple programming.

On several occasions Lever Bros. execs have passed along the word to soft-pedal the Lever identification on shows, a move stemming from the present uncertainty as to future policy in the wake of Charles Luckman's exit as president of the company. It's no longer a secret that the Luckman technique of bigger and better headlines didn't rest too well with the parent Unilever hierarchy and was a contributing factor in his exiting the $300,000 a year post. Lever execs feel that until a policy for the future is formulated by whomever is chosen as the next prexy, it's the better part of wisdom to lie low.

Attitude of the Lever boys is to publicize the shows for all they're worth, but don't involve the company in any unsought notoriety.

AFRA'S TEST CASE ON 'STRAIGHT ARROW'

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

AFRA's complaint against McCann-Erickson agency, regarding "off the line" taping, comes up for hearing before the American Arbitration Assn. on March 7. Case involves "Straight Arrow," which is aired from here, for N. Y., every Thursday. Show is taped while being fed to N. Y. and played back locally.

AFRA claims that each actor is due to collect $18.25 per taping. McCann-Erickson claims actors get paid for the broadcast and have no further recourse. Mutual is defending the agency, according to AFRA and has guaranteed to make good the coin itself should McCann-Erickson lose the battle. Money involved at this point is more than $12,000.

Case is the most important AFRA has had in many years. Should the agency win, Guild's contracts with all networks, which call for repayment for delayed broadcast, would be negated.

CREATIVE FLAIR STILL MISSING

The new Nielsen ratings give CBS 17 out of the top 20 shows, for an alltime high audience payoff since Bill Paley set in motion Columbia's ascendancy into network supremacy 15 months ago by wooing Amos 'n' Andy over from NBC.

Equally revealing is the fact that NBC placed but two of its its programs—Judy Canova and Fibber McGee & Molly—in the Top 20 Honor Roll, while ABC is represented by one—Walter Winchell.

The fact, too, that CBS alone among the major networks started off 1950 with a 4% hike in gross billings for January (see adjoining box), while NBC took a 2.5% drop for the month, is generally interpreted as reflecting advertiser acceptance of Columbia's new sphere of influence and affluence.

Today, 15 months after the NBC vs. CBS reversal of position, the trade is asking: What has NBC actually accomplished in its bid to regain lost ground and reassert itself in the competitive network picture?

Runner-up Status

While NBC can boast of a succession of sales in recent months and considerably fewer half-hour time segments available, compared to CBS, no one questions the network's runner-up status today.

But of greater consequence to the industry in appraising the overall picture is the question: what safeguards is NBC taking, particularly in the realm of creative programming (since it's accepted that therein lies the ultimate payoff), in providing for the future?

Much has happened at NBC since the loss to CBS of such rating-pulling personalities as Jack Benny, Amos 'n' Andy, Red Skelton, Edgar Bergen, Horace Heidt, etc., (Plus Paley's acquisition of Bing Crosby and Groucho Marx from ABC). But practically the entire NBC counter-maneuvering thus far has been directed along administrative lines, patterning the network to the merchandising techniques of the parent RCA company and the Booz, Allen & Hamilton administrative blueprinters — a plan of attack that has brought non radioites into top echelon berths at the network.

But program-wise, it's conceded, NBC is no better off than it was a year ago. The creative flair that in the past few seasons has enabled CBS to project such house-built properties as "Talent Scouts," "My Friend Irma," "My Favorite Husband," "Life With Luigi," "Suspense" and "Crime Photographer" into prominent sponsorship payoff, has met with little or no competition from NBC.

To many, the inability thus far of NBC to come up with the type of a Sunday at 7 show that would suggest a creative attempt to make some inroads on the Jack Benny competition, represents defeat in the public eye.

The mere fact that "Christopher London," the present Sunday at 7 tenant, in moving up from a 1.8 to a 2.2, was the occasion for some congratulatory handshaking, is regarded as the tipoff of the current groping and willingness to settle for something less than the best.

REC EYES AD AGENCIES FOR NEW CHAIRMAN

Now that all four networks have had representation on the N. Y. Radio Executives Club dais with designation of REC chairmen, the organization is now eyeing the ad agencies for the new chairman in the upcoming elections.

John Karol, CBS radio sales manager, is the outgoing chairman. He was preceded by William Hedges, representing NBC; Robert Swezey (now WDSU, New Orleans), representing Mutual, and Murray Grabhorn, representing ABC.

Next Few Weeks Will Tell Whether Steel Makes $2,250,000 Radio Bowout

His Great Moment

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

An ousted ABC engineer on KECA had a 20-second chance to tell the world his opinion of the network Saturday (25) when he broke into sportcaster Harry Wismer's program to say: "We interrupt this broadcast to bring you a special announcement."

For the next 20 seconds, until chopped off the air, he assailed ABC for what he declared was mistreatment of its engineers. Tirade was heard only in local area as show was a taped one. ABC spokesmen later identified the voice as that of Roy Flock, temporary engineer, who had been given two weeks notice. ABC operates under union contract with NABET.

Hope, Lever Bros. In June Splitup? CBS-Paley's Cue

The Bob Hope-Lever Bros. situation is moving into the crucial stage, with indications that, come June and the end of the 39-week cycle, the comic and his sponsor will part company permanently. To the reports that are current that Lever is dropping Hope, the latter and his agent, Jimmy Saphier, say "t'aint so," but in the same breath Saphier admits that he asked the Unilever triumvirate, now running the U. S. operation pending a successor to Charles Luckman as prexy, to release Hope, but was turned down.

Hope's contract has four years to go, but the comic wants out because of Lever's refusal to let him tape his shows, plus a long series of wrangles dating back to the Luckman regime.

Meanwhile, with Hope opening today (Wed) at the N. Y. Paramount, it's understood that CBS board chairman Bill Paley plans to see a lot of the comedian. (On his next option pickup, Hope's package price goes to $25,000).

The new Nielsens are occasioning quite a bit of eyebrow-raising, with Hope completely out of the top 20 (see separate story), while the CBS Tuesday night opposition show, "Life With Luigi," is in the favored bracket.

GULF SPRAY PICKING UP LANNY ROSS MBS SHOW

Gulf-Spray, via Young & Rubicam, is picking up the tab for the Lanny Ross cross-the-board series on MBS starting in May. Show, which has been aired sustaining in the 12:15 p. m. slot, will get a New York outlet, via WOR. Sponsor is buying 350 stations for a 20-week run.

Mutual's recent billings upsurge boosted its January gross 25% over December. Included in the extra business were two shows bought by Anahist, Kellogg's "Mark Trail," Dairy-Rich's Radie Harris stanza and Ford's in-and-out campaign on 14 shows.

Jo Stafford to 'Club 15'; Evelyn Knight to Exit

Jo Stafford will replace Evelyn Knight on Campbell Soup's "Club 15," starting March 28. She'll be heard Tuesdays and Thursdays, with the Andrews Sisters keeping the other spots on the cross-the-board CBS strip.

Bob Crosby returns on March 27, vice Dick Haymes.

The next six or seven weeks will determine whether U. S. Steel will call it quits with radio and cancel out on its $2,250,000 a year time-and-talent investment on "Theatre Guild of the Air." Steel's board of directors has become Hooper-conscious, and no longer feels that the rating warrants that kind of an outlay.

The Guild's hour-long NBC Sunday night show is currently in its final cycle of the '49-'50 semester, and at the season's end Steel's five-year contract with the Guild expires. The present unhappiness of the directorate doesn't lie with the NBC Sunday 8:30 to 9:30 time, but rather with the conclusion that if five years on radio can't produce better than an 11.6 rating (even with such a name parlay as Ezio Pinza, Madeleine Carroll and Linday Darnell), then the time has come to reappraise radio as an effective medium for a big-league institutional advertiser.

The repercussions may be even more far-reaching. For, in contrast to U. S. Steel's previous willingness to talk in terms of a future in television, to-day, it's reported, the directorate of the corporation has even turned sour on embracing that medium.

In terms of NBC, the checkout will be an undeniable blow. The Guild dramatic stanza has given the network considerable prestige and one of its better programming attractions. Too, it would represent practically the last of the major institutional advertisers in radio who have nothing to sell direct to the consumer but the story of steel and free enterprise in America.

Feeling of U. S. Steel directors, in line with their Hooper-consciousness, would be softened if the situation in the remaining weeks would reverse itself and the bid for top-name attractions could command an audience. The Pinza-Carroll-Darnell "Goodby Again" showcase; the pacting of Kirk Douglas and Walter Huston for an adaptation of "Here Comes Mr. Jordan"; the upcoming Gertrude Lawrence starrer of "Lady in the Dark," are all part of last-minute, do-or-die bid to hit the bigtime Hoopers and keep U. S. Steel in the radio swim.

Borden Fades Out In 'County' Exit

"County Fair" is scheduled to wind up its CBS network run April 1, with Borden, via Kenyon & Eckhardt agency, giving the Saturday afternoon show the cancellation treatment.

Borden figures its purposes would best be served by concentrating on spots, with cancellation of "Fair" taking the company out of the network picture completely.

Borden originally served notice on CBS a few weeks ago, when it tried to line up Bob Hope for an

RWG Awarded $26,590 From Air Features For 8 Scripters' Back Pay

Radio Writers Guild has won $26,590 in back pay for eight scripters of Air Features. The coin represents pay retroactive to 1948, when the RWG, trying to get a contract with the agencies, got some sponsors, agencies and independent packagers (with about 75 shows on the air) to sign letters of adherence to the network pact.

Air Features, which said it would adhere to the network agreement on future freelance scripts, asked to hold off on payment until the agencies signed. Last December, however, the firm said it didn't want to wait any longer and that it would pay up. It interpreted the

EARL WILSON SHOW

With Wilson, Hal Tunis announcer
Writers-directors: Joe Horenstein, Joe Gottlieb, William Lowenstein
60 Mins.; Mon-through-Sat., 11 p.m.
TELE-KING
WINS, New York
(Leland K. Howe)

This week the trend to originations from Gotham eateries was stepped up with WMGM launching an audience participationer from the Hotel Victoria Rendezvous Room, WHOM prepping a Willie Bryant-Ray Carroll stint from Club Baby Grand in Harlem, and the Earl Wilson stanza from Monte's (ex-Glass Hat) in the Belmont-Plaza hotel. The New York Post syndicated columnist wrapped up a listenable airer that had some meaty copy.

Wilson's treatment was a verbalization of his daily pieces. He kidded other midnight gabbers by saying that his show, unlike the rest, has a format, and he inserted segments such as "In One Ear and Out My Microphone," "Reading from the Papers," etc., with a good deal of typically Broadway cracks. Some of this was on the pun or corn level, but much was genuinely witty, as when he spoofed excessive use of guests by creating a "guest word" department to uncork a new word on each broadcast.

Wilson's voice is high, but this doesn't detract from the content and the gabber ribbed himself with Tallulah Bankhead's quip, "Have you ever been mistaken on the phone for a man"? However, a more relaxed, ad lib approach would help and be more in keeping with the quieter 11 p.m. mood of most listeners. Advantages of a conversational style, rather than a scripty handling, was pointed up by the difference between his wife's reading of her magazine article in Ladies Home Journal and her informal tete-a-tete with her writer-hubby.

On the opener Monday (27) the stress was mostly on gab, with only a half-dozen disks during the hour, all well selected. Monte's had a bevy of celebs and almost every p.a. on hand for the preem. Kirk Douglas, Miss Betty Henderson, Peter Lind Hayes and Wilson's agent Dan Hollywood of the Frank Cooper office, were among those interviewed. Chats were brief, pointed and had a fairly good balance between trade and general interest, although the scales were tipped a bit in the trade direction.

Wilson announced on the air that because of his 2 a.m. deadline for the Post he would only be able to do the show for one week. However, his impact was so good he may (and should) change his mind.

THE QUIET ANSWER

With Fahey Flynn, narrator; Skee Wolff, Dave Moore, Sam Siegal, others
Producer-director-writer: Wolff
30 Mins.; Tues. (21), 8:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WBBM, Chicago

This thoughfully conceived documentary prepared as WBBM's contribution to Brotherhood Week was a successful piece of work as a public service. As unpretentious as its title, "The Quiet Answer," in a series of taped reports on racial and religious relations in Chicago and other parts of the country, had a strong cumulative impact.

The theme of the show was a group of questions about American race problems phrased in the words of Soviet writer Ilya Ehrenburg. The questions asked by Sam Siegal in the name of Ehrenburg were refuted by taped interviews gathered by Dave Moore, WBBM-CBS director of public relations.

The answers came from two Chicago employers who have a non-discriminatory hiring policies; a labor official of a union encompassing many minority groups; a group of school kids in which an Anglo-American lad is the minority, and Gov. Youngrahl of Minnesota, who ended by decree, discrimination in his state's national guard.

Sincerely narrated by Fahey Flynn and ably written by Skee Wolff, "The Quiet Answer," without mounting a soapbox, showed the progress in human relations that has been made, what is still to be made and effectively knocked down the straw man behind the Iron Curtain.

The transcribed documentary was carried by most major stations in the area during Brotherhood Week. With its enterprise and imagination, the program could well be the prototype of a series of such shows by Chi stations.

NEXT WEEK IN NEW YORK

With Bert Bacharach, Hy Gardner, emcees; Sam Levenson, Lisa Kirk, Ed "Strangler" Lewis, Josh White, Bob Hope, guests
Producer-director: Bob Greiner
30 Mins.; Sun., 12 (noon)
Participating
ABC, from New York

Bert Bacharach, associate editor of Collier's, and publicist-columnist Hy Gardner have worked out a neat program idea which benefits all concerned in their new ABC half-hour airer, "Next Week in New York." A preview of what's going on in Gotham in the upcoming week, the show brings in a flock of celebs for capsule interviews, some of which are transcribed.

In their discourses with the guests, Bacharach and Gardner follow the usual procedure of getting the interviewees to discuss their pre-showbiz backgrounds, how and why they took up a theatrical career and understandably toss in a reference to the spot where the artists are soon to open.

Wisely, B. & G. don't press the guests with too many questions and, for the most part, hand 'em a free rein to give out with samples of their talent. On Sunday's broadcast (26), comic Sam Levenson contribbed some of his humor, songstress Lisa Kirk warbled a "Kiss Me Kate" ditty and folk singer Josh White also did a number.

Best sequence was Gardner's talk with Bob Hope who moves into the N. Y. Paramount today (Wed.). In fine fettle, the comic explained how he was going to cope with box-lunch patrons who make it a practice to stay all day in the house to catch several shows. As a change of pace to the bright light glamour, B. & G. introed ex-mat star Ed "Strangler" Lewis who's now giving series of juvenile delinquency talks.

Withal, the entertainment values of "Next Week" obviously are linked to the quality of whatever talent may be opening in the next seven-day stretch. While the over-all stanza is somewhat rambling, Bacharach and Gardner tie it up fairly well. Several plugs for a clothing firm and a TV set manufacturer were woven in the continuity.

STARS ON BROADWAY

With Radie Harris; Jack Benny, guest
Writer: Miss Harris
15 Mins.; Sat., 5:30 p.m.
DARI-RICH
MBS, from New York
(Sorensen)

Dari-Rich, which had backed her "Stars Over Hollywood," is now sponsoring a "Stars on Broadway" with Radie Harris. The gabber covers both the Main Stem and the Coast, with the emphasis on the latter and she does an over-all informative job. Initial stanza Saturday (25) included a good quota of news that had fan interest and some trade angles. Items concerned Rossellini, Bergman, Judy Garland, Peter Lawford and Elliott Roosevelt, with the major portion of the airer given over to a hep transcribed interview with Jack Benny.

Benny chatted about his teevee plans (no tele for some time and then only once a month), his bringing his 15-year-old daughter Joan into his AM show next fall and a practical joke he played on George Burns and Gracie Allen in London, with Jane Wyman's help. Benny's informal, informative palaver gave the broadcast strong appeal.

Mary Martin was announced as this week's guest (4).

SURPRISE PACKAGE

With Jay Stewart, emcee; guests
Producer: Harfield Weedin
Writer: Vance Colvig
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 4 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC, from Hollywood

Surprise package is a fast-moving audience participationer that has been on ABC's Pacific web for two years and is now being networked. Although it's strictly for the house spouse relaxing from her chores, it avoids the pitfalls of most stanzas in the same genre by reason of varying its stunts and patterns. One portion consisted of having the femmes identify the contents of a mystery package from a series of eight clues, with the value of the prize diminishing from $50 to $1 as more hints were needed. Another had two women compete to identify air comics from snatches of their dialog. A third segment, which carries over for a week, has women relate the story of their first kiss and why it was memorable. Another stunt, one of the more interesting items,

PRINCE CHARMING

With Mort Lawrence; Jim O'Dea, Announcer
Producer: Robert A. Bories
Director: Les Persky
30 Mins.; Mon.-Fri., 12:30 p. m.
Participating
WMGM, from N. Y.

Formerly a WOR entry, "Prince Charming" has switched over to WMGM for a half-hour cross-the-board airing. Show broadcast from the Rendezvous Room of the Hotel Victoria, N. Y., has a human interest angle that probably hits home with the housewives. Following an audience participation format, program has five married gals on stage each session to laud the fined attributes of their hubbies. The one who proffers the story best liked by a board of judges, a quintet of hausfraus chosen from the audience, wins a jackpot giveaway in addition to a second honeymoon.

"Prince Charming" on the preem show, was a guy whose outstanding virtue dated back to his youth when he practically supported his entire family. Some of the noble discourses offered by the wives are a little hard to digest and for the most part don't seem to qualify their lesser halves as being any special kind of animal. Losers and judges are all solaced with take home gifts. Listeners are also given a chance to get into the act by sending in letters patterned along the same lines as the gab delivered by the contestants on the show.

An informal air is created via the background chattering of the Rendezvous room lunchers with noise being particularly evident during the commercials. Proceedings are affably handled by Mort Lawrence who has no trouble in getting the gals started on their spiels, but occasionally finds it difficult to make them stop. The varied product plugs come off okay.

THE SEEDLING

With Robert Montgomery, narrator; James Stephens, Joan Tompkins, Mason Adams, James van Dyke, Guy Repp, Cecile Roy; Frank Gallop, announcer
Producer-director: Jack Lloyd
Writer: Ernest Kinoy
15 Mins.; Sat. (25), 5:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WNBC, N. Y.

WNBC, N. Y., combining with the National Conference of Christians and Jews to do a special program for Brotherhood Week, came up with a fine, warming quarter-hour Saturday (25). Program was a little different from the usual run of such airers, not over-dramatic but full of bite, in a simple, effective little lesson in tolerance.

Program discussed a baby foundling left on a hospital doorstep, and followed it briefly into three roads in the future it might have trod. In one, the child had grown to young manhood, to be barred from a medical school by quotas, because of his religion. In another phase, he had become a hoodlum, overturning tombstones of "foreigners" in cemeteries because they hadn't been born in America. In the third version, he was a young man running into segregation problems in residential sections.

Point of the airer was that as a baby, the foundling or seedling was the raw product of life, intolerant, gentle, peaceful or wicked, as the case might be. If he went one way or another, good or bad, it was the rest of us who had guided him, for he was born without prejudice. Airer was presented by a fine cast of actors, with Robert Montgomery most effective in his quiet way as narrator. Script had good dialog, in punchy colloquial narrative. Excellent sound effects accompanied it. And Jack Lloyd's direction had authority.

GF'S $30,000,000 RESHUFFLE

Chi Foreign Stations See Audience Dryup in Time; Hypo Negro Pitch

Chicago, Feb. 28.

With an eye to the slow erosion by assimination of the foreign language audience, Chi specialized audience radio stations are increasing their pitch to the large Negro population in the city. Although there has been no marked falling off to date of the foreign language market, either listener-wise or sponsor-wise, foreign language execs are giving thought to the day when second and third generation loss of the language will cause the market to die a natural death.

The current arrival of displaced persons isn't felt to be enlarging the audience to any great degree. Not only are they considered too small in number to have much impact, but their general eagerness to become Americanized as quickly as possible negates the likelihood of their acceptance of specialized broadcasts, one programmer said.

The city's Polish population, estimated at 740,000, is the No. 1 foreign language group and as such receives the most attention from programmers and clients, with the German and Italian groups in second position, depending upon the location of the stations. Balance of shows are devoted Jewish, Swedish, Czech and Greek groups. No station reports a decrease in air time devoted to these seven markets; neither do they report an increase.

However, practically all the recent additions to specialized audience programming reported by outlets are being beamed at the growing Chi Negro population, estimated at about 450,000. The trend by sponsors toward this market has shown a marked increase during the past five years.

Although sponsors' interest remains steady with many accounts having been with the same station 10-15 years, a rise in the number of their requests that commercials on foreign language programs be made in English as well as in the second language, indicates their concern with the problem of assimilation.

Specialized audience stations in Chi are WGES, WEDC, WSBC and WHFC.

UAW in Charges Vs. WWJ, WJR

Detroit, Feb. 28.

The UAW (CIO) has filed formal complaints with the FCC against Detroit stations WWJ and WJR. The union charges that the stations refused to sell or otherwise make available time for discussion of the issues in the current strike against the Chrysler Corp.

In a letter to Wayne Coy, FCC chairman, Emil Mazey, UAW secretary-treasurer, asked that license renewals of both stations be called up for hearings at once so that "this matter can be gone into in detail." The union's action came a week after a published report of a determination of policy in strike matters by WWJ's general manager, Harry Bannister. Bannister had ruled that in the Chrysler strike and in all future labor-management controversies which involve the public interest, his station would make available without charge a minimum of one-hour weekly in Class A time for the joint use of both parties.

Mazey's letter said WWJ's violation of FCC policies was especially flagrant. In effect, Mazey said, the station gave the Chrysler Corp. the right of veto of public discussion of a controversy. He said: "WWJ had offered time free of charge, only if both parties agreed to the time, and, if no agreement was reached, no time at all would be sold. Thus, the Chrysler Corp. has been able to keep discussion off the air by a simple refusal to participate."

Kobak's Chi Talk

Ed Kobak, former Mutual prexy and now a business consultant, will be the principal speaker at the non-affiliated stations' observance of Independents Day at the upcoming NAB convention in Chicago.

Talk shapes up as provocative, with Kobak to analyze overall industry problems in an expansion of his "I Knock With 25 Points" treatise published in last year's VARIETY.

Mpls., St. Paul Transit Goes FM

Minneapolis, Feb. 28.

Deal has just been made here by the newly organized Broadcast Services, Inc., with the Twin City Rapid Transit Co., Minneapolis-St. Paul Transportation Company, to supply music and "advertising plugs" for its buses and newer street cars. The deal also is expected to pave the way for a new revenue source for other hard-pressed street car companies throughout the nation.

Broadcast Services will pay the transit company $6 a car or bus or a minimum of $1,200 per month for the privilege. There'll be no expense involved for the traction company. FM programs, consisting only of music, public service announcements, two minutes of time and weather signals and six minutes of commercials per hour, will run from 6 a. m. to 10 p. m.

The five-year contract, signed by the transit company, requires Broadcast Services to wire the vehicles and install the "transit radios." There are now about 500 vehicles that can be equipped. The "noise level" in the older street cars is too high for radio, but these are to be replaced gradually by new cars or buses. The street railway company, under new management, recently made available for advertising purposes the outside as well as interior of their cars and buses.

There'll be no broadcasting of soap operas, sports events or other normal radio programs. About six receivers will be installed in each vehicle and they'll have automatic volume controls which will keep the music levels constant regardless of the distance from the broadcasting station. Special electronic switches located in the car barns will turn on the sets when the cars leave and off when they return. The street car company expects eventually to realize $36,000 to $40,000 from the source.

Broadcast Services is negotiating now for the purchase of a lease of a Twin Cities FM station, and expects to go on the air before June 1. Officers of the new company are Mylo Johns, president and general manager, formerly part owner and operator of a Des Moines, Ia., station, and connected at various

Stanton Heads CBS Brass On Coast Biz Junket

CBS prexy Frank Stanton led a delegation of network brass on a flying junket to the Coast over the weekend for a two-day powwow with affiliate managers. District meeting, held in Los Angeles Monday and Tuesday of this week for a wholesale kickaround of deb-affiliate problems, was one of a series being held in various parts of the country.

RADIO, VIDEO SHOWS BENEFIT

The advertising media's campaign to boost their share of the national income — a proportion that has been steadily dwindling over the past decade—is starting to pay off. Straw in the wind was General Foods' announcement yesterday (Tues.) that the company is stepping up its ad budget, in which radio and television will benefit, along with the other media. Coin hike was reported yesterday (Tues.) by Charles G. Mortimer, marketing veepee, and H. M. Chapin, advertising director, along with realignment of GF's estimated $30,000,000 ad budget among its three agencies, Benton & Bowles, Young & Rubicam and Foote, Cone & Belding.

What heartens the broadcast industry is GF's confidence in the business situation, its launching of new products and its stress on the importance of advertising. With GF upping its ad expenditures, other companies in the food industry — one of broadcasting's greatest sources of revenue—will have to follow suit. And it's recalled that GF sells everything from soup to salted nuts, plus dog and cat food.

All three agencies will get bigger billings, Mortimer said, because of promotional requirements of both new and regular products. The increased ad expenditure will spread across all major media, including radio, video, newspapers, magazines, outdoor, sampling, product booklets, displays, etc.

Reasons for the step-up, Mortimer explained, are (1) GF has several new products which are now or will soon be in national distribution and which the company is pushing for effective volumes, and (2) the old-established trademarks "will need, in the vigorous competition which characterizes the grocery business, powerful promotion to maintain and increase consumer acceptance."

In the major shift of product assignments, FC&B (which got the Postum account from Y&R in 1946) gets Calumet, La France and Satina billings from Y&R, and Post Toasties and Rice Krinkles (a new product) from B&B. Latter agency will get added business through established lines, plus the new Post Sugar Crisp and Baker 4-in-1 cocoa mix. Y&R, also to get increased billings, will have Jell-o, Sanka, Maxwell House, Birdseye, Swansdown, Igleheart, Minute Rice, Tapioca and Gelatin, Grape Nuts, Post Wheat Meal and the GF corporate, sales division and consumer service accounts.

GF, Y&R's oldest and largest client (having been with the agency for 25 years), has "Hopalong Cassidy," "Aldrich Family," "My Favorite Husband," "Goldbergs," "Second Mrs. Burton" and "Gang-

WCON's 'Include Us Out'

Atlanta.

Editor, VARIETY:

Baseball Blackout Threat is no dark cloud here at WCON, either AM, FM or TV. We want no part of it, and after two trial seasons too.

There is enough duodenal disturbance in this business without taking on baseball—and the weather (when do games start—when do they end?), and a lot of mad (but otherwise happy) advertisers who have to be moved to Class C time —and what's worst of all, that still small voice inside you that says "opportunist."

You kill off listeners to your programs (who listens to a station?) that you have knocked yourself out for years to build up. That's the saddest thing of all.

To our faithful listeners, our advertisers, network and rep—on WCON-AM, FM and TV—No Baseball Blackout. Thanks to VARIETY for raising another provocative industry question.

General Manager.

NBC Sells Dick Powell to Rexall For Summer, So Helbros Powders

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Helbros Watch is cancelling out on the Dick Powell show because NBC sold it to Rexall for the summer without advising Helbros. Deal with Helbros was for 13 weeks, starting March 19, and another 13 after the summer layoff. Don Sharpe, who agented, is said to have got a double price from Rexall.

Whodunit, "Richard Diamond, Private Detective," was to cost Helbros $12,000 weekly in time and talent. Helbros is already out several thousand on promotion, and resented the sale to Rexall on the ground it would be building up Powell for its product and then losing him to Rexall for the summer months.

What burned Helbros even more was NBC's not advising them of the firm deal with Rexall. It's understood NBC was to have credited Helbros with $3,500 weekly for the period of Rexall sponsorship, but the watch company scoffed at the offer and demanded the contract be voided.

Miller's C&H Checkout

Chester Miller has left Calkins & Holden as director of radio and tele, with Walter Lurie taking over the post in addition to other duties.

Pat Fennell, ex-Biow and Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample, has joined C&H as executive assistant to Lurie. Agency is mapping increased activity in broadcast field.

Still a Tossup On 'B'fast Club' Move

Chicago, Feb. 28.

After spending three days here huddling with Don McNeill, Mark Woods, ABC vice chairman, returned to New York last weekend without a contract renewal from the "Breakfast Club" emcee. Now that ABC has outlined its terms, which are reported to include an upped financial arrangement in an effort to keep McNeill with the web, it is expected that McNeill will re-enter negotiations with NBC, armed with this latest ABC offer.

McNeill will probably announce his decision as to whether or not he will switch from ABC to NBC within the next couple of weeks.

A possible hitch in NBC plans to woo McNeill from his present web is the reported difficulty NBC is having in clearing morning air time on its affiliates for a McNeill show.

Pitt's Mayor to Preem On Welk's WCAE Program

Pittsburgh, Feb. 28.

Lawrence Welk, doing his ABC broadcast on WCAE for Miller's High Life beer tomorrow night (1) from Bill Green's, where his band is playing a week's engagement, has lined up Mayor Lawrence for a five-minute spot on the program. City's chief executive will speak on the New Pittsburgh and plans for almost complete redevelopment of downtown area.

It will be the first time Mayor Lawrence has ever gone on a regularly sponsored commercial show. Last year he was set for the Jack Carson airer when latter was playing Stanley theatre, but bowed out at the last minute because he objected to dialog Carson's scripters had cooked up for him. This time he'll do his own script.

Toni's ABC Buy

Toni is picking up the tab for a five-minute cross-the-board strip on ABC, from 12:25-12:30 p. m., via Foote, Cone & Belding. Sponsor is still looking for a show to put in the slot, starting March 20.

Purchase marks a return of Toni to ABC, the home permanent having started its air advertising with "Ladies Be Seated." Toni is now backing Arthur Godfrey three mornings a week, but is dropping out next month.

Small Rides Herd

Syracuse, Feb. 28.

Frank Small, quondam manager of Prof. Quiz, has been setting the local kilocycles on its ears, staging local talent raids since he took over the helm of WNDR, MBS outlet here.

Small lured Frank Hennessy, morning feature of WSYR, the NBC affiliate, for morning and afternoon stanzas. He picked up Fred Jeske from the ABC outlet, WAGE, for late morning and suppertime strips. Latest move was sewing up the boxing matches previously the specialty of WOLF, Syracuse's lone indie.

D.C. May Get Its 32d Station

Washington, Feb. 28.

With more broadcast stations than any other city of its size already, Washington may soon have another radio outlet. The way was paved last week when an applicant for a "frozen" frequency found another dial spot apparently open and applied for it.

The applicant, Chesapeake Broadcasting Co., operates WBUZ-FM in nearby Bradbury Heights, Md. It desires an AM outlet to help out with its FM, although the latter isn't doing so bad thanks to a Transit Radio franchise with a suburban bus service. Unless interference problems arise in connection with the use of 1540 kc (for daytime operation), he will doubtless get his authorization.

Until Chesapeake amended its application to apply for 1540, it was in a contest with Theodore Granik, moderator of the "American Forum of the Air" program on NBC, for the 890 kc spot. However, applications for this frequency are being shelved pending FCC determination of the clear channel question.

The Washington metropolitan area now has 31 broadcast stations in operation. These include four TV outlets, seven fulltime AM'ers, seven daytime AM'ers, and 13 FM. Three of the FM stations have no AM auxiliaries.

In addition, there are two FM permits outstanding in the area.

Wilson's In-&-Outer

Earl Wilson has decided to give up his new disk jockey-interview stanza on WINS, N. Y., at the end of the week, due to the conflict with his 2 a.m. deadline for the N. Y. Post-Home News. Syndicated columnist, however, may stay on if the broadcast time can be moved up from the 11 p.m. period.

Tele-King, which is backing the show from Monte's N. Y. Belmont-Plaza Restaurant, will continue the program. Among those being sought as Wilson's replacement is Faye Emerson.

Don Roberts Denies

Chicago, Feb. 28.

W. Donald Roberts, who resigned as CBS western sales manager Feb. 16, denied reports Monday (27) that he's joining Foote, Cone & Belding ad agency as business manager of radio department.

He has several offers which he is considering.

TV News, Despite Limited Facilities, Seen Expanding Via New Techniques

Television news coverage, despite its limited facilities and little experience, is not only ahead of the level of both radio and newsreels when they were still as young, but is also striking out on new techniques and new reporting methods of its own. That's the opinion of Ad Schneider, NBC-TV's news and special events chief, in answer to a recent Washington survey showing that TV viewers turn to radio only for the latter's "superior" news programs.

While live TV news coverage, because of its confinement to the coaxial cable, cannot span the oceans or hop to cities too far distant, it can surpass radio in other ways, Schneider thinks. He cited a 15-minute documentary film produced by the NBC news department on only three days' notice, which was aired Sunday afternoon (19) as part of a discussion program on the world food shortage. Titled "In the Midst of Plenty," the short was compiled and edited entirely from NBC's film library, which permitted the staff to accomplish in three days, Schneider said, a job comparable to that turned out by the March of Time in a couple of months.

Quick job was made possible, according to Schneider, because of the many arms of the NBC-TV news operation. In addition to its production of the 15-minute, across-the-board "Camel News Caravan," which celebrated its second anni last Feb. 16, the department also produces a weekly film news roundup and is also responsible for supervising production on such quiz shows as "Who Said That" and "Meet the Press" (latter in association with Martha Rountree). Department the preing week turned out a similar documentary on the nation's housing problem.

As for daily news coverage, Schneider noted that the Camel show had films on the air of four of the 10 stories selected as the best of the year the same day the stories broke. That, he claims, is a good record for a medium in commercial operation less than 10 years. He admitted freely that TV is borrowing the best techniques from radio and the theatrical newsreels to weld into what the department believes constitutes the best methods of video news coverage at this time.

Crosley Exiting 'Show Business'

Crosley is bowing out of sponsorship of CBS-TV's "This Is Show Business," when the 26-week cycle winds up on the March 26 telecast. Move, which will find Crosley exiting television and radio advertising for the next year, is linked to the company's retooling, restocking process and an operational repatterning so as not to spread itself too thin.

The Irving Mansfield-produced video showcase, however, is expected to latch on to new bankroller auspices in short order, with prospective client interest already manifesting itself. CBS regards the house-built show, which features Clifton Fadiman as emcee and George S. Kaufman and Abe Burrows as panel participants, as one of its prestige babies.

WXEL SNARES CLIENT FOR INDIANS GAMES

Cleveland, Feb. 28.

Newcomer to the television field, WXEL signed with Standard Brewing Co. to televise 79 home games of Cleveland Indians. Gerst Advertising agency handled account, which also saw WERE taking over AM rights.

Jack Graney and Jim Dudley will do a simulcast with sponsors admitting the idea is a "test."

WXEL plans to use a Zoomar lens, which it will buy for estimated $7,500, along with three camera crews near home, first and third, to "make telecasts second to none." For the past two years WEWS, the Scripps-Howard outlet, had television rights. However, it is believed that network commitments made WEWS handling again this year unfeasible.

Burrows to Alternate With New Toni Show

"Abe Burrows' Almanac," CBS-TV show aired Wednesday nights from 9 to 9:30, goes twice-monthly early next month. Toni Home Permanent, which has contracted for a show on CBS, will occupy the half-hour on the alternate weeks, starting April 5.

Toni show has not yet been selected, with the outfit still seeking one to sell its products on video. Burrows stanza will be continued on a sustaining basis.

Moss' 620G Suit In CBS Fight Deal

Suit asking $620,000 in damages has been filed by Paul F. Moss in New York State supreme court against CBS. Complaint charges that CBS didn't terminate its year-old contract with Moss last September and that the pact was automatically renewed for another year. CBS spokesmen reply that Moss was given "timely notice" of the agreement's termination.

Moss was hired by CBS in September, '48, as consultant and producer, to secure fights and arenas for the web to televise. He was to be paid $10,000 per year, plus expenses, $2,000 for each of 10 fights secured and $3,000 for each fight during the remainder of the year. Payment as consultant and for matches secured was to go up if the contract was renewed for additional yearly periods.

According to Moss' complaint, shortly after the contract was signed CBS became associated with the Tournament of Champions, Inc., which was promoting boxing events for TV. Moss alleges that this move "interfered with and hindered" performance of his services, depriving him of the chance to earn $500,000 and damaged his reputation. He also charges that it was through his efforts that CBS obtained contracts with the International Boxing Club for videocasting bouts from Chicago Stadium, Detroit Olympia and Gotham's St. Nicholas Arena, for which CBS owes him another $102,500. Other damages Moss claims bring the total judgment demanded to $620,000.

CBS counsel in the case is Rosenman, Goldmark, Colin & Kaye. Moss, who is prexy of International Tele-Film Productions, is being represented by Charles Ress.

Jacksonville Feels FCC Should Be Lenient On Permit Extension

Washington, Feb. 28.

City of Jacksonville, Fla., the only municipality with a commercial television permit, is having a tough time convincing the FCC its authorization should not be revoked for stalling on construction. City's plea for delay because it discovered project would require more capital than it originally figured is regarded as no excuse by the Commision's legal division which is opposing an examiner's recommendation that the station (WJAX-TV) be given more time. Oral argument on the case will probably be scheduled soon.

At the time it got its permit, the municipality had authority to issue $300,000 of revenue certificates to finance construction and

'Super Circus' Coin

ABC-TV is wrapping up sale of the second half of its "Super Circus" to International Shoe Co. and M&M Candy. The two companies will back half of the stanza on alternate weeks, starting in April. First half hour of the Sunday afternoon program will remain under sponsorship of Canada Dry.

M&M has backed the Joe DiMaggio radio show on CBS, but is bowing out March 11.

WFIL PROJECTS TV AS EDUC'L MEDIUM

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.

Television's role as an educational medium will be demonstrated to more than 30,000 school teachers and principals attending the American Assn. of School Administrators convention in Atlantic City.

WFIL-TV will beam two special showings today (Tues.) designed for in-school viewing to Atlantic City's Convention Hall, where they will be projected on the large screen, developed and perfected by the Tele-Video Corp., of Upper Darby, Pa.

Programs scheduled for convention telecasts are "Billy Penn, M.C.," and "Science Is Fun," both of which are televised regularly over WFIL-TV, Fridays, 2 to 2:30 p.m. The former is a 15-minute period of civics instructions, while the latter makes scientific principles intelligible to school kids by actual laboratory demonstrations.

Tax Ease Sought For Video Entry

Washington, Feb. 28.

American Bar Assn., now holding its mid-year meeting in Chicago, will receive a recommendation that tax laws be revised to permit radio stations to withhold distribution of earnings for use in long-term video planning. Federal Communications Bar Assn., composed largely of radio lawyers, is represented at the meeting by Guilford Jameson, immediate past president of the organization.

The ABA recommendation concerns a section of the Internal Revenue Code which imposes additional taxes on corporations unreasonably withholding distribution of earnings for the purpose of evading payment of surtaxes by their stockholders. The lawyers want this section amended to shift the burden of proof, except in flagrant cases, on the Federal agency. Under the plan additional taxes would not be imposed if the corporation can show the funds are required for long-term planning, as distinguished from immediate needs.

Only recently a tax court refused to allow two stations in Oklahoma (KOMA in Oklahoma City and KTUL in Tulsa) to withhold distribution of earnings on the ground the funds would be needed for FM and TV expansion. The court upheld an additional assessment by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Tribunal found the stations failed to sustain the burden of proof imposed upon them to establish an "immediate" need for the use of additional funds.

Both KOMA and KTUL, which are headed by John Griffin, have FM stations and have applications for television. Oklahoma City and Tulsa each have one TV station on the air. Under present allocations each city would have three more. Four applications in O.C. and five in Tulsa are on file for these channels.

PITT STILL THE LONER IN NO BASEBALL TV

Pittsburgh, Feb. 28.

Pittsburgh will remain the only big league city in baseball this season where games will have to be heard and not seen away from the field. Management of the local National League entry has announced that it will be at least another year, perhaps more, before it will permit television cameras to come in. At present time, the town has only one station, WDTV, of the DuMont network.

Pirates' clashes will again be broadcast over WWSW and a regional network, with most of the out-of-town games being recreated as in the past from telegraph reports. Rosey Rowswell, who has been airing the National League local schedule for nearly 15 years, will again be the head man, with Bob Prince as his assistant.

CBS May Cap TV Winter Sports In Flurry of Top Garden Events

With the television sports picture in N. Y. having gradually brightened during the last month, CBS may cap the video fans' good fortune with a boff seasonal climax. Web is negotiating this week to pick up the Knights of Columbus track meet Saturday night (4) from the Garden, as well as at least six games from the Garden finals of the National Intercollegiate basketball tournament, starting the following week, and the National Collegiate Athletic Assn. invitation meet several weeks later.

Consummation of the deals is dependent on several factors, chief among which is the fee being asked by the Garden for rights to the events. CBS to date has been unwilling to shell out the required money unless it could get a sponsor to help pay the bill, and is now scouting such an angel for all three events. Without the necessary bankroller, it might still pick up the one-shot track meet, but would probably think twice before heading into the expense of a series of basketball games.

Web's interest in the events is believed a partial answer to the blast levied at the video networks for bypassing sports by Ned Irish, Garden's exec veepee. Irish, writing off fears of promoters that TV hurts their gate receipts, has repeatedly asserted that sports should be considered by the networks as another form of programming entertainment. By not coming into the Garden with their cameras, he believes, the webs are not keeping faith with the setowners who purchased their receivers in hopes they would be watching the top events.

Peter Lind Hayes' TVer

Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy, when they close in "Inside USA" (Chevrolet's CBS television show), resume in some nitery engagements which Lou Irwin is lining up for them before doing "High Button Shoes" at the Dallas Civic Opera the month of June.

Hayes and his wife, Miss Healy, then start preparing their video package for CBS in the fall.

Kid School Racket New Chicago Beef

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Television's unwelcome camp followers, the combination kiddie talent school and TV film producer, have moved in on the Chicago scene after getting the brushoff on the Coast.

On-the-square producers and video officials report an increasing number of complaints from parents who have shelled out to a film group for a course for their kiddies after promises that the youngsters would be used in a commercial TV film. To date, it is reported, none of the newly arrived producers has completed a picture for sponsor showing in which "graduates" of their adjunct schools have been used.

Reports have come from parents claiming they've paid out from $100 to $200 to teacher-producer groups for courses of varying lengths, with the understanding the kids will share in the profits when the film is sold. One group worked the South Side Negro district, paying a neighborhood photographer a sizeable fee for lining up clients.

With the parents paying "training" costs and the kids acting for free in the first film, the quality of the finished product and the ventures themselves are being watched with considerable skepticism.

Academy of Television Arts and Sciences Loses Station Support

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

The Academy of Television Arts and Sciences has lost the support of local television stations. This fact, which virtually negates any power the Academy might have had over the past three years, was made known to VARIETY last Wednesday (22). Future plans of local telecasters are currently in the nebulous stage.

Video station execs, who have had two meetings, the first on Feb. 9 and the second on Feb. 16, have decided the Acad is not representative of the teevee industry and they therefore will not participate in its future. Station reps feel the membership of the Acad is made up, not of those actually participating in television but of those who would like to be involved in the industry or are studying for future participation in video.

Withdrawing of support from the Academy by local videoites is tantamount to writing the organization's obituary. Without support of the stations the Acad is powerless to move in any direction. The stations will not offer their programs for Acad's Emmy awards which promptly kills the award and the organization's most effective sledge hammer.

Video Set Sales in Chi Area in January Drop

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Reflecting a slight post-Christmas slump, video set sales in the Chi area during January dropped to the lowest figure since last August. As reported by the monthly TV set survey done by the Chi Electric Assn., January sales at 32,123 raised the set total for the area to 386,018. December sales were reported at 44,162.

The survey is based on reports from 30 distributors and is adjusted to give effect to estimated sales of non-reporting dealers.

WPTZ Strip Rate Philly Innovation

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.

WPTZ has established a new strip program price in which all local programs that are televised five times a week on consecutive days will now be available at four-fifths the regular rate for five programs a week.

Under this structure a sponsor using a Monday through Friday broadcast now receives cross-the-board coverage for the former Monday through Thursday cost. Frequency discounts are accrued at the rate of 5% for 26 consecutive weeks and 10% for 52 consecutive weeks.

Move has been made both to compensate and encourage cross-the-board program advertising. Added factor is WPTZ's plans to expand daytime schedule.

Alexander W. Dannenbaum, WPTZ commercial manager, revealed that from a total of 120 different accounts, the station got 90% renewals. Dannenbaum's survey showed 75% of WPTZ clients originate their advertising locally. The remainder are from the NBC television net.

Of WPTZ's local advertisers, 13.5% are sponsoring programs, while the others use spots and participation.

McCONNELL TO KEYNOTE CHI NAT'L CONFERENCE

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Joseph H. McConnell, NBC prexy, and John McLaughlin, advertising manager of Kraft Foods, will share keynoting honors at the National Television Conference here March 6-8 at the Palmer House. NBC topper and ad exec will speak on "TV Coming of Age" at the opening luncheon March 6.

A last-minute program change puts a discussion of color video on the agenda with a March 7 luncheon panel devoted to the subject "Color Now or Later?" After a speech on tinted TV by Martin Codell, TV publisher; Richard Graver, Admiral Corp. v.p.; John Mitchell, WBKB general manager; Carl Meyer, WGN-TV chief engineer, and a still-to-be-named advertising representative, will take part in the discussion. Clifton Utley will moderate.

SINGLE TUBE AS TINT PANACEA

TV's Need: De Mille Ideas, Disney Ingenuity on Dime Bank Accounts'

Despite the fact video stations and networks are besieged by thousands of applicants trying to break into television, the industry is finding it difficult to get several kinds of personnel, particularly writers, producers and directors.

Problem in finding writers is that most scripters have been trained in AM and don't know the TV medium, according to out-of-Gotham video toppers surveyed by Jo Ranson and Dick Pack, publicity directors of WMGM and WNEW, respectively, for their new book, "Opportunities in Television," to be published this spring. In direction and production, WBKB (Chi) program director E. J. Graff said, the problem is finding "idea men who know how to cut corners, guys with DeMille ideas and Disney ingenuity on dime bank budgets."

Also scarce, according to some of the stations queried, are camera men, experienced engineers and "maintenance men who have adequate theoretical training coupled with practical knowhow." Smaller stations reported trouble in finding competent personnel because of their limited budgets.

Several stations, such as WDSU-TV, New Orleans, and KSTP-TV, Minneapolis, reported little or no difficulty in getting staffers. This ties in with the U. S. Department of Labor's employment outlook study, published last year, which pointed out that employment in broadcasting grows very slowly, and that only 45,000 fulltime workers were employed in AM and TV in mid-1949. "At many TV sta-

Kathi Norris Switch To WNBT Cues Daytime Expansion for Flagship

Fullscale expansion into daytime programing will be launched next month by WNBT, key N. Y. flagship of the NBC video web, following pacting this week of Kathi Norris and her "Television Shopper" show. Aired until now via WABD (DuMont, N. Y.), Miss Norris' program is to be switched intact to WNBT, where it will occupy the same 11 a. m. to noon across-the-board slotting, starting May 8 or 15.

WNBT has no intention of leaving Miss Norris stranded on a programming island, according to station manager Tom McFadden, and so will build new shows both before and after her hour. Tentative plans call for the station to take the air daily at 10 a. m. for an hour-long audience participation program, which will probably originate from a remote location. Fifteen-minute news strip will follow the "Shopper" show, which will incorporate some of the film footage from the previous evening's "Camel News Caravan." Station is also planning a service show of some kind to take over after 12:15 p. m. daily.

While no sponsor contracts have been signed, WNBT hopes to lure Saks 34th Street, department store which bankrolls the first half-hour of Miss Norris' current WABD stanza, plus the five participating clients in the second half-hour. Show is to be staged at NBC's 106th

Memphis Cable Spree

Memphis, Feb. 28.

WMCT, Memphis' TV outlet, will tee off a big network spree when the coaxial cable will link the Commercial Appeal, Scripps-Howard, morning daily station with live shows beginning March 1.

Henry Slavick, general manager, says the Memphis TV station will also begin Saturday night video shows. This was the only "blackout" on the weekly sked.

WMCT will be the 30th city in the nation to receive direct cable shows which will be piped here live from New York, Chicago and Washington.

Pressing Your Luck

Question of how soon television must come to grips with the problem of understudies was projected on last Sunday's (26) Philco TV presentation of "Home Town," when Betty Caulfield, playing one of the lead femme roles, showed up at the studio with 103-degree temperature.

Production staff for a while was panicky, since no one was set to fill in. Miss Caulfield managed to get through the performance, actually betraying little evidence of her condition.

Sunday Night Now Most Popular On TV Hooper Roster

With all the hoopla surrounding television's new Saturday night emphasis, the fact that more video setowners now sit by their sets on Sunday night than any other night in the week has been generally lost sight of. Sets in use figures of recent network Hooperatings, however, reveal that Sunday has upset Tuesday from the latter night's long-standing position as the top video night.

Most responsible for Tuesday's leadership heretofore has been, of course, Milton Berle's "Texaco Star Theatre." With ratings last year ranging up to 80, there has been little doubt that Berle attracted most of the TV audience. While the Berle show still leads the TV parade, his rating has declined gradually until it's now 60, indicating a drop in his attraction. More important in Sunday's emergence to the top night, however, has been the bunching of top shows on that evening by all four major webs.

With Berle setting such a hot Tuesday night pace, competing webs have avoided trying to buck him with any ambitious programs. Thus, with the exception of the Texaco stanza, Tuesday hasn't had a chance to get rolling audience-wise until 9 p. m., when the show signs off. On Sunday night, however, webs fire some of their heaviest programming artillery, such as CBS-TV's "This Is Show Business," "Toast of the Town" and Fred Waring, and NBC-TV's "Supper

EDWARDS, SMILIN' ED FILM-TESTING FOR TV

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Two NBC shows will go before the television cameras within two weeks and the films shipped east for sponsor inspection. First to be sprocketed will be Ralph Edwards and Truth or Consequences, the second recording of this show. First was made a year ago but came off badly because of faulty equipment.

Brown Shoe Co. has requested of Frank Ferrin a film of the Smiling Ed McConnell show, which has a kid following in the millions. Another Ferrin TV venture, "Funny Faces," is also being set up for early filming. It's a comedy with games and audience participation.

WEWS Woos Good News

Cleveland, Feb. 28.

WEWS has brought Pulse into Cleveland and, in first announcement of results, the Scripps-Howard video outlet said initial February showings give the station a commanding lead over two rivals.

WEWS also announced that effective March 19 it was increasing its rates by approximately 20%.

MAY KEY FCC'S COLOR DECISION

Washington, Feb. 28.

Popular pastime among reporters covering the color television story is crystal-ball gazing on what action the FCC will take when it finally gets down to the unenviable task of deciding the question—perhaps in six months. It's a dangerous game to play, particularly at this juncture when determining developments are still ahead, because there probably isn't a single member of the Commission who knows how he or she will vote when all the testimony is in and the pros and cons of the various systems have been evaluated. Never has so important a decision depended so much on the ability of an industry, impelled by intense competitive rivalry, to translate a new product from diagram into practical operation in a relatively few months.

This new product, a single tricolor direct view tube, may be the key to the complicated color question. If is does what RCA says it will, when it's to be demonstrated here in about a month, the problem before the Commission might be made a relatively simple one. If it turns out to be a flop, the agency will be in a tough pickle.

Of course, the development of the tube isn't necessarily related to systems. CBS says the tube will work better with its color process than with RCA's or the line sequential tint of Color Television, Inc. (if CTI can stay in the race after its unfortunate showing last week at the comparative demonstrations). RCA's David Sarnoff reportedly has admitted the tube could be used in the CBS system.

According to Adrian Murphy, CBS veepee and general exec, the tube won't substantially improve RCA's color, although it would make possible direct view receivers. The tube, he says, won't change the situation at the camera.

Murphy contends that the basic system by which CBS transmits its color is superior to either that used by RCA or CTI and that apparatus used at the receiver cannot materially alter this situation. He says that when CBS started work on color it was free to use any system and that it selected the field sequential because it involved the slowest switching rate and provided the most reliable reproduction at the receiver.

RCA, he recalls, tried a simultaneous system (sending three colors through at the same time) but abandoned it because it took up too much channel space. More recently, after CTI took up the line sequential system (sending out colors in sequence by lines), he says, RCA was left with only the dot sequential system. While these systems permit the color to come through in black on white on existing sets, he declares, they do not permit the quality of color which the field sequential (sending color through in fields in sequence) system achieves.

Murphy resents any reference to

Why Not Gimbels?

Washington, Feb. 28.

During testimony of RCA research chief E. W. Engstrom yesterday (27) at FCC color TV hearings, Commissioner Frieda Hennock asked how soon the public could get receivers if the RCA system is authorized. "We're moving fast," Engstrom replied.

"How soon after adoption of standards could I buy a set in New York for my sister?" Miss Hennock persisted.

"In New York, somewhere between one and a half and two years," said Engstrom. "Not sooner?" Miss Hennock asked. "We might build one in our laboratory for your sister," Engstrom replied.

"I want to be able to get one at Macy's," said Miss Hennock.

It's 3 Down, 12 to Go in NBC-TV Sponsor Lure on 'Sat. Night Revue'

'Sat. Revue's' 38.4

Tipoff that CBS and DuMont are headed for trouble in the highly competitive Saturday night TV situation is seen in the initial ratings chalked up by NBC's "Saturday Night Revue," which copped an impressive 38.4 average for the two and a half hour Chi-N. Y. originations.

By half-hours, the ratings break down as follows:

8:00 to 8:30	35.5
8:30 to 9:00	37.0
9:00 to 9:30	39.6
9:30 to 10:00	40.2
10:00 to 10:30	39.8

Station Reps See NBC's Sat. Block As Spot Biz Threat

A hard-hitting letter lashing out at the networks' move-in on the national spot business in video and scoring the new 150-minute NBC-TV program (although not mentioning it by name), was sent to all television stations Monday (27) by the National Assn. of Radio Station Representatives.

NARSR sees the NBC-TV block as an encroachment on the stations' spot biz and a growing threat. "It is a short step from sale of national spot advertising through network origination, with low income to the station," the reps group declares, "to the time when the networks will begin to solicit and offer all spot advertising." It fears the webs' move from selling spots in participating shows to network chain breaks "instead o fthe logical and proper station break."

According to the station reps, "the only way in which the independently owned station can compete for national business" is through the sale of time on station breaks, minute announcements and other short time units, sales to national advertisers in participation shows, local news shows, station-produced airers and other programs in station time. They add that no TV station can live "on the few pennies of the advertiser's dollar that it nets from a network sale of time." It can only exist on local business and on 'national spot business with its high net return."

National spot is likely to be more

LLOYD COMEDIES NOT FOR SALE TO VIDEO

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Harold Lloyd's old pictures are not for sale to television companies. A recent offer of $250,000 for a package of silent comedies was turned down by Lloyd's local office with the information that the films are still doing well as reissues on the regular theatre circuit. It was disclosed that Lloyd nixed an offer of $200,000 from a major studio for remake rights to "The Freshman."

Lloyd owns all rights to 30 one-reelers, 20 two-reelers and 20 features, 10 of which were made with sound. His "Movie Crazy" is currently being reissued by Neil Agnew's Motion Picture Sales Corp.

Lahr's CBS-TV Deal

CBS has signed Bert Lahr to a three-year television contract, with the web currently mapping plans for a half-hour comedy show.

Comic will be starred in a revue-type show featuring sketches, songs, etc., somewhat similar to the Alan Young TV show preeming next month. Irving Mansfield will produce.

NBC television's Saturday night program spread picked up its first three participating sponsors this week as it headed into its second stanza on the air. Trio includes RCA, through the J. Walter Thompson agency; United Fruit, through BBD&O, and Swift, through McCann-Erickson.

Under the web's plan of converting each separate half-hour from a sustaining to commercial basis as new bankrollers sign on, the first three are to have their one-minute spots inserted into the 9:30 to 10 segment. Interest in the show on the part of other prospective advertisers is high, according to NBC sales execs, with the possibility several more will ink for the show before Saturday (4). Next half-hour to be filled will probably be from 9 to 9:30, with succeeding commercial segments dependent on which are picked up by the most affiliate stations.

Number of affiliates who will carry all or part of the show this week has not been determined. According to the NBC sales execs, they are waiting to get as many sponsors signed as possible before placing time orders with the affiliates in accordance with the sponsors' request for coverage. Show is set up to carry a maximum of 15 participating spots, which are to rotate each week.

With a $50,000 per week budget at stake in the new Saturday night program, NBC last week launched the most intensive ad-publicity campaign at the public it has yet given a video show. Web spent over $20,000 in a three-day series of newspaper ads in its four eastern owned-and-operated cities and also plugged the show wherever possible on the air at time-breaks, sign-offs, etc.

NBC contacted the manager of each affiliate in a pitch for similar

New Talks Collapse In Tele Authority, SAG Jurisdictional Row

Efforts to break the deadlock between the Television Authority and Screen Actors Guild over jurisdiction among video performers have virtually collapsed. Kiss-off to a possible settlement was seen in TVA's latest statement that SAG "has taken a backward step on the road to peace" by its refusal to yield full control of decisions affecting pix for video.

SAG had previously written to TVA, saying that "further exploration of partnership would appear to be a waste of time" unless SAG is granted the right to decide what rates and conditions should exist in video films and the re-use of such films on TV stations. Rebutting this stand, TVA exec secretary George Heller said it would mean that "many thousands of performers who are not members of SAG must submit to a decision in this vital matter without having their own wishes recognized."

Terming the principle of re-use of films or kinescope as one of the most important objectives to be obtained in any collective bargaining pact, Heller declared that SAG's stand would make any prospective partnership an "empty ar-

No 30 for '80' on NBC

"Life Begins at 80" will remain on NBC-TV and not shift to ABC-TV, although the latter web was interested in picking up the Barry-Enright production. Producers decided to stick with NBC when the network gave them a contract for a firm 13 performances and promised a weekly airing, instead of the present alternate week sked, if time opens up.

Jack Barry-Dan Enright outfit is not tied to NBC for the AM version of the show, in which ABC is still interested.

Tele Followup Comment

Gordon Jenkins received a well deserved tribute from Mayor O'Dwyer for his "Manhattan Tower," as agented by Ed Sullivan on his Sunday night CBS "Toast of the Town," to the degree it cut the Harmonicats' down to one number, "Peg O' My Heart," bringing on Margaret O'Brien for a personal. Time was so against Sullivan that his introductories of Anton Karas ("Third Man" zither virtuoso), et al., couldn't be cameraed.

Jenkins, obviously emotionally moved by the Mayor's tribute all but cried in joy, presumably for that reason not risking a thankyou for that tribute. On the other hand Jenkins was the D'Artagnan of maestros at the opener, "Blue Danube Blues," the way he left-batoned so vigorously as to give the impression of dueling his violin section, the choir of 14 (8 boys and 6 girls), etc. Betty Breuer recreated "Don't Cry Joe" which was a Jenkins-Breuer Decca bestseller (he's a musical conductor for the disk company now).

Sullivan had one of his top shows on the whole, including Sonny Howard, okay song impressionist, who might have cut one number to advantage, although all good; Ginger Kinney, a one-to-fill redhead terper; Dave Barry, "Toast" familiar who reprised some of his familiar material but also scored.

Sullivan rightly credited CBS productioner Johnny deMott for the visual backgrounds to accomp "Manhattan Tower." The visual effects lent much to the composition which, while highly effective, might have been edited down a bit for the medium. However, it was obviously a resounding click with the studio audience also.

Joseph Schildkraut and Eva Le Gallienne were reunited in their original Broadway roles for the presentation of "Uncle Harry" on CBS-TV's "Ford Theatre" Friday night (24) and together made it a sock stanza. With a fine cast of supporting players and a neat adaptation by Max Wilk of the Thomas Job play, the video show carried its full quota of mounting suspense and captured with suitable impact that twist ending, when the sister convicted of murder turns down Uncle Harry's frenzied attempts to convince others that he was guilty.

For abridgement purposes, Wilk's adaptation had the story in semi-flashback form, which still permitted an uninterrupted unreeling. Schildkraut, although he looked a trifle too old to woo young Brooke Byron, who played the role of Lucy, turned in a capital performance, getting all the diabolic nuances of the henpecked brother who achieved the perfect crime. Miss Le Gallienne was excellent as the sister forced to take the blame for his crime, underplaying the dramatics to just the right extent. Adelaide Klein, also repeating her original role as the murdered sister, matched their performances and the supporting cast, topped by Miss Byron, Kathryn Grill, Francis De-Sales and Phillipa Bevans, lent able help.

Director Marc Daniels managed to maintain the twin reactions of sympathy and horror inherent in the story and reined his cameras with his usual top-form ability. Producer Winston O'Keefe mounted the play with fine trappings, including some good sets by Samuel Leve, costumes by Paul DuPont and original score by Guido Vandt.

"As inarticulate as a guest" on a standard radio or TV show is now cliche, but Sharman Douglas over-did it on Sunday's (26) "Leave It to the Girls." On the other hand there was nothing inarticulate about the very authoritative, personable and genial Bill Slater who pinned the gals' shell-like ears back right against their collectively very handsome coiffs. The gals now have Regent as a sponsor and it's the dream commercial the way Maggi McNellis puts it on, plus that finale quiz show routine with all the other gals for the afterpiece. None the less it's an obvious reason why Jack Benny's AM audience around 7 p.m. in N. Y. has been curtailed in TV homes.

Miss McNellis is a beauteous and literate regisseur, and whether she has Eloise McElhone, Robin Chandler, Lois Andrews and Dorothy Kilgallen on her panel, or any of the other regulars—Betty Furness or Faye Emerson (that gal must have a real big bicycle the way she gets around)—it's invariably a crack show.

The way the lassies promote for themselves is a caution, to coin a cliche. Miss Chandler, easily the coolest looking and most attractive of the young marrieds on the show, not only trailerized Monsieur Ben Cohen for that fur piece, but threw in "on West 48th street" just to make sure. The gals' loot for costume jewelry, gowns (always gets billing here), etc., looks like a terrif gross. But they sure do justice by all the lil knicknacks.

"This Is Show Business" will go down in TV history undoubtedly as a frankly dishonest formula which, for some freak reason—can it be lack of superior entertainment?—gets over despite the phoney pitch. Alan Young's pseudo-problem about his TV future reminds of Cole Porter's biopic, "Night and Day." The successful songsmith, born with a better gold mine than ASCAP, found himself beset only with the problem of how many times per annum he will make the Hit Parade, with result that Warner Bros. found itself stymied for some genuine "conflict" when filming his "life's story," as it was laughingly called. Ditto with almost every other guest on this otherwise very entertaining Irving Mansfield production—none has any problem excepting booking open guest shots. But, as above stated, this stint will probably evolve in TV annals as some freak item that, despite its misnomer, achieves sustaining interest.

CBS-TV's "Suspense" offered an intriguing adaptation of the Robbert Lewis story, "Roman Holiday," Tuesday (21). Vehicle, far removed from the usual whodunit fare, had no women, no gunplay, no omniscient private eyes. Tale dealt with an American student in pre-war Italy, a member of a local fencing team, who is trapped by Fascists and Nazis into a duel which may mean his death. Action took place in two sets, a large gymnasium and the adjoining locker room, with a large cast of 46 thespers, most of them German and Italian officers nibbling on fruit, sipping liqueurs and waiting to see Il Duce's top duellist polish off the Yank.

Interestingly, the Axis military spoke German and Italian, lending an authentic quality. Careful attention was paid to sound, with street noises, operatic airs and martial marches filtering in over the clash of foils. Also effective was the use of large posters of Mussolini to convey the threat of the Fascisti.

Where the telecast fell down, however, was in failing to make clear the motivation of the young American and how he let himself get sucked into the unequal fight. And although the drama ended with the American's defeating his vicious opponent, the tag announcement that he was later killed by the Fascists had an anticlimactic and negative effect. Role of the Yank was excellently handled by Leslie Neilsen, an accomplished fencer.

Kraft Theatre's appropriate presentation of "Valley Forge" on Washington's Birthday (22) was an overall slick job, with some directorial improvisations that enhanced the TV adaptation of Maxwell Anderson's play. It was a tough assignment for video, since essentially Anderson's play of Congressional intrigue thwarting the efforts of General Washington and the Continental troops adds up to talk, talk, talk. But under Maury Holland's skillful direction and production, there were high, tense moments of drama. Equally effective was Holland's ability to capture the misery and the starvation at Valley Forge that led to wholesale desertions.

Cast was almost uniformly good, particularly Judson Laine as Washington (despite regrettable lapses in memorizing lines), Louis Beachner as Lafayette, Vaughan Taylor and E. G. Marshall, Ed Rice and Howard Lindsay (not the legit playwright-producer) rate a nod for their adaptation.

Whatever the genesis of CBS' "The Show Goes On" or its carbon-copy resemblance to the talent-scout-type shows, the Robert Q. Lewis-emceed video showcase projects an increasing ratio of entertainment values, as demonstrated last Thursday (23). The "on-the-air" auditioning for talent buyers, with both the talent and the buyers sharing equal prominence, lends an off-the-cuff quality of spontaneity to the stanza.

On the premise that "everybody likes to feel they're in show business, the on-the-spot bargaining and transaction and the "inside trade" banter giving the viewer an "in," provide supplementary attraction. The audtioning of the "Weavers" quartet for Abe Burrows (for use on his Wednesday night CBS-TV show), the Harold Minsky "buy" of Danny Shaw's comedics; the Joe Kipness wrapup of songwriters Jerry Livingston and Mack David for a forthcoming musical, Frank Dailey's pacting of singer Vinny DeCamp for his Meadowbrook Inn, plus the Robert Q. byplay, packed sufficient entertainment voltage in a fast-paced production.

Way in which the Molly Goldberg character has taken over Gertrude Berg, its protagonist, was fully evident when Mrs. Berg guested on CBS-TV's "Arthur Godfrey and Friends" show Wednesday night (22). Introduced in her true-life role, she seemed slightly ill-at-ease. As soon as she unwrapped that apron and donned it to become Molly Goldberg, however, all was fine and her tete-a-teteing with Godfrey made for pleasant viewing. Two of them managed to get in plenty of cross-plugs for their respective coffee and tea sponsors (show itself is bankrolled by Chesterfield cigarets) and to emphasize, via a mixup in dates, that Godfrey would repay the guest visit on "Goldbergs" next week.

Godfrey claims he's trying to steer away from any vaudeo format on this Wednesday night stanza and it was partly evident last week. His cast of regulars, including Janette Davis, Bill Lawrence, the Chordettes, Mariners and Archie Bleyer's orch, performed with few production mountings, but his other two guests provided for standard vaude turns. Thus, violinist, Florian Zabach, after gagging with Godfrey, performed like he would have on any other video show, and banjoist Chubby Raye, called a square dance—again a vaudeo routine. It was all done, though, without the limiting confines of a standard vaude emcee and thus helped achieve the basic informality and off-the-cuff atmosphere for which Godfrey has become known.

"Philco Television Playhouse" dramatization of Cleveland Amory's "Home Town" on NBC-TV Sunday (26) was a sock job of casting. Barry Nelson starred as the grass-roots author of a best-seller and clicked solidly in the Mr. Deeds-type role. Faye Emerson, in the part of a sophisticated New York glamour gal, took the characterization out of the usual stock stereotype and gave the chic chick depth and intelligence, all that in addition to her being easy to watch. Also featured was Vinton Hayworth, as a believably cynical publisher's press agent, and effective in a smaller part, that of the sweet little girl back home, was Betty Caulfield.

Story of the honest writer's whirl in the big city, and his eventual return to the simple values of a western town, made an interesting yarn. It included some satiric jibes at the Gotham rat race, publishers' truth-flouting publicity for their tomes and the small-towner's innocence of Gotham's free-spending way of life. One scene, in which the author was interviewed on "See The People," spoofed video programs and another ribbed the illiterate, pushy femme gabbers. If some NBC personalities don't have a sense of humor, producer Fred Coe hasn't endeared himself to them with those caricatures.

Fred Waring displayed a fine Italian hand in his Sunday (26) show especially since more than half the time on that display was devoted to music from that country. Result was a highly colorful and melodic hour which provided such tunes as "Santa Lucia," "Tarantella," "Carnival of Venice" and a few others. The magnum opus was a highly flamboyant arrangement of Tschaikowsky's "Caprice Italien" by Stuart Churchill which called for use of the full orchestra and chorus.

The Waring organization, recently, has been going in for an increasing number of adaptations from classics with various members of the staff penning lyrics to the evergreens. In the case of "Caprice" the result was highly interesting and provided a tune that deserves a permanent spot in Waring's catalog.

Per usual, the production and costuming were excellent. The soloists, including Jane Wilson, Stuart Churchill, Gordon Goodman, Joanne Wheatley et al., gave good accounts of themselves to provide another pleasing hour in what has generally been an excellent series.

Perry Como returned to NBC-TV's "Supper Club" Sunday night (26) after a short vacation but, even with his return, the show had more of a vaudeo format than it's ever presented before. With three guest acts during the half-hour, the show lost some of that informality which Como imparted to it previously, when he could wander through its modified revue setting. Singer wowed as usual, in the three standard tunes he gave out with, and the surrounding talent was good.

With the Fontaine Sisters following Como on the vacation circuit this week, Bill Norvas and the Upstarts, a group comprising three men and two gals, took over the choral vocalizing. Doing the same type number that they previously displayed in their nitery bookings, they looked good before the cameras. Marion Hutton and Jack Douglas, new husband and wife team, clowned amiably with Como in a satiric translation of a French tune and then scored with their own skit depicting the way they first met. Beatrice Kraft Dancers, given a neat production background, were good in a single routine. Show withal was okay, but would be considerably better if it abandoned that vaudeo kick for more of the basic spontaneity.

As part of its weekly news review on Du Mont, Newsweek is branching out with an occasional production of documentaries on major current events. Titled "Casebook of Treason," the initial show focussed on the espionage trials involving Alger Hiss, Judith Coplon and Klaus Fuchs. The result was an interesting but overcharged exploration of these affairs.

The nature of the presentation was designed to have more drama than depth. With John Daly as commentator, using highly loaded verbiage, the first part of the program sought to explain the motivation of the atomic scientist, Fuchs, with old newsreel clips of the Nazi regime. The total effect of the brownshirt goosestepping, the background music and Daly's vivid language tended to generate a vague fear and excitement only loosely connected with the specific case.

The second half, however, was more penetrating, but also less melodramatic. Three ex-Communists, including Whittaker Chambers, star witness in the Hiss trial, attempted to probe the mentality of the Communist Party members and Soviet agents. Chambers gave a moving and persuasive account of his own predicament as an underground agent for the Soviets. Hilda Massing, former wife of the German Communist leader, Gerhardt Eisler, also spilled the beans but with a superficial approach. Final guest was escaped Soviet airman Peter Pirogov who, speaking in Russian via translation, gave an eloquent plea for the restoration of freedam in his home country. Windup of the show irrelevantly tagged on a dramatization of the choice before the world: either the A-bomb or the United Nations. The last five-second shot of an atomic explosion almost eclipsed the rest of the show.

Robert Montgomery's production of "Male Animal" on NBC-TV's "Lucky Strike Theatre" Monday night (27) was a workmanlike, professional job but one which lacked much of the slick production of the preceding plays in the series. Evidently in an attempt to hold the budget on the show down to its original confines, "Animal" utilized only one set, the living room of the college prof's home, which forced Montgomery to depend on sound effects and the actions of the cast for whatever sweep was provided.

Elliott Nugent, who co-authored the original Broadway play with James Thurber and also starred in the original production, repeated his role of the professor. For some reason, he attempted to impart too much nonchalance to the part, with the result it was difficult to believe a guy could be so naive and still hold his position as a liberal instructor in a big midwestern university. Martha Scott fared much better as his wife, managing to evoke considerable appeal. Betty Ann Nyman was okay as Miss Scott's kid sister, but both Donald Curtis, as the ex-All American, and Jack Hartley, as the narrow-minded trustee,

Inside Television

Kenyon & Eckhardt television production staff is currently huddling to determine how to operate with the "Ford Theatre" series when it goes on a once-weekly basis next fall. Tentative plans call for the establishment of two separate production units, which would provide for the same length of rehearsal and pre-broadcast preparation that the series has had on its alternate week basis until now. Agency, however, is trying to ascertain whether it's possible to overlap any in the administrative setup for the show to preclude the necessity of doubling the total budget.

For the presentation of "Uncle Harry" in the Ford series last Friday night (24) via CBS, incidentally, it has been revealed that the final fade-out shot, showing star Joseph Schildkraut ambling down a long corridor, was actually lensed in the open hallway between the CBS studios in Grand Central Terminal, N. Y. To get the feeling of infinity desired for the scene, which was to simulate a prison corridor, producer Winston O'Keefe and director Marc Daniels lined the walls with muslin and set a single light atop the ceiling. Preceding set was built right at the doorway, so Schildkraut could exit from the warden's office at the prison directly into the corridor.

Despite a standout fourth quarter sales in television receivers during 1949, Avco Manufacturing Co.'s net take during the year was adversely affected by a slump in set sales during the summer months, according to prez Victor Emanuel in his annual report to stockholders this week. As a result, the company showed a net for the year of $4,150,466, equal after preferred dividends to 54c a share on common stock, as compared with $7,913,736, or $1.11 per share in the preceding year.

Avco also owns radio stations WLW, Cincinnati, and its TV sister station, WLW-T, as well as WLW-Day, Dayton, and WLW-C, Columbus. Income statement does not break down the broadcast operation from other Avco subsidiaries but Emanuel pointed out that "efforts to establish leadership in this young and rapidly-growing industry (TV) have required substantial expenditures and it is expected that telecasting operations during the forthcoming year will result in a net loss." Revenue from WLW, he said, "proved satisfactory."

Motorola also issued its year-end report this week, showing net earnings for the year of $5,280,196, equal to $6.60 per share. According to prez Paul V. Galvin, comparative figures for 1948 are not available since all financial information for prior years was reported for the parent company alone. Galvin noted the difficulty of forecasting sales volume of video receivers for 1950, since the last quarter of 1949 accounted for approximately 45% of the entire year's sales but, he said, sales at the beginning of 1950 are "at a much higher level than at the start of 1949."

Through a three-way deal with Chevrolet and NBC television, Universal Pictures, first of the major film companies to go in for TV packaging, succeeded this week in obtaining a kinescope audition of its initial show for only the cost of a scriptwriter. Show was an adaptation of "Three Smart Girls," one of the early Deanna Durbin starrers produced for U by Joe Pasternak, which was aired on NBC's "Chevrolet Tele-Theatre" series Monday night (27).

With Charles Winninger starring in the video presentation, the cost to U for a test kinescope would have run to $8,000 or more. United World Pictures, the company's video and 16m subsidiary, thus pacted with the Campbell-Ewald agency, which handles the Chevvy account, to produce the stanza live on the regular Chevvy series. Chevvy thus picked up the complete talent and production tab for the stanza and U obtained its kinescope, which it will now offer to prospective clients and agencies as a possible series.

While U owns complete rights to the property, the video adaptation nonetheless carried none of the original "Smart Girls" plot, incorporating only the lead characters. Adaptation was scripted by Peter Barry. U hopes the series will be the forerunner of other TV productions but is holding back on further plans until this one is sold.

EDUCATION BY TELEVISION

With Dr. John W. Taylor, Dr. Harvey C. Webster, guests; Harry Lukins, announcer Producer-director; Burt Blackwell
30 Mins., Sat. 7 p.m.
Sustaining
WAVE-TV, Louisville

Touted as the first college course for credit presented over any TV station in the world, "Education by Television" climaxes the "Education by Radio" project created and inaugurated by the Univ. of Louisville in collaboration with NBC, WAVE and WHAS. Opening telecast was sent out over the WAVE-TV band Saturday (18), and demonstrated that TV's advantages as a further attempt at mass education seems limitless.

Telecast teed off with some still pix of activities at the University of Louisville, scenes on the campus, various buildings, grounds, etc., with off screen narration by Harry Lukins. Pres. John W. Taylor then introed, to give some background info on the project. He stressed the point that in TV lies the answer to mass education off the university campus, as it extends higher education to those who are entitled to it, but can't for some reason attend formal university classes.

Dr. Harvey C. Webster, head of the University of Louisville's radio-assisted correspondence courses, and instructor for the present course in modern British fiction, brought some new techniques to the TV medium, but basically viewers had the classroom brought conveniently to their living rooms.

Teeoff session had panel of local persons, well versed in literary works, as well as students, who had taken part in the Great Books Series of discussions on local radio. Some 16 persons made up the class, with guests William Habich, Katharine C. See, Mrs. William Cutler, Mrs. James Kasden, Harry Fischer, Mrs. Beatrice Pearson, and Miss Marjorie Smith First novel considered was Joseph Conrad's "Victory," which was also dramatized Sunday (19) over the NBC network. The classroom discussion was smoothly handled by Dr. Webster, who has a sharp sense of humor, and kept the students alert as he probed for salient points to highlight the discussion.

Camera work was adequate, but arrangement of seating could be improved. At one point, femme student in a rear row was asking a question, but students in the front row were the only ones in camera focus. Result to the viewer was that a voice was heard, but only the faces of the front-rowers with deadpan expression was in view. Future telecastings may arrange the participants in staggered fashion, so that the camera can catch them when they are talking.

LET'S PLAY CHARADES

With Julian Trivers, m.c.; Kay Jones, Art Hunt, guests Producer: John Hutchinson
15 Mins.; Sun., 6:30 p.m.
GEORGE R. BENNETT CO.
WBEN-TV, Buffalo
(Ellis)

Preem (19) proved difficulty of putting on a show of this kind in 15 minutes. Actors Kay Jones and Art Hunt pantomime and two teams try to guess. Miming was good and guessers had little trouble geting right answer. Twice at-home viewers were confused when a smart team-member guessed charade quickly and only ones to hear answer were in the studio. Emcee Julian Trivers failed to repeat correct answer for viewers' benefit.

Show was marred seriously by three or four rather lengthy film and slide commercials. Two would have been plenty for a quarter-hour stint. This effort could be popular, if audience could be in on the answers and if commercials were toned down.

"Hi Ladies" has a fairly foolproof formula for gaining viewers. By having members of different women's clubs take part in the show with its twice-a-week schedule, over-the-back-fence plugging by "Hi Ladies" alumni and their friends should assure a sizeable audience in itself. But the program needs some work to supplement its natural draw.

Claude Kirschner handles the club ladies in genial fashion, keeping the show moving along. On

PAT N' JOHNNY

With Pat Tobin, Johnny Slagle; guests
Producer: John Pivol
Director: Don Hallmann
3 Hours, Mon.-thru-Fri., 2 to 5 p.m.
ADMIRAL CORP., participating
WXYZ-TV, Detroit

This informal, easy-going gabfest and platter program is the hottest thing in Detroit afternoon television right now and it is easy to see why.

It's designed so that housewives can glance at the screen once in a while, give a listen once in a while and still get their work done.

"We'll ring a bell when anything important comes up," Slagle said at the very start of the program caught, Friday (24).

Slagle, a disk jockey favorite here for years, is easy-going and likable. He does everything naturally and it projects naturally. Pat Tobin, a blond former model, works too hard at being casual, but, very much to her credit, she's hep enough to take a back seat and let Slagle carry the ball.

Pair sit behind tiny desks at one end of a small room with cages of animals and fish lining the walls at their sides. The single camera just has enough room to dolly back for full lensing of the pair. The audio equipment is in what used to be a shower.

Slagle got things started by blowing on a bosun's pipe, pointing at the screen and saying: "Don't stop whatever you're doing. When we think we have something interesting I'll blow this whistle or Pat will ring her bell. Pat ring the bell."

Then they chat awhile and call in their first guest, an Admiral dealer. They sit him down between them and ply him with questions, none of them of the quiz variety.

"Time for a record," Johnny says. He puts one on and the camera moves in for a closeup of rabbits, a canary, goldfish, hamsters and a Peruvian guinea pig.

Forty-eight hours after the Peruvian guinea pig—which looks like a rag mop and is called just that—was introduced on the program, 619 were sold in Detroit. Since the program went on the air two months ago, 10,000 hamsters have been sold.

Helena Dudas, star of the Detroit Civic Light Opera production "Annie Get Your Gun," walked in and told Pat 'n Johnnie what it was like to take over the lead after Billie Worth had collapsed opening-night.

Despite Slagle's advice to not interrupt what you're doing, there's plenty of evidence to show that the show gets more than casual looking and listening. One infallible bit of evidence is that it is rapidly reaching the saturation point as far as sponsors go. Tew.

MELODY SHOWCASE

With Rita Hackett, Peter Grant, Ann Ryan, Bob Shreve, Corky Robbins, Bettp Clooney, Gene Griffin, Joe Lugar's Orch
Producer: Jim Hill
Writer: Rita Hackett
30 Mins.; Sun., 7 p.m.
CROSLEY APPLIANCES
CROSLEY-TV, from Cincinnati

This Sunday supper musical refresher is the most pretentious video work originating in Cincy. It is smooth, fast moving and packs showmanship of major network caliber. Talent includes seasoned Crosley staffers.

Jim Hill's production is topnotch. Several sets are used and special backdrops spice atmosphere for theme of continuity with timely pointing. Similar application goes for demonstration plugs on Crosley TV receivers and refrigerators. Sponsorship locally is by the Modern Distributing Co. and Pogue's department store. For show relays to the two other Crosley video stations, the tagging is by the Miami Valley Distributing Co. on Dayton's WLW-D, and by Scioto Sales, Inc., on WLW-C in Columbus, O. Rita Hackett and Peter Grant attend to the blurbing in style.

Joe Lugar's full-complement orch does a swell job of backgrounding.

Stanza caught depicted railway travel to locales of featured songs. Corky Robbins, roly-poly Baldwin thumper and warbler, socked "Georgia On My Mind." Bob Shreve, above-par tenor, registered "It's a Lovely Day" in a duet with Betty Clooney, vivacious chirper. Shreve also supplies the small portion of comedy injection. In this instance he soloed "Boots and Saddles" while rolling a cigaret and toying with a lariat in cowboy costume.

Ann Ryan, standout songstress, took care of "April in Paris," with polished dramatics. Gene Griffin, handsome and up-and-coming tenor, teamed with Miss Clooney on "Wind and Rain in Your Hair." Shreve and Miss Ryan doubled on "Beyond Blue Horizon."

Miss Hackett and Grant emcee the proceedings quite cleverly. Koll.

THE MYSTERY CHEF

With John MacPherson
30 Mins.; Thurs., 4:30 p. m.
PHILCO
WNBT, from N. Y.

This show's only merit is the practical way in which it serves as a showcase for Philco appliances. Entertainment-wise it's a dud. Whether the housewives who turn on their video sets in the late afternoon are willing to devote a half-hour of viewing to learn new recipes is doubtful. It's also questionable whether show can obtain a good batting average against WCBS-TV's "Vanity Fair," broadcast at the same time.

A radio airer for a number of years, "The Mystery Chef" is now being televised over WNBT via a pickup from WPTZ in Philadelphia. Program is situated in a kitchen setting and spotlights the chef, John MacPherson, as he goes about preparing various dishes. Some necessary chatter relative to the cooking is also provided by MacPherson, who lacks the assurance and showmanship that a guy who has been around a mike as long as he has should possess.

On program heard Thursday (23), MacPherson showed viewers how to cook a meal inside of a half-hour. When completed the food looked appetizing enough, but not being able to partake in it was a let down. Product plugs were plentiful and effective, with a gas range and refrigerator bearing the Philco label in use throughout the program.

IN THE MORGAN MANOR

With Russ Morgan, Joe Venuti, Tennessee Ernie, Skylarks, Red Hall, Louanne Hogan, Smith Twins
Producer: Lou Place
Director: Dick Darley
30 Mins.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m.
Sustaining
KECA-TV, Los Angeles

Russ Morgan fronts his orchestra and handles his own emcee chore which undoubtedly proves beneficial to the layout. Initialer was a nicely paced all-musical venture sparked by acts which gave visual impact as well as high quality listening entertainment.

Morgan is thoroughly at ease handling the acts in vaude fashion. Maestro takes his turn behind his trombone and doubles at the piano dueting with Joe Venuti. Venuti does enough with a violin to pull anyone's interest but if this isn't enough, he tosses in a little mugging to aid his chore. Morgan also duets vocally with Louanne Hogan and allows chirp to follow through with a solo number which she carries off well.

Skylarks deserve top credit for making their vocal group a powerful visual group. Quintet combines vocals with choreography and comedy which show signs of being well rehearsed and well planned. Red Hall demonstrates final tonal quality in a trumpet solo and Smith Twins duet in okay fashion.

Lou Place has given layout strong production value with good sets and well worked script. Dick Darley handles cameras astutely though he, at times, is inclined to move cameras for pure effect disregarding the actual result of the excess movement on the show. Free.

MEET YOUR NEIGHBORS

With Clyde, Polly, Bud and Lee Dengler, Vivian Walton; announcer, Harry Smith Producer: Clyde Dengler
30 Mins.; Sun., 6:30 p.m.
LINTON'S RESTAURANTS
WFIL-TV, Philadelphia

As implied in the title, "Meet Your Neighbor" is a homey type show aimed at the family on Sabbath evening to woo them as potential diners in the Linton chain of restaurants. Clyde Dengler is a w.k. choral director in this area and his wife, known professionally as Polly Waters, is an entertainer. With their sons, Bud and Lee, they entertain with a "sing" in the family's living room.

Dengler Family "house guests" at the program caught (26) included a girl trio, a male quintet and a chorus of teenagers. They all help in vocalizing such familiars as "Comin' Through the Rye," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," "The Sleigh" and "Little Brown Church in the Vale." The serious young faces intoning the hymn "The Lord Is My Shepherd" made for some effective closeup work by the cameras.

Denglers inject some folksy humor into the proceedings by trying to see who can hold a note the longest, to the obvious delight of their young guests. Vivian Walton, known as "Auntie" on the show, is the piano accompanist. Commercials are handled by Harry Smith, who arrives as guest, and has some "Linton's coffee and cake." Menu and prices are shown in another commercial shot. Gagh.

NBC's 50G 'Saturday Night Revue' Gets Off to Rousing Video Preem

By GEORGE ROSEN

NBC-TV last Saturday (25) preemed its long-heralded, highly controversial "Saturday Night Revue," with its two-way Chicago-New York originations, taking over the two and a half hour 8 to 10:30 time segments. On the basis of what the camera revealed, the NBC video braintrusters have wrapped up a solid block of big-time entertainment and sales potentials.

With the premiere of this NBC "dream show," which finds the network sticking its video neck out to the tune of $50,000 a week, Saturday becomes the most competitive night in TV annals. They'll be watching the Hoopers and the Nielsens closely for the audience payoff, for such top-coin shows as DuMont's "Cavalcade of Stars" and CBS' Ed Wynn and the alternating "54th Street Revue" and Ken Murray programs are riding in the opposition time slots.

And if NBC's sock getaway show sets a pattern for future stanzas, it's understandable why DuMont has seen fit to squawk to the FCC with cries of "monopoly." For the entertainment voltage that went into the NBC premiere will unquestionably leave a big rating dent in the DuMont-CBS stellar vaudeo-comedy attractions. If, too, sales effectiveness lies in a show's entertainment quotient, NBC, on the basis of Saturday's teeoff, should have little trouble romancing bankrollers.

YOUR SHOW OF SHOWS

With Burgess Meredith, emcee; Gertrude Lawrence, Robert Merrill, Sid Caesar, Imogene Coca, Marguerite Piazza, Nelle Fischer, Jerry Ross, Clifford Guest, others Producer: Max Liebman
Director: Hal Keith
Writers: Mel Tolken, Lucille Kallen
Musical Director: Charles Sanford
90 Mins., Sat., 9 to 10:30 p.m. (EST)
NBC-TV, from New York

Because the FCC has ruled against monopolizing 150 minutes of cream time, the affiliates are only picking up half-hour segments of the show, with only the web's owned-and-operated stations going for the full ride. Wisely, NBC has patterned the two and a half hour layout so that it could be taken in smaller doses; to leave and come back to. Even with 20-20 vision a continuous 150-minute grind, no matter how boff the attraction, might tax the most ardent TVers.

Last Saturday's curtain-raiser was heavy on talent, array including Gertrude Lawrence, Burgess Meredith, Robert Merrill, Sid Caesar, Imogene Coca and Marguerite Piazza (from New York); and Jack Carter, Franchot Tone, Cass Daley, Benny Baker, Donald Richards and Dorothy Claire, (from Chicago). That's talent in spades. That dull stretches are bound to crop up is inevitable, as occurred last week, but it's to the credit of NBC's video impresarios that these lapses on both the Chi and N. Y. originated programs were kept to a minimum so that there was an almost continuous bounce to the diversified layout.

Actually, NBC has come up with nothing startling or revolutionary in terms of entertainment. Rather, the Saturday night innovation stems from translating the marathon performance into a fresh sales technique to invite advertisers at low cost.

The Chi origination, which occupied the 8 to 9 stretch, was taken up by the "Jack Carter Show" from the NBC-leased Studebaker theatre, and adhered to the now standardized TV vaudeo formula, while the N. Y. 90-minute presentation (9 to 10:30) was in essence an elaboration of Max Liebman's former "Admiral Broadway Revue," with Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca as regulars, and with emcee Burgess Meredith, Gertrude Lawrence (at $5,000 per guest shot) and Robert Merrill as added starters for the getaway show.

"Saturday Night Revue" was good because it had pace, taste, variety, which spanned comedy, opera, ballet, music (though for greater diversification there could have been a dramatic insert somewhere along the line). But notably (and of major consequence in terms of future productions), the program's major assets were derived from the mainstays—namely, Carter on the Chicago end, and Caesar and Miss Coca on the New York show, rather than reliance on the guests. All three were in rare form on the preem, Carter probably never having shown to better advantage. Carter had a firm grasp on the Chi situation and if DuMont is inclined to feel miffed over the loss of Carter on its top rated "Cavalcade," the fact that he's moved into the opposition Saturday column in boffola form isn't going to assuage matters.

It's regrettable that the Chi hour finaled with a tired quiz skit for it definitely belied what had gone previously. Cass Daley, for example, showed up to good advantage, particularly in her dueting with Carter and in her "Good Man Is Hard to Find" solo. The major "can-can" production number was strictly bigtime in the costuming and choreography. Franchot Tone, as part of a running gag, showed up twice as a trigger man for the "Comedians Protective Assn." to put the finger on Carter to use "CPA" laugh material, but it wasn't particularly funny and could be written off as negative guesting. The brief Benny Baker comedic insert was in a pleasanter vein, Donald Richards (ex-"Finian's Rainbow"). Dorothy Claire, blonde looker with a voice, and the Johnson Bros., doubling from "Kiss Me, Kate" lent some high moments. But mainly Carter was always around with the hypo needle.

That the show took on almost immediate added values with the N. Y. origination wasn't surprising, with the Caesar-Coca contribs, some magnificent and imaginative dance production numbers and the overall pacing as the outstanding elements. Maintaining the same qualitative payoff on a week-in-week-out attraction poses a herculean problem.

Somehow Burgess Meredith as emcee failed to capture the once-over-lightly comedic pattern (often looking like he was getting ready to go into his "Winterset" histrionics), but, again, his Noel Cowardish-buffoonery in a skit with Gertrude Lawrence and Caesar was delightful nonsense.

In the face of the attendant hoopla and fanfare that brought her on, Miss Lawrence was somewhat of a disappointment. Those cameras, for one thing, can be pretty revealing, as they proved in her initial London slums skit. In the final quarter-hour segment Miss Lawrence was on again, this time showing up to better advantage, in a revival of an old patter song. But here was a "natural" for her "Jenny" number.

The show's good moments were many and varied—the Caesar-Coca opening pantomime bit suggestive of silent films; the delightful Caesar-being-interviewed, which was even topped by his man-walking-toward-the-altar bit. Or, again, Caesar as Columbus keeping his mutinous crew in check—here, indeed, is a fine, new comedy talent with a skillful TV know-how. Miss Coca as well was keyed to some of her top moments to date in video, as for example, in her Smorgasbord Song. Seemingly, hereto, TV has finally proved Miss Coca's metier although she has long been a comedienne of much promise.

Robert Merrill guested to advantage, soloing in the "Whiffenpoof Song" and scoring with Marguerite Piazza in some "La Traviata" arias, a scene which got some good production trimmings.

With Nelle Fischer and Jerry Ross in the major dancing roles, the "Main Street USA" ballet of the crinoline era; the "Sweet Betsy From Pike" ballet, with the choreography patterned to the Americana folk song idiom, and the closing "Dangerous Dan McGrew" production all added up to some of the show's most refreshing moments. Frederick Fox's settings, James Starbuck's choreography and Paul duPont's costumes rate a particular nod. The camera work, incidentally, notably in the dance sequences, was often remarkable.

CBS color as a "mechanical' system. Columbia's process is neither mechancial nor electronic, he declares, and can use either RCA or CTI apparatus. CBS uses the whirling disk, he explains, because it produces a good color cheaply. If a single tube is developed, it would take the place of the disk, eliminate the need for magnifying lenses, and permit any size screen.

On the basis of Murphy's thinking, the RCA tube would thus prove a boon to the CBS system and help toward its adoption. Would RCA develop a tube which would help the CBS cause? Murphy thinks that would happen anyway.

He sees it this way. By the single tube, RCA hopes to develop a simple direct view receiver which will eliminate its present complicated and expensive mirror sets and make possible color receivers at a lower price. But if it worked better for CBS than for RCA it would still sell the tubes and license them to other manufacturers who would incorporate them in new color sets.

If the CBS system were adopted, Murphy says, CBS would enter into the color picture only at the camera end. It would be up to the manufacturer to use the tube in new color sets and conversion of existing sets (by attachment of a disk or substitution of the black and white tube by the color tube plus circuit changes) would be the problem of servicing companies.

Murphy doesn't feel the existing 5,000,000 sets should be a serious factor in the situation if people could get new color sets. If the CBS system were authorized, he believes that most existing sets would be converted during the next two years but that it would be a temporary conversion until the owners could afford new color sets.

Regarding RCA contentions that Columbia's 405 line color degrades the present television standard, Murphy declares that CBS color achieves more resolution more "usable" definition than can be obtained by RCA's 525-line dot sequential system. At the normal viewing distance from the receiver, he claims, the higher definition isn't "appreciated" by the eye.

But resolution is only one of the elements in color. There are other considerations, he observes, such as fidelity and ability to carry over the coaxial, which are important.

Murphy contends that adoption of the CBS system would involve no hardships to broadcasters. The network would feed color programs and it would cost the affiliates nothing to carry it, he says. Competitive advantages would spur stations to offer the programs, he feels certain, and to boast of it.

for the nice bouquet

"Our Bouquet goes to Theo Goetz for his deeply moving and authentic performance of the pivotal role in 'The Karpoldi Letter' on television Sunday night (Feb. 19). His long years of experience in the theatre gave him complete mastery over the new medium of television, especially in extreme closeups, where his hands and eyes added impact to his portrait of the victim of Iron Curtain 'justice.' Better than headlines, Theo Goetz has told at least his audience the truth behind the 'confessions' that always follow indictments in an Iron Curtain court."

WGN-TV Claims It Did The Nixing on Fight Cards

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Miffed by statements from promoter Mitchell Sandler that he was cancelling the Monday night WGN-TV telecasts of the Marigold Gardens fight card, Frank Schreiber, WGN-TV general manager, said last week the cancellation was the other way around, with the station doing the nixing effective March 13.

Because of the poor quality of the fights, the station had attempted to get out of the Marigold contract as early as Feb. 1, Schreiber said.

Time opened up by the cancellation has been sold to McCarthy Motors for a half-hour variety show at 9 p. m. and to the Evans Fur Co. for a feature film filling up the remainder.

street studios, which, together with use of a remote location for the preceding program, will help ease the still-pressing problem of space shortage. Miss Norris' show is packaged by the Wilbur Stark-Jerry Layton indie production firm.

According to McFadden, NBC may eventually start network programming at 4 p. m. daily instead of the 5:15 at which it presently tees off. When that happens, the local operation may run continuously from 10 a. m. until 4. But, McFadden said, that probably won't occur for at least a year. WNBT was on a modified daytime schedule for about four months early in 1949, but dropped the shows when they failed to pay off. TV program manager Jack Reber will handle the new daytime assignments.

With Miss Norris switching to WNBT, DuMont's WABD plans to replace her with a group of five or six women, each a specialist in her particular field. Each is to appear on the morning show two or three times a week.

Mass campaign is believed to spotlight how much success of the show can mean to the web as a profit-earner.

In its direct campaign to the public, NBC is concentrating on the slogan, "The kind of television you like best—on the night you want it most." Web by-passed national magazine ads, since the show won't be kinescoped for nationwide coverage. Newspaper ads ran in the N. Y. Times, Herald Tribune and Journal-American, the Cleveland Plain-Dealer, Chicago Tribune and Washington Times-Herald. Follow-up ads may be taken this week, and the o.&o. stations, including WNBT in N. Y., may take space in other papers in those cities.

cover the first year's losses. Then it decided it should have another $200,000 to protect its investment. An act authorizing issuance by the city of the additional certificates was passed by the Florida legislature last May.

Commission counsel contend that FCC's refusal to grant an extension to Raytheon Mfg. Co. Boston should govern in the Jacksonville case. In the Raytheon situation, financial difficulties, later removed, were given as the principal reason for delaying construction.

The agency legalites, in taking exceptions to the examiner's findings, declare that the city commissioners have been vacillating on the project, that they have made no commitment to sell the necessary certificates, and that they haven't even decided what amount should be sold. The city's promise that it will complete construction within six months of an okay to go ahead, they claim, is a "tardy representation" which dosen't justify an extension.

WJAX received its TV permit in August of 1948. It estimated the cost of constructing the station at $255,000. A tentative affiliation with NBC was entered into last July.

tions," the government publication reported, "much of the work will be handled by the same persons now doing similar types of work at sound stations. In many cases, commercial departments, publicity departments and clerical forces may only have to be enlarged slightly to handle TV business . . Outlets which mostly relay network programs or use films will need few program employees."

Even in N. Y., although TV has brought work to many, the overall employment figure has risen only a relatively small degree. The CBS N. Y. staff in 1945, according to personnel dept. data, was 1,467 people. The January, 1950, staff numbered 1,597—which means that with the coming of television only 130 employees were added. Reason for smallness of the figure is that a number of the 1945 activities were eliminated or reduced and some staffers are covering both AM and TV. According to the Labor Dept., the networks "have only a very limited number of employees who are assigned full-time to TV operations."

Non-Gotham stations surveyed by Pack and Ranson reported much doubling in brass. Directors also write, secretaries arrange programs, cameramen script ad copy, technicians serve as stage managers, engineers learn all phases from shading to boom work. Most jack-of-all-trades activity, however, is in lower bracket jobs, and one secretary was found also working as bookkeeper, model and femme gabber.

WBKB's Graff and other industryites feel that doubling is an evil which should be eliminated. It's also pointed out that as video develops there will be fewer combination men and more specialists.

Getting a job in TV, the videocasters stress, generally means starting at the bottom of the ladder, in a spot that offers an opportunity to learn. The most important requisite, they feel, is imagination—the mentality that create ideas, programwise and productionwise and that is adaptable to the flexible patterns of TV. And while they don't see an immediate boom of job opportunities, they feel that lifting of the TV freeze will create new openings.

caricatured their roles. John Gerstad and Jack Le Sueur were good in lesser roles.

Norman Felton's direction was up to the top-quality par he set for the two previous shows in the series and John Gart's music was sufficiently noisy. Withal, the play's motif, based on the furor aroused by the prof's decision to read a speech by Bartolomeo Vanzetti in his English class, suffered from the more complex political problems that have arisen since the famed Sacco-Vanzetti case.

New York City's fight against venereal disease was given its first television boost Monday night (27) as part of the "This Is Your City" series via the N. Y. Daily News' WPIX. Fifteen-minute roundup of the dangers of VD and the city's fullscale campaign against its spread represented a good public service job on the part of the station and the city's television production unit.

Participants in the show, which took the form of a studio discussion, were recruited from among the workers and medicos helping the city in its campaign. They presented a knowledgeable review of the dire effects of the disease and punched home their message of the number of free aid stations provided by the city for any sufferers. Ed Stasheff directed for WPIX, with Cliff Evans producing.

WCAU Bible Readings

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.

WCAU has launched a series of nightly five-minute Bible readings by prominent laymen to be continued throughout the Lenten season.

Broadcast by the Evening Bulletin station as a public service, the Bible readings are heard Monday through Saturday from 11:10 to 11:15 p.m. Cooperating with the station are the Philadelphia Council of Churches, the American Bible Society and the Central YMCA.

H-R REP ADDS KMPC, VICE HEADLEY-REED

H-R Representatives, new outfit launched by Frank M. Headley and Dwight S. Reed after they left Headley-Reed two weeks ago, has taken on KMPC, Los Angeles, which Headley-Reed previously represented. Latter company's release of KMPC came on the eve of FCC hearings on charges of news-slanting by the G. A. Richards stations.

H-R Representatives may also pick up a few more station contracts in the next two weeks. Meanwhile it has opened offices in Chicago and San Francisco.

Headley-Reed has expanded its AM staff in New York with William Kost, formerly of NBC; Jack Hardingham, of WOV, and Dan Ferris, of McGilvra. Don Severn, ex-Young & Rubicam and Kenyon & Eckhardt, has been added to the TV division. Ira Morton and Frank Rice have been added to the Chi office.

Stafford Elected Prexy Of Illinois B'casters

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 28.

Harold Stafford, of WLS, Chicago, was elected president of the Illinois Broadcasters Assn. at the annual meeting here last week.

Other officers named were Leslie C. Johnson, WHBF, Rock Island, vice-president; Ray Livesay, WLBH, Mattoon, secretary-treasurer, and Charles R. Caley, WMBD, Peoria, director for three-year term.

About 50 members of the state association attended, representing 35 Illinois stations, heard the address of Richard P. Doherty, director of employe-employer relations for NAB.

Club," "Philco Playhouse" and "Garroway at Large." With such a variety of top-rated shows to choose from, the webs have found little trouble in luring a top-sized audience to their sets on Sundays.

How Sunday night will hold up in the face of the new emphasis being placed on Saturdays by DuMont, NBC and CBS remains to be seen. Saturday night has long been considered the one night in the week when most of the public wants to get outside their homes. If the video webs can provide a good enough attraction to keep them glued to their sets, it is believed Saturday will have little trouble overtaking Sunday as the top TV sets-in-use night of the week.

rangement." SAG, in turn, tagged TVA's proposals for joint membership meetings and mediation as "negative" in character.

Both sides, meantime, are pushing their organizational drives in the TV field. SAG is expected to step up its campaign in the east among vidpix producers after it lines up the Coast producers in the field. Prime objective of SAG is an agreement with Hal Roach in order to set up a pattern for the industry. TVA is slated to present its recently formulated wage scales to the networks following approval by TVA's membership.

important in TV than in AM, the reps feel, which will help the independently-owned stations. But they also see the webs claiming a much larger proportion of a station's time in TV than in AM. And they object to a king-size program such as NBC-TV's because it is luring coin away from the spot field and filling time that stations could sell for spots through the reps.

NARSR says it recognizes the value of web shows, because around good chain-produced programs the stations can sell lucrative availabilities. But it sees in the webs' move-in a "danger to what is obviously a healthy future for spot television."

Inside Stuff—Radio

A cross-the-board program direct from the Israel consulate in New York city will be aired daily at 6:15-6:25 p.m. by WLIB, as part of indie's Israel-slanted format. Stanza will feature news from the consulate's wire, interviews with officials and persons going to and from the Holy Land and answers to queries sent in by listeners.

Sam Elfert, WLIB program topper, and Isaiah L. Kenen, information director for the consulate, will handle the program.

Luncheon last Thursday (23) tossed by the National Conference of Christians and Jews to kudos Elaine Carrington drew plenty of web, agency and sponsor brass. The soap opera scripter drew a special individual award from the NCCJ for her work in promoting understanding between racial and religious groups through her daytime strips, which have been on the airwaves for 18 years.

Broadcast industry generally, from the small station up to big chain, was lauded by the speakers for its efforts to further inter-group brotherhood.

WEWS' 2-Hour Hoopla For Cleve. Heart Fund

Cleveland, Feb. 28.

With the city's newsmen sparking the drive, the greatest turnout of V.I.P.'s in this area staged a two-hour benefit telecast over WEWS on behalf of the Heart Fund drive.

The show, which originated from both the Press Club and WEWS, ran for three and one-half hours and drew contributions totaling $10,000.

Particularly active in lining up talent were S. P. Severino of the News and George Condon, radio editor of the Plain Dealer. In more than 50 acts, political rivals from Greater Cleveland present duets; labor - management opponents staged love feasts, and talent from nightclubs did their bit to round out the show.

Jack Owens, appearing at Hotel Statler's Terrace Room, emceed from the Press Club; Pink Hunter, program director WHK, did similar chores at WEWS.

Press Club officials hope to make the show an annual highlight of the Heart Fund campaign.

Cleveland — Fuller & Smith & Ross ad agency has set up a central department to handle films, radio and television, with Richard F. Reynolds, director. John James, formerly of the separate radio group, has been named associate director of radio.

McConnell's Homecoming

Greensboro, N. C., Feb. 28.

Joseph H. McConnell, president of NBC, will come to Greensboro. March 9, to address the annual dinner meeting of members of the Chamber of Commerce.

McConnell, who was picked from the top command of RCA a few months ago to direct the reorganization of the NBC as its prexy, was reared at Davidson, N. C., where his father was dean of Davidson College.

Livington's Chi Post

Louis Livingston has been appointed head of the television department of Filmack Trailer Corp., according to Irving Mack, prez of Filmack.

Livingston was formerly promotion manager of the Chi Herald-American, Philly Evening Bulletin and N. Y. Journal American.

WPTZ'S MILK SPONSOR

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.

Sylvan Seal Milk, Inc., one of the largest local distribs of dairy products, makes its debut in the television medium on WPTZ, with the sponsorship of the hour-long "Hopalong Cassidy" films, Fridays, 4 to 5 p.m.

Account was placed by Al Paul Lefton agency.

Attract New Clients To DuMont 'Matinee'

Recent revamping of DuMont's two-hour cross-the-board "Shoppers Matinee" led this week to the pacting of three participating bankrollers for the series for local N. Y. spotting. New format of the daytime show spotlights entertainment along with the shopping service and is designed to provide availabilities for local participating sponsors on affiliate stations.

Trio of bankrollers include General Electric Distributors, through the W. N. Scheer agency; Arthur Brown Stores, through the Reiss agency, and the Famous Vacuum Shops, through Van Wood Associates. GE is to be plugged by Minnie Jo Curtis, femcee on the show; Brown products will be spotted in the Gordon Dilworth segment, and the vacuum cleaners on the Phil Hanna segment.

WCBS Intime

Continuing to expand its late evening programming, WCBS-TV, key N. Y. flagship of the CBS video web, has set a new series of intime musicales for the 11 to 11:15 Friday night slot starting this week (3). Titled "After Hours Club," the show is to be sponsored jointly by Philco TV and Winston TV Stores of Brooklyn.

Pianist Joe Bushkin and disk jockey Fred Robbins comprise the permanent cast, with the format featuring new tunes, acts by guest personalities and informal gabbing. Series is packaged by the new indie firm of Ford Bond and Albert Black, making their video bow with this one.

Ed & Pegeen's Switch

Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald start this week to do two half-hour shows weekly for WJZ-TV, N. Y., instead of one half-hour and two quarter-hour stints. They'll be heard Wednesdays and Fridays at 7:30 p.m.

Reason for the switch is to accommodate camera crews with the return of "Blind Date" to ABC-TV.

IT HAPPENS all the time—to WOR. Take the case of this great station's newest star—Rudy Vallee. Hardly had the word gotten out that this magnetic master of song, charm and back-stage story held court every weekday when thousands of women from Maine through North Carolina were ladies in waiting. Waiting for "The Rudy Vallee Show", Monday through Friday at 11:15 A.M.

And what's more—the first show had barely broken into thousands upon thousands of WOR homes when such advertising wizards as Colgate-Palmolive-Peet, Kellogg and American Home Foods reached for time on the show!

This is just the beginning! What Rudy Vallee is doing for these sponsors he can do for you—at very low cost.

CALLING ALL DETECTIVES
With Paul Barnes; Frank McCarthy, announcer
Producer: Jerry Joss Features
Director: Larry Kurtz
15 Mins.; Thurs., 10:15 p.m.
Sustaining
WOR, N. Y.

"Calling All Detectives" attempts to cram a capsule whodunit and a telephone quiz game into a 15-minute airer. Idea seems a good one on paper, but the time element appears too strong a hurdle for the show to overcome judging by the initialer Thursday (23). Preem recounted the efforts of a private eye who pins the murder of a wealthy executive upon a business associate of the deceased.

Only about 10 minutes were available for the setting to be described, the clues distributed and characters established before the denouement. Thursday's installment gave the impression that Paul Barnes, who portrayed the sleuth, was on a veritable treadmill trying to keep up with the script.

Quiz portion of this transcribed show has announcer Frank McCarthy phoning people at random in various sections of New York. If an individual correctly answers a query based upon the preceding mystery playlet, he's eligible to bid for the jackpot (a three-way TV set). This phase of the opening stanza proved particularly weak since only two calls were completed.

Before "Calling All Detectives" is able to command wider listenership, crisper story material will have to come off the typewriters of the several freelance scripters who turn out this series for Jerry Joss Features. Show, incidentally, became a Monday-thru-Friday series in the same 10:15 p.m. slot as of Monday (27). Gilb.

WIN, PLACE OR SHOW
With Roy Shudt
55 Mins.; Mon-thru-Fri., 4.05 p.m.
Participating
WROW, Albany

Roy Shudt, WROW sportscaster, has been presenting a modified disk jockey show, in southwestern style, for 10 weeks. Shudt is best known as a caller of harness races at Saratoga and in California. He mixes conventional spinning of platters with sports news, stories, commentary and chatter, plus spot announcements for various sponsors and a news period. Block runs 55 minutes three days a week and 85 minutes the remaining (when kiddie cliffers do not hang on the Mutual web).

It is a listenable program, smoother on some occasions than on others. The hypos—principally an offer of tickets to sporting events for first dialer phoning correct answer—draw responses, but unduly tie up the telephones, and Shudt's air time, on certain days. In this and in his chatter, miker shrewdly localizes, with plenty of name tabbing.

Shudt possesses a rather pleasant voice, a friendly personality and an engaging chuckle. Longer preparation would improve the show—he has a sponsored sports stint at 6:15. Technical side could be sharpened. Jaco.

Radio Followups

Tommy Bartlett's smoothly polished NBC "Welcome Travelers" continues to be a bright morning spot. The format remains essentially unchanged since the strip's inception—travelers passing through Chicago interviewed at the Hotel Sherman College Inn. But adequate pre-show prepping and careful interviewee selection assure an even flow of interest-holding activities despite the Monday through Friday schedule.

The advance culling of the guests to be interviewed not only produces subjects who aren't struck dumb at the sight of a live microphone but, more importantly, produces subjects with a reasonably good tale. Under Bartlett's practiced handling, the pre-edited guest stories make up in interest and pace what they may lack in spontaneity.

On the show caught (23), special guest Clarence Nash, who as the voice of Donald Duck in the Disney productions is an old pro in the laugh-producing business, found heavy competition in one traveler identified only as "Chauncey the Bear Hunter."

Carnation Contented Hour via CBS Sunday (26) was a welcome contrast to the welter of detective dramas cluttering up the kilocycles. Though its musical format is a conventional one, the show is brightened by a guest warbler policy which helps vary the weekly layout. Ilene Woods, the voice of "Cinderella," and crooner Jerry Wayne, Sunday's visitors, proficiently caroled several numbers, backed by Ted Dale's band.

Tele Reviews

the initial airing (21) from WGN-TV, he had some trouble playing to both the camera and his guests. The segment was spiced by guester Jackie Green, who warmed up the ladies with impersonations of Eddie Cantor and Jimmy Durante.

The commercials, live and film, were of good quality and the guests followed through neatly with impromptu plugs. Camera action was occasionally tardy in moving around with the emcee.

The show would be improved if some device, perhaps a gag question, could be found which would liven up the interviews and make them less a hurried parade of names and faces. Dave.

BUFFALO'S AMATEUR SHOW
With John Corbett, Anne Sheldon, guests
Producer: James Christensen
30 Mins.; Sun., 4:30 p.m.
VICTOR'S DEPT. STORE & BUFFALO ELECTRIC CO.
WBEN-TV, Buffalo
(Bowman & Block)

Preem caught (19) was the usual amateur show routine. Without John Corbett's suave, sure-footed handling, show might fall apart. Contestants get entry blanks at Victor's store, joint bankroller with Westinghouse distributor. Show plugs Westinghouse products sold at store. Commercials delivered by Anne Sheldon demonstrating electric iceboxes and TV sets were every bit as good as "Studio One" commercials for same co-sponsor.

Set for amateurs was well executed with city skyline in silhouet and flashing electric signs for sponsors. The seven performing amateurs were mediocre and pace of all was too slow. More attention could be given to choice of contestants to quicken tempo of this half-hour.

WWJ is owned and operated by the Detroit News.

In his complaint against WJR, one of several stations controlled by George A. Richards, Mazey said the union's advertising agency of Luckoff, Wayburn & Frankel had approached WJR, requesting a daily 15-minute period for discussion of the strike. WJR advised the agency that all the time they could possibly make available to the union was a single half-hour period a week. "This obviously was inadequate," Mazey said.

A spokesman for WJR termed the UAW complaint groundless. He said the station's management first heard of the union's request for time from news sources calling to get WJR's reaction to the Union's complaint to FCC.

Station's spokesman added that WJR strike policy is to provide equal opportunities to both parties to present their sides. "In this particular instance, neither side presented their viewpoints over WJR."

busters" on the air through the agency. Sponsor is also B&B's oldest and largest account (since 1929) and airs "Juvenile Jury," "Mama," "Father Knows Best," "When a Girl Marries" and "Wendy Warren and the News" through the agency. Some shows, such as "Portia Faces Life," plug products serviced by the two agencies. FC&B at present has no GF airers, but it's thought likely that in the expansion it may pick up some stanzas for the four trademarks it will be assigned.

GF has always been an exponent of broadcast advertising, since the early days of radio, when it backed Kate Smith and "Show Boat," and it has used quality shows rather than low-budgeters. Its bigger outlay for the year starting in September is viewed, therefore, as a welcome shot in the arm for broadcasting.

agreement as covering two writers who were owed $4,225. RWG exec. James Stabile differed with AF, and after a series of conferences all eight writers won coverage, getting from $525 to $7,285 apiece. Sum will be amortized over a 12-month period.

Pact with the agencies has been stalled, pending the RWG's certification before the National Labor Relations Board. Union filed papers in December, but NLRB hasn't acted yet. When pact is inked, retroactive pay back to '48 will have to be paid by agencies paying scribes under the minimums. At that time, individual shows will be examined to determine monies due the various writers.

Radio Writers Guild has also won a contract for four writers in the RCA-Victor recording division, which turns out the NBC Thesaurus.

Pact, which runs through Sept. 30, 1952, gives the scripters pay hikes of from 8 to 15%, with RCA picking up the tab for health insurance plan.

$25,144,279 Net For RCA in '49

Radio Corp. of America showed net profit of $25,144,279 or $1.58 per common share in 1949, according to the company's annual report released this week by Brigadier General David Sarnoff, chairman of board. This compares with net of $24,022,047 or $1.50 on the common in 1948.

Despite a gross income of $397,259,020, an increase of $39,641,789 over 1948, RCA net profit after all deductions was 6.3% of gross income as against 6.7% in 1948. Corporation paid out $10,081,404 in dividends during the past year, of which $6,928,604 was on the common shares. The fact that the company only paid 50c per share on the common last year plainly indicates how many shares of common currently are outstanding—13,881,016 shares.

RCA total earned surplus at the end of 1949 was $94,562,354, an increase of $15,062,875 over earned surplus at the end of 1948. Year was marked by considerable more outlay for additions to plant and equipment or $16,340,282 a boost of nearly $2,000,000 over 1948. Report to the board by Sarnoff and Frank M. Folsom, RCA prexy, pointed to the past year as having the highest sales in history of the corporation.

"Television's spectacular rise as a new service of mass communication, in which RCA has played a leading role, is without precedent in the industrial development of the U. S.," said their statement in part. "Television achieved the going rate of a billion-dollar-a-year industry, to become the first American industrial enterprise to move ahead so rapidly in so short a time."

It was pointed out that during February this year, RCA Victor produced its 1,000,000th television receiver. Also that the public demand for RCA TV sets at the end of the year continued to exceed the plant capacity. The impetus of TV has expanded the RCA Service Co. to include 4,300 employees, 90 television service shops and 2,500 service vehicles.

Although cancellation will mean loss of a half-hour of Saturday afternoon billings to CBS, the web isn't too disturbed, in view of the fact that it has been paying $600 a week for rental of a Mutual playhouse because of CBS program origination conflicts.

Borden exit will leave K&E agency with two radio attractions —Walter Winchell, on behalf of Hudnut, and "Mark Trail," on Mutual, for Kellogg's.

Mercury Sets Up Completely New A&R Staff; Geller, Carleton Come In

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Complete realignment of Mercury Records personnel has accurred as an aftermath of the Mitch Miller departure to Columbia. Setup, as cited yesterday (27) by president Irving Green here, has two musical directors, Harry Geller, who will locate on the Coast, and Joe Carleton, formerly of Varsity Records, who has been named a vice-president in charge of all eastern operations.

Geller will be given the title of musical director in charge of pop artists and repertoire. He will operate from the Coast, but will range the country to supervise important dates. Carleton will headquarter in New York in complete charge of eastern operations, including sales.

Norman Granz is in charge of all jazz, race and folk music. Under his supervision will be Murray Nash, head of hillbilly, and David Hall, in charge of classical. John Hammond has resigned as vice-president, and is reportedly going into the publishing business.

All five execs, Geller, Carleton, Granz, Nash and Hall, will be directly responsible to vice-president in charge of public relations and advertising Art Talmadge, who operates out of Chicago and who is Green's direct subordinate.

Geller will drop his recording activities for other firms, but continues his radio and film scoring. Carleton, in addition to his other duties, will supplement Geller's musical directorship as the need arises. When Geller is on the Coast and pop records are to be cut in the east, Carleton will supervise.

Miller's departure a month ago for Columbia Records left Mercury execs in a state of bewilderment. For a week, nothing happened. Then Green went into New York and came back without any comment. While rumors continued to fly, Talmadge met with Green and then flew to New York Thurs-

Percy Faith Joins Col. Records Staff

Percy Faith has been added to the Columbia Record staff in New York, in the post of musical director, assistant to Mitch Miller, head of pop artists and repertoire under Goddard Lieberson. Faith's position will call for him to run recording dates, conduct backgrounds for the labels singers and also to make recordings under his own name. For the latter chore, he has a regular royalty arrangement.

Faith succeeded Hugo Winterhalter, who shifted over to RCA-Victor in a similar capacity. He preceded Manie Sacks to RCA, whose place Miller took, moving over from Mercury.

CAPITOL TIES UP NICHOLS, BONANO

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Capitol Records, in recognition of the reemergence of Dixieland, has tied three of its two-beat combos to long-term pacts and in each instance given the crews a royalty deal. Red Nichols' Five Pennies, Pete Daily's outfit and Sharkey Bonano's crew are the recipients. Nichols and Daily are anchored here, Bonano is a current rage in New Orleans.

It is understood Nichols hereafter will receive the standard 5%-of-retail-sales-price cut on Cap waxings. Just what slices other bands will get is unknown. Both Nichols and Daily have been regularly cutting for Cap for more than three years, on flat rates per recording. Bonano was signed late last summer, when Cap's Dave Dexter went to New Orleans, found that some indie, locally lacquered Bonano biscuits were hot in jukes.

Kenton's Smash $18,600 In 2 Chicago Concerts

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Stan Kenton orch topped smash $18,600 in two concerts last weekend at the Chicago Opera House, playing at a $3.71 top. The new 40-piece band played to full house plus people sitting on chairs in the pit.

Weekend gross would have broken jazz concert record for the house, set on a previous Kenton concert, had management been able to place chairs on stage. In previous concert, 700 people sat on stage.

Decca to Launch Religioso Series

Decca Records will market a line of religious records March 20, after several months of preparation. New series, to sell for 75c—the same price as Decca pops—will be called the Decca Faith series and will be supervised by Leonard Joy, former head of Decca's Hollywood office. Top Decca stars will be utilized.

Initial release consists of Bing Crosby and the Ken Darby Choir doing four sides, "What a Friend We Have In Jesus," "He Leadeth Me," "Mother Dear, O Pray For Me" and "O Lord I Am Not Worthy." Andrews Sisters and Victor Young's orchestra made "In the Garden"-"Count Your Blessings"; Mills Bros., "Old Rugged Cross"-"In the Sweet By and By"; Jack Owens and Vesper Singers, "My Jesus, I Love Thee'-"Have Thine Own Way"; Red Foley, "Steal Away"-"Just a Closer Walk With Thee"; Ernest Tubb, "When I Take My Vacation in Heaven"-"Stand By Me"; Hamilton Quartet, "Now The Day Is Over"-"God Be With You"; plus one chimes and one organ record carrying the respective, "O Come and Mourn With Me Awhile"-"Stabat Mater," "Christ, The Lord Has Risen Today"-"O Filii Et Filiae."

Disks will go through regular Decca distributors, with gold on purple labels.

Dave Kapp to Coast; '16,000,000 Machines Still Need 78 RPMs'

Decca's recording chief, Dave Kapp, heads for the Coast for a month of disking. He recently returned with his wife from a first-time flying trip to London and Paris, mostly for pleasure.

Decca's excellent business with 78s causes the veepee to reiterate that "when the time comes to also add 45s we will do so, but right now apparently the 16,000,000 78 rpm machines in American homes seemingly need plenty of servicing with new recordings. Decca added LP (33 rpm) for its musicomedy and other albums some months ago.

Kapp recalls his late brother-founder Jack Kapp's credo about the fact that it's "what's in the groove that counts" as evidence that the public will buy what is on wax, and not because of any new speed. However, it can't be ignored that both RCA Victor and Columbia have done yeoman jobs merchandising and exploiting their own 45 and 33 rpm's, and thus created a new revitalized market for their own brands of recordings.

Decca's 12½c Divvy

Decca Records declared a regular quarterly dividend last week of 12½c per share on capital stock, payable March 28 to stockholders of record March 14.

Company's financial statement on the full year of 1949 is due in about 10 days.

IDEA REDUCES SONG'S CHANCES

Music publishers who have in recent months been acceding to the quest by recording companies for temporary "exclusive" rights to new tunes aren't happy with results so far. Practice of giving a copy of a new melody to one disk company and withholding it from others until the first comes out has a great many drawbacks balanced against the extra promotion likely to be given such a song by the disker who has it alone.

For years music publishers have agreed that it takes only one particular record to really make a hit; that followup disks by rival labels, even if there are many of them, don't do nearly as much of a buildup job as the first to hit. That is the angle that makes the "exclusive" cutting a huge risk. Nobody can tell whether the performances on that exclusive platter will be the one to make the song involved a hit. And if it doesn't show immediate sales strength upon release, the song is wasted. Because in that event the chances are that rival labels won't touch it at all. And the possibility of a secondary cutting that might have made the song a hit is thus removed.

Kern's Widow Bops Cap Disk Of Be-Bop 'Things'

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

It appears Capitol Records is stuck with a Charlie Barnet bebopped version of late Jerome Kern's melodic ballad, "All the Things You Are." Reportedly, label cannot get a license to release it, due to Mrs. Kern's dislike of the treatment of the tune.

Several times during past several years it is known that the widow of the composer has been irked considerably at some of the weird, jump or bop interpretations which were waxed of some of the best-known Kern works. Cap execs are reluctant to discuss situation, but fact remains that the Barnet biscuit has been dust-gathering for around a year, and even dealers can't induce a release of it.

It will be remembered that when Kern was alive he nixed Decca on a release of Glen Gray Casa Loma band jamming "Ol' Man River" on a disk. Version was made nearly 20 years ago. When Kern heard of it, he squashed it.

About four years ago the now-defunct Musicraft label tried to get a license from Max Dreyfus, who published Kern's works, to let Phil Moore do a jazz frolic on some of the Kern compositions, and Dreyfus nixed it.

Bernie Woods Becomes Flanagan's Personal Rep

Bernie Woods has resigned as music editor of VARIETY to become personal manager for Ralph Flanagan, the orchestra leader. He assumes his new post today (Wed.).

Woods has been associated with VARIETY for a number of years, covering all phases of the music, recording and allied industries.

Ethel Smith's Encore

Organist Ethel Smith has been signed for the Palladium, London, April 24 on the show with Tony Martin. Miss Smith's date is optional, since she's permitted to change the opening to June on three weeks' notice, and she may elect the latter. She played England and the Continent last season.

Miss Smith cut a couple of samba tunes with Guy Lombardo Orch for Decca this week.

AFM Into Squabble Between B'way Theatres, Local 802 on Bandshows

American Federation of Musicians has gotten into the new squabble between executives of Broadway deluxe theatres using stage shows and the AFM's N. Y. Local 802. Two factions have for weeks been negotiating on a compromise of 802's rule, established last summer as an answer to the Taft-Hartley Act and which bars "traveling" bands from playing the Capitol, Paramount, Strand or Roxy.

Local 802 execs insist that the theatres use combinations consisting of 802 cardholders. That, however, doesn't forbid the houses from hiring "traveling" bands, i.e., outfits made up even partly of non-802 musicians, so long as the theatre at the same time uses a group of all 802 members. Up until a week or so ago, the possibility of a compromise looked bright. However, within the past week an undisclosed source of irritation caused 802 to reiterate its original stand against traveling combos.

Willingness of both sides to compromise apparently was based on the theory that unless the deluxers were allowed to use traveling bands, which means the top names, then the stage show policies would have to be shut down entirely, which would hurt 802. There aren't enough all-802 groups of any b.o. consequence to sustain the policies for 52 weeks a year.

Meanwhile, Les Brown's orchestra is in a spot. Due into the Paramount theatre today (Wednesday) with the Bob Hope unit, Brown had been advised that he couldn't open under the 802 ban. His outfit is composed mostly of traveling men and, since he worked two days in New England Sunday and Monday (26-27), didn't have time to reorganize his combination to include all 802 musicians. No one professed to know, up until press time last night (Tuesday), what would happen.

Burke-Van Heusen Co. Managed by Jack Clark

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Jack Clark has been appointed general manager of Burke-Van Heusen, company operated by Johnny Burke and Jimmy Van Heusen. Offices shortly will be opened here and in N. Y.

Songwriters are now negotiating to permit Paramount's Famous Music Co. to publish all the tunes they write for Bing Crosby pix in the next five years. They'll still retain 50% of such copyrights, however, and, eventually, will slide these over into the B-VH catalog.

First tune their company will bring out will be "Lock Stock and Barrel," by Sammy Fain. Crosby recently waxed it for Decca with the Andrews Sisters.

RCA's LP Disk Price to Vary

RCA-Victor has set up an unique method of scaling retail prices of the 33 rpm Long Playing records it will put on sale March 15. Instead of establishing definite prices for different classes of the classical selections involved, or varying it according to the size and number of disks involved on a given number, RCA will peg retail costs on prestige and value of the selection and artist.

For example, a widely known selection conducted by Arturo Toscanini with the NBC Symphony Orchestra, on a 12-inch disk, might cost more than an equally well-known selection by a lesser known soloist. Or the soloist disk could have a higher retail price, if the soloist were Jose Iturbi, than a selection of lesser importance by a lesser known symphony outfit. Victor expects some dealer objections to the system, since it's likely that the latter will have to check price lists before quoting value to a prospective buyer.

Lowest retail price involved in the initial shipment of 33 selections is $3.85 as against the $2.85 which both Columbia and Decca ask for some of their LP sides. Highest Victor tab is $16.35 for a three-record (six sides) set.

Publisher Geo. Paxton Fulfills Old Capitol, Theatre, N.Y. Booking

Capitol theatre, New York, stuck for a band for the late March period because of N. Y. Local 802's insistence that "travelling" orchestras be barred from Broadway deluxe houses (see separate story), pulled an unusual deal this week. Remembering an old commitment with George Paxton, the Cap's booker, Sidney Piermont, arranged for him to play the two weeks, opening March 25. Only fly in the ointment is that Paxton is now a full-fledged music publisher. It'll be his last maestro date.

Paxton currently has the tune, "There's No Tomorrow," riding near the top of the tune heap, and previously had "I Wanna Go Home." And other tunes, already recorded, are coming up for exploitation. However, due to the old commitment he'll take two weeks out to play the house with a band composed of all 802 musicians.

Herbie Fields Exits RCA

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Herbie Fields has left RCA-Victor in a dispute over eight sides that Victor has held back from release. Fields has signed with London Records, and cuts four sides here next week.

He had been recording for Victor for the past three years.

Summer Band Spots' Early O.O.

Summer locations for dance bands are already coming alive. While few deals have been made so far, considerable discussion has gone on in the past week or so, and bookers feel that the unusually early interest stems from the heavy promotion job being done in recent months on the dance band business, a good deal of it due to Dixieland disks marketed by various top recording companies.

Steel Pier, Atlantic City, which for years has run on a full-week schedule, is undecided whether it will use name combos on weekends only this year. Meanwhile, it has bought Jimmy Dorsey's orchestra for the Easter weekend, April 8-9, for $4,500.

RCA'S REVIVAL OF TD'S DIXIELAND JAZZ

RCA-Victor is compiling a group of six Dixieland music recordings made by Tommy Dorsey's orchestra in 1935 and 1936 for release in an album titled "Dixieland for Dancing." It's in conjunction with the current upbeat of Dixieland and the disks represent a period when T.D. leaned heavily toward that style.

Among the disks selected for the album are the leader's two-faced recording of "Milenberg Joys," "Davenport Blues" and "Washboard Blues." Dorsey also recorded fresh Dixieland material last week in New York, which will be released on single disks.

Mills Music acquired western hemisphere rights to "The Whistling Bobby," British tune published by Keith Prowse Co., Ltd.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By BERNIE WOODS

Vaughn Monroe "Over and Over"-"It's Easter Time" (Victor). Two new pops, one seasonal and both good. Monroe may not be the type of singer that fits "Over," a waltz melody and a fine tune, but he does a swell job on it and could push it high. His "Easter" tune, written by disk jockey Sherm Feller (WCOP, Boston) is a neat thing that grows on a listener. Moon Maids assist on both.

Jimmy Dorsey "When You Wore a Tulip"-"Clap Hands, Here Comes Charlie" (Columbia). Dorsey appears to be on an exclusive Dixieland kick on disks. This pairing is again excellent, particularly the "Tulip" side, a lively, colorful performance with a vocal by Kenny Martin. It very likely will follow up on Dorsey's prior Dixie hits. "Charlie" sells nicely, with a vocal by Clair Hogan, but for some reason it doesn't have the same punch. It might have been wise to extend the brief clap-hands bit.

Georgia Gibbs "If I Knew You Were Coming I'd Have Baked a Cake"-"Stay With the Happy People" (Coral). Coral worked fast getting Miss Gibbs' "Cake" cooking and it's a really worthwhile version. It bounces the novelty tune smoothly and solidly, and the singer's smart handling is backed neatly by Max Kaminsky's Dixielanders. Flipover is a new pop by the writers of "Dear Hearts and Gentle People." It's a very similar idea, but at the same time a good one, with a chance to hit.

Danny Kaye "C'Est Si Bon"-"Wilhelmina" (Decca). Danny Kaye has tried gag disks and recently a straight vocal. This is a combination of the two ideas and they're okay. "Si Bon" is launched straight, with the Lee Gordon Singers backing the comic's vocal; this portion is fair and not likely to catch attention. However, Kaye then goes into what might be termed a satire on French singers and it picks up lustre. Whether the finish makes up for it all is anybody's guess. "Wilhelmina" is done similarly, the early straight vocal followed by Kaye's takeoff of an old Dutchman.

Eddie Fisher "Am I Wasting My Time On You"-"I Love You Because" (Bluebird). Eddie Cantor's protege continues to show up brightly on records. His work on the first side combines good vocalling with a good song, a combination which on this disk might help him immeasurably. Reverse, a pop with a hillbilly flavor, is equally well done.

Joey Nash "You're a Real Sweetheart"-"That's Right"; "It Isn't Fair"-"If I Forget You" (Happiness). These disks were made mainly because Nash did the original version of "It Isn't Fair" with Richard Himber's orchestra and it was felt he could share in the tune's revival. His work on "Fair" is okay, but in "You're a Real Sweetheart," presumably an old tune by Irving Caesar-Cliff Friend, Nash could have a sleeper. An unusually simple, good melody and lyric, he does it well, with a big assist from a Frankie Carle type of background pianist. Song could go. Other two melodies. "That's Right" and "If I Forget You," are okay, too. Sapphires quartet does one, Nash the other.

Connie Haines "How Come You Like Me Like You Do"-"Ol' Man Mose" (Coral). Miss Haines cuts consistently good disks. These are typical, lively, colorfully handled standards. "Do" is on a medium bounce beat; "Mose" side hits a faster rhythm pace with a vocal by Miss Haines that adds up to a solid jock side.

Roy Stevens "When Your Old Wedding Ring Was New"-"Sugarfoot Rag" (London). These are Stevens' initial disks. New band makes a good impression on wax. "Ring," a good tune, is smoothly performed and draws repeated spins. Stevens himself handles the vocal, good in a non-professional way, backed by a tasty arrangement. Stevens and Patricia Laird handle the reverse vocal, a good musical version of the novelty tune already in circulation.

Ella Fitzgerald-Sy Oliver "Don'tcha Go 'Way Mad"-"Baby, Won't You Say You Love Me" (Decca). Working with Sy Oliver on the first, Miss Fitzgerald has what may not be a hit side, but one to which jocks and jukes will find good reaction. It's different. "Baby" is a good thing, too; Miss Fitzgerald works with Oliver again and it's an example of what the singer can do with a song. It's from the film, "Wabash Ave." (20th-Fox).

Platter Pointers

M-G-M got out a two-faced cut of "In a Chinese Garden" by George Shearing's Quintet, an excellent piece of wax . . . Arthur Godfrey and Janette Davis dueted by Columbia on a cute piece of material titled, "If I Had You on a Desert Island," backed by Godfrey's "Making Love Ukelele Style" . . . Skitch Henderson's orchestra sliced a smoothly attractive "Daddy's Little Girl" (Capitol) . . . Russ Morgan issued by Decca on two colorfully done instrumentals — "Pavanne"-"Prisionero Del Mar" . . . Count Basie's "Sent for You Yesterday and Here You Come Today" and "Shorty George" reissued by Decca on Brunswick label.

Album Reviews

"Designed for Dancing," 15 albums (RCA-Victor). The compilation of 15 albums, all by top dance bands of various styles, turned out by RCA-Victor in an effort to further and sharpen the new interest in dance music, is a generally excellent series of tasteful, carefully selected and constructed songs and arrangements. Through the entire group of 90 sides it's difficult to say which is best. Each album, however, has its standout pieces from Tommy Dorsey's "Just One of Those Things" on down to the excellently contrived Latin-beat items by Miguelito Valdes. Each set is smartly turned out by Victor, the cover-design and trimming identical on each, with only cover coloring and pictures distinguishing one from another.

Sets represent the cream of standard music available for recording, each band assigned a group of tunes by one composer. The 15 include Tommy Dorsey playing Cole Porter, Sammy Kaye-Irving Berlin; Ralph Flanagan-Rodgers & Hammerstein; Vaughn Monroe-Victor Herbert; Ray McKinley-Rodgers & Hart; Claude Thornhill-George Gershwin; Tex Beneke-Hoagy Carmichael; Spike Jones plays The Charleston; Spade Cooley-Billy Hill; Freddy Martin-Jerome Kern; Charlie Ventura-Duke Ellington; Wayne King-Johann Strauss; Miguelito Valdes-Ernesto Lecuona; Larry Green-Vincent Youmans; Erskine Hawkins-W. C. Handy.

Decca's Coral Sets LP Release

Coral Records, sister label to Decca, will begin releasing 33 rpm Long Playing platters March 15. Initial shipment will consist of five albums (on one disk) culled from Decca and Brunswick catalog material, to be followed soon by compilations of melodies originally cut by the comparatively youthful Coral organization.

First five will be a group of Bing Crosby items, a Bob Crosby Dixieland set titled "Swingin' At the Sugar Bowl;" a Jan Garber waltz grouping; a Louis Armstrong set and a Duke Ellington combination. The Bing Crosby, Armstrong and Ellington sets will be under the Brunswick label, which Coral distributes.

Coral, incidentally, now has 37 distributors.

LP's for New Co.

Long Playing recordings of classical oldies will be the sole output of Gothis Recording Corp., recently organized New York platter firm.

Org was formed by Lewis J. Graham, Leon Potash and Caryl Schwartzman.

Recording Companies Find That Tele Does Much to Sell Pops on Disks

Executives of recording companies in New York are finding increasing evidence that television performances are helping sell pop songs on disks. Various distributors along the line of the coaxial cable from N. Y. to Chicago and St. Louis claim they get a definite sales reaction to tunes done on important TV shows by performers who have the same songs available on wax.

As a matter of fact, some distribs are so emphatic about the promotional value of TV broadcasts on platter sales that when a recording personality guests on a show and doesn't perform a melody already available on wax, they beef.

Music publishers on the other hand have so far brushed TV off to some extent, sending exploitation staffs after video performers for plugs only because songs are being done by them, and the plugs possible might as well be theirs as some other firm's.

But the primary channel of promotion is still the disk jockey program, bolstered by live performances on commercial a.m. programs.

Paging Ripley!

Mills Music recently received a request from a small midwest disk company for a royalty rate on an old song. Company made its pitch on the peg that its pressing with a local band might help "revive" the tune.

The number happened to be Hoagy Carmichael's "Star Dust," one of the classic standards.

New Backers Pull Out Of Chi Tower Records After Operation Impasse

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Operations at Tower Records are near a standstill, except for pressing and distributing, because of the impending withdrawal from the firm of Morrie Cowen, Barney Perel and Hy Brown, who joined firm last month with promotional and legal talent plus money.

Cowen, Perel and Brown had agreed upon options to invest money and time to make Tower a full-time operation. Options expire in April, and indications now are that the three will pass them by. Cowen and Perel have a thriving pharmaceutical business; Brown is a local attorney.

Refusal to invest stems from disagreement between trio and Dick Bradley, president of Tower, on methods of operation. Bradley favors operations on small scale, promoting one record at a time. Other three reportedly want big promotional campaigns for a number of waxings simultaneously.

Tower is now riding on the crest of a hit—Bill Snyder's rendition of "Bewitched." So Bradley is simply pressing and distributing, without making any plans for cutting new sides or signing new talent. Meanwhile he is holding talks with potential investors.

Shakeup will leave Tower in no worse financial position than it was before, for no money was to come into the firm until options were taken up in April. All that it does is to leave operations in state of mechanical suspension until Bradley can find new investors.

Carle, Krupa Assigned To 'Dance Band' Album Series; Big Station Play

Frankie Carle and Gene Krupa's orchestras, which joined RCA-Victor's recording roster within the past couple weeks, were immediately put to work to add to the company's string of 15 recently released albums under the title, "Here Comes the Dance Bands Again." Carle recorded six tunes by Frank Loesser in Chicago and Krupa cut the same number by the late Fats Waller.

Victor, incidentally, is keeping count of the number of hours that disk jockeys across the country are devoting to the "Dance" album series. In the first 10 days the albums were in the hands of various platter-spinners, a total 9,870 half-hour programs had been allotted. WNEW, New York, for example, aired the 15-album series for four and a half hours Saturday (25) evening, and WMGM devoted three and a half hours one day last week and called it the station's "Dance Day."

Disk Jockey Review

BOB ATCHER SHOW
Producer-Director: Bill Nelson
Writer: Es Freeman
Announcer: Jack Holden
30 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 4 p.m.
Sponsor: Participating
WLS, Chicago

New half-hour spot combines recordings with live music and chatter by Bob Atcher into folksy, semi-western type show. Atcher strums a guitar as he talks, sings western tunes and spins pops, mostly in western vein.

Show is integrated well, built around setup whereby Atcher spins three hits, one of the past year, a present hit, and one which he feels will be a hit. These, of course, are spaced at beginning, middle and end of show, with Atcher filling in with talk and songs.

Choice of music, both live and recorded, is good. Atcher plays records by Mills Bros., Red Foley and Jimmy Durante, and sings pop westerns with pleasant drawl.

But chatter, except when he talks about music and performers, is mostly inane and in bad taste. A three-minute speech about glories of freedom, tied in with the freedom given him by the station and with George Washington's birthday, had no place on the show caught. And while incessant pleas to listeners to tell friends about show are understandable for a new program, they nevertheless are in bad taste.

Atcher's talk about music and performers, though, is pleasant and informative. With elimination of other subject matter, show would proceed at a faster pace, giving more time for music and keeping chatter on adult level.

Passport to Tin Pan Alley

By J. FRED COOTS

O, I know you're a newcomer to Tin Pan Alley, but don't be afraid to smile and shake my hand in friendship, just because I've been a resident of this fabulous thoroughfare called Tin Pan Alley for 30 years or more. You've been on this street for almost three years, and you haven't had much luck so far; and you're confused, and so disgusted and tried with the uphill battle that you're seriously thinking of pulling up stakes, and beating it back to Hogshead Corners, where your sweet old Dad and Mom are always waiting and waiting for their songwriting son to return with a satchel full of royalty contracts and a fat bankroll. Yes, things are so rough with you that there are days when you sneak in the side door of the Greek's for a slug of coffee and no roll to go with it.

So what? Who ever gave you the idea it was a cinch to hit that Hit Parade overnight? Did anyone go down to Hogshead Corners, and pick you out of Old Man Smithwick's General Store where you were weighing out nails, flour, sugar, rice, and wax beans for 12 bucks a week, and yell in your good ear, "Hey kid, you ought to be up in Tin Pan Alley, grabbing yourself some of that big loot they hand out to guys like you, who can cook up some words and music for Tony Martin, and Perry Como, and Sinatra and Bing, too" You know that never happened. No sir!

It just happened that the old bug got you, and from where you sat it looked like an easy way to win fame and fortune. And you've been around these diggings long enough to realize it is a cold blooded and heartless racket that plays no favorites, and enjoys kicking you around just to see if you can stand the gaff. And it's murder. You've gone to your hall bedroom many a night, hungry, and miserable, and you've cried yourself to slumberland, hoping you'd never wake up the next morning. And then—the miracle happened. You got a call from that little music publisher who only had space in a rent-out in the Chill Bldg. and it seems the song you left with him four months ago was shown to a guy who was a friend of an orchestra leader who just signed to wax some sides for a jerk record company over in Weehawken, N. J. and through some freak of fate they liked your song and they recorded it the night before when you were ready to take the easy way out of your despair, and it turned out (your song, that is) sensational. So won't you please hurry down and sign the S.P.A. contracts? Also the Canadian assignments? Oh, yes; and there is a small advance royalty check of $75 dollars, just to show good faith. Good faith you say? Nuts to good faith. It means you're moving up; you're on the way—move over Jimmy McHugh.

And you, too, Sam Lewis and Lew Brown and Edgar Leslie and Julie Styne and all the rest of you big shots, says you. From now on you mugs are really going to get some solid competition from a new Irving Berlin in the making, just little ol' me. The name of your song was "Why Do Flies Have Eyes On Their Thighs"? and it sure looks like an overnight smash. Disk jockeys and jukeboxes are giving the song—your song—a powerful blast all over the country, and for one week all you can hear is "Why Do Flies" etc. The sales of records and sheet music are fair for awhile. But the returns of unsold records and sheet music are truly unbelievable.

The little music publisher balls the geewizzes out of you, and calls you a thief for taking his $75, not to mention the cost of a big dinner in Lindy's that he blew himself to on the strength of what he expected to make on your song.

But you're not licked yet, you say? No!? You're just beginning to fight? More power to you? You must have been doing some serious thinking about what it takes to be a real songwriter; a pro like Ray Henderson, Mack Gordon, Haven Gillespie, Mabel Wayne, and a very selected group of guys and gals who did it the hard way, just like you're doing now. Well, if that is your sincere belief, and you will stand up under all the adversity and literal socks on the button, you've got an excellent chance of reaching that goal to which all the great songwriters aspired, when they were just rank amateurs like you are now and like I was too. And you'll win out, and taste the delicious fruits of acclaim, prestige, and the financial rewards that follow. For believe me most sincerely, when I tell you, just as I have told hundreds of others, like yourself, if you're willing to take the "raps on the chin" in order to some day win the "slaps on the back," you will have earned your Passport To Tin Pan Alley.

BAND MGR. GORDON REVOKED BY AFM

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Band management license of Hal Gordon, who handles Ike Carpenter's orch, has been cancelled by the American Federation of Musicians.

Charge against Gordon was that he sold to Discovery Records some wax which had been made for Carpenter for audition purposes. This, according to the union, was not paid for according to the commercial recording rate.

Mercer Rewriting Dixieland Era Tune

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Feist Music has commissioned Johnny Mercer to put lyrics to "Jazz-Band Ball," old Dixie tune, written in 1918 by D. J. (Nick) La Rocca and Larry Shields.

Dixieland renaissance seems to be responsible for the Mercer deal. Feist is covered on copyrights to "Ball," having paid the late Bob Zerke to do a piano part in 1939 and also Bob Haggart to redefine it. La Rocca and Shields were members of the legendary Original Dixieland Jazz Band which first really spread two-beat instrumental styling out of New Orleans.

Monica Lewis Signs With M-G-M Records

Monica Lewis has signed a term recording deal with M-G-M Records, her third affiliation. She had been with Decca until recently, when her contract expired. Previously, she had been with Signature, run by her ex-husband, Bob Thiele.

Miss Lewis cut her first M-G-M disks last week, backed by Russ Case's orchestra.

day (23). Geller and Carleton had both been mentioned as possible choices, but few suspected that both would be selected.

Move gives Mercury a tighter grip on its nationwide activities. While Miller was musical director, he would fly from New York to Chicago for recording dates nearly three times a month, and would have to keep in contact with Geller on the Coast for dates there. Geller was more or less a free lance. Now, with Geller in charge, Coast operations are tightened, while eastern operations are under the control of Carleton with the added advantage that he will supervise of all other activities. Complete operation of course, will continue to be run from Chicago.

All in all, the move gives Mercury toppers a chance to sit back and contemplate the picture with more ease than they have in the past. What with Miller shuttling back and forth, and Green never in the same spot for more than two weeks, activities had assumed a helter-skelter nature. Move apparently sets a more steady routine.

Eddy Howard Exits Chi Date Due to Illness

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Bandleader Eddy Howard, suffering from illness, was forced last week to terminate engagement at Blackhawk here March 14. Howard had been given indefinite extension on his engagement three weeks ago.

With departure of Howard, it seems likely that the Blackhawk will revert once more to scale bands. Owner Don Roth has signed Sherman Hayes for the four weeks following Howard's departure. Hayes starts March 15, and no band has been set to follow him. Skitch Henderson was set to follow Howard, but a hitch developed at the last moment, and Hayes was booked in by Music Corp. of America.

Howard will go to Arizona for a month's rest, keeping the band on salary while he recuperates. MCA has set no dates for him until after Easter. In the past two weeks, he had been bedded with colds and Buddy Moreno had been filling in.

Don't Let Toscanini Hear About This!

Fred Pfaff, first tuba player of the NBC Symphony orchestra, conducted by Arturo Toscanini, took what might be termed a busman's holiday last week. He tooted his longhair horn on a Dixieland music record date for Coral Records, working as part of a combination of outstanding jazzmen behind a vocal by Bob Crosby.

He worked only one side, a novelty titled "If You Can't Drum."

SCHENLEY'S TESTING JUKEBOX COMMERCIALS

Chicago, Feb. 28.

A new advertising medium—musical commercials playing in jukeboxes in taverns and restaurants—is being tested in Chicago this week by Schenley Distributors. Commercials play only when jukes are idle.

Working with a newly-organized corporation, Phonograph Advertising Corp., Schenley has installed commercial platters plugging the product to the music of "Clementine" in jukes in 12 Chicago locations.

Wolfe Gilbert Bombards East for ASCAP Bd. Aid

L. Wolfe Gilbert, head of the Hollywood contingent of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, isn't leaving many stones unturned in seeking election to the Society's board of directors. Spotted as a board candidate as a result of a petition signed by over 300 writer members of ASCAP living on the Coast, Gilbert has been bombarding eastern contemporaries with letters and wires seeking their support in his battle to gain a spot on the board. He was a member once before.

Meanwhile, there has been some conversation in the east about supporting Mabel Wayne for a board chair. Miss Wayne is one of the few women members of ASCAP to be named a candidate for such a position, and she has strong support in some quarters.

Latter goes back with Johnny Marino again at Triangle Room in few weeks and Schabo will have to find a new pianist then.

Phil Napoleon Signed By Col. for Dixieland

Riding the current Dixieland revival trend, Columbia Records has snared Phil Napoleon's combo for disking session the middle of this month. Columbia tagged Napoleon at the instigation of Jimmy Dorsey, whose Dixie platters are currently among the hottest items in the company's pop catalog.

Dorsey, currently at the Statler hotel, N. Y., steered Col on Napoleon because of a longtime association between the two bandleaders. Dorsey played with Napoleon's original Memphis Five back in the '30's while Napoleon became a member of Dorsey's aggregation for a time about nine years ago. Dorsey, incidentally, is slated to record some more sides for Columbia a few days before Napoleon.

Kaye Orch Escapes • Injury in Bus Crash

Kansas City, Feb. 28.

Members of the Sammy Kaye orch came through without injury when the chartered bus in which they were riding collided with a car on the Intercity viaduct here Saturday (25) morning. The driver of the car, George McCoy, 26, was taken to the hospital in a semi-conscious condition, and he suffered cuts and bruises and head and chest injuries.

The Kaye orch was enroute from Omaha to a one-nighter date at the Pla-Mor ballroom here. Damage to the bus was estimated at $700.

Kaye's Sock Grosses

Sammy Kaye's orchestra did exceptionally well in two separate dates here Friday and Saturday (24-25). Leader played to 2,200 people in the 1,600-capacity Turnpike Ballroom, Lincoln, Neb., the first night and just short of 2,300 at the Pla-Mor Ballroom here the next night, which is capacity. First date was at $2.50 per person and the second $2.25 per.

Kaye played the previous week at the Orpheum theatre, Omaha, racking up a $29,000 gross.

Meadows (Near Boston) Into Occasional Names

Meadows, Framingham, Mass., cafe in which maestro Vaughn Monroe is a partner, is going into an occasional name band policy. Spot has bought Sammy Kaye's orchestra for two weeks, opening March 10, and is looking the field over for an outfit of similar value to go in later in the spring.

Monroe, of course, has played the Meadows consistently. He lives not too far from the suburban Boston roadside nitery, and when he wants a period at home with his family, brings his outfit there. But, it has never bought anyone as important as Kaye for a run of any length.

U. of Minn. Dancery In Discrimination Beef

Minneapolis, Feb. 28.

U. of Minnesota student government has protested to the Prom ballroom, Twin City spot playing name and other bands, against the exclusion of two foreign students. Don Simmons, president of the All-University congress, wrote J. C. Alexander, Prom general manager, that many students believe the incident was a "discriminatory practice."

The foreign students, F. Del Prado from Surinam, formerly Dutch Guinea, and Shi I Lu from China, weren't allowed to enter the ballroom when they went there with an American couple Feb. 4. Since then, however, Alexander has apologized to the two students and taken them into the ballroom "on the house," he says.

Top Labels Getting Some of the Frosting On Barton-'Cake'

Top labels lost no time last week getting aboard the tune, "If I Knew You Were Coming I'd Have Baked A Cake," started by Eileen Barton's National recording. Decca cut the novelty two ways, dueting it with Ethel Merman-Ray Bolger, and also by Evelyn Knight. Victor got it out fast by the Fontane Sisters, and Coral cut and released Georgia Gibbs' disk within a week. Columbia has the tune out by Al Trace, and Capitol is out with it by Benny Strong.

Meanwhile, National is attempting to stem the tide of major label opposition by having Mercury Records press and distribute Miss Barton's version under its own label name at the same time National is continuing to market her platter. Idea is to solidify the side before the bigger labels can get a toe in the door.

Marks Wins Dismissal Via a Novel Defense

Justice Aron Steuer in N. Y. supreme court last week signed an order dismissing an action by Alfred J. Mapleson and Richard Hirsch against Edward B. Marks Music Corp. to recover $50,000 for alleged breach of a written agreement dated Jan. 7, 1948.

Mapleson and Hirsch were to furnish a series of operatic scores to be published and sold by Marks, for which they were to receive 25% of the proceeds. The agreement provided that the names of the operas were to be selected by mutual consent and that the selling price was to be decided by mutual consent. The complaint alleged that the parties subsequently agreed to publish 19 scores and likewise agreed upon the approximate selling price of $12.50 for the Wagnerian operas and $10 for all others. Marks interposed a novel defense, via Julian T. Abeles, that it had been unable to proceed with publication because of the refusal of Mapleson and Hirsch to supply and pay for certain material, or to otherwise abide by their obligations under the agreement. Preliminary to making a motion to dismiss, Marks' attorneys, Abeles & Bernstein, required Mapleson and Hirsch to state, in compliance with a Court order obtained by said attorneys, that the alleged subsequent agreement of the parties as to the number of operas to be published and as to the selling price was oral. The case was about to be reached for trial before a jury, when Marks' attorneys pulled the surprise move of making a motion to dismiss. The motion was upon the ground that as the written agreement lacked the essential terms as to the names of the operas to be published and the selling price, the parties could not subsequently orally agree upon such terms, so that the agreement was void and unenforceable.

Judge Steuer sustained this novel contention in granting the order dismissing the action. It is the first case involving a music publication agreement, in which the agreement has been declared unenforceable upon such a ground. The decision is important in setting a precedent, whereby such publication agreements would not be enforceable if any of the essential terms of the agreement are not reduced to writing, regardless of any subsequent oral agreement of the parties as to such terms.

Stuart Wade and Pete's Playboys cut the Allan Jeffries-Herb Waters novelty, "Rebel Yell," for the Atlantic label . . . Ted Gomulka polka band waxed eight sides for Decca under an exclusive disk pact. Organist Ethel Smith cut two sides with Guy Lombardo for Decca last week.

Night Club Reviews

Cafe Soc. Downt'n, N.Y.

Jack Gilford, Deep River Boys (5), Martha Lou Harp, Tony Scott Orch (4); $3.50 minimum.

With Jack Gilford back as featured comedian at this Greenwich Village nitery and with the Deep River Boys making their first appearance since their recent tour of Europe, the new show at Cafe Society makes for good entertainment that should lure the payees. Also on the bill are Martha Lou Harp, singer and the Tony Scott orch, a four-man combo which dishes out some sock music despite the limited instrumentation.

Gilford, who has done considerable television work and also was featured in the Broadway revue, "Alive and Kicking," since his last time here, is doing basically his same act. Emphasis is still on the pantomimic mugging of his symphony conductor and the British seaman's chant, both of which draw yocks. In addition, though, he has some bright new material which he projects neatly, including a sparkling monolog for an opener and a psychiatric satire featuring a "Zuckerman" as "Superman." It's funny stuff and he sells it for good audience reception.

Deep River group, comprising the four Negro singers and pianist, has long been one of the best in the business but has taken on added quality via their European trip. Boys combine some fine harmonics with an innate rhythmic sense in their repertoire of novelty tunes but can also get dramatically serious with such material as "Nowhere to Go," lyric song which they introduce as having come out of a concentration camp. Also featured are a couple of Scottish airs picked up on their trip. Their rendition of "Shadrach" and "Whiffenpoof Song" are standout and that closing bit on "I Don't Know Why," in which they strut around the floor, is sock showmanship which earns them a begoff.

An attractive, diminutive gal with a well-pitched, middle-register voice, Martha Lou Harp displays some okay vocalizing in her break-in at this Greenwich Village boite. She's disked some songs for Autograph Records and evidences sharp training via her neat phrasing and diction techniques. While she can sing okay, she still lacks the necessary showmanship to project to her listeners and keep 'em from gabbing while she's on.

Main emphasis in her reportoire is on blues, several of which she groups for a closer. She handles them best but should mix them with her other tunes for more change of pace.

Scott combo, with the leader doubling on clarinet and tenor sax, piano, bass and drums, opens the show with a brace of tunes and backs the other acts neatly. Each of the group has played with various top-name bands and they shine in their fast, swing arrangements. Ballads, such as "Yesterdays," are played just a shade too slowly for maximum results but serve as good show-off pieces for the band's instrumental ability. Stal.

Persian Room, N.Y.

Lisa Kirk, Nancy Donovan, Eric Victor, Bob Grant Orch (8), Mark Monte's Continentals (4); couvert, $2, $2.50.

The Plaza's Persian Room in re-signing Lisa Kirk to work the supper show only, doubling from "Kiss Me, Kate," has come up with Nancy Donovan for the dinner show. Thus, both songstresses do only one show each. Dancer Eric Victor works both shows. Under this setup there's sufficient class amusement for this room.

Miss Donovan has come up the hard way She worked a myriad of lesser spots before her eastside potential was realized. Today she's established in this sector of town, having clicked at the Versailles and has further ingratiated herself with her work at the Persian Room.

Miss Donovan, a lissome colleen, has matured considerably. Impressive, visually and vocally, she projects herself with well-written introductions, and generally charms the customers for a 30-minute session without wearing out her welcome.

She shows up best in ballads, pouring a wealth of feeling into these numbers, gathering sufficient impetus to score heavily when she goes into a tune like "Enjoy Yourself." At the conclusion of her turn, there's a jocular stage whisper in which she advises the crowd to go home immediately and "not stay for the supper show."

Victor is the second bearded entertainer in as many shows in this room, following Burl Ives. He's still a non-conformist. Although a click in the Arthur Schwartz legiter, "Inside USA," Victor has still to get down to commercial routines. His turn abounds in esoteric abstractions which, while displaying imaginary choreography and frequently magnificent dancing, the energy devoted by the diners in attempting to divine the meanings detracts from the overall effect. However, his routines are replete with surprises. At one point he makes an amazing leap onto the top of the piano and does a bit of tapping thereon. He shows some excellent kicks and bends during his more commercial taps, and this department is his nearest approach to cafe routining. But in some of the other works, such as his abstraction with an Oriental rug, and a weirdie in which he garrotes himself, are in the what's-it-all-about vein.

Victor's routines may be OK for Carnegie Hall or small gatherings of existentialists, but his Dali-esque ramblings aren't particularly suited for spots where relaxation and entertainment is the chief aim. He should let the general run of people in on his art and get down to earth, since a nitery isn't the medium for this type work.

Bob Grant's band provides fine showbacking and dansapation, and Mark Monte's Continentals work the lulls to good effect. Jose.

The Society, London

London, Feb. 21.

Dolores Gray, Jack La Roc Sextet; no minimum.

Dolores Gray makes her cabaret debut after three years in "Annie Get Your Gun" and brings to the West End nitery scene a new, vigorous and vivacious personality. Playing this exclusive spot is no sinecure for any artist, but in a solo spot stretching beyond 30 minutes, she proves to be a top entertainer.

In a well balanced program Miss Gray has little difficulty in captivating the audience. She gets off to a breezy start with a good introductory number and with her cleverness puts over nearly a dozen hits inimitably. Each tune is a winner, but the biggest hand comes for her comedy hits like "Girl From Little Rock," "Feudin', Fightin' & Fussin'," and "Nice to Have a Man Around the House." Other tunes like "Shadrack," "Be Good to Yourself" and "Do I Love You" also get good returns.

Act is well-timed, slickly presented and given nice backing by the La Roc Sextet. Myro.

Minn. Terrace, Mpls.
(HOTEL NICOLLET)

Minneapolis, Feb. 25.

Jimmy Savo, Luba Malina, Cecil Golly Orch (12), with Mildred Stanley; $1-$1.50 cover, $2.50 minimum.

Long on laughs and rich in top-drawer talent, this show hits a high entertainment level. It's the first local supper club appearance for both Jimmy Savo and Luba Malina and each scores impressively, contributing socko mirth and song that add up to extra pleasure dividends for the diners.

The superlative serio-comic pantomime and distinctive vocalizing that have brought success to the whimsical Savo are exhibited in a manner which provides a customers' field day. Losing no time in getting his rib-tickling attack started, Jimmy tees off with uproarious pantomimic lampoons of juggling magic and card tricks. He then hits the funny bones even harder with a succession of songs made hilarious by the inimitable Savo touches.

Savo's version of "That Old Black Magic" is still socko. In song he tells of a married man's troubles with his wife, relates the saga of two little rabbits and takes other similar laughter-exciting vocal excursions. He winds up, of course, with the unforgettable "One Meat Ball," leaving the customers almost limp from laughter, but nevertheless clamoring for more.

Miss Malina, a stunning Latin type brunet, in the opening spot, is also a show-stopper. Exceedingly good to look at, she also proves to be a Class "A" entertainer, and she brings practically all original material, most of it first-rate. Her

AGVA Tightens Regulations Covering Outdoor Field, Also Agent Pacts

American Guild of Variety Artists has completed a new set of regulations to govern the outdoor field. AGVA's Outdoor Advisory Committee, comprising 25 performers who work fairs, circuses, expositions, parks, etc., has been working for the past weeks with organizer Vic Connors and AGVA national board.

One of the major changes is the modification of exclusive option contracts. Heretofore, acts have been signed for the forthcoming season in November. Consequently, if an agent signed too many acts or if a fair cut down on talent, certain turns didn't get a sufficient amount of work. Under the new rule, acts signed to contracts in November must be notified by March 15 as to the amount of work available. If an agent cannot offer 12 weeks in 15, or four weeks out of five on shorter contracts, option cannot be exercised.

Under the new set of regulations, to be called Rule 12, a performer is to get 60% of his weekly salary on engagements of three days. If date is more than a week, each day over seven must be compensated by one-seventh of the regular salary. New rules also call for employer to pay transportation on jumps over 350 miles.

AGVA's committee has also taken steps to correct what it terms an abuse of charging acts from $50 to $100 for printing a description and photo of performers in a catalog issued to buyers. Under the new rule union must approve such deals.

Proser Delays New Cafe During Copa Tangle

Monte Proser, planning to open a nitery on the site of the former Cafe Society Uptown, N. Y. (more recently Le Directoire), declared this week he is delaying work on the new spot until his tangled affairs with the N. Y. Copacabana management are cleared up. Proser, who is still listed as president of the Copacabana, owning 35% of its stock, is currently having his attorney, Samuel Becker, prepare papers for a suit demanding an accounting of all profits in the Copa for the past 10 years. Papers are directed against Jules Podell, the Copa's supervisor.

Proser declares that work on his new cafe, still unnamed, will proceed as soon as that suit is under way.

Proser's name was recently taken off the marquee and programs of the Copacabana, and currently has no part in management of that spot. There have been difficulties between Proser and Podell for several years over running of that cafe.

Proser stated that lease for the new cafe is in his name. Realtor Irving Maidman, who negotiated the deals for the Copa and the Beachcomber cafe, which Proser operated about 10 years ago, is in with him on the new cafe deal.

Rose Auditions Disk-Jocks For Diamond Horseshoe

Billy Rose is planning a disk-jockey stanza for his Diamond Horseshoe, N. Y. So far he hasn't decided upon a platter-pilot, but is continuing to hear audition-records in hopes of coming up with a guy that might hypo things at the cafe.

Cafe disk-jockeying is on the upbeat in New York. Monte's restaurant installed Earl Wilson on a WINS wire this week. Ed Weiner recently started a show from the Hickory House, and Leon & Eddie's is also reported interested in reinstating a disk-spinner. Jack Eigen of the Copacabana, is generally credited with starting the trend.

Balto Burley Foldos

Baltimore, Feb. 28.

The Gayety, landmark of burlesque here, folded last week when biz hit a new low.

House has been playing wheel shows and may resume with week-end frolics by a stock burlesque for balance of season.

Vaude Acts as Feature Of D.C. Sports Show

Washington, Feb. 28.

Number of vaude and carnival outdoor-type acts will feature the annual Sportsmen's and Outdoors Show which opens at the National Guard Armory Friday (3). Brooke Johns, onetime "Ziegfeld Follies" star and more recently a radio disk jockey and politician in this area, will emcee the performance which includes divers, animal acts, archery, trick shooting, etc.

The show, which will run 10 days, annually attracts thousands to the Armory.

London Bistros Pacting U.S. Acts

For the first time in many years London cafes are buying talent direct from the U. S. Since Jan. 1, when London bottle clubs were outlawed and the curfew relaxed for regulation restaurants and cafes, some American acts have been used, but they were selected from talent playing in Europe. Since acts were already over there, bonifaces didn't have to pay for trans-Atlantic transportation.

First deals from N. Y. for London cafes were set last week. Among those signed are the Mack Triplets, Bobby Breen and Connie Sawyer. Pact for Julie Wilson, current at the Maisonette of the St. Regis hotel, N. Y., is being negotiated.

Acts booked are for the Colony and Astor clubs, London, and they will double between both spots. Operators of these cafes, Eustace Hoey and Harry Morris, have been conferring for the past week with Harold Dobrow of the William Morris agency, and Eddie Elkort, head of the N. Y. branch of the Lew & Leslie Grade agency of London.

DURANTE'S NIFTY 65G AT CHEZ PAREE, CHI

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Despite zero weather and heavy snows, Jimmy Durante broke all Chi nitery records in his second week at the Chez Paree. Although the average tab was slightly less than the opening week, there was complete turnover at almost every show.

Second frame beat the first week by almost $4,000 with a new high gross of $65,000 being reached. Comedian closes March 15 to return to Coast for another picture.

Minsky to Tour His Fla. Show on Cafe Circuit

Harold Minsky, operator of the Colonial Inn, Hallandale, Fla., is planning to package his current unit for a tour of cafes. It's the second year that he'll put his nitery show on the road. Dates are being lined up for the Desert Inn, Las Vegas, and the Beverly Hills Country Club, Newport, Ky. Last season's display was routed out of the Carnival, N. Y., which Minsky operated at the time.

Cast will include Ray Malone, Corinne and Tito Valdes, Gloria French, Jean Courtney, Murray Briscoe and a 16-girl line. Other performers are still to be set. Miles Ingalls is agenting deal.

Aldrich Joins Sherman

Mickey Aldrich has been named eastern rep for Eddie Sherman and will headquarter in the Sherman agency in N. Y. Aldrich will represent Sherman's acts including Abbott and Costello, Allan Jones, Rudy Vallee and Gloria Jean.

Aldrich, who was formerly with the Sherman booking office, will rep acts and will not be involved in the booking of theatres.

Jessie Crawford, Jr., daughter of the organist, started engagement as a singer in the Shelton Corner, N. Y. She's been playing cafe and club dates under the name of Laura Leeds.

Max Liebman to Produce Unit at Palmer House, Chi

Max Liebman will produce a unit for the Palmer House, Chicago, in June. Liebman, who produces the 90-minute "Saturday Night Revue," telecast on NBC-TV, previously did series of units for the Latin Quarter, Boston.

Cast of the nitery unit is still to be lined up. William Morris agency set the deal.

Hefty U.S. Lineup For Paris Cafes; Woo K. Thompson

Rene Fraday, show director at Le Lido, Paris, is on his last lap before returning to France after a looksee at talent in Havana, Miami Beach, Mexico, Hollywood, Las Vegas, Chicago and New York. He is practically set with Kay Thompson, currently at the Versailles, N. Y., to open at Paris' Les Ambassadeurs, which the Lido management (Pierre Louis-Guerin) will also operate this summer in anticipation of the peak European season because of American tourism, the Holy Year pilgrimages to Rome, etc.

Money detail is stalling the Thompson booking, although her boys already are studying French in anticipation. The Ambassadeurs plans a May 15 debut with a combination ice-floorshow policy, 40% only to the portable tank. An English line is being brought over from London, and the idea is to operate it on a class basis a la the Copacabana, N. Y., utilizing a basic format and changing stars. Carmen Miranda, whom Fraday saw at Copa City, Miami, says she's agreeable to taking a cut for the engagement but will have to play Paris before or after Miss Thompson, depending on whether her (Miranda's) picture commitment goes in April or August. Fraday also is talking to Sonja Henie for the third headliner, also with a "prestige" pitch, since obviously there is a money hurdle for the 400-capacity room.

Shorter Revues

Meantime, the new Lido show will essay a departure for the French, i.e., two shows nightly at 10 and 1 a.m. That will mean two different shows, curtailed to 40 minutes each as against the usual 1½-hour revues which Donn Arden and Ron Fletcher are dance-staging, as they did last summer. New show opens in May and will be satirically pointed at the visiting Yanks, with accent on "Paris as the Americans see it." It will be in the idiom of Irving Berlin's "Only For Americans" song, out of "Miss Liberty," and the "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" current staging. Carrie Finnell will do Mistinguett, and will feature her w.k. muscular-control specialty. The 4 Step Bros., whom Fraday signed while at Copa City, will also be in it. For the first time a line of eight American chorus boys, each over six feet tall, will be brought to Paris. Bela Kremo, currently at the Palmer House, Chicago, who was briefly at Le Lido two years ago, will be featured.

Dorothy Lamour, A&C Pact for London Dates

London, Feb. 21.

Besides lining up Dorothy Lamour and Abbott and Costello for forthcoming vaudeville season at the London Palladium, Lew Grade Agency has also booked Lena Horne for an early July date following her four weeks at the Baccara club, Paris, where she opens May 29.

Others are Peggy Ryan and Ray Macdonald, in return, due here April 3 for an extensive provincial tour for Moss Empires and Stoll circuit, with Palladium to follow. Allan Jones is playing return dates on entire Moss and Stoll circuit opening May 29. Gene Marvey returns in early June for an extensive tour. Leo De Lyon is set for four weeks at Palladium beginning May 8, with Moss tour to follow and Mack Triplets for Bacarra club, opening April 10 for four weeks, and due at Palladium July 3 for four weeks, with Moss dates to follow.

Nitery Show Doubling Continues; China Doll Revue Set for N.Y. Roxy

Doubling of shows from niteries to vaudfilmers is on the unbeat in New York. Latest cafe display to be set for a vauder is the China Doll, N. Y., revue, which doubles into the nearby Roxy theatre, March 17.

China Doll show will be headed by Long Tack Sam, oldtime Chinese act, which hasn't appeared on Broadway for nearly two decades. Before returning to performing he operated theatres in China until recently when Chinese Communists made things difficult. He's reputed independently wealthy.

Others on the show will include Toy & Wing, Ming & Ling, Florence Ahn and the cafe's line.

Currently the Latin Quarter Revue is bicycling between the Lou Walters cafe and the Strand theatre. Recently the Roxy used the show from the Copacabana.

The doubling of cafe shows into vauders has generally worked out well for both theatre and nitery. Theatre bookers feel it's a good idea to get a show that's already broken in and has been previously publicized in a cafe. The cafe owner gets a slice from the theatre as producer and at the same time benefits by having the theatre trailerize his cafe.

There would probably be more cafe-theatre dates but for the fact that the number of cafes with large productions is rapidly decreasing. The only big cafe that hasn't doubled its shows into theatres is the Diamond Horseshoe. At that Billy Rose, at one time, produced parallel editions for vauders.

Orange Show Has $30,000 Budget

San Bernardino, Feb. 28.

Orange show, which opens March 9, will have a talent budget of upwards of $30,000. Line of girls and five standard acts will be used during the nine-day stand of the exhibit. Stan Meyers will baton a crew of 16.

George Jessel will appear opening night, followed by Ralph Edwards, Kay Starr, Peggy Lee, Andy and Della Russell, Judy Canova and Art Linkletter. Bill ("Hopalong") Boyd will make a p.a. on March 18. Mills Bros. also are pencilled in for the final day. Phil Bloom agency here has nabbed the account and is lining up talent.

Cold Wave Hits N.Y. Cafe Biz

The recent cold snap has cut heavily into cafe grosses in New York. Bonifaces are inclined to think that the weather is more responsible for the business drop than the combination of the dimout, Lent and income-tax time. Until the freeze, business had been on a par with last year.

Along Broadway the Latin Quarter is holding up fairly well, otherwise the west side cafes are doing from fair to poor.

The east side is in a comparatively better position than the Broadway spots, but business is somewhat off in that sector as well. The Versailles is holding up okay as are the smaller rooms such as the Blue Angel and Le Ruban Bleu. The Copa's receipts aren't up to par.

VHCS SEEKING SHOW BIZ AID TO CARRY PROGRAM

Means of bringing in showbusiness support of Veterans Hospital Camp shows will be discussed at a meeting of the VHCS board slated to be held tomorrow (Thurs.). Abe Lastfogel, VHCS president, came in from the Coast to attend the meet and will probably return after the confab.

VHCS hopes to make the entertainment of hospitalized vets a community project of the entertainment industry. Organization was put on its own at the beginning of the year when its parent organization, United Services Organizations dissolved. VHCS at that time had enough funds for three months of operation.

Major problem of the board is to line up sources of revenue for the coming year.

Weitman on Hope Tour For Pre-B'way Test

Bob Hope troupe, including film actress Jane Russell and Les Brown and his band, opens at the Paramount theatre, Broadway showcase, today (Wed.) after a warmup in two Massachusetts towns. Robert M. Weitman, United Paramount veepee, trekked to Worcester Sunday (26) to join the comic and work on the Times Sq. opening. Weitman also accompanied Hope to Springfield on Monday (27).

Hope played one-day engagements in each spot following the troupe's plane-out from the Coast Saturday (25). Comic is slated for two weeks at the Paramount on a weekly guarantee of $50,000 plus a percentage.

Shearing's B'way Bow

Bop pianist George Shearing will make his Broadway vaude bow with a date at the Strand theatre, starting March 10 at the head of an instrumental quintet.

He'll be on the bill with Tito Guizar, George Andree Martin and Roger Ray.

Another act is still to be set.

Hildegarde's Continued Boff Take on Fla. Dates

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 28.

Hildegarde is continuing her phenomenal success pattern which she employed in off the beaten path bistro dates in the northern area with similar success in Florida. Last week in Daytona Beach at the Ocean Room of the Sheraton Plaza she jam-packed the 350-seat room at almost every performance of her two-hour concert at $4 per head. On top of that, management reported that during the intermission and after the show an average tab of $3.50 was spent on drinks. Room take grossed $19,000.

In opening days of her engagement here in the Soreno hotel ballroom, which seats about 500, she has had near capacity at $3.75 admission. In addition, she has been averaging the same on drink tabs and should top the Daytona gross by several thousand. Amazing part of the previous week is that business grew and best days were Monday and Tuesday, last part of the date. Chanteuse did a three-hour program Tuesday.

Hildegarde was to address luncheon group of several hundred at the Maas Department store here but mob grew so large that platoon of policemen had to escort her through the thousands who clogged the aisles and store reported the greatest crowds in its history.

Ringling Circus Dickers For Atlantic City Date

Atlantic City, Feb. 28.

Representatives of Ringling Bros. Circus have filed application with the City Commission for a one-day performance here Sunday, May 28.

Finance Director Daniel S. Bader, with whom the application was filed, said he would place it before the other Commissioners at their next meeting. The city has a license fee of $1,000 a day for circuses.

If the application is granted it will be the first license to be issued a circus for many years. Amusement interests and business people here have opposed circus licenses on the theory that it takes money out of town.

DEBBIN'S NEW BERTH

Nat Debbin has joined the N. Y. Branch of the Lew & Leslie Grade Agency of London. He'll work with Eddie Elkort.

Debbin was former personal manager of Lena Horne and prior to that was a music publisher.

Night Club Reviews

songs, including some clever parodies, accomplish their designs on patrons' risibilities.

The singing comedienne's opening number saucily tells of her difficult quest for "the right man" and draws the conclusion, "you can't have everything." Least effective is a long-drawn-out interpretation of "I'm True to You in My Fashion" from "Kiss Me, Kate," sung to her boy friend's snapshot. While the latter would benefit from elimination of most of the accompanying business and abbreviation generally, she next lands solidly with a parody of "South Pacific's" "There's Nothing Like a Dame," reversing the sex to permit her to tell why "there's nothing like a guy." Spice and more laughs are forthcoming during a parody on "Riders in the Sky" which is an account of an unfortunate marriage to an aviator who wants to do nothing but fly; a vocal dissertation on "The American Way," explaining why she loves the American man; a "Road to Mandalay" parody, and her impression of a stripteaser.

Cecil Golly and his orchestra, with pleasing vocalist Mildred Stanley, are adept, as usual, in playing the show and turning out tunes for patrons' terping. Rees.

Kitty Davis', Miami B'ch

Miami Beach, Feb. 26.

Myron Cohen, Fisher & White, Maxellos, Kenny Davis, Johnny Silvers Orch; minimums $2.50, $3.50.

This spot was doing only fairish business for several weeks before the advent of Myron Cohen. With him it has hit the jackpot. Yarn spinner has a new collection of stories. Each builds for howls and audience response. Basically the tales are still concerned with N. Y. garment district types, but they've taken on a universal tinge through Cohen's manner of winding into them, via his brief and highly amusing introes. On for 50 minutes, he had to beg-off.

Fisher and White have not been seen hereabouts for several seasons. They return with type of material they've used before, but, a tight and more gagged-up stint. Topper is the funny-panned Fisher's takeoff on the Lawrence Tibbett platter of "Figaro." "McNamara's Band" is another familiar that hits for laughs. However, they've interwoven some screwy bits with stooges around the room that keeps howls rolling.

The Maxellos with their balancing and tosses work surprisingly well on the small stage. The aud participation bit with male and femme guests gets them off to healthy mitting. Kenny Davis holds over with his blendings of pop songs. Johnny Silvers and his all tops on the backing. Lary.

Latin Quarter, N.Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

A new set of new principals within the holdover production of the Latin Quarter buttresses this Lew Walters show. Primary headliner is the new divertissement is Sam Levenson, the former pedagog, making his Gotham nitery bow. He's as potent a click in this medium as he has been on video, club dates and theatres.

Levenson's version of family lite on the lower east side brings a nostalgic response. And the items that seemed tragic in childhood make for hilarious reminiscences, and the contrasts between the old and modern methods of raising youngsters provides excellent laugh fodder.

Levenson's manner of recounting childhood incidents is straightforward and gives the impression he's enjoying the process of recounting these yarns. The response to his efforts is excellent.

The other newcomers on this session comprise Sherrier (New Acts), a French import; Landre and Verna, ballroomers, and Adriana and Charley, trampolinists.

Landre and Verna win the mob with some sensational one-hand overhead spins. Their terp-work is generally well designed and executed with precision. Adriana and Charley show up well on the trampoline. The male does some fine tricks while femme acts as understander for incidental hand-to-hand work while on the apparatus. Sole fault with their effectiveness in cafes is time taken to set up the trampoline. It takes nearly two minutes to get the machine on stage and set it up properly. That's a long time for the customers to be sitting in the dark.

Rest of the revue and the cast itself are holding well. Ernestine Mercer, Francis and Grey, the Ballet Sevillano, Ben Yost's Vikings and the line contribute nicely toward the integrated production. The majority of the cast is taking the strain of doubling between this spot and the nearby Strand theatre in good stride. Jose.

Continental Room, N. Y.

(ST. MORITZ HOTEL)

(Followup)

The Continental Room of the St. Moritz hotel continues as a pleasant dine-and-dance spot. This intimate room, with comparatively small but compact show, manages to provide maximum entertainment for diners. The post-show champagne hour (in which customers terp for prizes), entr'acte fiddling by Leo Pleskow and Erwin Kent's dansapation make for good cafe-going values.

Monette and Ramon, the holdover dance team, perform a nicely integrated floor routine in which they show considerable flash and vigor. Turns and lifts are well-executed and there's a nice balance to their work, which is showing considerably more polish than when last seen here.

Newcomer on this show is Roberta Welch (New Acts), no stranger in this area, since she worked as Nick D'Amico's band vocalist some years ago at the nearby Essex House. Jose.

Oval Room, Boston

(COPLEY PLAZA HOTEL)

Boston, Feb. 24.

Vic Damone (2), Ranny Weeks Orch (9), Tony Peters Trio, $1.50, $2 cover.

Vic Damone, currently at the swank Oval Room for a week's stint, is rapidly building himself new fans here, where he is scoring just as solidly with the oldsters as he has with the teenagers. Even a blizzardy Ash Wednesday failed to mar his opening and the firstnight ringsiders were definitely with him during his 45-minute stint.

Guy has no gimmicks, gags, or gab, relying strictly on vocalizing. Damone does about 10 numbers, which give him plenty of opportunity to showcase his talents and definitely lifts him out of the crooner class. He is as adept at selling the rhythmic "What Is This Thing Called Love" as he is with his w.k. ballads, "You're Breaking My Heart" and "My Bolero." Entire stint draws solid mitt action with sock returns for closer, "Come Back to Sorrento."

Solid backgrounding by his pianist, Jack Kelly, and Ranny Weeks house band set neat pattern for nifty performance. Tony Peters trio, who go with the lease, fill in the lulls. Dinner biz solid. Elie.

Copa City, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, Feb. 26.

Danny Thomas, Step Bros. (4), Karen Tedder, Arden-Fletcher line (18) with Herb George, Asia Boys, Myrna Bell, David Tyler's Orch; beverage minimums, $3, $5; Barry Gray in Flamingo Room; no minimum.

This is the first big spot Danny Thomas has played in this area—after two dates at the Club Boheme (in Hollywood) with its 200 capacity. That the philosophically tinged comic's draw is potent has been evidenced in the first heavy profit show the Copa has had since seasonal teeoff.

The ideas in song-comedy and gag breaks which Thomas essays is a welcome switch. Perhaps the secret of his click is the manner in which he weaves in the serious, then switches from his special lyrics to a broadism that hits for the laughs. His material is tailored to his serious pan, his easy handling of vocal ranges required and a voice that is one of the more compelling, be it straight or comic, on cafe circuits.

From his opening songology on Miami Beach to his work on ringsiders in which he throws in a birthday song to a prominent guest, he wins them and holds 'em all the way. He could have stayed on all night but called for standard "jack" story and others would have stretched the proceedings into the second show. For the first time this season they're standing in line for the supper show.

Supporting show is okay. Only newcomer with Thomas is songstress Karen Tedder. A trim looking blonde, she gets by nicely, though potency of her personality and delivery could be heightened with a smarter choice of songs. As is, her blending of pops, standards and hillbilly songs earn her hearty reception.

Production holds over, with the Herb George production vocalizings okay, the line niftily costumed and the "Circus" finale still a standout, via the Asia Boys and Myrna Bell's acrobatics. And of course, the four Step Bros. wham over slick hoofery, in which the challenge stuff adds up to show-stopping. David Tyler's orch is solid show backer. Lary.

Gayety, Montreal, Clamp for Sabbath Violation Cues Action on Niteries

Montreal, Feb. 28.

The Gayety theatre, only straight two-a-day vaude house here, was closed Friday (24) on orders from Police Director Albert Langlois. Action was taken because the Gayety has been running shows at 12:05 each Sunday night and the law under which the Gayety's permit had been issued required such amusement places to be closed at midnight.

According to manager Tommy Conway all acts had been paid off, told to return to the U. S. and the management has no idea when house will open up again.

Although city officials claim the shuttering has nothing to do with recent drive on illegal night clubs and current vice probe, sudden action looks obvious in view of the fact that this house has been running similar shows every Sunday night for the past few years without anything more drastic than a couple of minor fines last December for similar offenses but no closings.

Present clean-up which has already closed the Night Cap cafe and threatened several others got underway when The Herald ran a series of stories showing how easy it was to get either a drink or femme company after hours. Stories appeared after a report handed down by Director Langlois that Montreal was rid of all forms of gambling and other attractions that indirectly have made Montreal one of the greatest tourist attractions on the continent.

Sudden purity drive comes as something of a surprise to cafe habitues and show people who take the late saloons as a matter of course and can name a dozen or more in the mid-town section where you can wine and dine till dawn in spite of the two o'clock curfew.

However, till probe relaxes, the padded cellars are heeding the closing and giving their clientele more than a cursory glance.

Joe E. Brown 1-Man Show To Aid Deaf Children

San Antonio, Feb. 28.

The show, "An Evening With Joe E. Brown," is part of a nationwide tour.

Revue Shifts to H'wood Nitery When Former Site Is Razed by 90G Fire

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

"Virgin Island" revue has caused the Florentine Gardens to light up again. Show was burned out of Zucca's Opera House in Culver City last week in a fire that damaged $90,000 worth of property. Owners of the Florentine Gardens will share in profits with the Zuccas.

Culver City building was a landmark in Coast show biz. It was built in 1924 and housed many name bands when it was known as the Casa Manana. Benny Goodman and Benny Pollack made their Coast reputations there. During war place was known as the Meadowbrook, operating with a nameband policy until 1947. Revue-type shows it has housed since that time have been moderately successful.

Five Shot in Greenwich Village Nitery Stickup

Two performers and three others were wounded when bandits held up the Moroccan Village, a Greenwich Village, N. Y., spot, early Saturday morning (25). One of the entertainers, Eugene Ebol, 53, a femme impersonator, was shot in the stomach, and is in serious condition. Another performer, Robert Dell, was wounded in the leg. A detective, a patron and a suspect were also wounded.

Holdup came during the late show at the nitery, when one of the bandits commandeered the microphone and ordered customers to leave money and valuables on the tables. Two detectives at the bar adjoining the room started shooting.

ARA-AGVA May Reach Accord On $50 Agency Franchise Tap

Artists Representatives Assn. and American Guild of Variety Artists, which have been meeting to form a new set of regulations may reach a compromise on the $50 franchise fee, which is reported to be the main stumbling block. Both organizations are currently going along on a temporary extension of Rule B contract, which expired Jan. 1.

Percenter organization has come up with a proposal in which agents would face a loss of franchise if non-AGVA acts are booked by them. Through this procedure more acts would be forced to join the union, and AGVA's total on such dues would be greater than the franchise fee.

It's been argued that if the $50 fee, which ARA agents pay into their treasury reverts to AGVA, percenters would thus be relieved of current policing of its member-agents and consequently booking of non-AGVA acts would skyrocket. However,

Chi's College Inn Drops Floorshows In Switch to Society Band Format

Chicago, Feb. 28.

The College Inn., practically a pioneer in every form of nitery entertainment for the past 40 years, will close its doors on March 19. Inn, which was started by the late Ernie Byfield's father and which his son sparked into the top hotel spot in the country, will be turned into a room similar to Pump Room in sister hotel, Ambassador East, with society band as only entertainment.

In a board of directors' meeting last week decision was made to convert basement bistro, which brought ice shows, celebrity nights, swing bands, salues to American composers, and finally a tribute and to the efforts of Byfield and his partner, Frank Bering, "College Inn Story," into a more intime operation. Nightclub had not been doing well for the past several months. Although some of the composer series racked up hefty grosses, tabs for present show is low.

Also at the board meeting James Hart was named president of the Ambassador hotel as well as the Sherman, and Pat Hoy, general manager of the Sherman, was moved into the veepee spot. Frank Bering remains chairman of the board.

Conventioneers Hypoing Nitery, Theatre Biz in A.C.

Atlantic City, Feb. 28.

Resort business here is being hypoed this week by 14,000 delegates and families attending the 76th annual session of the American Assn. of School administrators.

While their sessions are concerned with educational problems, their amusement schedule brings to the resort Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, who will entertain on the program Wednesday night (1). The Waring organization is being presented by the Associated Exhibitors.

Television in Education was the topic of a discussion group this afternoon with W. H. Lemmel, superintendent of school of Baltimore, Md., the chairman of the meeting.

Hotels, film theatres, restaurants and even the nightclubs are getting a good play from the conventioneers.

Hefty U. S. Lineup

the end of this week or next, accents that so far as the Lido is concerned the management pays Yank talent 50% in U. S. dollars, per contract, on National City Bank in N. Y. There have been instances, says Fraday, where the management had to go to Switzerland to buy dollars but always kept its covenant in this respect. This is in refutation of certain other Paris boites experiencing hassles with American vauders on 50% U. S. currency remittances.

The Lido interior, incidentally, has been reconstructed a bit to move certain pillars back for better view, and at the same time adding 25 tables. Capacity will now be 950, eclipsing Bal Tabarin (in the Montmartre) in size. Incidentally, from Paris it is reported that the Tabarin estate has been talking to Louis-Guerin to take over that internationally renowned cabaret-theatre.

As with Lou Walters' current stunt of doubling his Latin Quarter revue into the across-the-street Broadway Strand, the Lido has a three-times-a-year deal with Warner Bros. in Paris for the Grand Palace. When WB has a run picture at this Paris deluxer, the Lido floorshows become the stage attraction. It was tried out first last Xmas, and will be repeated at Easter and during October for the Auto Fair, a big event annually in Paris. Whenever that is done the cinema raises its prices.

Louis-Guerin also is bringing over the "Skating Vanities" April 26 for a month at the Palais des Sports. This is John H. Harris' Sports. Buster Crabbe's "Aqua-Parade" comes in next, and "Holliday On Ice" will be booked for six months in the provinces, Belgium, etc., playing arenas, but not Paris.

Canada Expo. Mulls Kaye, Hope for This Yr.'s Show

Toronto, Feb. 28

Olsen and Johnson will not play the Canadian National Exhibition this season. After years of headlining the grandstand show to record breaking grosses, fair toppers felt that a change of attraction was necessary.

CNE is currently attempting to line up Danny Kaye and have also thrown out bids to Bob Hope.

CNE is regarded as probably the top fair date. Grosses run around $400,000 for two weeks.

IRVING FIELDS
A "WOW"!
VARIETY, Feb. 22, 1950
"Irving Fields and his trio (piano, bass and drums) wow with their sock instrumentalism with Fields displaying some pyrotechnical finger-work on their trio of tunes. They open with a fast "Wedding Samba," achieve a good pace-change with "St. Louis Blues" and wind with Fields' composition, "Managua Nicaragua."

New Acts

FRANK GALLAGHER AND SANDRA
Songs
35 Mins.
Normandie Roof, Montreal

Latest husband-and-wife song combo, Frank Gallagher and Sandra shapes up well. Although no stranger to the local circuit, Gallagher is doing present stint with Sandra for the first time and other than the usual opening-night flubs, they drew a neat reception from patrons.

Gallagher opens alone doing a hefty medley of ballads, Irish and corn, and then intros his wife. Sandra is a brunet with plenty of class, and after a little patter that could be sharpened for better effects she teams with Gallagher for "Oughta Know More About You," then singles with "Tell Me Why" from "South Pacific." Voice has appeal but seemingly lacks experience, leaving Gallagher to polish the rough spots with his neat vocalizing.

General tightening throughout session, with an earlier entrance for Sandra, would sharpen interest.

THE FOUR COLLEENS
Singing
8 Mins.; One
Colonial, Albany

Quartet of women singers register solidly. Formed in California two years ago and produced by Ben Yost, act vocalizes in smooth, fast, rhythmic fashion, with a few light comedy touches.

An embellished standard number (with soprano solo) is followed by a medley of college numbers. Then a harmony bit, done so well as to suggest more emphasis on this type. An animal story in song is the encore, offered after foursome took several bows in sixth slot. Gals look very attractive in two segments where a bright spot plays on them. They dress nicely, although two wear odd hairdos. A slight reduction in gyrations — smallest girl, at right, sings with rather noticeable effort — would help. They take turns at the p.a.; tall auburn-haired gal is leader.
Jaco.

NAPOLEON REED
Songs
25 Mins.
Carrousel, Montreal

Napoleon Reed, lyric tenor who scored in Billy Rose's presentation of "Carmen Jones" both in New York and on the road, makes his first nitery appearance here and garners a smash reception for song selection and general showmanship.

Offering has plenty of change with "La Mere" and "Stand Up and Fight," from "Carmen Jones," picking up most interest. Using a legit voice at all times, Reed handles the mike like a vet without any of the usual blasting and trick piping.

A good medley about halfway through paces offering, and Reed does seven numbers before getting off the floor. Kudos go to Millicent Brown for a solid boost with her piano accomp.
Newt.

ROBERTA WELCH
Songs
8 Mins.
St. Moritz Hotel, N. Y.

Roberta Welch, onetime singer at the nearby Essex House, with Nick D'Amico's orch, indicates some know-how in her vocals. Projection is generally good and the tune selection, mainly from proven standards, hits the crowd well.

There are some rough spots in Miss Welch's work. One of these is the faultily written introductions to her tunes. Some of her arrangements do not show her voice off to best advantage, but when these kinks are ironed out she'll be okay for general run of cafes.
Jose.

OSWALD BEMAND
Birds
10 Mins.; Full
Palace, N. Y.

This aviary offering doesn't deviate much from the usual pattern of bird acts. It's a standard item with Oswald Bemand pacing the feathered creatures through familiar routines of walking across bridges, standing on spinning carousels and generally obeying the trainer's commands.

Bemand is a personable spieler with a dry sense of humor. The comedy patter should be strengthened to take this act out of the conventional class.
Herm.

SHERRIER
Dance
9 Mins.
Latin Quarter, N. Y.

The singularly named Sherrier, a French import, playing his first U. S. date, has some good terp material in the rubber-legged manner which uses many trick slides, shuffles and eccentric hoofing. He has a good assortment of routines which include satires on the can-can, waltz and rhumba.

For U. S. audiences, however, he needs more pointed material. Present routines, if sharpened, would suffice. Most of his dance-designs are inherently funny. In some respects, he's reminiscent of Hal Sherman.

Sherrier makes an initially good appearance, garb comprising tux jacket with wide, baggy pants, and heavy-rimmed specs give him a good head start. Some revision in routining is called for if he's to get maximum returns from American audiences.
Jose.

GAYE DIXON
Songs
12 Mins.
Carrousel, Montreal

Holding over for a second session, Gaye Dixon socks over her songs. Opens with "Great Day," drops into "All of Me" for the ballad-lovers, and then gets back with a torch treatment of "Lonesomest Gal in Town."

Has a driving beat in all offerings and plenty of charm to carry all songs above the gabfests around the room. Although a little strident at times for an intime cafe, Miss Dixon would be okay in front of a big production, and okay grooming makes her good for tele and vaude.
Newt.

THE WHIRLWINDS (4)
Roller Skating
7 Mins.; Full
Palace, N. Y.

This is a standard vaude opener. Comprising two men and two gals, this quartet is an expert acro-rollerskating team. Repertory of tricks is limited, however, and they are forced to repeat the same stunt several times over.

They do variations of a whirling routine in which the gals are swung around the stage while clinging to the pirouetting men skaters. Effect is spine-chilling the first time but soon wears off. For a windup, they do a foursome spinning stunt with luminous costumes making weird patterns on the darkened stage.

Gambling Nix

of Music Corp. of America, also came to gander the results.

Further crackdowns are expected. In fact many lush horse-betting concessions in hotels and elsewhere are in danger. Insiders feel that a complete halt to any betting activities will come if certain elements proceed with plans to impeach certain Florida public officials. It's believed that these forces think they went beyond authority by permitting "regulated gambling."

The closing of the cafes, together with the merger, put several top acts at liberty. Other cafes in this area are currently quite willing to take up the slack in headliner employment, but problem is finding the proper slot. For example, Joe E. Lewis and Harry Richman were supposed to open with Sophie Tucker at the Beachcomber tomorrow night (Wed.) but, instead, Lewis most likely will follow Milton Berle at Copa City. Berle, who opens Thursday (2) at Copa City, thus will be in direct opposition to Miss Tucker. Billy Vine is set to open with Miss Tucker. Inasmuch as both are William Morris acts, Miss Tucker is reported to be burned at the situation. She's said to have told agency toppers that they precipitated another Kaye vs. Miranda "situation" by failing to space headliners. Miss Tucker referred to the recent direct opposition of Danny Kaye at the Beachcomber by Carmen Miranda at Copa City. Operators of both spots thus lost out on that deal.

Copa City, from the outset of the season, had difficulty in paying off Olsen & Johnson, and finally settled in a series of installments. Several headliners are still owed some coin. Berle, who has been booked in at $40,000 for the 10 days, insists on being paid off nightly at the rate of $4,000.

Copa's merger with the Beachcomber indicates that an agreement has been made by both managements to pay off the Copa's reported $400,000 indebtedness at the rate of $40,000 annually for 10 years. The new corporation will be headed by Ned Schuyler, who had operated the Beachcomber. Tom Cassara, representing the Copa City's owners, will be veepee. Murray Weinger, who built Copa City, is reported as having no share in the new ownership, but may be retained as manager of the room. New corporate setup is known as the Mid-Century Corp., and after April 3 the Beachcomber site will be closed and shows will go into the larger Copa City.

The merger means the end of a talent "war" between two of the largest cafe talent buyers in the country. Henceforth, the booking of names is expected to be a controlled situation in that area. With such acute competition eliminated, the remaining cafes will be able to make more favorable terms for top talent. It will also eliminate billing battles resulting from the multiple headliner shows. For example, when Miss Tucker was to have opened at the Beachcomber, with either Lewis or Harry Richman, she insisted on the top marquee spot.

Another factor in the probable elimination of headliner scarcity in this area resulted from some curious situations. For example, Danny Thomas, following his run at La Boheme, was booked into Copa City. Owners of La Boheme protested on Copa's opening of Thomas on the same night they were preeming Lewis, and so Copa delayed its preem four days.

Miami and Miami Beach niteries, generally, have had one of the worst seasons in years. The larger spots were the major sufferers since most of the trade seemed to filter down to the smaller clubs where prices weren't as high.

Some percenters feel that because of bad cafe conditions this year, more leeway will be given hotels next year and they may be able to book full-scale nitery shows. Present curfew laws in hotels currently make this prohibitive.

TV's Sat. Nite

video. In the move, broadcasters are taking on the toughest challenge of all because of the traditional night-out factor. If they can't meet and overcome competition from films, then they will know just where their medium stands. If no appreciable decline in the film boxoffice is felt, exhibs also will be able to prove that psychological factor of gregariousness, on which they have based their claims that the public wants to gather for their entertainment in large numbers, as they do in a theatre.

If, on the other hand, Saturday night video does nick the boxoffice, exhibs may be forced into some drastic measures to combat the threat. What those measures will be is still wide open to speculation, since exhibs who now believe that TV actually hurts them have not come up with any telling counter-blows. Meanwhile, theatre operators in the video areas have their fingers crossed in the hope that the Saturday night threat may succumb once the novelty of staying at home on Saturdays wears off. They point out that the Milton Berle Tuesday night video stanza, while it's still the top-rated show, no longer has its original impact, when it was responsible for such moves as Brooklyn stores switching their late nights from Tuesday to Wednesday.

TV broadcasters, of course, didn't start the Saturday night boom with any intention of a fight-to-the-finish with films. Move, instead, has been an intra-industry development. Until recently, the networks almost completely shunned Saturdays as a poor stay-at-home night, which it has always proved to be in radio. They now believe that Saturday is a partying night and so, while it may not be good for radio listening, can draw heavy video audiences. That factor, coupled with the dearth of available time on other nights, has resulted in the Saturday emphasis.

Indicating the type of competition that exhibs will have to face and overcome is the new two-and-a-half hour Saturday night spread launched last week (25) by NBC. Show carries a talent and production budget of over $50,000 weekly and features such name talent as Sid Caesar, Jack Carter, Imogene Coca and top guesters. CBS now has both the Ed Wynn and Ken Murray shows on Saturday, and DuMont has its "Cavalcade of Stars," heavily-budgeted vaudeo show topped by Jackie Miles as emcee.

Rockwell's Coast Trek

Thomas G. Rockwell, General Artists Corp. president, is slated to make his semi-annual trip to the Coast next week. He'll be followed by Milton Krasny, GAC veepee, who also divides his time between New York and the Coast.

N. Y. office will be left in charge of Art Weems.

Capitol, N. Y.

The Capitol's stageshow is distinguished by the first appearance of Benny Fields in a Broadway theatre since the foldo of Loew's State, where the vet singer played exclusively in the past. He's on a bill generally marked by good playing values. The Blue Barron band is designed for vauderies, with stress upon elements that makes the band an entertainment factor. Novelty and comedy are by Paul Sydell and Gene Sheldon.

Fields is a durable performer with considerable verve. Per usual, he comes equipped with a set of carefully tailored arrangements and a good tune selection. While there's a nostalgic mien to his work, his numbers are fashioned for modern audiences. His reception indicates that there's always a Broadway audience for his work. He gets off to an appreciative palm.

Sheldon's pantomime is always pleasing. There are some classic bits to his routine, including his difficulties in getting his foot to tap in time to his banjo-plunking, and his encore piece of "sewing" up his hand. Loretta Fischer assists him in his encore bit for excellent results.

Other act on the bill is Sydell, who puts a set of pooches through a pleasing display for good results.

The Barron band comprises a self-contained entertainment unit. Singers are kept on stage to make it look like a big act at all times, and routines are so designed that the band is able to dispense huge chunks of entertainment for comparatively long periods. There's a semblance of activity at all times. Appearance of the crew is also excellent. Uniforms are better-appearing than those of the average stage orch.

The instrumentation, comprising a brass sextet, four rhythms, and four reeds, results in some smooth arrangements. There's a second piano placed for atmospheric effect. There's a trick whistler, Alan Carrier, who's stationed at the piano throughout the proceedings, and frequently makes like he's working the ivories, but it's probable that he'd ruin the effect if he really did work that instrument. There's a large vocal contingent, including Betty Clarke, a personable chirper, who makes the grade with "Mocking Bird;" Helen Lowe and Bobby Beers provide some pleasing duets, and when choral work is called for, several bandsmen line up. Net effect of their efforts is good.

There's even a finale in which Fields does a bit of terping. Glee-club arrangement and the vocal contingent give an entertaining account of "Your Lips Tell Me No No." It's an effective curtain.

Teatro Puerto Rico, N.Y.

Cesar Romero, with Cook Sisters (2); Perucho, Los Cuates Castillo (2), Rosarito Durcal, Dorian Iris, Nagle & Hilja, Amelita Marquez, Enriqueta Faubert, Moreno, Carlos Piantini House Orch; "Una Mujer Con Pasado" (Azteca).

The Puerto Rico theatre, in the Spanish section of the Bronx, doesn't have too many stageshows anymore what with the shortage of top-flight names that the Latins can go for. And when said names become available, salaries are frequently prohibitive.

Fortunately, the house impresario, Carlos Montalban, brother of Metro's Ricardo Montalban, has good connections in the film capital, as well as contacts in the entertainment centers of the Latin-American countries. Consequently, he's able to come up with an occasional attraction that can reap tremendous business.

For the current week, he has Cesar Romero, who cuts a dashing figure in a western costume. Romero would probably attract a great number of the non-Hispanic patronage if he'd include some routines in English. As is, there's a predominance of femmes in the audience and, apparently, his Spanish spiels contain a few notes that hit them right. There are frequent outbursts of applause during his talking sessions, indicating that he knows just what to say to his companeros. After a few minutes of opening remarks, there's a discourse on Hollywood in company with the house emcee, the singularly named Perucho. The humor in this situation apparently lies in Perucho's mispronunciation of various filmsters' names. The payees laughed.

Romero, who used to be part of a dance team when working around New York cafes, reprises some terps with the aid of the Cook Sisters (2). His ballroomology is brief and graceful, and he gets off to a warm hand.

The show topper is in on a $3,000 guarantee plus 50% of the gate after $6,000. Montalban thinks he should walk out with more than $5,000, since the first two opening days hit about $4,000.

Of course, the stuff that Romero shows here isn't sufficient for exhibition outside this area. His terping will do, but he'll have to get an English line of chatter, among other things, to qualify him for work elsewhere.

A lengthy show accompanies Romero. Firstly, there's Perucho, who's dressed in a leopard-skin sports jacket and who occasionally makes like a comic in burlesquing the act that just completed taking a bow. The major outside act is a pair of chappies in serapes billed as Los Cuates Castillo. They're doubling from the Havana-Madrid, midtown cafe. Their harmonic work with their own guitar accompaniment is colorful. They also show lengthy talk routines which rated oles with those digging the lingo.

There's a novelty turn, Nagle and Hilja, who come out in cat costumes for some feline antics. The boy appears to be an excellent acrobat, but routines aren't effective. Dancers in the troupe are Dorian Iris and Enriqueta Faubert, both of whom do okay, especially Miss Faubert, who does a major amount of grinds. Rosarito Durcal finds favor with her songs, and Moreno deadpans his way in sax solos.

Pianist Amelita Marquez is Romero's cousin, a looker who plays a good classical 88 and gives a class touch to the program.

Fox, St. Louis

St. Louis, Feb. 25.

Jerry Colonna, Gaudsmith Bros., Wally & Verdyn Stapleton, Ting & Tung, Hanlon & Murphy, Joe Schirmer, Frank Panus Orch; "Port of New York" (EL).

Top billing and honors go to Jerry Colonna in the current layout. Comedian is in fine fettle and not only does his own turn to swell audience reaction but also m.c.'s. His rendition of "On the Road to Mandalay," "Carolina," a satire on grand opera warbling, plus a dramatic skit as an Italian organ grinder who sells his monk to a circus, only to regret it and become reconciled with the animal garners terrif applause.

Bill is opened by Frank Panus maestroing the tooters through a medley of Jerome Kern's ditties for a neat session and in the second slot are Ting & Tung, Chinese lads, have plenty on the ball with their soft shoe dancing, comedy and a swell impression of the Ink Spots, Frankie Lane, Rose Murphy and Frank Sinatra which wins merited applause.

Tommy Hanlon, Jr., with a comely gal tagged Murphy do a comedy skit highlighted with a burlesk of using a miniature guillotine on a audience stooge in a head chopping act.

Wally and Verdyn Stapleton, tap dancers, please with some intricate steps with the gal, a blonde looker, equally as clever as her partner. The Gaudsmith Bros. have a comedy dog act with two highly trained pups. Joe Schirmer, banjoist with the band winds up session with his swell interp of "Begin the Beguine." Biz good.

Casino, Toronto

Toronto, Feb. 24.

Bonnie Baker, Clark Bros., Bob O'Neil, Murray & Hubert, Jimmy Cameron, Mimo Elhlo, Charles Gregory Line (18), Archie Stone House Orch; "Chinatown at Midnight" (Col).

Bonnie Baker is headliner for an enthusiastic reception. Diminutive singer in white, strapless gown, goes over well with baby-voiced versions of her hit recordings and inevitable "Oh, Johnny" finish; but it's the Clark Bros. who sock over for greatest applause honors. The pair do fast and furious tapping, throw in a truckin' routine and finish with a jitterbug at terrific tempo. Had to beg-off.

On comedy end is Bob O'Neil with zany chatter, an impression of a little girl singing "Alice Blue Gown," and some good eccentric dancing; Murray & Hubert contrib their domestic bickering, with the male finally asserting himself and winning the whole-hearted applause of the males in audience. Gregory line girls have two pleasing production numbers, with Mimo Elhlo clicking with a high-kick and acrobatic specialty. Whole bill is well-paced and biz good.

Music Hall, N. Y.

"Confetti," musical revue, with Patricia Drylie, Roy Raymond, Walter Graff, Lee Marx, Vic & Adio, Jessica Haist, Frank Gamboni, Corps de Ballet, Rockettes, Choral Ensemble & Music Hall Symphony Orch; produced by Russell Markert; setting, Bruno Maine; lighting, Eugene Braun; choreography, Florence Rogge; costumes, James Stewart Morcom; "Stage Fright" (WB), reviewed in current issue of VARIETY.

The Music Hall has a handsome stage show this stanza, one with appeal for a variety of tastes. Good dancing and singing, in both solo and ensemble work, are backed by some impressive settings and costuming, with the revue sprinkled with a couple of good vaude turns for spice and variety.

Opening curtain reveals an eye-filler, in a stage-full of ballerinas in white, romantic tuttis. Corps de ballet does some neat variations on its own, before forming background pattern for some fine solo work by ballerina Patricia Drylie. Dancer shows good technique and style in some smart twirls and turns.

Quick change of mood comes with Lee Marx's comedy juggling act, with Marx scoring strongly in a variety of bits. Juggling of balls and pins is standard stuff, and comedy is familiar, but the latter isn't overdone while the juggling is expert. Marx's stunt of walking a rubberball up and down a teeterboard, and jumping rope on the way, is good for a rousing finish to strong applause.

Second production number, "Shoemaker's Holiday," starts off ingeniously with an idea apparently borrowed from "Red Shoes" but still pretty smart—a dancing bit with only luminous shoes visible. Then come the Rockettes out of a huge shoe to do their reliable, surefire tap routine, with a comedy finish for a fresh twist. Comedy bit has been done before by the Rockettes, but is still good.

Vic and Adio next offer their sock hand-to-hand balancing, starting with their difficult balancing stunt across a table, and following through with more of their slick, involved tricks. Insertion of a bit of comedy, and the samba dance bits in between tricks, isn't new, but it still scores, and duo rate the strong hand at the finish.

Show closes with an elaborate, colorful operetta excerpt, from "New Moon," with Jessica Haist appealing in her solo and in duet, but with Frank Gamboni less successful with his baritoning chores. Chorus, handsomely garbed, gives rousing support to the various songs, while the setting is impressive.

Bron.

Oriental, Chi

Ken Griffin, Nellie Lutcher, Eddie Hubbard, Ames Bros. (4), Herbie Fields Quintet, Carl Sands Orch; "Quicksand" (UA).

This disk jockey presentation of record stars might be more effective with one more act and a little more relief from straight music. With only four acts, and able assist by Eddie Hubbard, WIND jock, there's too much of the same following each other, and while this may satisfy the devotees, the regulars might find this a bit wearing.

After the special fanfare presenting platter spinner, Ken Griffin, jazz organist, registers with unusual sound effects, not usually associated with the Hammond. His violin effects, a la Jack Benny, in "Love in Bloom" gets chuckles and his train noises during "Sentimental Journey" add a sock touch. However, it's his straight rendition of his hit, "You Can't Be True Dear" that sells best.

Nellie Lutcher hits hard with "Hurry on Down," but the rest of the material seems sluffed off until she gives out with "Real Gone Guy." Her "Alexander's Ragtime Band" is fine except for the bop touches as a closer. Eddie Hubbard, besides filling the middle slot, emcees capably. His uke strumming on "Chattanoogie Shoe Shine Boy" gets big applause.

Ames Bros., four youngsters, are the hit of the show, displaying good voices and arrangements, plus comedy. Quartet tees off with fasty, "I Lover Her, Oh, Oh, Oh" and follows with "Clancy Lowered the Boom." In their vocaling of "Because," youths display fine harmony. Then a medley of "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee," "By the Light of the Silvery Moon," and "Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie" interspersed with some soft shoe work and some solid mugging by Vic Ames. Group returns for a mop up with "Rag Mop" and bit of jitterbug. While spiritual, "Who Built the Ark," is a bit anti-climactic they get hefty hand, and have to beg off.

Herbie Fields and his tooters please the hep matinee attendees. Basically, a top quintet, it's the gyrations and gymnastics, rather than the music, which garner the applause. Perhaps, one tune done in standard fashion, might show the real possibilities of the band. Novelty, "Somebody Done Snagged Your Britches," done by Fields and his guitarist, is in sharp contrast to the other material. In closer, "Flying Home," which is overlong, leader does some extra fancy triple tongue and finger work on the clarinet.

Capitol, Wash.

Washington, Feb. 24.

Marion & Miller, Toni Arden, Bob Williams, Dunhills (3), Milt Slosser at organ, Sam Jack Kaufman House Orch; "When Willie Comes Marching Home" (20th).

Capitol comes up with a good, lively layout this week, following standard pattern of house, but better paced and more solid than in recent weeks. Milt Slosser, a house regular, deserves kudoes for his appeal to patrons with community sing and organ solo, always a factor here in getting the galleries into receptive mood for show.

The Dunhills, show headliners, rate marquee attention for their smooth routine of precision terping. Trio of dancers click with a fast, dazzling display of team-work and terp technique. Boys, who have just returned from a British tour, still stick to their standard format of well-timed, swift-moving hoofing. There's the usual stunting and individual turns, but class terping puts the troupe into upper brackets. Walk off to hefty mitt action.

Surprise of show is chantoosey Toni Arden, of disk fame, who nabs much more appreciation for her warbling than Capitol audiences normally allot to this type of act. Gal has a nice personality, varied style, ranging from straight romantic to a sultry handling of tunes, and a pair of pipes that are easy on the ears. Sticks to current and oldie pop numbers, opening with "Sometimes I'm Happy," then on to "Just a Little Love, a Little Kiss," "I Can Dream" and back for "Temptation."

Bob Williams delights moppet crowds and adults with his naive handling of his well-trained pups. It's a dog act with a different touch, and departure from the usual succession of tricks is pleasant. Williams works with a pair of canines, a terrier and a cocker, playing stooge to his animals. There's some delightful comedy, as trainer does a proud mama routine, enthusing over stunts that never materialize. Then, at unexpected moments, the brace of dogs come through with some really difficult stunts, much to payees' delight. This act is surefire.

Marion & Miller make better than average curtain raisers with their rhythmic acro routine, accenting some of the best balancing feats seen here in some time.

Missouri, K. C.

Kansas City, Feb. 22.

Roulettes (3), Dave & Dot Workman, Virginia Lee (2), Think-a-Drink Hoffman (5), Rex Weber (2), Manuel & Marita Viera, Alan Carney, Salici Puppets (4); House Orch (11); "Tell It to the Judge" (Col).

Missouri is back to vaude with a regulation Palace-type bill, first here in a couple of months. Like some of its predecessors it stacks up as moderately good entertainment in the variety pattern.

Roulette trio on rollers mixes up team acrobatics with solo gyrations to start the 70 minutes off to a snappy pace. Second is a musical novelty with Dave and Dot Workman rubbing goblets, ringing bells and getting tunes out of horns and homemade contraptions. Virginia Lee, hefty gal, begins as an acro solo, but soon drags on her plant-partner for a turn at rookie-style acrobatics good for round of yocks and applause.

Think-a-Drink Hoffman is on mid-show with round of drink passing, pouring liberal list of libations from his magic pitcher and supplying orders of customers. In the way of vocal gyrations Rex Weber covers a wide variety, including voice-throwing, dialects and straight work on his established "Brother Can You Spare a Dime." Niche for animal act is filled by Manuel and Marita Viera and their pair of Reiser monkeys, with comedy and rhythms in Latin style to satisfaction of kids of all ages.

Next to closing Alan Carney ventures into lighthearted chatter and takes a turn at Irish, Italian and Yiddish dialects in his monologistic takeoff on a union meeting, for moderate returns. Salici troupe closes with their line-up of puppets which carry off a miniature variety show in their own right, pleasing the customers all the way.

Palace, N. Y.

The Whirlwinds (4), Jack Soo, Marvellos (3), Chester Frederics & Bobby, George Beatty, Siccardi & Brenda, Slim Timblin Co. (3), Oswald Bemand; "Father Is a Bachelor" (Col), reviewed in VARIETY, Feb. 15, '50.

Current Palace show comprises a fair vaude layout buttressed by only one standout turn, The Marvellos. Rest of the bill is standard, with enough entertainment values to get by, but without any sock audience payoff.

The Whirlwinds open with a standard acro-rollerskating stunts (New Acts). As the only vocalist in the show, Jack Soo registers okay with a brace of romantic ballads. Chinese crooner closes strongly with a powerful baritone rendition of "Lucky Old Sun."

The Marvellos make up a top-flight magico turn, flavoring the legerdemain stuff with good comedy and music to build into a fast and diversified offering. Pivot man is a versatile performer who plays several instruments expertly before making them disappear. Comedy factors are dished up by the two partners, who have dummy replicas of themselves which they use to confuse the audience. Siccardi and Brenda are a classy terping duo with a classical ballet accent. Neat impression is made by their smooth and graceful routines.

Chester Frederics & Bobbie turn in a snappy session of hoofing, with Frederics, a vet performer, executing a fancy series of routines. Gal partner fills in with more conventional stepping and joins Frederics in a cute jitterbug impression.

George Beatty launches his comedy turn weakly with a patter of stale gags but builds to a stronger finish with his drunk imitation. Beatty needs new lines to bolster his casual delivery and ought to give heavier accent to his pantomime bits.

In next-to-closing, Slim Timblin & Co. are dishing out an oldtime blackface routine. Timblin has been doing this act for years. The racial and religious overtones have a different context today, and what was okay yesterday may be bad taste today. Oswald Bemand's bird turn is reviewed under New Acts.

Olympia, Miami

Miami, Feb. 25.

Lanny Ross, Professor Backwards, Mary Kaye Trio, Rowena Rollins, Howard & Wanda Bell, Les Rhode House Orch; "The Heiress" (Par).

Twenty-fourth anniversary show for this vaude flagship in south Florida is a well-rounded one that hits applause meter for hearty returns all the way.

Lanny Ross is a fave here, and with this return impresses as having lost none of the vocalistic ability and personable approach that wins the plaudits. Works in the standards he's been associated with, to blend with a "South Pacific" medley plus a French song that adds a fresh note. Had to beg-off.

Almost walking off with proceedings is comedienne Rowena Rollins. The tallish blonde keeps the yocks coming steadily with heaviest howlmakers her "cooking lesson" in which she gets involved with the cooking wine; incisive takeoffs on Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and a stripper with political ambitions.

Native Floridian, and an annual returnee here is Jimmy Edmondsen — Professor Backwards. His blackboard routine, on which he spells words called from the audience backwards, inside, garners palm action. Patter on topical matters, done in straight-panned manner, adds laugh potential for a solid stint.

Teeoffers for lineup, Howard and Wanda Bell set zingy pace via their head to head balancing for the gasps and mitts. Mary Kaye Trio score with their instrumental comedy and tricks. Les Rhode and house orch backgrounds smoothly.

The Ink Spots, vocal quartet piloted by Billy Kenny and carrying their own piano accompanist, sparkplug current layout at this Harlem vauder and should hypo biz plenty. Despite this being their umpteeth stand here, audience enthusiasm runs high throughout their entire session.

Bullmoose Jackson band and supporting acts make for a diverting and well-paced session. However, it's the Ink Spots who clean

Little Immediate Chance of Equity Modifying Policy on Star-Sharing

Little immediate prospect is seen of Actors Equity modifying its established policy in regard to star contracts calling for a share of a show's profits. Question has been raised a number of times lately in connection with intensive efforts by managements to cut down production and operating costs.

It's been suggested that, as a step in reducing the break-even point for shows and thereby being able to pay off the backers sooner, a system might be established giving stars a share of the profits rather than the generally prevailing setup of giving such names a percentage of the gross.

Equity's attitude has always been that it would be too difficult to police contracts calling for a slice of the net, instead of the gross, since it would always be relatively easy for an unscrupulous management to cover up profits by inflating expense figures. Some union council members are inclined to approve of the recent move by the Committee of Theatrical Producers in standardizing production accounting systems, but they point out that there'd be nothing to prevent managements from rigging figures even under the approved bookkeeping setup.

Although Equity does not actually forbid actor cointracts providing for a share of profits, it does not guarantee them. That is up to the stars involved, who generally have to rely on the honesty of the management concerned, plus the regular monthly accountant's statement on the particular production. Contracts calling for a percentage of the gross are relatively easy to double-check, since boxoffice figures are less a confidential matter, especially because of the admissions tax angle.

Actually, only a few top stars normally get a share of the profits of productions in which they appear. Among those who do are Helen Hayes, Gertrude Lawrence, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, and Tallulah Bankhead, all of whom also get a percentage of the gross. Numerous other names (and non-names) frequently participate by investing in the production.

ANTA PUSHES TIX VIA GUEST-LECTURE SETUP

Through its guest-lecture setup, the American National Theatre & Academy is taking steps to stimulate group purchase of tickets to Broadway shows among members of clubs, little theatre groups and other organizations within commuting distance of New York. Legit managements are being asked today (Wed.) to submit information about ticket availabilities for their shows, which ANTA will circulate among organizations' interested in buying blocks of tickets.

In addition, ANTA is issuing information to nearby out-of-town groups regarding theatre party agents and ticket subscription outfits. Most of the requests for dope come from organizations before which guest speakers appear. These dates, over 200 of which have been booked by ANTA so far this season, generally involve talks about the legit theatre by show business names.

ANTA's idea in querying Broadway managements is to keep an up-to-date file of availabilities, so when groups in communities within commuting distance express interest in buying blocks of tickets they can be given accurate information.

Syd Chaplin Cast For Saroyan's 'Son'

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

Sydney Chaplin, son of Charlie Chaplin, has been cast for one of the top roles in "The Son," new William Saroyan play to be premiered here in mid-March by the Circle Players.

There will be 45 actors used in the show. Ross Bagdasarian, Saroyan's cousin, will direct, with assists from Jerry Epstein.

Meanwhile, Chaplin, Sr.'s, oldest son, Charles, Jr., is in the new Fredric March-Florence Eldridge play, "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep," opening this week on Broadway.

Joan Caulfield May Do 'Dream Girl' Repeat

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 28.

Joan Caulfield, who guest-starred at the Sombrero playhouse here recently in "Dream Girl," may do the Elmer Rice play again at the New Century theatre, Hollywood, with film director Frank Ross again doing the staging. Idea is to borrow Don Porter, Hayden Rorke and Richard Webb, of the local cast, to repeat their principal supporting assignments, and to use the Sombrero scenery.

Brock Pemberton opens tonight (Tues.) here in "Harvey." Comedy was staged by Margaret Perry, new resident director and daughter of the late Antoinette Perry, who staged Pemberton's original Broadway production of the Mary Coyle Chase play. Miss Perry just took over the Sombrero directing stint from Harry Ellerbe, who returned to the Coast. Next week's bill offers Kay Francis in "Let Us Be Gay."

Sombrero is operated by Ann Lee and Richard Charlton, who also have a strawhat, El Teatro, at Sante Fe, N. M., every summer.

'Prostie' Touring Film Theatres

After 10 weeks on the subway circuit and eight weeks at the Selwyn, subsequent-run picture house on West 42d street, N. Y., where "The Respectful Prostitute" ran in combination with pictures, show is going out on tour. Condensed play version is due at the Apollo, Harlem, and then the Bedford, Brooklyn, prior to a Loew's nabe theatre tour. It will be double-billed with pix.

George Brandt, son of William Brandt, the theatre owner, inducted "Ladies Night in a Turkish Bath" at the Selwyn two weeks ago, with films, where he plans it for four weeks before also sending it out on tour. "Native Son," "Street Car," "Pick Up Girl" and the like are planned for subsequent combination picture theatre condensations. Because of the 20-shows-per-week schedule each company has two casts.

Rathbone Eyed For 'Giaconda Smile'

London, Feb. 28.

Basil Rathbone is now being considered for the male lead in the Broadway production of "The Giaconda Smile," which Shepard Traube is planning for late this spring. Wendy Hiller is being sought as femme lead, but Sir Ralph Richardson, the original choice for the male assignment, is now figured unlikely to play it.

Traube, who holds the U. S. rights to the Aldous Huxley meller, recently arrived from New York to confer with Miss Hiller and Richardson.

Rathbone in Vaude

Basil Rathbone will play a week of vaudeville, beginning March 15, at the Olympia, Miami. Star, who recently closed a limited-run revival of "The Heiress," at the City Center, N. Y., will present a group of dramatic and poetry "readings."

Actor had been mentioned for the title part in Jean Dalrymple's proposed Broadway production of Norman Ginsbury's "The First Gentleman" this season, but that is reportedly now in abeyance.

'Excursion' as Musical In Princeton Am Tryout

Princeton, Feb. 28.

"Dreamboat," a musical version of Victor Wolfson's 1936-37 drama, "Excursion," will be tried out March 31 and April 1 at the McCarter theatre here by the Princeton Community Players, an amateur group.

Show has a score by Alec Templeton, book by Stella Unger, and lyrics by Wolfson and Miss Unger.

Whitehead-Clurman To Eye Paris Click

Robert Whitehead and Harold Clurman, respective co-producer and director of "Member of the Wedding," will go to France in late March or early April to see Franz Kafka's "Les Juste," with the idea of having it adapted for the U. S., possibly for Broadway presentation next season. The drama is a hit in Paris.

U. S. rights to the same author's "The Trial" are held by a Coast group.

New Financing Method Is Seen Via Buildup of Mail Order List for Producers

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Joshua Logan's ingenious idea of sending out a letter to 30,000 persons who had previously ordered by mail tickets for "Mr. Roberts," and the phenomenal results achieved for his "The Wisteria Trees, with advance orders to date totaling more than $250,000, suggests a new way of legitimate play financing.

With the cooperation of the management of "South Pacific," "Death of a Salesman" and other hits, Logan's list could be built up to 100,000 or more names and addresses of those who make a practice of ordering their tickets by mail. This list should then be made available to all reputable producers.

With the opportunity of a large advance ticket sale, the producer could then go to a bank and get a loan up to 60% of his budget—just as films are now financed.

Surely Logan's action is the basis of an idea for saving the "fabulous invalid" which ANTA or the Committee of Theatrical Producers would do well to explore.

Cookson Maps London Showing of 'Innocents'

Peter Cookson, producer of "The Innocents," at the Playhouse, N.Y., will probably present the thriller in London in May or June, as a solo venture, but possibly in association with an English management. British director Peter Glenville, who staged the Broadway original, is set to repeat the assignment for the West End edition. Jo Mielziner's setting will also be duplicated.

Present idea is to make a film version of the William Archibald-Henry James drama in England, doing the shooting at Dartington Hall, country home of the parents of Beatrice Straight (Mrs. Cookson), femme lead of the Broadway production and silent partner with husband in the presentation. Several tentative offers have been received for the screen rights, but a deal may hinge on making the picture in England with Glenville directing.

Cookson went to the Coast last week to cast an understudy for David Cole, moppet actor who plays one of the two title parts in the show. He was due back last night (Tues.).

'Roberts' May Be Done In London by June

London production of "Mister Roberts" may be done in May or June by Leland Hayward, possibly in association with H. M. Tennent, Ltd. (Hugh Beaumont). Joshua Logan, co-author and director of the Broadway and touring editions, would probably go over to do the staging.

Herman Bernstein, Hayward's general manager, already tentatively set to go to England about April 1 to make preparations for Hayward's importation of James Bridie's London hit, "Daphne Laureola," will probably also attend to preliminary details of the West End edition of "Roberts." Meanwhile, Hayward and Logan are occupied with their joint presentation of the latter's "Wisteria Trees," currently trying out in Boston for a scheduled Broadway premiere March 29, with Helen Hayes as star.

Alicia Markova and Anton Dolin, sponsored by a new organization, The Amigos de la Musica, scored heavily last week (24-25) in Havana in their first appearance there in three years.

Shubert Trust Suit to Get Drama Desk Going-Over

The Government's anti-trust suit against the Shuberts and the United Booking Office will be the topic of discussion at next Monday's (6) monthly meeting of the Drama Desk, New York legit reporters' group. Principal guests will be Herbert A. Bergson, Assistant U. S. Attorney General and chief of the Anti-Trust division, and Richard Decker, special assistant to the Attorney General in charge of the Shubert-UBO case. Others who have agreed to attend are Louis Lotito, president of City Playhouses, Inc., and manager of the Martin Beck, N. Y.; Howard S. Cullman, theatre owner and investor, and Billy Rose, owner of the Ziegfeld, N. Y.

Lee Shubert, one of those named individually in the Government's suit, has also promised to attend. He is vacationing in Florida.

March Stars In 'Salesman' Disks

Next Broadway straight-play to be recorded in its entirety will probably be "Death of a Salesman." Deal for a Decca album of the Arthur Miller drama is virtually set, with only the distribution of the royalty still to be worked out. Fredric March is to portray the title role in the recorded performance, with the other parts played by members of the original Broadway cast.

Tentative terms reportedly call for payment of a 12% royalty, half of which would go to the author. From the remaining half, producers Kermit Bloomgarden and Walter Fried would pay the cast, including an estimated $5,500 for the supporting players and $1,000, against 2% of the gross, for March. The album may be priced at $12.

Decca recently recorded a full-length performance of T. S. Eliot's "Cocktail Party" on somewhat modified terms. Only other Broadway straight play recorded for issue as an album was the Robinson Jeffers' adaptation of "Medea," in condensed form. That deal was set independently by the star, Judith Anderson, who shared the proceeds with the author, but failed to include the producers, Robert Whitehead and Oliver Rea. A pickup cast was used for the performance.

Lee Shubert Loses Arbitration Award

A $2,500 arbitration award against Lee Shubert was affirmed last week by N. Y. supreme court Justice Benedict D. Dineen. Decision against Shubert was made when the producer filed a claim with the American Arbitration Assn. against Dimitri Tiomkin, Claude Binyon, William Walsh and Frederick Herbert asking return of $2,500 advanced the quartet for rights to their musical, "Sweet Surrender."

Shubert failed to produce the musical, charging the four men with failure to deliver a complete libretto under the regular Dramatists' Guild form of contract. However, the arbitration panel ruled 2-1 against the producer, with the quartet bringing the decision to court for confirmation.

Johnson Gala

Edward Johnson, who is retiring from the Met Opera this June after 15 years as general manager and 13 years prior as leading tenor, was to be honored last night (Tues.) by a gala testimonial at the N. Y. opera house. Performance of "Tosca" was to be followed by an opera pageant and ceremony, with Gov. Dewey and Mayor O'Dwyer slated for the latter, and the entire Met roster participating in the former. Pageant commemorated some of the historic productions in Johnson's regime.

Mrs. August Belmont headed the testimonial committee.

4 Closings Last Week Represent Aggregate Loss of Over $300,000

Four shows that closed last week involved an aggregate loss of over $300,000. Three of the productions shuttered on Broadway and the fourth in Chicago. The three, all new entries, were "Alive and Kicking," "Mr. Barry's Etchings" and "The Enchanted." The fourth was a revival of "Merry Widow."

"Kicking," a revue presented by William R. Katzell and Ray Golden, is figured to have dropped nearly $175,000. Show was financed at $150,000, but had heavy losses in an extended tryout tour and reportedly had cost $160,000 by the time it reached the Winter Garden, N. Y. It incurred an additional deficit during its six-week Broadway run.

"Mr. Barry," comedy by Walter Bullock and Daniel Archer, presented by Brock Pemberton, with Lee Tracy starred, is figured to have lost virtually its entire investment of $60,000. It opened at the 48th Street, N. Y., at a cost of approximately $45,000 (no union bonds were involved), with a tryout deficit, but lost the added $15,000 during its three-and-a-half weeks on Broadway. However, some of the coin may be regained from the film rights, in which there is said to be studio interest.

"The Enchanted," Maurice Valency adaptation of a Jean Giradoux comedy, lost around $60,000. The David Lowe-Richard Davidson production was financed at $72,000, cost about $60,000, including bonds. It operated in the red during its six-week run at the Lyceum, N.Y., but Samuel French paid $3,000 for the amateur and stock rights.

"Merry Widow," revived by the Shuberts, cost only around $20,000 to produce, since the scenery was already in storage from a previous edition, and union bonds were not required. In nine weeks of fluctuating business on the road, the Wilbur Evans-Susanna Foster starrer made an operating profit of approximately $10,000. Shuberts' loss on the presentation was more than offset by their profit on the touring revivals of "Student Prince" and "Blossom Time," earlier in the season. Former netted an estimated $30,000 and the latter added about $15,000.

COLE PORTER MUSICAL TO OPEN ON COAST

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

While Cole Porter's new show, "Out of This World," will rehearse in New York in May, it will pass up the east and open for a four-week run in Frisco in June.

Composer is here now auditioning talent. David Wayne and Mitzi Gerber are the only definite castings to date, with a possibility that Judy Holliday may be in the show if she finishes the "Born Yesterday" film in time. After the musical plays Frisco it will move to Chicago for a run, and then go to Broadway for a September or November opening.

Dennis King Heads Equity Nominating Committee

Dennis King has been appointed chairman of the nominating committee to pick the regular slate of council candidates for the election of Actor's Equity, to take place at the annual membership meeting early in June. Also named to the committee by the council are Barbara Robbins and Loring Smith, with Bill Ross as alternate. Six membership representatives on the committee will be elected at the quarterly meeting Friday afternoon (3) at the Astor hotel, N. Y.

The nominating committee will name 10 candidates for the council, to serve the regular five-year term, one council replacement to serve two years, and one replacement to serve one year. No officers are up for election this year.

Lammister Lonsdale

London, Feb. 28.

Frederick Lonsdale's "The Way Things Go" will have its West End preem Thursday (2) after a tryout tour of Scotland. Lonsdale, however, will not be on hand for the opening, having left Friday (24) for the U. S. aboard the Queen Mary.

The playwright is currently working on a new play.

Farrington, of Beverly Hills, will join the Broadway producer ranks in the fall with the presentation of Whitfield Cook's "Human Being," for which Mary Hunter is being sought to direct.

N.Y. City Ballet Co.

The two-year-old N. Y. City Ballet Co., surprising the dance world by promising six new works for its brief spring season, opened its season last Tuesday (21), and premiered three of its novelties in its first week. All are substantial additions to the fledgling troupe's repertoire, and will lend added lustre to the troupe when it goes abroad this summer for the first time to show its wares in a three-month British tour.

The week was really Jerome Robbins.' As associate artistic director of the troupe, Robbins choreographed one of the two new works, "The Age of Anxiety," and danced the lead in two of them, "Anxiety" and "The Prodigal Son."

"Prodigal Son" is George Balanchine's choreography to the music of Prokofieff, telling the familiar Biblical tale with a great deal of poignance and warmth. Ballet is a bit static, being draggy in its middle section, but it is danced superbly by Robbins, who shows himself here one of the great dancers of our time, his terping ability unhampered by his Broadway or ballet directing chores. Maria Tallchief is inhibited as the Siren, in a role that calls for more posturing than dancing. Group scenes, especially the carousing one when the wastrels rob the wayward son of all his possessions, are very effective.

"Age of Anxiety" is Robbins' choreography to the new symphony of Leonard Bernstein, the libretto dealing with the current day unrest and man's problem to find inner peace and security. Piece is serious in theme, unlike the onetime Robbins - Bernstein comedy ballet hit, "Fancy Free." Work isn't completely successful, due to too much weltschmerz. Quartet of dancers who play the protagonists establish their point early that this is the age of anxiety and unrest, and reiteration of this point through repetition of poses and gestures makes for monotony. There also isn't too much dancing per se by the soloists, although their miming is fine. Group scenes are vivid and exciting, painting the malaise of the times graphically. Music, though, thin and precious in spots, is generally effective, adding to ballet's appeal.

Spike Jones Revue In Mpls. 2-Weeker

Minneapolis, Feb. 28.

First legitimate attraction in recent years to make Minneapolis a two-week stand, and first ever to do so in the 1,900-seat Lyceum, will be Spike Jones and his "Musical Depreciation Revue," starting March 13. Show will have a $3 top.

Two other attractions this season, "Oklahoma!" and "Mister Roberts," had 10-day engagements at the house this season. Both did huge business.

Eye 'Banker's Daughter' This Season for B'way

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

"The Banker's Daughter," Henry Myers-Edward Eliscu melodrama presented by the Actors' Lab at the Globe theatre here, may be produced on Broadway, possibly this season. Idea would be to use at least the nucleus of the present cast, including Howard Da Silva, Morris Carnovsky, Lloyd Bridges, Helen Ford and Cicely Brown.

The Shuberts are reported dickering to take over the production, but several other Broadway managements are also interested.

Sadler's No Hindrance To Ballet Russe Boff Biz Visiting Same Cities

Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, while on tour last week, settled an interesting question the trade has been speculating on ever since the spectacular visit of Sadler's Wells Ballet of London last fall. Managers have feared that any native troupe visiting a town where Sadler's had played, would suffer by comparison, with its boxoffice affected. Ballet Russe is the first touring troupe to play cities Sadler's visited. Bookings in three towns last week showed that Ballet Russe wasn't hurt a bit, with not the slightest effect on local biz.

Ballet did $21,300 in three performances in Washington; $12,000 in two in Philadelphia (this was an outright sale to the Philadelphia Forum), and $7,200 in a single in Richmond. This $7,200 at a $3.60 top compares most favorably with Sadler's Richmond gross of $7,800 at a $4.80 top.

Troupe did an estimated $40,200 in seven performances on the week, with Pittsburgh and Hershey, Pa., as other stops. First D. C. performance actually belongs in previous week's estimate.

Bill Would Permit Booze Sales in Theatre Lounges

Albany, Feb. 28.

Legit theatres will be able to sell liquor in their lounges if a bill introduced by Sen. Samuel Greenberg, Brooklyn Democrat, passes the state legislature. Bill, which was introduced by Greenberg at the request of the League of N.Y. Theatres, would allow liquor sales half-an-hour before a performance and until a half-an-hour after the show. License would be available for $600, half the usual cafe fee.

Under provisions of the bill, motion picture houses are excluded.

Mull Opera Stars For Canadian Expo

Toronto, Feb. 28.

City fathers are mulling a proposition whereby Harry Hershoran would pencil in the Cincinnati Opera Co. for a grandstand engagement at the Canadian National Exhibition next Aug. 7-15, with a different opera every night. Stars as Lily Pons, Rise Stevens and Gladys Swarthout would appear. New $4,000,000 grandstand seats 24,000.

Hurdles to be overcome include fact that the date desired by Hershoran is just a week ahead of the opening of the annual exposition, and that his offer of $4,000 rental will not be considered because that amount would not cover the operating costs of the CNE grandstand for the week, according to Walter Love, parks commissioner. Hershoran has offered, in addition to the $4,000 rental, to pay all costs of electricity, stagehands, ushers and other help, but city fathers are holding out for 25% of the gross, this the civic policy on CNE grandstand attractions apart from tenure of the big fair.

Hershoran claims he has a five-year option on the Cincinnati Opera Co. and would wish to secure a similar arrangement with the Toronto city fathers to present the troupe here for annual engagements during that period.

Katherine Dunham and her dance troupe have begun a final swing through Italy, to wind up a two-year European stay, which will take them to Turin, Genoa, Naples, Rome, Venice, Bologna and Milan, before returning to the U. S. end of March

Inside Stuff—Legit

Despite the increasing emphasis on mail order business for legit, a striking number of ads for current Broadway shows fails to list boxoffice scales. In some instances even display ads, generally figured as primarily aimed to pull mail orders, don't include ticket prices.

For example, of the 30 index ads for Broadway shows in the Sunday (26) drama sections of the N. Y. Times and Herald Tribune, 18 listed b.o. prices and 12 did not. In certain of the latter cases, notably "Rat Race," which closes Saturday (4), there's little prospect of further mail order business. Also, in the case of "Death of a Salesman," a separate display ad carried a detailed chart of ticket availabilities at various prices. But no scales were printed for "South Pacific," "Come Back, Little Sheba" and "The Innocents," for instance, which presumably should do substantial mail order business.

Moreover, a large display ad used by the Theatre Guild recently to ballyhoo favorable press comment on "Come Back, Little Sheba" also omitted any mention of ticket prices, although it carried a small notation of "seats 8 weeks in advance." Apparent reason was that the Guild didn't want to call attention to the fact that the b.o. scale for the show changes at the end of the subscription period.

In contrast, display ads in last Sunday's legit sections for "Touch and Go," which moved Monday night (27) from the Broadhurst to the Broadway, N. Y., featured the reduction of the top price from $6 to $4.80. Display ads for the incoming "Heart of the Matter" and "The Consul" also listed b.o. scales and invited mail orders. Also, the index ads Sunday for such shows as "Caesar and Cleopatra," "Detective Story," "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," "Howdy, Mr. Ice of 1950," "Kiss Me, Kate," "Mister Roberts," "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep," "Texas L'il Darlin'," "Happy Time," "Member of the Wedding," "Velvet Glove" and "Where's Charley?" not only listed prices but specifically mentioned mail orders.

Managers of touring shows are burning over several new items charged by Shubert houses in Chicago. One such assessment is for the letters used in marquee billing. Tap comes to $16 a week for the Shubert theatre, $8 for the Blackstone and comparable amounts for the other local houses. Traditionally, such an item is included in the regular rental. In one case, the company manager of a show proposed to buy the electrically-connected letters at a local equipment firm, but was told the charge would still apply regardless.

Another additional charge is $20 a week for the use of the piano in the orchestra pit. That applies for musical shows, but not for straight plays not making use of the instrument. This item is also normally included in the standard rental.

Third angle on Chicago bookings this season is that the Shuberts refuse to pay the theatre share of advertising placed in the Journal of Commerce, although the publication has previously been on the regular ad list for both theatres and shows. Curious aspect of this situation is that, as producers of the touring "Student Prince," "Blossom Time," "Merry Widow" and "Yes, M'Lord," this season, the Shuberts have included the J of C in their regular advertising lineup.

A reported attendance of 3,500 for the first of the Equity Community Theatre's paid admission offerings indicates group may break even on the enterprise. A joint project of the Equity Library Theatre and the Board of Education, ECT offered its initial production, "My Heart's in the Highlands," for four performances, Feb. 17-19, at the Clinton Community theatre, Bronx, N. Y. At the 50c entrance fee charged by ECT, the 3,500 admissions bring the boxoffice receipts to around $1,750. Figure is approximate since a number of the opening-night ducats were cuffos.

If the group's remaining three productions, also scheduled for four showings each, can draw similarly, the total take for the series of offerings should be near $7,000. This would be a little more than $800 over the estimated cost of the entire venture, which was tabbed at approximately $6,100. The trio of upcoming presentations includes Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan," March 3; Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett's "The Great Big Doorstep," March 17; and Sidney Howard's "Lucky Sam McCarver," March 31. ECT feels that the success of the venture will probably depend on the outcome of this weekend's (3-5) showing of "St. Joan."

In an attempt to increase employment among its members, Actors Equity last week addressed 34 of the leading strawhat managers, plus drama editors in principal cities and towns throughout the country, on the possibility of the establishment and operation of winter stock companies in their communities. Letter, signed by Louis M. Simon, executive-secretary of the union, cited successful winter stock ventures currently in Phoenix, Ariz.; Las Vegas, N. M.; Atlanta; Albany; Millburn, N. J.; St. Augustine; Cambridge, Mass., and E. Hartford, Conn., as indication that such projects can click if properly managed.

Query concedes that it's too late to start a winter stock theatre this season, but suggests that "the time may be exactly propitious for the planning now for the fall, winter and spring of 1950-51."

The Players' Ring, new Los Angeles legit theatre group, recently formed by dissident members of another thesping organization, started its season last week with a revival of "Street Scene." TPR is headed by Mabel Albertson, actress-producer-wife of film scribe Ken Englund. She directed the 20-year-old Elmer Rice drama. The Englunds' son, George, incidentally, is rehearsing in a new Jean Anouilh play, "Cry of the Peacock," which James Colligan and Donald Medford are bringing to Broadway soon. Daughter Patricia is also histrionically inclined. She's a cast member of the Theatre Guild's "As You Like It."

Contrary to previous reports, Sir Alexander Korda does not have an investment in "I Know My Love." One of the backers, however, is Morris Helprin, Korda's U. S. rep. It is for that reason, plus the fact that Korda is a personal friend of Marcel Achard, from whose "Aupres de ma Blonde" the S. N. Behrman adaptation was made, that the British producer is figured to have an inside track on screen rights.

Laughton Skidoo

Pittsburgh, Feb. 28.

Ralph Harrison and Lenny Litman took a bath last week with their Charles Laughton promotion. Stage and screen star, playing one-night stand at 3,800-seat Syria Mosque with his "personally conducted tour of the classics," didn't draw, and promoters each went for more than a grand.

Laughton got a guarantee of $1,500, and auditorium rent and advertising ran the total nut up to better than $3,000. Entire gross for two performances — one for students at reduced prices earlier in the evening—fell short of $1,000. Litman operates the Copa, downtown nitery, and Harrison is a local booker-promoter. It was their first presentation together.

New Management Seen For Marblehead, Mass.

Marblehead, Mass., Feb. 28.

A new management is expected to take over operation of a summer theatre at the highschool auditorium here. For the past few seasons, the North Shore Players, under the supervision of Blake Johnson, have offered strawhat productions at the auditorium. But to date Johnson has not entered an application for use of the theatre this summer.

It's reported that he has taken a financial interest in the proposed community playhouse on the South shore. However, the Marblehead school committee has received two other applications for summer rental of the auditorium, one from Kurt Winters, William Cowen and John Foley, and another from Charles Blake of Hollywood.

'Kate' Still Tops Chi at $39,000, 'Lady' 17G, Blackstone Light 9G

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Snowstorms caught b.o. here shivering, with only "Kiss Me, Kate" holding up strong all week. "Musical Depreciation Revue" got hit by weather. Spike Jones cut out midnight show on Saturday, and revue leaves March 11, on way to Minneapolis and easte points. Blackstone the magicia, in first week at the Erlanger, had a moderate turnout.

Ballet de Paris opens at the Blackstone for two weeks March 6. "Madwoman of Chaillot" settles down for six weeks at the Erlanger after Blackstone. "Private Lives" will attempt comeback at the Harris or Selwyn March 20. Until after Easter, the new crop seems light. "Lend An Ear" is headed this way and perhaps "Miss Liberty will pay a spring call.

Estimates for Last Week

Blackstone, Erlanger (1,334; $2.50). Light $9,000.

"Kiss Me, Kate," Shubert (23rd week) (2,100; $6.18). Extra Wed. (22) matinee boosted the Anne Jeffreys starrer to a lively $39,000.

"Merry Widow," Blackstone (2nd week) (1,358; $3.71). Closed Saturday (25) after murky two weeks; finale got $14,500.

"Musical Depreciation Revue," Great Northern (3rd week) (1,500; $3.71). Off to $19,100.

"That Lady," Harris (4th week) (1,000; $4.33). Katharine Cornell fans gave final week a moderate $17,000; show left to continue its tour.

'LEND EAR' PERKS TO $22,500 IN PHILLY

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.

Philly's faltering legit season peps again this week with two important musicals making their local bows. One—Winton Freedley's "What a Day-"—bows tonight (28) at the Forrest for three weeks. Tomorrow night (March 1) Menotti's new musical, "The Consul" will have its preem at the Shubert. It will stay only 10 days instead of the original two and a half weeks' skedded. Meantime, the all-Negro revival of "Tobacco Road" is continuing for its second and final week at the Locust, which means that three of Philly's four legit houses have activity this week.

Next Monday the Walnut will also relight with "The Silver Whistle," now starring Lloyd Nolan. It's in for two weeks. This opening, plus the start of a single week's visit by "Private Lives," with Tallulah Bankhead, at the Locust, means that all four of the local legiters will be occupied. Only other official booking on the immediate horizon will be the new Helen Hayes vehicle, "The Wisteria Trees," opening at the Shubert for two weeks.

Estimates for Last Week

"Lend an Ear," Shubert (3d week) (1,877; $4.55). As figured this musical picked up some with absence of much competition. Reported over $22,500.

"Tobacco Road," Locust (1st week) (1,580; $2.50). All-Negro cast in revival of this perennial got good notices, and biz was okay $9,500, for this low-priced show.

'Silver Whistle' NSG 10G in Split-Week

Richmond, Va., Feb. 28.

Theatre Guild touring company of "Silver Whistle," starring Lloyd Nolan, drew meager $5,000 for four performances, Monday through Wednesday (20-22) at WRVA theatre. Play got another $5,000 the second half of the week at the Playhouse, Wilmington, giving it a pale $10,000 for the week.

Company opened here as kickoff for tour.

Dunn-'Harvey' $11,000 In 3d Date at Mpls.

Minneapolis, Feb. 28.

Playing its third local engagement, "Harvey" grossed $11,000 at the 1,900-seat Lyceum for six nights and three matinees. Show was scaled at a $3 "bargain" price top. James Dunn, who followed Joe E. Brown and Frank Fay in stellar role here, and supporting cast won critics' praise. Attraction had to combat 19—below-zero temperatures.

Katharine Cornell in "That Lady" is in May 1-4, scaled at $4.20 top. "A Streetcar Named Desire," here for a return engagement, follows for seven days at $3.60 top for its exclusive Twin City engagement.

TALLULAH-'LIVES' 28G, TERRIF, IN 5 SPLITS

Syracuse, Feb. 28.

Despite adverse weather and rough conditions brought on by the coal strike, Tallulah Bankhead in "Private Lives" wound up with a terrific gross nearing $28,000 for seven performances in five engagements last week. With the barometer hitting 15-below, show played the Avon, Utica, Monday (20) pulling in over $4,000 at a $4.80 top. Comedy moved on to the Strand, Albany, Tuesday (21), where despite a heavy snow, it took in almost $6,500 at a similar top.

Shutdown of the General Electric Plant in Schenectady, because of the coal shortage, failed to put the damper on the Wednesday (22) evening performance at the 1,172-seat Erie there with about $3,600 coming in. Moving on to the Strand, Ithaca, Thursday (23) show did close to capacity, $3,900. Week ended with play getting near $10,000 for three performances, Friday and Saturday (24-25), at the Empire here.

'Madwoman' Way Off At $15,500, Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, Feb. 28.

"Madwoman of Chaillot" came a cropper last week at the Nixon, running into a unanimous set of bad notices which cut into a promising advance sale and held gross down to $15,500. More than half of that was in subscription money, fantasy being final offering of the season under Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society.

Broadway hit played here at $3.90 top (including Federal and city taxes) and got away fairly big, but window take went down to virtually nothing after the reviews appeared. Martita Hunt, star of "Madwoman," fell ill at mid-week and was replaced Thursday night (23) by Eleonora Mendelssohn, who normally plays one of the minor madwomen. Her role in turn was taken over by Frances Hammond, a bit player.

Nixon, which ended three weeks of darkness with "Madwoman," is dark again, relighting Monday (6) with "Death Of A Salesman" for fortnight stand. March 20 is still open due to folding on road of "Detective Story," with Ballet des Paris on 27th and "Lend An Ear" coming in April 3.

'Salesman' 20G, Col.

Columbus, O., Feb. 28.

"Death of a Salesman" did profitable at the Hartman here last week, taking in about $20,000.

Drama is at the Cox, Cincinnati, this week.

'Annie' Socko $60,000 In Week at Detroit

Detroit, Feb. 28.

Publicity from Billie Worth's tragic mishap opening night and the last minute addition of a successor, Helena Dudas, helped boost Civic Light Opera's production of "Annie Get Your Gun" to a terrific $60,000 last week at Masonic Temple. It was the best gross for an eight-performance show this season. Top gross of $65,000 was taken by "Show Boat" in nine performances Christmas week.

Current Civic attraction, its last of the season, is "Carmen Jones," featuring Carlotta Franzel, Le Vern Hutcherson and Urylee Leonardos and some members of the original New York and Chicago productions.

Meanwhile, Miss Worth, who collapsed after completing her opening night performance in "Annie," was recovering at Providence Hospital. She gave birth to a still-born three-and-a-half months premature girl last week.

The Cass opened its doors Monday (27) for the first time in a month to present "Madwoman of Chaillot." Play, starring Martita Hunt, is in for fortnight. The Shubert will present Blackstone the magico for a week beginning March 19. Theatre has been closed nearly two months.

'Matter' NSG In Hub Preem; Hayes Sock 27G

Boston, Feb. 28.

"The Heart of the Matter," adaptation of the Graham Greene novel, with an all-English cast, teed off here Fri. (24) as the only opener in town last week. Got generally unhelpful notices and didn't prove to be too strong at the b.o. despite the Rodgers-Hammerstein label and the Ian Hunter marquee appeal. "Wisteria Trees," proving a powerful femme attraction, remained in top gear as a biz-getter, as did "Streetcar," while "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep" faded at the Shubert.

"Lend An Ear" returned to town last night (27) with a perilously high top ($4.80) for a show with a reputation but no names. Only other immediately ahead is road company of "Mister Roberts."

Estimates for Last Week

"A Streetcar Named Desire," Plymouth (2d wk) (1,200; $3.60). Second sesh found this one still doing nice biz, hurt only by a one-night blizzard, and taking fine $24,000.

"Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep," Shubert (2d wk) (1,750; $3.60). This one didn't catch on at all here, dropping to around $8,500 on its second and final.

"The Heart of the Matter," Wilbur (1st wk) (1,200; $3.60). Opened Fri. (24) and was not too well liked. Did about $4,000 on three performances, which isn't bad but not too good.

"Wisteria Trees," Colonial (2d wk) (1,500; $3.60). They're working hard on this one, holding it out of N. Y. at about a 100G refund or exchange for an additional three weeks. The show is a wow for femmes, the Hayes' attraction being plenty potent, and could clean up on the road. But its Broadway future seems uncertain at this point. Took a wow $27,000 last week, however.

MORRIS-'STORY' FOLDS IN ST. LOUIS AT $18,200

St. Louis, Feb. 28.

After a successful one-week stand ending Saturday (25) at the America theatre, "Detective Story" wound up its tour despite efforts of manager Paul Beisman to hold the piece for a second week. Chester Morris, the drama's star, and the piece copped 100% raves from the crix. Gross was $18,200 for eight performances, with the house scaled to $3.66.

House is dark currently but relights Monday (6) with a one-week engagement of "That Lady," with Katharine Cornell, at $4.27 top.

Shows in Rehearsal

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), M (Musical), O (Operetta).

"Cry of the Peacock" (D)—James Colligan & Donald Medford; Leonora Corbett, director.

Holiday Gives B'way B.O. Boost; 'Cage' Holds $12,700 in First 5, 'Disciple' 19G in 7, Sans Evans

Hypo of Washington's Birthday pushed receipts up a bit last week on Broadway. However, possibly because of the brownout, effects of the coal shortage and the cold snap and snowstorm, the business improvement was somewhat less than normal for the holiday.

Attendance was generally offish Monday night (20), was much better on the holiday eve, Tuesday (21), hit a traditional high on the holiday matinee Wednesday (22), and reacted downward that night and Thursday night (23). Trade was up, as usual, Friday night (24) and at both performances Saturday (25). The week's total gross for all 31 shows was 76.35% of capacity. Business is due to slip this week.

"Alive and Kicking," "Mr. Barry's Etchings" and "The Enchanted" folded Saturday night (25). "Rat Race" will close next Saturday night (4) and "Miss Liberty" is scheduled to go on tour a week later, March 11. Three other shows are uncertain bets to continue.

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), M (Musical), O (Operetta).

Other parenthetic figures refer, respectively, to top price, number of seats and capacity gross. Price includes 20% amusement tax, but grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of tax.

"Alive and Kicking," Winter Garden (6th wk) (R-$6; 1,510; $42,000). Musical never got started, folding Saturday night (25) after 46 performances; finale was meagre $18,500.

"All You Need Is One Good Break," Mansfield (2d wk) (D-$4.80; 1,041; $26,000). Reopened meller started slowly, first full week registering under $5,000.

"Arms and the Girl," 46th St. (4th wk) (M-$6; 1,319; $39,000). With the expiration of the Theatre Guild subscription period, party bookings are starting, which will provide a hypo for some weeks; $36,200.

"As You Like It," Cort (5th wk) (C-$4.80-$6; 1,064; $27,000). Katharine Hepburn show is building a healthy advance to carry it along when the Guild subscription ends; topped $25,100.

"Bird Cage," Coronet (1st wk) (D-$4.80; 1,027; $27,000). Arthur Laurents meller opened Wednesday night (22) to one favorable notice, six pans and one so-so; first five performances rang up over $12,700.

"Caesar and Cleopatra," National (10th wk) (CD-$4.80-$6; 1,172; $30,000). With Lilli Palmer back in her co-starring role, business picked up the latter part of the week; $21,400.

"Clutterbuck," Biltmore (12th wk) (C-$4.80; 920; $20,500). Making a steady operating profit; nearly $13,700.

"Cocktail Party," Miller (6th wk) (C-$4.80; 940; $21,600). Going clean at all performances; nearly $21,600.

"Come Back, Little Sheba," Booth (2d wk) (D-$4.80; 712; $20,000). Riding on Guild subscription the first few weeks; thereafter, the performances of Shirley Booth and Sidney Blackmer will be the principal draw; first full week got about $12,000.

"Death of a Salesman," Morosco (55th wk) (D-$4.80; 914; $23,800). Making ample operating profit; nearly $22,800.

"Detective Story," Hudson (49th wk) (D-$4.80; 1,016 ;$23,700). Rose a trifle on the holiday groundswell; almost $20,300.

"Devil's Disciple," Royale (1st wk) (C-$4.80-$6; 1,035; $27,500). Shaw revival reopened Tuesday night (21) to a fine advance, but the subsequent illness of Maurice Evans has hurt attendance; nevertheless, first seven performances grossed over $19,000.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," Ziegfeld (12th wk) (M-$6); 1,628; $48,200). With the end of theatre parties, grosses should now hit capacity (no standing room is sold); one party last week limited the gross to $47,900.

"Happy Time," Plymouth (5th wk) (C-$4.80; 1,603; $29,000). New Rodgers-Hammerstein click goes along at capacity pace; topped $29,000.

"Howdy, Mr. Ice of 1950," Center (40th wk) (R-$3-$2.88; 2,964; $58,000). Rose a bit with the field; over $31,000.

"I Know My Love," Shubert (17th wk) (CD-$4.80; 1,391; $33,000). Lunt-Fontanne starrer making a healthy profit; $25,300.

"Kiss Me, Kate," Century (60th wk) (M-$6; 1,645; $46,700). Sticks around the capacity mark; $46,600.

"Lost in the Stars," Music Box (17th wk) (M-$5.40; 1,012; $26,600). Dipped slightly to $25,800.

"Member of the Wedding," Empire (8th wk) (D-$4.80; 1,082; $24,000). Ethel Waters starrer gets everything the house will hold; $24,400 again.

"Miss Liberty," Imperial (33d wk) (M-$6.60; 1,400; $44,500). Musical is slated to vacate the theatre March 11 to make way for "Heart of the Matter," but is still making a modest operating profit; moved up last week to over $27,500.

"Mister Roberts," Alvin (106th wk) (CD-$4.80; 1,360; $34,300). Longrun leader and top straight-play grosser has piled up the greatest boxoffice record for any dramatic show in Broadway history; jumped to $33,300.

"Mr. Barry's Etchings," 48th St. (4th wk) (CD-$4.80; 917; $23,000). Lee Tracy couldn't save it and neither could "twofers," so it folded Saturday (25) after 31 performances; finale but $6,000.

"Rat Race," Barrymore (10th wk) (CD-$4.80-$6; 1,066; $30,000). Slowing down as it nears the end of party bookings; folds Saturday (4); still operating in the black at $16,200.

"South Pacific," Majestic (47th wk) (M-$6; 1,659; $50,200). This is getting monotonous; capacity-plus $50,600 again.

"Texas, L'il Darlin," Hellinger (14th wk) (M-$6; 1,543; $42,000). Registering a consistent operating profit; hopped to $33,500.

"The Enchanted," Lyceum (6th wk) (D-$4.80; 990; $22,500). Never got going, and folded Saturday night (25) after 45 performances; nearly $9,000 on the closer.

"The Innocents," Playhouse (3d wk) (D-$4.80; 819; $18,700). Meller has been building steadily, with the advance sale now nearly $35,000; receipts climbed a few more notches to top $16,100.

"The Man," Fulton (6th wk) (D-$4.80; 966; $23,000). Murder meller is uncertain to continue; $8,200.

"Touch and Go," Broadhurst (20th wk) (R-$6; 1,160; $34,500). George Abbott revue moved Monday (27) to the 1,900-seat Broadway, with a $4.80 top and capacity of $46,300; last week got over $24,000.

"Velvet Glove," Golden (9th wk) (CD-$4.80; 769; $18,100). About the same; $10,100.

"Where's Charley?" St. James (71st wk) (1,509; $37,800). Bounded up again; about $37,000.

Opening

"Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep," Broadhurst (D-$4.80-$6; 1,160; $29,500). Elaine Ryan dramatization of Ludwig Bemelmans novel, presented by Nancy Stern & George Nichols, III, with Fredric March and Florence Eldridge starred; production was financed at $100,000, cost about $100,000 (including bonds), and will break even at about $18,500; opens tomorrow night (Thur.).

Future Dates

Ballet Theatre Neat $28,000 to Pace L.A.

Los Angeles, Feb. 28.

Ballet Theatre, with a new program each night for a six-day stand at the Biltmore, paced the legit b.o. here last week. "The Banker's Daughter," musical adapted from Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York," continues solid at the Globe. "Kitty Doone," Aben Kandel's comedy about an aging film star, does likewise at the small Circle Playhouse. "Philadelphia Story," opening this week at the Biltmore, has a healthy advance sale.

Estimates for Last Week

Ballet Theatre, Biltmore, (1,636; $3.60) (1st week). Sound $28,000.

"Kitty Doone," Circle Playhouse (150; $2.40). Good at $1,200.

Premiere inventory on this new Vinton Freedley musical discloses assets offsetting liabilities by a margin comfortable enough to warrant an optimistic prediction for its future. It's by no means a matter of coasting down the preparatory homestretch, as there are vital elements still to be perfected, but the end result can materialize as good clef-and-hoof divertissement. Technicolor could do interesting things with this setup.

Principal deficiency, as of now, is a familiar one—book shortcomings. A novel and absorbing story idea is somewhat dissipated in the telling, due to lack of sock development from the dialog angle. It is a bit surprising to note that the same hand that has scribbled good lyrics (and they are exceedingly bright) also penned considerable ordinary chatter in the spoken sequences. There's radical readjustment required in latter category.

Fundamentally, production has talent, animate and inanimate beauty, a better-than-adequate score, pleasing voices, good dancing, and a thesis with entertainment potentialities. If the show stubs its toe, lack of cohesion will undoubtedly be the prime stumbling block. Mary Hunter is billed as stager, but the final word rests with Freedley.

Built around the theme of a ghostly entourage battling against mortals for undisputed possession of an ancestral mansion in Pennsylvania, script utilizes enough fantasy to intrigue, but not bore, playgoers who don't ordinarily go for dream-world stuff.

Woodrow Twigg, sole survivor of a family most of whose members had met untimely ends, has sold the mansion to Leslie Butterfield, a five-time loser divorcee, because he sees an opportunity for culmination of the thwarted marriage of a pair of spirit relatives who were supposed to have wed 87 years previously. Mrs. Butterfield has bought the estate to stage the wedding of her niece, Carol, and Twigg plans to make it a double ceremony by ringing in the ghosts that inhabit the place.

The spectres are visible only to virgins, which means that a distant maiden cousin of Mrs. Butterfield's, Mimsey, and Trigg, a bachelor, are the only ones who can communicate with them. As the double wedding is about to be solemnized, the minister is shot and the story then resolves into a whodunit quest. Kitty, leader of the apparitions, makes a deal to reveal the murderer's name to Twigg if he will rid the premises of the mortal occupants. Twigg agrees, a haunting sequence frightens Mrs. Butterfield into relinquishing the property, and Twigg goes to her room to help her pack for her departure. When he returns and calls upon the spirits to reveal the murderer, he is no longer able to see the ghosts, but the day is saved by Mimsey, who is still "solvent."

Topping the list of featured players are Vivienne Segal, Stuart Erwin and Valerie Bettis. As the divorcee, Miss Segal has not yet reached the peak of her role's capacity, possibly due to required further playing. Her best vocal number is "That's a Man Everytime," which she puts over in A-1 shape. Erwin battles some stultifying moments but on the whole acquits himself well. With added comedy material, he can make the Trigg characterization a highly satisfactory one. Miss Bettis, whose forte is dancing, finds herself with a thesping assignment that overshadows her terping contribution. Playing the ghostly Kitty, she does very well by the histrionics. Further dancing, however, could add considerable stature to her overall effectiveness.

Mark Dawson and Martha Wright make an appealing team of romancers. Physically a personality pair, their voices blend nicely in the score's top tunes, resulting in substantial audience approval. Bambi Linn's youthful charm and dancing grace carry her to added laurels, and Rod Alexander, as her vis-a-vis, is in the upper bracket. Leonard Elliott's task is primarily routine but he does okay with what he has.

Adding competent support are J. C. McCord, Betty Low, Aleen Buchanan, Jay Marshall, as the spirit contingent; Marjorie Peterson, the maidenly Mimes; Lulu Bates, family cook; Don Kennedy and Paul Reed, gumshoe duo; John Neher, a murdered guest; David Nillo, spectre dancer.

Score, with several hit potentials, gets generally good rendition. Due for substantial pop acceptance are "This Is Love," "It's a Long Time Till Tomorrow," "Dreams Ago." Other sprightly melodies include "Headin' for a Weddin'," "You Appeal to Me," "Believe Me." "Blue Day" is an okay torch number. Featuring snappy lyrics are "Redecorate," "There's Nothing Like It," "That's a Man Everytime." Good ensemble tunes are "When the Sheets Come Back from the Laundry," "Who Done It?", "From This Day On," "What a Day!"

Choreography swings from effervescence to simple charm, with a fiery dance story in between. Incidentally, stanza two could use added terps to equalize dance importance of act one. The haunting sequence, an offshoot of choreography, scores solidly due to novelty.

Combination of two-world characters has allowed for striking effects in sets, costumes, and lighting, plus unusual blue makeup on the spirits. Contrasting bright earthly hues and subdued otherworld colors make the production a visual treat. A crackerjack first-act curtain introduces an outstanding scenic novelty as setting shifts from a single to a double staircase, in audience view. Bone.

It is by no means a foregone conclusion that the heavyweight team of Rodgers, Hammerstein, Greene and Dean can haul this dramatized novel above the timber line. On the contrary, faced with the severe obstacles of a too-brief tryout period, an overly complicated production and a difficult theme to develop, the problems seem insurmountable.

Drawn by Graham Greene and Basil Dean from Greene's brilliant and successful novel of the same name, the play is most seriously flawed by the many breaks in the narrative line. There are more than a dozen full stops for scene change, a fact that might not disturb the flow of a play with more real dramatic trajectory than this, but one which here destroys the mood. For Greene's theme, that of a man's conflict with God, cannot successfully be told in fits and starts, with jukebox music in between. Without a gradually intensifying sense of the impending tragedy of the leading character's final encounter with God, the play becomes merely a routine and not very original tale of adultery in a Somerset Maugham-like background.

The play follows the general outline of the novel. A major of police in a British West African colony, bogged down in a desultory marriage and an increasingly strong sense of failure and unfulfillment, falls in love with a 20-year-old girl recently widowed. A Catholic among non-Catholics, the major cannot entertain the obvious solution of divorce, nor can he renounce his love for the girl even after she leaves him. Having also lost his self-respect in his deal-

The Myrmidons

(Yale Drama Department)

New Haven, Feb. 25.

Drama in three acts, five scenes, by Tunc Yalman. Directed by Beverly Wilson; ~~setting, James Riley; costumes, Eldon~~ Elder; lighting, Lee Watson. At Yale University theatre.

Cast: Phil Hollis, Ellen Langdon, Walter L. Boughton, Elaine Bullis, Betsey Bacon, Wesley Lau, Anna Leonard, Sue Ann Young, Howard Orms, Thomas Hill, Shirin Devrim Lau, William Francis, Haldun Dormen, Frank Pacelli, Bert Smith, Sylvia Stockdale, Georgia D. Aune, Robert Ackart, Nadya Grushetzky.

Tunc Yalman, playwriting student at Yale drama department, has written a penetrating analysis of the hopelessness of modern existence as certain segments of society see it. Script offers a specific example in the disintegration of a European royal family crumbling under the stress of banishment, yet the whole serves as a symbol of present-day confused thinking, broken illusions, and loss of faith which, in more than one quarter, have fostered a philosophy of "What's the use?"

Laid in the present on a small Aegean island to which the royal family had been banished, play opens with the youthful prince coming back from the metropolitan university where he had been sent four years previously. Filled with enthusiasm, faith and romance, he returns only to find a situation involving illicit affairs, mental breakdowns, frustrated love, suicide and kindred factors that ultimately destroy his better nature and prompt him to live only for the pleasures of the moment.

Title is taken from a word meaning the ant, and theme contains an analogy between the lives of humans and the scurrying-about of the insects. There's some excellent writing in this script, showing familiarity with subject matter. Direction, aside from an occasional snag, guides the story capably. Acting is on a quality par with the balance of the production. Single setting of a house on a rocky hilltop is picturesquely done. Costumes are well executed, and there's an effective contribution from the lighting division. Bone.

The Ant Village

(JOHNS HOPKINS)

Baltimore, Feb. 17.

Johns Hopkins University Playshop production of annual Theodore Marburg Prize Play Contest Winner; comedy in three acts by Paul M. Kendall; staged by N. Bryllion Fagin; technical director, James Byrd. At Playhouse, Baltimore.

Cast: Juliette Palmer, Josephine Shyers, Nina Hughes, Carl Skytte, Ray DeBaugh, Ashby Stiff, Lester Wolfe, Marcia Hovick, Florence Aaronson, Bert Hanauer, Bill Seldon, John Ruxton, Martin Railla, Nathan Harris.

This winner of the Theodore Marburg Prize Play Contest, conducted annually by the Playshop group of Johns Hopkins Univ., was selected from among 76 scripts submitted. It is a story of life among the new nobility; the nuclear scientists, and was written by Paul M. Kendall, associate professor of English at Ohio Univ. Hero is physicist who hits the limelight, and play deals with the attendant evils of his work on the atom bomb. Certainly topical and a bit of a switch in dramatis personae, the plot nevertheless bears vintage marks of pre-Oak Ridge days. It's an okay try but far from Broadway in its present state.

The physicist is drawn from the quiet of campus life to world-wide notice because of his work with the atoms—being urged into window-dressing front-running by an ambitious wife endowed with the cash to make such a splash exciting to her if not productive of added knowledge in the prof's chosen field. Conflict comes via a combination lab assistant and secretary who can give with a tune on a trick piano and heist a beeker when the occasion demands. Finish is telegraphed from the beginning with final choice by the prof to stick to his protons, neutrons and understanding assistant instead of his spotlight-seeking spouse. That comes as no surprise at all after a succession of contrived situations and rather forced dialog.

Performances are generally okay with best turned in by Lester Wolfe, as the prof; Marcia Hovick, as the secretary, and Nathan Harris, an understanding colleague in the secret work. Standout also is Florence Aaronson, as a befuddled campus journalist. Burm.

Stanley French presentation of comedy in two acts by James Bridie. Stars Alastair Sim. Directed by Sim. Sets by Hendrik Baker; incidental music, Cedric Thorpe Davie. At King's, Glasgow, Feb. 13, '50.

Judge	H. G. Stoker
Procurator	Douglas Muir
William Gillie	Alastair Sim
Tom Donnelly	George Cole
Mrs. Gillie	Megs Jenkins
Dr. Watson	Gordon McLeod
Nelly Watson	Janet Brown
Mr. Gibb	Ronald Adam

James Bridie takes an unsuccessful village schoolmaster as his central character in this amusing, thoughtful two-acter, set in a fictitious Scot village. It's an ideal vehicle for Alastair Sim's typical shrug-of-the-shoulders, painfully-amused comedy style, with Sim spouting the Bridie humor superbly.

William Gillie is the local schoolmaster with ideas, a failure himself but not loath to inspire his pupils with ideas about living dangerously. Their careers rebound upon him, to much talk in the village, back-biting from the rural doctor, and patronizing from the minister who is also chairman of the local education committee.

Gillie inspires a miner's son, Tom Donnelly, to marry the doctor's daughter, laugh at the world, and try his literary career in London. Six months later the boy returns, with his wife a shallow replica of her former sincere self, himself the phoney complete, who has become film critic on a weekly London paper and, through various black market dealings, has amassed a fortune of £5,000.

Is William Gillie, schoolmaster, fit to take his seat among the immortals? Bridie leaves the judgment to a celestial judge, prompted by a procurator's briefing, and the verdict is that Gillie be given a seat betwixt Abraham Lincoln and John Wesley.

Play is witty with impish Bridie, fun, packed with much thought and philosophizing, often weighty, and marred by a poorish first act. Acting of Gordon McLeod. George Cole and Welsh-born Megs Jenkins ranks high, while Janet Brown, better-known for her music-hall impersonations, shows considerable promise in her first straight role. Gord.

The [illegible]

London, Feb. 15.

Bedford Theatre presentation of drama in three acts by Dorothy Lang. Directed by Joan Swinstead. At Bedford, London.

Eileen Prentice	Vivienne Bennett
Peer Halvorsen	Albert Lieven
Eric Halvorsen	Ian Fleming
Anna Halvorsen	Pat Nye
Arnold Watson	Basil Dignam
Rickard Olsen	Richard Johnson
Jorstad	Stuart Nichol

This is a promising first play, with natural dialog and dramatic settings, but story peters out to an unsatisfying finish. Its theme could be developed more to advantage in screen form. But it has moments of real drama and sustains interest.

Set on a whaling island off the coast of Norway, plot is obvious in most essentials, but is entertaining in its unfolding. An English girl, grieving for her dead husband, comes to spend every Easter with the owners of the whaling station, a couple she made friends with when they escaped to England during the war. She falls in love with a stranger who proves a Nazi in disguise, with ensuing complications.

Albert Lieven, better known on the screen, makes a creditable, forceful figure of the Nazi, with Vivienne Bennett fine in the complex role of the widow. Pat Nye and Ian Fleming offer contrasting characters as the elderly foster-parents and Basil Dignam makes a likable personality of a visiting English business man emotionally drawn to the girl.

Atmosphere is well depicted and direction helps greatly in its realism. Clem.

Flowers for the Living

London, Feb. 22.

Frederick Piffard presentation of drama in three acts by Toni Block. Directed by John Citreon. At Duchess, London, Feb. 21, '50.

Mrs. Holmes	Kathleen Harrison
Mrs. Shadwell	Margot Boyd
Dickie Holmes	William Strange
Lily Holmes	Nova Pilbeam
Shirley Holmes	Suzanne Wilde
Gladys	Myrtle Reed
Sid	Barry Steele
Stan Roberts	Barry Morse
A Stranger	Robert Desmond
Mr. Holmes	Noel Carey

A slice of life as seen in an East End slum at the end of World War II is the background of this production, which made a hit on its tryout two years back. Its strong documentary flavor is a limiting factor to its ultimate success, and the passing of time has robbed it of much of its topical dramatic value.

Principal characters are well chosen and carefully drawn. There is the harassed mother trying to keep the peace between her drunken out-of-work husband and her children; the eldest daughter just returned from the Forces who has developed ideas beyond her station in life; the 17-year-old girl who had to get married; the younger daughter who is heading the same way, and the young son, a bright lad at school who is inhibited by his domestic surroundings.

This is a sordid picture of life in the raw, which makes very little concession. It isn't, however, a hopeless picture, and the gleam into the future as depicted by the returning ex-soldier fiance offers hope and encouragement. Kathleen Harrison is full of warmth and pathos as the mother, but Nova Pilbeam has a streak of unreality as her eldest daughter. Suzanne Wilds and Myrtle Reed are better choices as her other daughters, and William Strange is a standout as the bright boy of the family. There is a solid performance from Barry Morse as Miss Pilbeam's understanding, imaginative boy friend, and a fine cameo from Robert Desmond as a stranger. Myro.

Princess Czardas

Paris, Feb. 18.

Marcel Karsenty and Pierre Dux (in association with Fernand Lumbrose) presentation of operetta revival in two acts (six scenes). Stars Marta Eggerth, Jan Kiepura. Book by Rene Peter and Andre Mauprey, from the original by Leon Stein and Bela Jenbach, revised by Michel Duran and Andre Hornez; lyrics, Henri Falk; music, Emmerich Kalman; adapted by Marc Lanjean. Directed by Fred Pasquali. Scenery and costumes by Georges Wakhevitch; choreography, Leonide Massine. At Theatre de Paris, Paris.

Nico	Roland Leonar
Boni	Pasquali
Edwin	Jan Kiepura
Sylva	Marta Eggerth
Mitri	Jacques Loreau
Stasi	Genevieve Kervine
Countess Herlati	Alice Tisset
Prince	Roger Vincent

Michel Duran and Andre Hernez's principal contribution to the "revision" of this universally popular operetta has been to set the story in 1890, which gave Georges Wakhevitch an opportunity to create as colorful a set of costumes as has been seen in Paris in many a long day. The bustles, frills and furbelows of the epoch greatly enhance and almost modernize the old-fashioned and typical comic opera plot of the prince in love with a commoner and the difficulties in the way of their eventual marriage.

Fred Pasquali has likewise done an excellent job of directing. While the piece is played straight, he has injected a subtle undertone of irony that reduces the implausibility of the story, and gives the whole production an atmosphere of fanciful make-believe. Leonide Massine has done his bit, too, with a well-trained troupe of dancers in several pantomimes and rousing Hungarian numbers.

As for the stars themselves, both Marta Eggerth and Jan Kiepura have charm and style, and even thought their voices aren't what they once were, their musical training stands them in good stead, so much so that they sound better than many younger singers in the same field. Alice Tisset and Pasquali do their best with two basically unfunny "comic" roles, and the rest of the large cast is more than adequate. The orchestra, directed by Sylvio Mosse, gets all there is to be got out of the familiar Emmerich Kalman tunes. Fred.

Le Don D'Adele

Paris, Feb. 15.

Mireille Perrey, Maxime Fabert and Andre Certes presentation of comedy in four acts by Pierre Barillet. Directed by Jacques Charen. Scenery, Suzanne Reymond; costumes, Jacques Griffe. At Comedie Wagram, Paris.

Adele	Gaby Sylvia
Mme. Veyron-Laffite	Suzanne Dantes
Solange	Colette Ripert
Gaston Veyron-Laffite	Serge Nadaud
Antoine	Daniel Crenet

This is one for both Broadway and Hollywood to look into. Young Pierre Barillet has written one of the most amusing comedies Paris has seen this season which, because of its mixture of the servant problem and a semi-Cinderella story, has much more than purely local appeal. It's a hit here.

Mme. Veyron-Laffite hires a maid. Adele isn't an ordinary maid—she is gifted with second-sight, and since Mme. Veyron-Laffite is not only superstitious, but also involved in some shady financial deals, Adele is a godsend. So much so that Madame insists that the new maid accompany the family to a dinner at Maxim's given by the people with whom she is involved, in order to have Adele's reactions and the benefit of her "gift." Adele's "visions" are accurate enough, but can be, ings with a smuggler, he contrives to make his suicide seem like death of a heart attack, a stratagem foiled in the end by his own diary. The whole, another in the current series of grapplings with Catholicism, proves not much of anything save that Catholicism is effective except when is isn't.

Where the adaptors make their primary error (and theirs is the chief responsibility) is in failing to lay rough hands on the novel and recast it for the stage. They use four sets where two or at the most three would have sufficed, and skip back and forth from one set to another when scenes could have been combined. This error, in turn, led to another one by the stage designer, three of whose four sets seem altogether too heavy and elaborate for their brief purpose.

In the leading role, Ian Hunter turns in a remarkably well-rounded portrait. His is the most difficult task of conveying the enormously significant mentation of the character that is so important and effective in the novel, for audiences that might not have read the book. It is a nearly impossible task under the circumstances, and that he conveys the anguish of the man, yet remains always in control as well as he does, is an impressive achievement. An equally remarkable portrait on a smaller and certainly easier scale is created by Rosalie Crutchley (who resembles Luise Rainer) and demonstrates a very fresh and vital quality.

Others of the cast, though certainly capable, often prove entirely too British in the sense that they frequently verge close to an American audience's conception of parody. Some scenes, were they played for laughs, would bring down the house. Nor are Greene's lines entirely free of this quality; sometimes they sound like those in a revue sketch parodying the stiff upper lip.

These, however, are matters that this impressive team of theatre people may smooth out. It may also be expected that many major improvements will take place here regarding pace, lighting, cutting, re-routining and so on. Even as it is the play does hold attention, is interesting both to see and to hear, and has a commanding literary and intellectual quality. Yet a major miracle alone can save it, and even if it does occur, the play seems headed for moderate houses at best. Elie.

Riel

Toronto, Feb. 23.

New Play Society production of drama in two acts (15 scenes) by John Coulter. Directed by Donald Harron; technical supervision by Robert Christie; historical advisors, Vera Clarke and Frederick Findlay; musical director, Florence Glenn; costumes, Richard Moon and Arden Keay. At Royal Museum theatre, Toronto, Feb. 23, '50; $3 top.

Louis Riel	Mavor Moore
Mme. Riel	Margot Christie
Marie	Bea Lennard
Thomas Scott	Don Harron
Col. Stoughton Dennis	Vernon Chapman
O'Donoghue	Ben Gans
Sir John A. Macdonald	Robert Christie
Archbishop Tache	Leslie Rubie
Sir Georges Cartier	James Scott
Col. Wolseley	Garth Magwood
Marguerite	Pegi Brown
Crown Council	Murray Westgate
Defense Council	Herbert Gott
General Middleton	Garth Magwood
Father Andre	Gus Kristjanson

John Coulter, Irish playwright and poet, has had several of his plays produced by the Abbey Theatre and the Group Theatre in Dublin. For his latest work, "Riel," he takes the man who set up a republic in what is now Manitoba, and who was later hanged for treason when Queen Victoria's troops and the Mounties marched in to put down the Indian and French halfbreed insurrection.

Whether Louis Riel was a dictator or patriot is still a subject of bitter debate in Canada (he was hanged in 1885), but Coulter presents both sides of the question in impartial perspective for current audiences. As one who went through the Irish rebellion of 1916, Coulter is especially equipped for the writing of the parallel Riel drama.

The rebel leader, passionately fond of his people, believed he was a mouthpiece of God; and, for this "blasphemy," encountered the opposition of the powerful Catholic Church as well as the Conservative government in Ottawa. For American audiences unfamiliar with this phase of Canadian history, some further clarification will have to be injected into the writing, but this should not be difficult.

Though manifestly episodic, "Riel" holds considerable vigorous action even if the actual fighting takes place offstage. The first act is the best but the second, devoted mainly to the lengthy trial scene, needs condensing and heightening. The final harrowing hanging scene could also be eliminated.

Mavor Moore, as Louis Riel, gives an outstanding portrayal ranging from great rages to a poignant dignity in defeat. Of the women, Margot Christie, as the mother with Oedipus undertones, gives the best performance, with Pegi Brown and Bea Lennard giving nice shading as Riel's wife and lover, respectively. Robert Christie, as Sir John MacDonald, the then Prime Minister, plays this role for sardonic effect and is a standout. There are some 40 speaking parts. With its historical sweep in the winning of a new province in the west, "Riel" holds fine film possibilities. McStay.

King Lear

Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 24.

Brattle Theatre production of Shakespeare's drama. Stars William Devlin. Directed by Albert Marre; sets, Robert O'Hearn; costumes, Robert Fletcher. At Brattle Hall, Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 22, '50; $3.60 top.

Earl of Gloucester	Thayer David
Earl of Kent	Peter Temple
Edmund	Albert Marre
Duke of Albany	Earl Montgomery
Goneril, Duchess of Albany	Joan Croyden
Duke of Cornwall	Will West
Regan, Duchess of Cornwall	Jan Farrand
Cordelia	Leslie Paul
Lear, King of Britain	William Devlin
King of France	Miles Morgan
Duke of Burgundy	Charles Polk
Edgar	Robert Fletcher
Gentleman	Paul Sparrer
The Fool	Jerry Kilty
Oswald	Albert Duclos
Herald	David Bowen
Knights	John Peters, Dana Elkar

William Devlin, making his first American appearance in this production of "King Lear" by the bright Brattle Theatre company of Cambridge, clearly demonstrates the reason for his English raves. He's got all it takes, and plenty in reserve.

What he brings to the role of Lear is lucidity of style and declamation, an attitude of authority, a masterly stage deportment and a dominating physical presence. He sets the proper note from the outset, distributing his realm among his daughters not as a doddering old fool but as a man accustomed to royal wilfulness and conceit. From then on, through successive stages of self reproach, bitterness, rage and madness, every speech, inflection and gesture contributes to the portrait.

Although his supporting cast, all members of this progressive company that is now firmly established in the neighborhood, seemed a little awed by its distinguished visitor and consequently tried a little too hard to keep up at the opening, it was by no means left at the post. Nearly all the members of the cast managed the Shakespearean lines with breadth and style, and several captured more than a fleeting sense of the meaning and significance of the characterizations. Outstanding in this sense were Thayer David as Gloucester, Jan Farrand as Regan and Jerry Kilty as the Fool, with excellent moments by Albert Marre, and Robert Fletcher.

Considering the limitations of the stage and the resources of the company, the staging and costuming are satisfactory. The play was imaginatively conceived by Albert Marre, who picked up from the lines a number of effective visual stage groupings and movements. The consequence was that while Devlin added considerably to the overall impact of the play, his was by no means an unsupported piece of acting virtuosity.

House, a 500-seater, is scaled for about $6,000 a week, and this attraction is SRO. Set for a "limited" engagement, with Edward Everett Horton following up with "The Country Wife." Elie.

Paris Ballet Slowed By Cleve. Bliz, $16,000

Cleveland, Feb. 28.

Blizzards last week brought the take of Ballets de Paris down to an ordinary $16,000 in seven performances at the Hanna here. Show played to a $3.50 top.

Plays on Broadway

The Bird Cage

Walter Fried and Lars Nordenson production of melodrama in two acts by Arthur Laurents. Stars Melvyn Douglas; features Eleanor Lynn, Sanford Meisner, Laurence Hugo, Maureen Stapleton, Jean Carson. Directed by Harold Clurman; setting and lighting, Boris Aronson; musical background, Alec Wilder; costumes, Ben Edwards. At Coronet, N. Y., Feb. 22, '50; $4.80 top ($6 opening).

Frank	Mike Kellin
Cork	John Shellie
Eloise	Kate Harkin
India Grey	Eleanor Lynn
Ferdy	Sanford Meisner
Mr. Ripley	Heywood Hale Broun
Pearl	Jean Carson
Wally Williams	Melvyn Douglas
Vic	Laurence Hugo
Emely Williams	Maureen Stapleton
Renie Renay	Rita Duncan
Joe Williams	Wright King
Mr. Mack	Rudy Bond

Arthur Laurents, who once worked in a New York nightclub, has put his experience into a play, "The Bird Cage," a strident, disjointed and sporadically engrossing meller. Besides its faults as drama it lacks a sympathetic leading character, so it's a doubtful boxoffice bet. Play's title, incidentally, refers to the name of the nitery where the yarn takes place.

The show is somewhat similar to the old George Abbott-Philip Dunning melodrama, "Broadway," in its picture of the seamy side of nightclubs, and suggests the Richard Rodgers-Lorenz Hart musical, "Pal Joey," in its tale of the downfall of a heel. The Laurents play seems to imply that there is a broad application to this portrait of a ruthless egomaniac and the small realm he tyrannizes.

That, if it actually is the intention, is a provocative idea for a play. But Laurents has failed to put it across in effective theatrical terms. In its present form "Cage" never quite comes to life. Its situation and happenings seem manufactured, and its characters give the impression of having been created to meet the needs of the story, rather than having entity and motivation of their own.

Divided into two acts, instead of three, which might improve it, the yarn takes the bigshot nitery boss through a hectic day or two in which he double-crosses his partner (who helped him frame and oust the former owner), tries to seduce the new singer, crushes the hand of the pianist, betrays and humiliates his wife (whom he has driven to alcoholism), and arranges an assignation for his innocent, teen-age son. Finally he sets fire to the establishment (presumably taking his own life in the act) when his partner is about to force its sale.

Most of the action occurs in a sort of loafing room for the employees, with a service bar on one side, two tables, chairs, a midget piano and an iron stairway to the dressing rooms upstairs. Other scenes take place in the boss' dressing room and, on an upper level, in his private office. The elaborate setting, in fact, seems to be one of the weaknesses of the play, since it involves diffusion of the action, lacks the illusion of a real interior and, from a practical standpoint complicates the production expenses.

Starred as the unsavory hero, Melvyn Douglas is convincing and provides the proper drive for the part, but cannot overcome the lack of dimension and the repulsive quality of the character. Eleanor Lynn is effective as the can't-be-made gal. Sanford Meisner makes a field day of the character part of the partner. Laurence Hugo is acceptable as a cynical pianist, and Maureen Stapleton is attractive in the impossible role of the wife who keeps appearing suddenly and moping around, aparently having nothing else to do. Jean Carson scores with another of her dumb-blond portrayals, while Kate Harkin, John Shellie and Wright King are plausible in smaller parts.

Harold Clurman's direction suffers from the helter-skelter nature of the script, Boris Aronson's two-level setting seems confusing and not readily playable, Alec Wilder's background and scene-change music is distracting, but Ben Edwards' costumes (except for the final, blue dress for Miss Lynn) add illusion. In general, though, "Cage" is the sort of play that makes everyone involved, including the author, appear at a disadvantage. Hobe.

Devil's Disciple

(Royale Theatre, N. Y.)

Richard Aldrich and Richard Myers (in association with Julius Fleischmann) are now firmly entrenched in the Broadway legit boxoffice sweepstakes with a brace of Shavian hits, now that they've taken "Devil's Disciple" out of its City Center, N. Y. "civic repertory" status and installed it within the more intimate precincts of the Royale theatre.

Like the Aldrich-Myers "Caesar and Cleopatra" production a few blocks away, "Devil's Disciple" looks set for a run. It isn't often that an incoming Broadway production has such a pre-tested b.o. guaranee, in the wake of the critical kudos extended to "Disciple" in its City Center run a few weeks previous. If anything, the $40,000 which Aldrich and Myers have invested in refurbishing the designs and costuming for its "commercial" run enhances this Margaret Webster production.

Shaw's caustic frolic on the American Revolution and obesiance to the King emerges as one of the delights of the current Broadway season, with Maurice Evans, Marsha Hunt, Victor Jory and, notably, Dennis King in his second-act appearance, capturing faithfully all of "Disciple's" nuances. Rose.

Off-B'way Show

Armor of Light

Blackfriars' production of drama in three acts by Rev. Urban Nagle. Staged by Dennis Gurney; sets, Greg Kayne; costumes, Irene Griffin.

Cast: Stanley Phillips, Danny Leone, Michael Spaeth, Edwin Ardath, Gerald Lee, Paul H. A. Menard, Joseph Gilbert, Hazen Gifford, James Arenton, Geraldine Page, John Fox, Charles Gilbert, Edward Joyce, James O'Brien, Barbara Lebby and William Goddard. At Blackfriars' Guild Playhouse, N. Y., Feb. 23, '50; $2.40 top.

"Armor of Light," authored by Rev. Urban Nagle and given production by a capable semi-pro cast at the Blackfriars, will undoubtedly serve its purpose as a Lenten attraction for the N. Y. Bandbox theatre. Its religious theme, encompassing the tribulations of the Christian apostle, St. Paul, is especially attuned to the Holy season. Even dyed-in-the-wool Catholics who would not venture theatreward in the Lenten season would attend this performance.

Play, revolving around the life of Saul, who was an arch enemy of Christ until his conversion as Paul the Apostle, is handled by its author in episodical fashion. For the most part it is moving drama, yet Rev. Nagle seems to have concentrated more on the episodical history of the saint than in the etching of him and the other characters. Nevertheless it moves along interestingly and holds audience throughout.

Stanley Phillips brings compassion and understanding to the role of the turbulent St. Paul. Others acquitting themselves well in principal roles are Paul Menard, Joseph Gilbert, Hazen Gifford, James Arenton, Michael Spaeth and Edwin Ardath. Dennis Gurney has staged it at proper pace, with Greg Kayne's sets and Irene Griffin's costumes as added assets. Edba.

DIAMOND MAE HEATS UP TORONTO FOR $27,600

Toronto, Feb. 28.

Despite three-day blizzard, Mae West in "Diamond Lil" grossed a smash $27,600 at the Royal Alexandra (1,525) at $4.20 top. Advance ticket buyers got through the snow for the earlier part of the week; jammed the house to sellouts for latter half.

Miss West plays a return engagement of "Diamond Lil" here in early April.

Woolley-'Dinner' Okay $19,200 in Frisco

San Francisco, Feb. 28.

"The Man Who Came to Dinner," with Monty Woolley, chalked up a good $19,200 for its first stanza at the 1,550-seat Curran, where it opened last week. House is scaled to $3.60.

Margaret Webster's Shakespeare company, which moved into the 1,750-seat Geary last week for one week, left that house after sole stanza. Despite warm reviews troupe only garnered estimated $8,000. House scaled from 60c to $3. Geary will remain dark until Italian pic, "Bicycle Thief" takes over March 12, for two-a-day.

Only legit announced for future is "Death of A Salesman," for the Curran sometime in June, and "The Silver Whistle," for the Geary, in July.

Lillie-'U.S.A.' Healthy $29,000 in Mwkee.

Milwaukee, Feb. 28.

"Inside U.S.A.," starring Bea Lillie, grossed a healthy $29,000 at the 1,496-seat Davidson here last week.

up in closing spot. Their harmonizing is as sharp as ever, and their slick arrangements are commercial. Kenny, as usual, carries the lead on "No Orchids For My Lady," "Maybe," "With Eyes Wide Open I'm Dreaming of You" and other numbers which have been identified with the group, and they get hefty applause and begoff.

Jackson band, comprising three rhythms, four reeds (including the maestro) and three brasses, give proceedings a rollicking start with a be-bop opener to set a mood for the followup acts. The Lapham Trio, only ofay act on the sepia bill, mop up with their slick hand-to-hand balancing and gymnastics, with femme equally agile on the tricks as her male partners. Walter Green gets over neatly in his taps and rhythms, giving way to Sammy Hines, ventro, who has a fair line of school-days repartee with dummy but really cooks on a couple of duets with latter for closer to garner applause.

Jackson and reed section step down for their own spot, plenty torrid, which spotlights maestro on the sax and on vocals of "Bow-Legged Woman" and other items for solid returns. Three Chocolateers whoop things up in next-to-closing with their knockabout comedy to keep the customers howling. Edba.

Los Angeles, Feb. 22.

Boy Foy, White & Stanley, Florence Hin Low, Al Norman, Don Zelaya, 2 Zephyrs, Nick Lucas, Peggy Taylor Trio, Rene Williams House Orch (9); "Passport to Pimlico" (EL).

This week's bill, teeing off on Washington's Birthday, could do no wrong to the full house of opening matinee customers. The holiday spirit helped every act look good, and the friendly, first show audience kept the house echoing to hearty mitt-pounding.

Nick Lucas, his guitar and easy style, pleases with "Dear Hearts," the single concession to modern tunes, but the customers came to hear "Tip Toe Through the Tulips," "Bye, Bye, Blackbird," "Side By Side," and sundry other oldies in the Lucas catalog. On the comedy side of the bill it's Al Norman out front. Old jokes and gags, and limber-legged dancing awaken a strong response, and his act plays for a fast 12 minutes.

Peggy Taylor and two male partners supply spectacular adagio lifts, spins and tossing to keep the customers gasping. There's plenty of pre-curtain work indicated in the precision timing with which routines are run off. Don Zelaya is a comedy pianist who limits his 88'ing to two classical pieces. In between the keyboard demonstration, Zelaya talks. Chatter gets a good share of guffaws.

Boy Foy's juggling atop a unicycle is a smart sight act and gets the show off to a strong start and the audience in the right frame of mind. In the two-spot, White & Stanley supply a neat touch of older vaude. They punch to nice effect with songs and patter. Team has virtually retired so date is in the nature of a holiday booking just to keep their hand in. Florence Hin Low is a contortionist who amazes with her effortless pretzel twists. Brog.

Circle, Indpls.

Indianapolis, Feb. 26.

Eddy Duchin Orch, with Tommy Mercer; Vivian Blaine, Christine & Moll, Herbert & Saxon; "Dancing in the Dark" (20th).

Eddy Duchin is giving plenty of satisfaction to customers at Circle this week in a smartly-packaged show, despite fact bill isn't getting attention it deserves, due to overwhelming interest of younger crowd in state high school basketball tournament, which started this week. His piano style is well liked and three supporting acts, including Vivian Blaine, go over big. Duchin also does better than average job as emcee, getting them on and off smoothly.

Only straight band number is curtain raiser, after which Duchin swings into medley. He closes with another medley made up of audience requests. Otherwise, band's job is to play for vocalists and acts. Tommy Mercer registers nicely in "There's No Tomorrow," "Old Master Painter" and "Let's Go West Again." Miss Blaine sells herself strictly on merit in nice selection of popular and character song material. She's cute in "I Said My Pajamas" and does a click job with Eva Tanguay's "I Don't Care."

Comedy punch is provided by Herbert and Saxon and the dancing act, Christine and Moll. Latter has couple of dandy fast tap routines with variations, as when Moll picks up rhythm by snapping his fingers and keeps it going without missing a beat. They also dress it up with amusing by-play. It adds up to outstanding novelty turn. Herbert and Saxon get plenty of laughs for their zany antics. Corb.

Hippodrome, Balto.

Baltimore, Feb. 26.

Jack Carson, Robert Alda, Janis Paige, Tommy Wells, Arden & Hartman, Dolinoff & Raya Sisters (4), Jo Lombardi House Orch (12); "Threat" (RKO).

Jack Carson has surrounded himself with good talent for a brisk-playing and completely entertaining p.a. It's paying off at the b.o., too. Added entry of Dolinoff & Raya Sisters was not the best selection from a production point of view, what with Jo Lombardi and his house orch on stage and the blacked out dance illusions necessarily played in front of him. A solid sock in any layout and well received in opening slot here, it served to get Carson's stuff off to a slow start, but flip-talking screen star takes hold and it's all his from there on in.

Weaving in and out of the entire layout, Carson gives with okay gags and interpolations of familiar guy-chasing-a-dame-across-stage bit by Tommy Wells. Robert Alda comes through with a brace of vocals, "Blue Heaven" and "Maria," followed by more vocalizing by Carson, "Scarlet Ribbons in Her Hair" and "Down in Texas." A bit heavy on the song side what with Janis Paige set to follow with more of the same, but contrast in styling helps.

Three hoofing routines by Arden & Hartman, duo of femmes who shake out a legitimate tap to change pace and make a spot for Miss Paige to take hold with smooth vocals of "Dear Hearts." Comes next a build-up of the old three-way love scene by Carson, Alda and Miss Paige, familiar but given new twist with impressions of Gable, Lorre and Colman by Carson for added laughs. A hillbilly song and dance bit with entire ensemble participating winds up matters nicely and provides a good getaway. Burm.

Fox, Detroit

Detroit, Feb. 24.

Lionel Hampton Orch (17), with Jeannette Franklin, Curly Hammer, Kitty Murray, Sonny Parker, Betty Carter, Jimmie Scott, Irma Curry; Low, Hite & Stanley; "Guilty Bystander" (FC).

The only bright spot in this slow-moving show is Lionel Hampton. He lifts it from monotony to a sizzling, crashing, rollicking finish. It is a personal triumph that is all the more amazing because of the weakness of the other acts.

Hamp's crew gets things underway with a fast medley of bebop. Then Betty "Bebop" Carter gets in front of the mike and gives voice to a series of unintelligible sounds. Her applause was mild.

Next is Kitty Murray, a gravel-voiced terper who burlesques "Love Me." She gets a few scattered laughs, but the applause is mild. Teenager Jimmy Scott sings "I've Been a Fool" and "Everybody Is Somebody's Fool" for polite applause.

Hampton and Curley Hammer team for a "I-can-do-anything-you-can-do" go at the drums. Hammer is strictly no match for Hamp. But this act began building the show to its boff finish.

Sweet-voiced Irma Curry vocals "I Can Dream, Can't I?" but seemed to have trouble in the upper registers.

Jeannette Franklin does a neat job with a sultry version of "Sorrento." Hers was the first applause besides the Hampton-Hammer duo that merited an encore.

Low, Hite & Stanley are unimpressive in a slapstick, but come through for a well-deserved hand with their plattermime of the Andrews Sisters.

Hampton takes over at the vibraharp at this point and builds the show to a savage, blasting climax that tore at his audience and made many actually rock with rhythm. The closing number, "Flying Home," was replete with flashing lights and brassy blasts that looked and sounded like a gigantic Fourth of July celebration. Tew.

Le Don D'Adele

and usually are, wrongly interpreted, causing a number of amusing complications.

Comedy is crammed with funny lines and situations that may be obvious but which the author has succeeded in making laughable just the same. In this he is aided by a firstrate cast and excellent direction. As Adele, Gaby Sylvia turns in a superb performance, consistently tough throughout, not only vocally but physically, and without a hint of vulgarity. Suzanne Dantes as Mme. Veyron-Laffite is also excellent, and Daniel Crouet as Antoine is a juvenile worth watching. Colette Ripert and Serge Nadaud give adequate support.

Setting by Suzanne Reymond is effective and the costumes by Jacques Griffe are appropriate. Fred.

Heloise et Abelard

Paris, Feb. 15.

Le Rideau de Paris presentation of drama in three acts by Roger Vailland. Directed by Jean Marchat. Scenery and costumes by Soulages. Incidental music by Jean Wiener. At Theatre des Mathurins, Paris.

Heloise	Jany Holt
Abelard	Jean Servais
Fulbert	Jean Marchat
Prince	Roger Gaillard
Margot	Helene Constant
Young Girl	Evelyne Langey
Chevalier	Jean Nessereau

Roger Vailland has written a provocative play that is largely historical but with overtones of contemporary problems around the well-known story of Heloise and Abelard. It is in the best tradition of what the French call the "theatre of ideas," which means that the dialog is rich in thought-provoking content, whereas such action as there is is limited. The chief protagonists are Fulbert, representing bigotry at its worst, and his niece, Heloise, the intelligent but spiritually-minded non-conformist whose love for Abelard brings about the historically known consequences.

The play is magnificently acted, particularly by Jean Marchat, who turns in one of his finest creations as the cringing, hypocritical Fulbert, and by Jany Holt as a vivid, passionate Heloise. Jean Servais lends his beautiful voice and diction to the role of Abelard. The medieval costumes and scenery of Soulages are effective. The play may be too talky for Broadway; in any case its subject matter is too thorny for Hollywood. Fred.

ALBANY THEATRE BILL

Albany, Feb. 28.

Assemblyman Francis X. McGowan, Manhattan Democrat, has reintroduced a bill providing that tickets sold for reserved seats in places of amusement shall indicate if the holder has an obstructed or partial view of the stage or ring.

McGowan sponsored a similar measure last year, amending it to affect only reserved seats. The bill passed the Assembly but did not come to a vote in the Senate. Theatre interests were in opposition.

Atlanta's Penthouse Extends to Jacksonville

Atlanta, Feb. 28.

Penthouse theatre, Greek-type showcase atop Ansley hotel, is branching out. A second Penthouse playhouse will open March 13 in Jacksonville, Fla., in Roosevelt hotel's ballroom. Also to be named Penthouse, it will have 500 seats, 50 more than parent theatre here.

Jacksonville Penthouse will bow with Cesar Romero in "Strictly Dishonorable," the same combo that did capacity business here two weeks ago and is scheduled for repeat six-day run starting March 6. Jacksonville scale will be $3.60 top, slightly higher than Atlanta's, where all seats here are priced at $3.

Don Gibson is president of organization that started the highly successful star stock engagement here some 22 weeks ago and has six weeks more to run.

"Blind Alley," starring Alan Baxter, grossed a so-so $4,500 last week. Guy Kibbee opened Monday (27) night in "The Late Christopher Bean."

2 Legits for D.C.

the 2,000-seat Strand, currently playing western films, would be suitable for musicals and heavy-budget straight shows.

The Bromley-Healey plans for the Gayety call for a series of presentations opening with Judy Holliday in "Born Yesterday," for an indefinite run. Sought as subsequent offerings are "Streetcar Named Desire," "Anne of the Thousand Days," "Goodbye, My Fancy" and other recent Broadway clicks that have never been seen in Washington because of the lack of a legit house there since the summer of 1948. Original productions would be used if available, or new editions would be presented for indefinite runs. Another prospective booking would be the tryout of "Sweet Poison," Leonard Lee melodrama which Bromley and Miss Healey have scheduled for Broadway presentation this spring, with Richard Whorf and Faye Emerson co-starred.

Herbert J. Freezer, co-producer of the touring "Diamond Lil," starring Mae West, is reportedly one of the backers of the Gayety venture. Lease starts March 20 and extends through May 31, with an option to renew for next season. Meanwhile, the house starts a legit policy Monday night (6) with the presentation of the touring "Barretts of Wimpole Street," with Susan Peters. It recently abandoned its burlesque policy, and has been undergoing renovations for the last couple of weeks.

If the CTP leases the Strand, management of the theatre would probably be in charge of a three-man sub-committee, with Ben Boyar mentioned as possible house manager. No question of bookings is foreseen, since the CTP members sharing in the investment would naturally prefer to use it for their touring shows. Therefore, the project is figured a likely financial risk.

Deal for the Strand is now said to hinge on tests by a a New York engineering firm to determine whether the house's second balcony is safe. That will probably be decided this week. Financial terms for the lease are reportedly agreed verbally, and papers may be signed by the end of this week, if no hitch arises. It's belived that necessary renovations could be completed within a couple of weeks and that the house could be in operation by late March or early April.

Entry of the CTP into the situation apparently eliminates one possible complication in lease of the Belasco, Strand or Gayety. That is that the management of the National, long the sole legit house in Washington, might abandon its policy of racial discrimination and revert to operation as a road stand, if some other theatre opened up the field.

Because of the position of Marcus Heiman, as both manager of the house and president of the United Booking Office, it was figured that if the National reverted to legit, other local theatres might be unable to get more than sporadic bookings. But with the CTP financing the other house, it would be assured of steady bookings of top touring shows. Moreover, the anti-trust suit filed by the Government last week against the Shuberts and UBO might be a factor in any booking snarl.

ALBANY TRYOUT THIRD LESS COSTLY THAN HUB

Albany, Feb. 28

Albany could well become an important tryout town—a niche which it occupied years ago when Harmanus Bleecker Hall was flourishing—if the premiere of "Congressional Baby" at the Playhouse clicks tonight (Tues.). Eddie Dowling, who is presenting Eileen Tighe's comedy, reveals the cost of the presentation here is only one third the nut of Boston or New Haven. Show will run two weeks.

Dowling is using five outside actors—including Nina Foch, Katherine Emmett, Mark Roberts and Neil Fitzgerald—and 11 from the local Playhouse company managed by Malcolm Atterbury. Latter and his wife, Ellen Hardies, are in the cast of "Congressional Baby."

Evelyn-'Streetcar' 18G in Split Week

Grand Rapids, Ia., Feb. 28.

A disappointing gross of nearly $18,000 was taken in by the No. 2 company of "Streetcar Named Desire," headed by Judith Evelyn and Ralph Meeker, in three engagements last week. Show played two-day stands at Indiana U., Bloomington, Monday and Tuesday (20-21); Quimby, Ft. Wayne, Wednesday and Thursday (22-23), and Keith's here, Friday and Saturday (24-25). Poor business was attributed to brownouts and transportation difficulties caused by the coal strike.

Play is at the Davidson, Milwaukee, this week.

Elman Making Tele Debut Before Doing Europe Tour

Mischa Elman, who concluded a coastwide tour last night (Tues.) with an appearance at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, makes his television debut Saturday (4) as guest star on the NBC tele program, "Your Show of Shows."

Elman sails March 23 for London, where he opens a tour of Britain and the continent with an Albert Hall concert.

Sacramento Fest

Sacramento, Feb. 28.

The Sacramento Repertory Theatre has arranged for the Margaret Webster troupe to offer a two-week festival of plays here next January. Productions, which will include "St. Joan," "The Taming of the Shrew," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and two modern works, will be put on at the newly-built Eaglet theatre.

Miss Webster has also agreed to appear in some of the presentations.

N.Y. INSURANCE BILL

Albany, Feb. 28.

Senator Seymour Halpern, Queens Republican, introduced a bill last week providing that exemption from unemployment insurance for non-profit organizations shall not include entertainments or theatrical productions for which a fee is charged or an admission employed so far as employees of the productions are concerned.

Billy Rose Yanks' Trib Col.

Refusal by the N. Y. Herald Tribune to use a column castigating Rudolf Bing and Kirsten Flagstad resulted this week in the Trib announcing in a box that Billy Rose has yanked his three-times-weekly column from the daily. The column was one omitted by the Trib on Feb. 20 because of what the Trib's attorneys described as "libelous" statements. Rose's three-times-weekly column outlet will now be via the N. Y. News.

Rose wouldn't comment on whether he had signed to do the News column before the Trib controversy, but he did state that his exiting from the Trib "was quite sudden" and that the refusal to use the column was a contributing factor to his leaving.

The showman-writer was given his leave from the Trib before the expiration of his contract, at his own request, "because he wanted to clear up the matter before he left for a Bahamas vacation this week. He starts doing the News column on March 6. His contract with the Trib had a couple of months to go, but, as he stated, "The Tribune was good enough, at my own request, to let me out before the contract ended." He stressed the amicable relationship under which they parted.

The controversial column was in the form of a letter to Bing, who recently started preparations to take over as the new general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Co. in New York. The "letter" stated that Rose was impressed most about Bing's announcement that he would select the Met's personnel on the basis of "quality and nothing else." And that Bing had promptly "backed up this esthetic principle by optioning Kirsten Flagstad for 14 performances at the Met—this in spite of the fact that, according to several bulging dossiers, she had entertained and been entertaining the Nazis."

Rose then went on to sneer that, "having gone so far, wouldn't it be the part of wisdom to go the rest of the way and, purely on a quality basis, engage other talents which would contribute to the successful operation of our most important opera company?"

The rest of the column dealt with Rose's caustic "suggestions" as to who could serve on the Met's directorate under conditions that would allow Miss Flagstad to sing there. For instance he "suggested" Dr. Hjalmar Schacht as director of finances, and Ilsa Koch as head of the wardrobe department. In connection with the latter, Rose took a rap at General Clay, obviously for having okayed Frau Koch's pardon.

In closing, Rose pointedly "urged" what he described as a "real eye-catcher in electric lights over the marquee": "Quality Uber Alles."

Rose reports that he's gotten no squawks from any of his other outlets, numbering over 2,000 papers, including dailies and weeklies.

Dailies' Early Bird Competition

Other New York morning papers are acting to meet the competition of the Herald Tribune's early bird edition, which beginning tonight (Wed.) hits the streets at 8 p.m. Daily Mirror and Daily News both started last week to put their first editions on sale a half hour earlier. News had locked up at 7 p.m. and sent mats to Brooklyn, to roll its Brooklyn edition at 8 p.m., but had kept its Manhattan forms open for another half-hour, until 7:30. Now city forms close at 7 and presses roll at 7:30, with trucks beginning to pick up copies around 7:40.

N. Y. Times said that it will not get into the competition, but trade feels the paper may have to bring out an earlier edition. At stake in the circulation war are 1,300,000 readers who buy their papers between 8 p.m. and 1 a.m.

Lait-Mortimer's OK Chi Book

"Chicago Confidential" (Crown; $3) is the second in a series of volumes by vet newsmen Jack Lait and Lee Mortimer retailing the behind-the-scenes life of major U. S. towns. This "lowdown on the big town" is just that; it has everything from backstage and bagnio phone numbers to the origin of the term "white slave."

In 302 fact-packed pages, including a classified directory that tells the reader how and where he can rent a sleigh, buy a second-hand railroad car, get a VD test and find someone to worry over the results to ease strained nerves, Lait and Mortimer limn the Chicago that the casual tourist or passer-through never knows. Three hours with "Chicago Confidential" and you know more of the Windy City than you can learn in 30 hours of Cook's Tours. And it's written in a staccato, engrossing style that will click even if you already know the lowdown.

Like its predecessor, "New York: Confidential!" the new Lait-Mortimer tome is a must for those who want to know the town. Kap.

Columnist Shellacking

The Broadway columnist as a breed comes in for a severe shellacking from Richard Mealand in "The First Person," recently published by Doubleday. Mealand is former story editor of Paramount and before that was an editor of Good Housekeeping and Cosmopolitan. He has written one previous book, "Let Me Do the Talking," about a literary agent.

Columnist in "The First Person" is not directly identifiable with any of the current Broadway crop, but is a composite of a writer of both chit-chat and weighty opinion. Principal motivation revolves around his feud with another pillar-writer. Both are presented in anything but a sympathetic vein and Mealand does a rather slick and entertaining job of skinning their hides off. Herb.

Distaff Mags' Shakeup

Major shakeups hit two distaff mags last week, with the repercussions still being felt. Triangle Publications' Seventeen lost Helen Valentine, editor-in-chief since the mag started five years ago, and managing ed Andree Vilas, both of whom resigned to join Street & Smith's Charm, monthly aimed at the business girl. Seventeen art director Cipe Pineles also left, following the firing of promotion director Estelle Ellis and publicity director Adelaide Weinerman. Alice Thompson, who was upped as the teen-gal publication's publisher last May, is taking over the editorial chair.

Charm, meanwhile, has dropped editor-in-chief Frances Harrington, associate editor Oliver Claxton, regional director Eloise Ray, coordinating editor Nathan Mandelbaum, home editor Theo Pascal and merchandise editor Lucia Foreman.

Both Miss Valentine and Miss Vilas worked for Street & Smith before going to Seventeen. Trade expects to see editorial policy changes in both mags.

Book Awards' Judges

Judges for the National Book Award Committee, to select the most distinguished books of 1949 for the American Book Publishers Council, American Book Sellers Assn. and Book Manufacturers Institute, were picked this week. Non-fiction board includes Elmer Davis, Fairfield Osborn, Henry Steele Commager, Norman Cousins and John Kieran. Fiction Committee comprises W. G. Rogers, Glenway Wescott, Mary Colum, Malcolm Cowley and Max Gissen. Poetry board includes W. H. Auden, Louise Bogan, Babette Deutsch, Horace Gregory and Louis Untermeyer.

Awards will be made at a Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., dinner March 16.

Hearst's Cook's Tours

John Kobler and Charles Addams, having returned from a European junket for Hearst magazines, which resulted in stories for both Cosmopolitan and Good Housekeeping, editor Herbert Mayes is sending Richard Sherman abroad on a similar mission to gather material for fiction. Eliot Paul likewise did "Paris Revisited" under a Hearstian assignment. It starts in Cosmo in April.

Incidentally, the new Eric Hodgins sequel to "Blandings' Dream House," titled "Mr. Blandings' Progress," is slated for June Cosmopolitan. It has fun-in-an-ad-agency as a theme, sans any "huckster" overtones. Simon & Schuster doing the book version.

Max Wylie's Radio-TV Tome

Radio and Television Writing, b. Max Wylie (Rinehart & Co., $6.50) is a revised and enlarged edition by the same author some time ago. Wylie knows his radio and besides he has the top authorities of and in radio and television who have contributed good, solid advice and examples of fine writing in all fields.

The editing is a bit sloppy as persons are mentioned holding spots they haven't held in a few years. But this book holds plenty for the tyro who wants to build up ulcers seriously, that is radio writing, and no doubt the book will be used as a text wherever radio and TV writing is taught. It covers all angles of the writing biz, giving examples of scripts of Eddie Cantor's show, Danny Kaye, Burns & Allen, Allan Young, Henry Morgan. Fred Allen, Abe Burrows, which you must admit are tops in comedy writing. Besides these there are articles by experts, dramatic shows and adaptions, situation comedy, serials, mystery, newscasts and commercials. Through actual scripts he discusses the markets and general problems of the young writer.

In fact, all one has to do after reading this book is to sit down and write scripts, and then buy a luck charm to sell them.

Albany Correspondents Hoopla

Albany Legislative Correspondents will hold their golden anniversary show and dinner at the Astor hotel, N. Y., on March 11, first time in 50 years the old political satire-dinner affair is being held outside the state capital.

Leo Egan, of the N. Y. Times, is chairman of the show. James C. Hagerty, Governor Dewey's press secretary, authored the book and lyrics. Thomas C. Stowell will direct.

'Sonny Boy' Jackson

Charles Jackson's new book, "The Sunnier Side," a portion of which is in the new Cosmopolitan, was born of a fan letter from a woman in his home town who wanted to know why he "doesn't write more about the wholesome things such as forgotten childhoods," etc., instead of themes about drunks ("The Lost Weekend"), despair, etc. This letter followed a short story he had written in Good Housekeeping. Jackson took her at his word; recalled that she was from his home town; dwelt more on the fictionalized careers of four girls, with whom he had grown up, etc.

Jackson's expanded book version will reprise the original GH story, followed by her letter, and will include his own reply, "I'm grateful for your interest," etc., and then go into "The Sunnier Side."

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Dry, Wash., Feb. 17.

Between Dale Kramer's "Life of Heywood Broun" and Richard Mealand's "The First Person," one of which is presumably fiction, the story of the personal column as it grew and spread all over the land in the first half-century is amazingly well told. Of course, Chicago may enter a dissenting brief because there is little or no mention of Bert Leston Taylor's "A Line O' Type Or Two." But from the standpoint of New Yorkers it is a full story.

Previous to the arrival of Broun, New York had its offshoot of B.L.T. in The Evening Mail. That was F.P.A. and his column, "Always In Good Humor." The Evening Sun had "The Sun Dial," conducted by Don Marquis, but the great upsweep of columnists began when the New York Tribune took Broun and F.P.A. and others and built up a whole page of what previously would have been considered too trivial for anything more than fillers in competition with the day's news.

In England, of course, this sort of journalism had been going on for years. G. K. Chesterton wrote a column in the News which was very much like the sort Heywood Broun subsequently wrote in the World. In France, too, Georges de la Fouchardiere wrote a column very much in Broun's style for l'Humanite.

Latter-day columnists might maintain in their own defense that the widespread popularity of columnists really began with tabloids, notably the Graphic and the News, and that Winchell, Sullivan, Skolsky, Sobol, Hellinger, Durling, McIntyre were all gossipers, who got their effects chiefly by a series of short shocks which, when strung together, totaled a column. Few made attempts to carry out a story-idea but treated material as lightly as a feather.

This particular combination of whimsy and whamsy was most characteristic of Broun. Oddly, wherever he worked, within a few years he became more serious and ultimately so serious as to come in conflict with the front office. He invariably carried the subject on until the paper felt it had to give Broun the biz or give the biz to Broun. In the World's case it amounted to almost the same thing. Fired from the paper, he was there on the Telegram to catch the World on the bounce when it came time to give the Pulitzer paper the old heave.

Latins Without a Quarter

Like many others around New York, I had known "the old unmade bed" as a baseball writer and often wondered how one so disorderly could have a mind so neat. Of course, a good deal of his early Bohemianism could be explained on the ground that New York before, during and especially after the first World War was a Latin Quarter—without a quarter. It tumbled all over town, usually ending in Neysa McMein's studio or Si Newton's on Park avenue.

Broun himself was living in an old apartment house at Seventh avenue and 55th street, in the very rooms where Rudyard Kipling once lived, when he began his career as a columnist. He had been doing the first daily book column in New York journalism and he had a small son. From literature to life was but a step, and so "H the 3rd" reached the magic of print.

The Trib's m.e. gave Broun an office above the city room. Across an alley he could see Don Marquis, practically buried in a cubbyhole of chaos, knocking out his column, "The Sun Dial." Personal columns were on the upbeat. F.P.A. had his Pepys' Diary, Marquis his cockroach, Broun his baby.

Some Read, All Write

The Algonquin bunch seemed to be pretty much a noontime version of the Thanatopsis Pleasure and Inside Straight Club. It was begun by John Peter Toohey, p.a. for George Tyler; Murdoch Pemberton, p.a. for the Hippodrome, and Alexander Woollcott, p.a. for Alexander Woollcott. Early to the table were Ruth Hale, p.a. for Arthur Hopkins; Beatrice Kaufmann, wife of George S.; Jane Grant, wife of Harold Ross; Heywood Broun, F.P.A., Brock Pemberton, the glittering trio from Vanity Fair—Dorothy Parker, Robert Benchley and Bob Sherwood—and young wits like Howard Dietz, Morrie Ryskind and Herman J. Mankiwiecz. The poker club added Marc Connelly, Herbert Bayard Swope, Harpo Marx, Irving Berlin, George Gershwin, Crosby Gaige, Paul Bonner, Gerald Brooks and, for sex appeal, Alice Duer Miller.

This was the greatest collection of logrollers since Paul Bunyan came out of the Michigan woods. But the fact that they drew very little weight beyond their own circle came to light when Broun campaigned for Congress in a silk stocking district and even more than myself proved to be the run on a silk stocking district.

It is hard to believe even now that Broun ended the campaign in third place, and a bad third at that, with 6,662 votes, as opposed to Ruth Pratt, the winner, with 19,899. I got as many votes in an assembly district which is one-quarter the size of a congressional district, and felt disgraced even so. So you can imagine how Broun must have felt.

Of his fights between elections the one with Joe Brooks, an old all-American, was the drollest. They took off their dinner jackets, and after two punches, Broun was hors de combat. Dorothy Parker helped Broun to his feet. The gladiators redonned their dinner jackets, shook hands, and went their separate ways. But a little later Broun found out that he was wearing the jacket of Brooks. In one pocket he found an address book filled with names of girls and their telephone numbers. Brooks never got the book back.

Among the things that Broun did at that time, which surprise me even now, were starting George Bye as an agent and Paul Robeson as a singer. Robeson, it seems, played around with H 3rd, who was called "Woody" at home, and would sing old spirituals to the kid. Robeson, like Brooks, had been an old All-American. He had played in Eugene O'Neill's "The Emperor Jones," but it was Broun, it says here, who arranged for Robeson's debut at the Provincetown Playhouse as a singer. Broun's chauffeur, incidentally, was named Earl Wilson, but beyond that being the name of a present-day popular columnist, they were in no way related.

Change Here To Mealand

Though listed as fiction, Mealand's "The First Person" is about as lively an inside story of columnists of today as is likely to be written till a new bunch crops up. A former associate editor of Cosmo and story editor of Paramount, Mealand should have been called in to save "Stromboli." He uses a double-identity wienie in "The First Person" that certainly could have saved the Rossellinis.

Mealand's hero is a columnist named Luke Peters who has a wife, a mistress and a new secretary who looks like the dark mare of the race. Some lout has been going around the country using the columnist's name. He's got a gal in trouble. Peters sets out to catch the thief. This is the wienie of Mealand's story.

All of us have been caught on that double-identity gimmick at some time or other. I remember a dame writing to me regretting that each time she was out with me she got drunk or she would have invited me up. The next time, she assured me, it would not happen.

"Dear Mabel," I wrote her, "I must have been drunker than you. I don't remember this at all."

She must have compared handwritings. Anyway, I never heard of her or the phoney again.

Among the columnists in "The First Person" I was thrilled to find myself mentioned in the first 15—just behind Wilson but ahead of Crosby, Sullivan, Walker, Rose, Lolly, Hedda, Johnson, Kilgallen, Pearson, Pegler and Ickes.

Almost all the columns, Luke later told his secretary, had to do with politics, personalities or petty subjects of the day. They were strictly American and very proud of it. "But how good," he wanted to know, "was this boast of being American when it meant being brassy, ignorant, insensitive, mass-minded and arrogant?"

OBITUARIES

SIR HARRY LAUDER

Sir Harry Lauder, 79, world-famed Scottish comedian, died at his home in Lenarkshire, Scotland, Feb. 25, from arterio-thrombosis and a kidney ailment after a long illness. Comedian was near death last August but rallied and for weeks seemed greatly improved.

For more than half a century the stock-kilted comedian with tam and crooked walking stick was one of the most popular and high-salaried entertainers in show biz history. He had been knighted in 1919 in recognition of his tireless efforts in entertaining British troops during World War I.

Further details, encompassing Lauder's career by Joe Laurie, Jr., appear on Page Two.

PAUL MOSS

Paul Moss, 70, who conducted a cleanup campaign against improper shows while he was N. Y. Commissioner of Licenses in the administration of Mayor LaGuardia, died of a cerebral hemorrhage at the Medical Arts hospital, N. Y., Feb. 25. He had been striken on Thursday (23) in his office at the City Center of which he was managing director.

As Commissioner of Licenses Moss rang down the curtain on the old-fashioned type of burlesque show in New York. With the exception of this form of amusement, Moss took action that resulted in the closing of only two New York shows—"Wine, Women and Song" in 1942, and "Trio," in 1945.

Before Moss' regime, unaccompanied children were not permitted in motion-picture theatres. The practice was for them to wait outside until some adult came along and took them in. In 1936 the Commissioner had a law passed allowing them in, provided they sat in a separate section, with a matron in attendance.

After his retirement from the License Department on Jan. 31, 1946, he became managing director of the City Center, where he had been unsalaried assistant to the president since 1944, and took an important part in the presentation of its low-cost drama, ballet and symphonic offerings.

The son of Albert and Rose Schwartzwald Moss, Moss was reared in this city. As a youngster he was part of a vaudeville team known as Clark and Williams, blackface singers and dancers.

Many years later, in association with his brother, B. S. Moss, a pioneer in the film industry, he produced early five-reelers and afterward operated many vaudeville and picture theatres in N. Y.

He was associated with the Theatre Guild in its early years. With Warren Munsell of the Theatre Guild, he produced a play, "The Mongrel," starring Rudolph Schildkraut. Then, with the Neighborhood Playhouse, he was co-producer of "The Grand Street Follies."

With Marcus Heiman, later president of the League of New York Theatres, Moss produced "Subway Express," in which Edward Ellis and Dorothy Peterson starred. Subsequently, with Maurice Wertheim of the Theatre Guild, the partners produced Noel Coward's "This Was a Man," with Francine Larrimore, A. E. Matthews and Nigel Bruce and directed by Basil Dean.

Moss, who was not married, was one of a family of seven. The surviving brothers and sisters are B. S. Moss and Moses J. Moss of New York, Louis Moss of Beverly Hills, Calif., and Mrs. Etta Flatto and Mrs. Rae Trilling.

CHARLES E. KING

Charles E. King, 76, known in the music world as the dean of Hawaiian composers, authors and publishers, died in New York Feb. 25 after a heart attack. He had been living in N. Y. suburbs since the early '40s when he moved here from Honolulu.

King was born in Hawaii and was interested in music all his life. He taught it in the schools of the Islands and in later years wrote music and lyrics and published some of the best known Hawaiian tunes, such as "Song of the Islands," "Dreaming Aloha of You," "Beautiful Kanahana," "Serenade," etc. His ancestors were New Bedford whalers who were shipwrecked in the Hawaiian group and remained there. He was a godson of Queen Lil, Hawaiian tribal head who made the pact with U. S. President Grover Cleveland which turned the Islands over to U. S. protection.

Survived by widow.

FRANKLYN BAUR

Franklyn Bauer, 46, a tenor who sang in the "Ziegfeld Follies" and with the Revelers Quartet of the early days of radio, died at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 24.

Baur, who was born in Brooklyn, began his singing career as a tenor soloist at the Greenwood Baptist Church, Brooklyn, and later held the same position at the Park Avenue Baptist Church. He joined the singing group known as the Shannon Four, which was the predecessor of the Revelers. With the latter organization, which also included Wilfred Glenn, bass; Elliott Shaw, baritone; and Lewis James, second tenor, he made many radio network appearances in the 1920s.

Baur sang in the "Follies" of 1927 and 1928. The Firestone Tire Co. chose him as its original "Voice of Firestone" for a national radio program, and he sang in this capacity from 1929 to 1931.

Survived by a sister.

WM. A. CASTELLINI

William A. Castellini, 50, former publicist, liaison officer at Philco Radio & Television Corp., and director of public relations at the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, died Feb. 23 in Cincinnati.

A native of Cincinnati, Castellini first made contact with the Franklin Institute while arranging a Philco high-fidelity demonstration known as "The Voice of Radio," at the institute in the summer of 1935. Shortly after he was named a director at Franklin Institute, and set up its public relations department remaining here until 1940.

He returned to Cincinnati in that year to join the staff of Dinerman & Co. advertising agency. Wife and three children survive.

Edyth Walker, 80, former dramatic mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company from 1903 to 1906, and more recently a teacher of singing died in New York, Feb. 25.

After appearances at the Metropolitan in Italian and German operas, Miss Walker sang in Munich, Baireuth and Hamburg.

Born in Hopewell, N. Y., she taught school before starting her operatic career. She lived for a time at Scheveningen, Germany, and taught at the American Conservatory in Paris before returning to the U. S. in 1936.

CHARLES GAY

Charles Gay, 63, lion breeder, died Feb. 23 after a heart attack at his home in Newport Beach, Calif. His animal farm at El Monte, established in 1925, increased to 217 lions by 1942. It was closed then "for the duration of the war" and never reopened.

His farm, never a show place, was a breeding ground for lion cubs which were sold to circuses, zoos and motion picture companies. His champion was Numa, which appeared in more than 100 films and earned more than $80,000.

JOSEPH L. ALLER

Joseph L. Aller, 67, pioneer in film processing for motion pictures, died Feb. 19 in Hollywood. He moved to California in 1909 after functioning as laboratory superintendent for David Wark Griffith and opened the Standard Lab at the old Triangle Studio.

In later years he formed the Rothacker-Aller Co. which merged in 1928 with Consolidated Lab. He was vice-president of that organization when he retired in 1945.

ALBERT ELDRIDGE

Albert Eldridge, 64, songwriter and former pianist with name bands, was found dead in his St. Louis hotel room Feb. 22. Death appeared to have been due to natural causes.

Eldridge, in his younger days, was a soloist with Paul Whiteman and Isham Jones. He also played with the late Gene Rodemich at the New Grand Central theatre in St. Louis.

RAYMOND W. BEEBE

Raymond W. Beebe, 55, composer, died in Cleveland, Feb. 26. Beebe, who turned out such tunes as "Lovable Sue," was an assistant conductor to Maurice Spitalny, when latter batoned at Cleveland's Knickerbocker theatre during the silent pictures era. He later served as arranger for the Loew houses in Cleveland.

Wife survives.

ANDREW D. REID

Andrew D. Reid, 59, electrician at Paramount for 15 years and one of the pioneers of the industry, died Feb. 24 in Hollywood, following a heart attack.

He was chief electrician for David Wark Griffith and later was associated with Mack Sennett and other top producers in the early days of the film industry.

try to just entertain a few Scots, it wouldn't pay me. I am an actor and a singer. I'm not a roarer and I didn't come here to roar and I'm not going to roar. If I can't be heard it's because you don't listen. I won't be dictated to by people in the back of the hall that paid only 50c for their seats. I am now going to sing a little song and when I get to "Auld Lang Syne," I want you all to join me.' They all did and walked out satisfied."

It was in 1911 that Bill Morris booked Lauder at the Manhattan Opera House, N. Y., for two weeks (the first time anyone ever played there outside of an opera and ballet). He took an extra week in England thinking he could get back here in time for the opening. He arrived on a very foggy day, and the ship was held up in Quarantine while a jammed house was waiting for him. Bill Morris figured the best he could do after going through a lot of red tape would be to get Lauder at the Opera House not earlier than 10 p.m. He went all over Broadway and dug up acts to go to the Opera House to hold the stage until Lauder could show up. He went to Sharkey's saloon and met the heavyweight champ Bob Fitzsimmons. "Please go down there and do something; sing, dance, recite, do anything you can Bob to kill time." "Maybe you don't think I can recite?" asked Fitzsimmons. "I'll show you." He did for 20 minutes. He could fight very much better.

It was 12:45 a.m. when Lauder showed up. He received an ovation from an audience that hadn't moved since 8:15. Lauder's opening line was, "Ha ye na hame?" He worked for two hours straight to a smash hit.

Money's Worth

In 1912 he broke all records at the Casino theatre, N. Y., playing to $23,000 on the week. It was in 1913 he returned $3,000 to Bill Morris for the time he missed performances. "I want to be paid for work I do but don't want money for something I didn't do." (The difference between him and Gaby Deslys, who was not a Scot, when she was presented with a $5 cleaning bill for a dress she refused to pay it until the cleaner reduced the bill to $2). Lauder always insisted he get his $4,000 in three $1,000 bills, one $500 bill and the rest in small currency. When asked why so much currency, he said, "For ma piggy bank."

In 1914 the Palace, N. Y., which never would pay Lauder his salary, ran his singing picture (a pioneer pic where he was synchronized with phonograph recordings). They had three sheets in front of the theatre with Lauder's name in four-foot letters and in tiny print underneath "Singing Picture." The picture cost them $500 a week; Lauder would have cost $5,000. And while on the subject of singing pictures Lauder was a pioneer in all the new facets of show biz—moving pictures, singing pictures, radio and television.

It was in 1917 that Harry Lauder and his charming wife, Nancy, suffered their greatest sorrow. His very talented son, Capt. John Lauder, who was an accomplished musician and often accompanied his father on the piano, was killed in World War I. The son and father were inseparable and his death was a great blow to Harry. He was going to retire from the stage, but instead plunged into war work. All the stingy gags that Jack Lait made up about him just didn't add up now. He gave away thousands of dollars for all sorts of war charities. He recruited a band of Scotch pipers and drummers, and paid for their equipment and Highland uniforms. They traveled all over Britain recruiting—and again Lauder paid all the bills. Lauder went to the front lines and sang for the boys, day and night, for months and months, pouring oil of his humor and songs into the wounds of the lads in hospitals. He broke his no-work-Sundays rule for hundreds of charity shows. In 1917 he gave three performances a week for the Red Cross. It was 1919 when Harry Lauder was knighted. No one deserved it more.

In 1920 show biz history was made. William Morris placed a theatrical ad in the Christian Science Monitor for the Lauder show. It was the first break in that great paper for a theatrical ad. Their policy was not to take ads of shows because of murder or immoral topics in shows. The N. Y. Hippodrome was the second ad to follow the Lauder show.

In 1927 Sir Harry lost his Nancy, his helpmate and inspiration for many years. Her maiden name was Annie Vallance, but he always called her "Nance." They were one of the most affectionate couples in show business.

In 1928 he missed his first show in 25 years. It was at the Alhambra in Glasgow, playing out some old time contracts. He had a very bad cold.

$5,000 Per Song—One Hymn Cuffo

It was in 1929 when Sir Harry got on the radio. He received $15,000 (a money record) for three numbers. The sponsor was Enna Jettick Shoes. Sir Harry threw in a final hymn for free. He broke his no-work-Sunday rule record (outside of his war work) at CKY, Winnipeg, with a 46-station hookup. That same year, when he was announced to sing over KFL, Los Angeles, there were plenty of cancellations at the box-office at the theatre he was playing.

In 1930 on a spending spree he gave a party prior to his departure for Europe. He broke all Scottish precedent, 28 guests at the Mayflower hotel in N. Y. He presented a silver traveling clock to his dearest friend and manager, William Morris, and a diamond wrist watch to Mrs. Morris. He told the guests they could only stay two hours as the hotel would charge him any overtime. When the maitre d'hotel advised him that there would be no extra charge for the room, Sir Harry extended the invitation for his guests to stay as long as they liked. "I'd invite you all to the theatre but I'm not playing this week and I've spent so damn much money on this food I haven't any left for theatre tickets." This was the same Sir Harry Lauder who let himself be kidded (for business reasons) that he was vera vera stingy. This was the Lauder who worked for Bill Morris all these years without a contract. They had what the Scots call a "grasp o' the thumb contract," which we call in America a "handshake contract." The same "grasp o' the thumb" contract applied to William Morris, Jr., when his revered father went "Upstairs" and junior managed Sir Harry's last tour in America.

Who can ever forget his singing "Risin' Early in the Mornin'," "Saffest In the Family," "Parted On the Shore," "Wee Deoch and Doris," "Stop Your Ticklin' Jock" and "She's Ma Daisy." He had more imitators than Geo. M. Cohan and Charlie Chaplin. But you can't imitate genius.

Speaking to William Morris, Jr., the other day, I reminded him of a wish Sir Harry once made. He said, "All I ask when I die is for a tartan-draped hearse and a band of pipers in front playin' 'The Land of the Leal' and 'Will Ye No Come Back Again'." . . . Yes, Sir Harry, I hope the folks over there did this for you. But all of us here in America to whom you have given so many of your songs that hugged our hearts, we will hum as you pass by, "Auld Lang Syne."

January-February Biz Bears Out Disk Industry's 1950 Optimism

Expectation at the outset of this year that 1950 would witness a comeback into the profit column by the record industry has been borne out by the solid business racked up during January and February. Milton Rackmil, Decca prexy, said the industry has picked up markedly from the 1949 doldrums due to the stabilization of the rpm situation.

If March biz continues at the same clip as the previous two months, Rackmil stated that Decca would forge ahead of first-quarter earnings in 1949, an unusually good period for the disk company in light of general conditions. Decca's full 1949 financial statement, which is expected to be released sometime next week, will reveal the company in the unique position of being in the black for all four quarters of the year. Earnings for 1949 will be about equal to the preceding year.

Referring to the confusion stirred up by introduction of the 33⅓ and 45 rpm disks, Rackmil declared: "The industry now knows that if it could live through that mess, the record business is here to stay." He pointed out that the situation has stabilized to the point where now retailers could stock up on the various types of records without fear of being caught with obsolete inventories.

'RED SHOES' FILM HELD KEY TO BALLET UPBEAT

Pittsburgh, March 7.

When Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo played a day's stand last week at Syria Mosque to biggest business in several seasons, Donald Steinfirst, Post-Gazette music critic, asked Frederic Franklin, principal male dancer with the organization, to what he attributed the resurgence of interest in classical ballet.

Franklin answered without a minute's hesitation: "The picture 'Red Shoes'."

Dancer told Steinfirst that in all his days of trouping across the country, he's never seen anything like the trade for Ballet Russe this year. He said he's spoken to people in communities of all size inquiring why they had bought tickets to the Monte Carlo performances, and majority of them have told him it was because they had seen ballet the first time in "Red Shoes," and liked it.

William Beegle, running May Beegle Concert Bureau, which impresarioed the local engagement, backed up Franklin's opinion. He said mail orders had come from distant communities in area which never get live ballet, and surveys have shown that in all those towns where requests for seats have come from, "Red Shoes" had already been shown.

Cantor's Concert May Be Prelude to One-Man Show

Eddie Cantor's concert stand at Carnegie Hall, N. Y., March 21, will serve as a test for a possible appearance in the fall in a Broadway legit house in a one-man show.

Should stunt be successful, the William Morris Agency is expected to line up a Broadway theatre for a two-week run on regular eight-show-weekly basis.

Maurice Chevalier did a successful one-man stint in a legiter several seasons ago.

Benny Tosses Hat Into Arena Tours

Jack Benny is the latest headliner to display interest in the huge grosses that can be racked up on arena tours. He has been submitted to the Arena Managers Assn., which controls most of the major arenas, at $10,000 guarantee against 60% of the gate. However, AMA is averse to offering such guarantees and is willing to take the Benny show on a straight percentage arrangement. No pact has been set as yet.

Benny's deal is being patterned along the same lines on which Bob Hope is being sold. Hope during his tour this summer will be getting a minimum of $10,000 against 60%. On some dates where matinee and evening performances are to be held in the same spot, terms will be $10,000 for each

SCOTS PROTEST TO BBC ON LAUDER SONG 'CASTS

Glasgow, Feb. 28.

Radio listeners all over Scotland telephoned British Broadcasting Corp. and newspapers in protest after ~~two of Sir Harry~~ Lauder's best-known songs had been broadcast in "Palace of Varieties."

To include "Stop Your Ticklin', Jock" and "The End of the Road" in last night's (27) radio show while Scots the world over were mourning Lauder's passing the night before (26), was "shocking bad taste," said the complaints.

The songs were featured in a program of w.k. music-hall successes of yesteryear, with a wisecracking chairman introducing the different turns. Program was recorded earlier in the week. Listeners pointed out that, even with this taping, it would have been possible to do some cutting

All Scotland is in mourning for Lauder.

OFFBEAT THEMES THE BEST PAYOFF

"Gimmick pictures"—those that for one reason or another are off the beaten path—appear to be the dominant category of product that has been scoring at the b.o., a study of hits and flops of the past three months discloses. Otherwise the hit list is diffuse as to type as ever—and can be matched up by films of exactly the same type in the roster of boxoffice disappointments.

Picture execs, faced more vitally than at any time in film history with the problem of guessing right on the type of subject matter to be sent before the cameras, have been analyzing grosses extremely carefully in an endeavor to lay a finger on the style of film best calculated to stir interest at the b.o. The "gimmick picture"—as exemplified by the success of "Francis," "Pinky" and "All the King's Men"—is the only general category that appears worthy of emulating, and a hunt for scripts of this type is already on.

Otherwise, war pictures and comedies predominate on the list of boxoffice winners. Success of "Battleground" and "Iwo Jima" has already sent a number of other war films into production. Studios realize, however, that the market will absorb only a limited

Copa-B'chcomber Merger Stymied; 'Sneaking' in Fla.

Miami Beach, March 7.

It now appears the reported Copa City-Beachcomber merger is headed for legal entanglements which may stymie official taking-over of the setup by the newly formed Mid-Century Corp., headed by Ned (Beachcomber) Schuyler and Tom (Copa) Cassara on April 3, despite fact that all necessary papers have been signed. Murray Weinger, who built and headed up group which owned the Copa spot, insists he is very much in the picture, and that there is more to the taking-over than a matter of transferring the various forms of ownership. Understood he will be in for 25% on the new deal, if it goes through.

Attorneys for the Schuyler interests report that all documents calling for takeover on the April date are signed. Weinger claims that, though papers may have been signatured, he is very much in the picture and will remain so—adding that he is also "protecting the large group of employees who have been with me throughout." A good many of these employees bought stock in the original corporation which built the Norman

Start of TV Programming Trek West Seen; Fairbanks System Is Hypo

Television is packing up its luggage for its first mass N. Y. to L. A. move in the near future, with the Coast due to come in for a major share of top video program origination.

Key to the trek westward, which will duplicate that of both the film and radio industries in the early days of their development, was the decision of the Young & Rubicam ad agency this week to start filming the "Silver Theatre" TV show on a mass production basis on the Coast. Extremely well-satisfied with the experimental "Silver" show lensed via the new Jerry Fairbanks multi-camera system and aired as a regular part of the CBS series several weeks ago, Y&R plans to put the final 13 weeks of the series current cycle before the Fairbanks cameras next week. International Sterling is the sponsor.

N. Y. representatives of the Fairbanks organization, meanwhile, are talking with agency producers of two big full-hour dramatic programs to line up a similar move for them, as well as with a dozen or so producers of half-hour programs. Move will be gradual but is definitely in the works.

Among those considering the switch is CBS-TV's "Ford Theatre," produced by Kenyon & Eckhardt.

Y&R producer Frank Telford, who produced the first experimental "Silver" program via the Fairbanks system, leaves for the Coast Tuesday (14) to put the other 13 in the works. First of these will be aired in the east April 3.

Whether N. Y. or Hollywood would emerge as the TV program origination center has long been one of the major subjects for argument in the trade. Because of the film studios and the preference of some of the top radio stars for the California climate and swimming pools, it was thought the Coast

Laughtons Dickering For Nitery Dates

Charles Laughton and Elsa Lanchester (Mrs. Laughton) are dickering for nitery dates. Deal is currently on for Laughton to do a single at the Oval Room of the Copley Plaza, Boston, for a May date, depending on his completion of film commitments.

Miss Lanchester is set for a stand at the Wedgwood Room of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, N. Y., in October. She had been set for an engagement at the defunct Cafe Society Uptown, N. Y., several years ago, but date was cancelled by mutual consent.

CBS Preps Buy Of Coast Pix Studio

Hollywood, March 7.

CBS is preparing to buy a film studio for its television production, with five lots now up for consideration, including Warners' Sunset Boulevard plant, Samuel Goldwyn, Eagle Lion, Motion Picture Centre and Hal Roach. Howard Meighan, CBS veepee in Hollywood, admits studios have been eyed, saying, "We've quit looking around but haven't yet made up our minds which studio we'll buy." Owners of lots, it is understood, would be willing to sell.

James M. Seward, top CBS executive, arrived Sunday (5) from N. Y. He is known as the network's "cleanup man" and his arrival here hard on heels of the departure for the east of Frank Stanton, who looked at studios with Meighan, inspires trade belief some deal is imminent. Meighan recently said CBS is looking ahead 10 years and some studios gandered have been ruled out as

CLEVE. D.A. SEES BARS AS BOOKIE JOINTS VIA TV

Cleveland, March 7.

A television screen has in it the possibilities of making any bar a bookie joint, according to U. S. District Attorney Don Miller, who returned from a Washington district attorneys' confab on crime.

He declared he was told that television coverage is complete at Roosevelt Raceway, where the Grand Circuit Trotting Races are held, and that "television screens show frequent views of the pari-mutuel odds before the race, and the track odds are shown after the race is run. A bar with a TV set," he added, "can take bets and pay off immediately after each race, at trackside odds."

B'WAY STARTS LOSING ITS BROWNOUT BLUES

Lifting of the brownout Monday (6) shattered an adverse triple-parlay that had Broadway business in the doldrums for the past three weeks. The two-week dimout, which combined with severe cold weather and the Lent season to depress the b.o. to the lowest point in years, was ended following settlement of the coal strike over the weekend.

First reaction to the lighting up of the Main Stem's marquees and spectaculars was a slight upturn in theatre business. Influx of normal crowds into the midtown area, however, was expected to be felt later this week following publicizing of the brownout cancellation. The onset of warmer weather was another factor hypoing activity on Broadway.

Ach, Wien! Waltzes Are for A.K.'s Now; Foxtrots, Sambas Rule Orch Roost

By JOSEF ISRAELS, II

Vienna, Feb. 21.

Fasching (Mardi Gras) season draws to a close with a sock b.o., registering close to 2,000,000 admissions to some 2,000 public and semi-public balls held in Vienna. To foreign observers the affairs have been plenty luxurious and gay. What they've marked is the decline of the waltz. Here, in the city of Johann Strauss, the dance floors emptied by half this year when the orchs went into drei viertel takt. The Viennese like foxtrots, sambas, rumbas and polkas, in that order. The stately waltz is for a.k.'s and tourists. That means loss of one of the town's real spectacles, the sight of 1,000 couples in evening dress waltzing in perfect time and rotation around a big ballroom as if directed by Cecil B. de Mille or Willi Forst.

Oldtimers report that this year's Fasching outdid even the much remembered times of the monarchy for sheer volume, fun and expense. The affairs ranged from medium-size club balls for 100 or so people to the giant Gschnasfest and Artists Ball which run for three and two nights respectively. Gschnasfest this year drew the biggest attendance of all Vienna parties. Held in all rooms of the Kunstlerhaus, it clocked crowds of 3,000 to 4,000 on each of three Saturdays. Parties run from 9 p.m. till unconscious and have been known to reach the breaking-up stage the next afternoon.

Paris, March 7.

The new switch on Paris night clubs is that they are making easier coin during tea dancing than at night when champagne buckets are on the tables. Most clubs are depending on the afternoon revelers to help them pay expenses in the boites. Reason for large grosses before dark is tea comes in pots at 600 francs ($1.75) a tiny kettle. Except for a bag of Lipton's this is all clear profit.

Baccara, L'Aiglon, Club des Champs Elysees and Claridge have decided that tea dancing is the difference between black and red ink. At the moment the Club des Champs Elysees is only open in the afternoon.

Most clubs are griping because lack of franc-spending patrons and some may fold before tourist season starts. One new one will open in April when Brick Top, who ran a string of successful and snooty boites before the war, takes over another club in Montmartre.

Crosby Enters British Golf Championship

St. Andrews, March 7.

Bing Crosby is filing an entry in the British Amateur Golf Championship, to be played on this famous Scottish course from May 22.

Star is entering from the Bel Air Country Club of Los Angeles, where he's rated as a three-handicap golfer.

More War Pix?

Comparative success of war pictures recently continues to sharpen the trend toward them on production schedules. Latest indication was registration with the Motion Picture Assn. of America title bureau last week of "Operation Java Sea" and "Torpedoes Away."

Both claims were staked out by RKO.

BART MARSHALL ALSO GETTING THAT TV YEN

Having just completed a picture on the Mediterranean isle of Majorca, Herbert Marshall arrived in New York last week and is now "belatedly" getting into television. Actor is auditioning for the new medium in a program based upon one of his old radio shows.

Majorca pic, Marshall said, was turned out by Alsa Films of Paris and deals with trafficking in drugs. Titled "Black Jack," the film was directed by Julien Duvivier, and other cast toppers include George Sanders, Agnes Moorhead and Patricia Roc.

Coal Strike Induces Special Talent Clause

The flurry of act cancellations, brought on by the recent coal strike, has prompted the inclusion of a special strike clause in some newly-made booking contracts. Though most of the talent buyers who asked out during the strike were treated amicably by the booking agencies, a number of them aren't taking any chances on the same thing happening again.

According to a number of N. Y. bookers, news of the strike nearing an end Saturday (4) brought immediate requests for talent, with a fair percentage of buyers in town Monday (6), the day after the strike's official end. The weekend news was also responsible for a pickup in business in most situations.

Alert Exhibs to Phoney Video 'Talent' Agencies

In the wake of the police drive in Hollywood against seven television talent agencies as "rackets," Gael Sullivan, Theatre Owners of America's exec director, has alerted exhibs throughout the country to be on the lookout for similar activities in their home territories. Special bulletin to TOAers requests theatre men to advise Art Arthur, exec secretary of the Motion Picture Industry Council on the Coast, if they spot any illegal agencies.

"If exhibitors have any reason to be suspicious of people showing up in their towns and cities and claiming Hollywood identities, they need only get in touch with Arthur for accurate identification, and any available information on their credit standing," Sullivan said. Thorough probing of talent schools, dancing schools and contests for screen tests should be made before exhib participation, TOAer added.

Driven from the Coast, these "shady promoters" will undoubtedly turn up elsewhere to renew their trade, Sullivan said.

Taxes Deferred On Frozen Coin

Washington, March 7.

Extending indefinitely a wartime regulation, the Bureau of Internal Revenue ruled the past weekend that American business firms with earnings frozen in foreign countries need not pay income taxes on those earnings until they are released. This means until dollars are released for remission to the U. S. or unless the foreign earnings are spent abroad.

Biggest beneficiary of the ruling is expected to be the American motion picture industry, with millions tied up in countries all over the globe. Some companies have actually not reported all their foreign earnings in their tax statements because it was informally decided some time ago that the new ruling would be forthcoming. The drive to renew the wartime regulation got under way about a year ago, but moved slowly through the mills of the Treasury Dept. and Bureau of Internal Revenue. At one time it got a hypo from the California congressmen, who went to bat for the industry.

Just how much American money is frozen is uncertain, but Eric Johnston, prez of Motion Picture Assn. of America, stated early in January that the iced coin in Britain would be down to $6,000,000 by June. At one time Hollywood had about $50,000,000 of its profits in foreign countries tied up because of the dollar shortage.

CANADA LEE'S KORDA PIC?

Canada Lee flew to London over the weekend for confabs with Sir Alexander and Zoltan Korda on possibility of his playing a role in "Cry the Beloved Country," which Zoltan will produce under Sir Alexander's banner. The actor was one of a number of Negro players of whom Zoltan shot tests in New York a couple weeks ago.

Lee will return to the U. S. this week and, if conversations work out satisfactorily, proceed to South Africa with several other American actors later this month to begin shooting on the film adaptation of the Alan Paton book.

H'wood Comes to Haiti

Port au Prince, March 7.

Among former filmites here in Haiti are Richard Barthelmess, Rex Ingram, who directed Rudolf Valentino in "The Four Horsemen," and Ramon Novarro in "Ben-Hur"; and Andre Roosevelt, of the Oyster Bay Roosevelts, who produced the big-grossing "Goona Goona." Roosevelt is now managing director of the swank new Hotel Ibo Lele.

Barthelmess and his wife are island-hopping in the West Indies. Ingram, in delicate health and now a Moslem in religious faith, says the only thing that would tempt him out of retiremen would be a script to suit James Mason. He names the British star as "the greatest artist of his time."

'Samson' Paces Nation for February, 'Battleground' 2d, '12 O'Clock' 3d

Feb. Golden Dozen

1. "Samson-Delilah" (Par).
2. "Battleground" (M-G).
3. "12 O'Clock High" (20th).
4. "Sands Iwo Jima" (Rep).
5. "The Outlaw" (RKO).
6. "All King's Men" (Col).
7. "Foolish Heart" (RKO).
8. "Stromboli" (RKO).
9. "Willie Home" (20th).
10. "Montana" (WB).
11. "Mrs. Mike" (UA).
12. "Malaya" (M-G).

"Samson and Delilah" (Par), which loomed as a potentially mighty boxoffice picture late in January, roared ahead to become national winner last month, according to reports from VARIETY correspondents in 24 representative key cities. The Cecil B. DeMille opus landed in first place every week during the month, grossing an estimated $1,345,000 for the month. It was closely pressed by "Sands of Iwo Jima" (Rep) the first week in February but after that drew away from the field. "Samson" was third in January.

"Battleground" (M-G), winner of seventh place in January, came through strongly last month to take second spot by a handy margin. Picture racked up nearly $920,000, finishing second twice and taking third money as many times. "12 O'Clock High" (20th) captured third position.

"Iwo Jima," champ in January, showed enough sustained strength to wind up fourth despite being mainly on holdover, since playing extensively in January. "The Outlaw" (RKO) landed fifth slot after being fourth in January.

"All King's Men" (Col) moved up from 11th place of the preceding month to sixth as the picture obtained a lot of additional bookings.

"Foolish Heart" (RKO) finished seventh while "Stromboli" (RKO) was eighth, first-week blanket unveiling enabling the Bergman film to cop second place that week.

"When Willie Comes Marching Home" (20th), although a bit spotty on initial playdates, displayed sufficient draw later to take ninth money.

"Montana" (WB) was 10th best; "Mrs. Mike" (UA), 11th, and "Malaya" (M-G) rounded out the Golden Dozen.

Runner-up films were "Eiffel Tower" (RKO), "Chain Lightning" (WB), "Ambush" (M-G) and "Red Shoes" (EL), in that order.

"Cinderella" (RKO) and "Francis" (U) shape up as two of the strongest new entries. They ran almost a dead heat for second-place coin the final week of the month, both inidcating they will be heard from plenty. Aside from its ability to be leader in many keys, opening-week, tipoff on "Francis" is the fact that it is the next picture to play the N. Y. Paramount. The Walt Disney "Cinderella" is fooling plenty of exhibitors by drawing big night business.

Although disappointing in N. Y., where caught by the downbeat, "Key to City" (M-G) started doing nicely the final week of the month around the country. Clark Gable starrer finished fourth that session. Another new film, "Three Came Home" (20th) opened big at the N. Y. Astor, its initial playdate.

"Stage Fright" (WB), which drew strong reviews in N. Y., hints future promise at N. Y. Music Hall opening week. "Capt. China" (Par), another newcomer, failed to land among the toppers last month. "Third Man" (SRO), racking up nice grosses, indicates solid future possibilities once it gets additional dates.

"Dear Wife" (Par), also new last month, managed to finish seventh one week and become a runner up another stanza. "Borderline" (U) landed in eighth slot one week, being runnerup two other sessions. "Hasty Heart" (WB) proved disappointing boxoffice-wise despite

THEATRE USED TO HOLD OVERFLOW OF TRIAL

Minneapolis, March 7.

With overflow crowds attracted to the trial of Laura Miller, accused of murdering her married sweetheart, at Glencoe, Minn., near here, Charles Novak, owner of the Oriel, film theatre, across the street, with the court's approval had microphones set up in the courtroom to carry the proceedings to his showhouse. The testimony went out in the theatre through microphones over the p.a. system.

Novak advertised "Hear the Trial at the Oriel Across the Street—Free." The theatre was filled throughout the trial, and Novak gained considerable publicity, not only in his home town, but also here. Local papers showed pictures of people reading the signs and also of the crowds in the showhouse.

Straus, at 80, Is Busy On Film, Stage Chores

Paris, March 7.

Oscar Straus, who turned 80 yesterday (Mon.), is still active despite his years. The Viennese-born composer, now an American citizen, expects to leave March 18 for Munich where his newest operetta, "Her First Waltz," is slated to open at the State theatre March 24.

Aside from the operetta, Straus is busy working on a film which Sacha Gordine is producing here under Max Ophuls' direction. Picture has a Viennese origin and is built around several separate sequences on the order of Somerset Maugham's "Quartet."

Gordine project, titled "La Ronde," stars Anton Walbrook, and other cast toppers include Simone Simon, Danielle Darrieux, Isa Miranda and Fernand Gravet. Shooting schedule calls for completion by April 1. Straus, who is composing the film's score, returns to the U. S. late this spring.

British Pic Producer Refused Visa as Red

Washington, March 7.

Iver Montagu, British film producer, is included in the delegation of 12 Europeans whom the U. S. State Department has just refused visas to visit this country. They were to come here representing the World Congress of Partisans of Peace, described by the State Department as "the leading overall Communist-front organization in the world."

Montagu was listed by the State Department as a "British film producer, director and scenarist, and active in many phases of motion picture production. He has been a Communist Party member since 1932 and is a member of the Daily Worker editorial staff."

Among others in the group turned down were painter Pablo Picasso, and Rev. Hewlett Johnson, known as the Red Dean of Canterbury.

'Skipper' as French Pic

London, March 7.

"Skipper Next to God," by Jan de Hartog, which was tried out at the Embassy theatre in 1945, has been acquired by J. Levi, French film producer, to be made into film in France.

Play ran on Broadway for some months in 1948, with John Garfield starred.

Bob Hope Chairmans National Palsy Drive

Bob Hope will chairman the first nationwide cerebral palsy campaign, being conducted under the auspices of the United Cerebral Palsy Associations, headed by Leonard H. Goldenson, United Paramount Theatres prexy. Hope will hit every medium of communication in pitching for the campaign, which begins in May. Newsreels of the comedian's acceptance of the chairmanship Monday (6) will be shown on both theatre and television screens.

Functions of the drive are to raise $5,000,000 the first year, present the public with facts about the disease and further scientific study of cerebral palsy. Paramount has turned out a three-and-one-half minute Alan Ladd short trailerizing the subject.

Cowdin-Prutzman May Bid Against Fox-Meyers-Work for RKO Theatres

J. Cheever Cowdin, erstwhile board chairman of Universal, and Charles D. Prutzman, U's former veepee and general counsel, are currently on the prowl for the RKO circuit. Cowdin and Prutzman are reliably reported trying to piece together a Wall street syndicate with enough coin to swing a deal for the controlling stock interest of Howard Hughes, production chief and dominant stockholder of RKO.

According to one report, Cowdin has fixed his sights at offering Hughes $8 per share for the latter's interest. Since Hughes holds close to 1,000,000 shares of RKO stock, Cowdin must raise in the neighborhood of $8,000,000.

It is likely that Hughes would accept an offer in this amount since it represents a big boost over prices heretofore proffered. Proposal of Matty Fox-Stanley Meyers-Cliff Work combine last year was $6 per share. That deal fell through after coming close to the inking stage.

Hughes paid $10 per share when he bought out the Atlas Corp. control to the integrated company. Circuit figured to carry a much higher price than the picture company since it has been a consistent earner. Net take before taxes came to $5,500,000 in 1949 while the studio ended in the red.

Cowdin continues with U in an advisory capacity after resigning late last year.

Korda Sending Over Powell & Pressburger To Testify vs. Selznick

British producer-director team of Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger cross the Atlantic this month in response to an s.o.s. from Sir Alexander Korda. Duo along with Korda will testify before former Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson on hearings slated over the distribution battle being waged between the British film producer and David O. Selznick. Korda plans a return to the U. S. the week after next to take up the cudgels over "Gone to Earth" and "The Third Man."

Pressburger and Powell both wrote the script and directed-produced "Earth." Their testimony on the moot point of whether the film follows the story line laid down in a distribution pact between D.O.S. and Korda is apropos to the tiff. Selznick is also marshalling his witnesses.

Patterson begins getting down to cases tomorrow (Thurs.) behind closed doors in his New York law office. One hearing was held last week but it was merely to set up the preliminary tactics of how to handle the dispute. Patterson was named as special master recently by the N. Y. federal court after the feudists failed to agree on an industryite as arbitrator.

One significant thing about Patterson being named as special master instead of arbitrator under

Sam Goldwyn, Jr., Joins Guess-Who as Producer

Samuel Goldwyn, Jr., a producer and writer for the past four years, today (Wed.) joins Samuel Goldwyn Productions, Inc., as a producer. His first project is "No Time Like the Present." It goes before the cameras this summer in Italy, Germany and Hollywood.

Young Goldwyn broke in as an associate producer for the Rank organization in England. He was there two years. In 1949 he joined Universal-International in a similar capacity. "No Time" is based upon Goldwyn, Jr.'s, original idea. He's handling scripting himself in association with Denver Post scribe Blaine Littell.

Neat Trick

Hakim Bros. have apparently hit on a new angle for capitalizing on Broadway stage successes without the necessity of buying screen rights. They have registered with the Motion Picture Assn. of America title bureau within the past few weeks "The Turn of the Screw" and "The Cherry Orchard."

"Screw" is the novel by Henry James from which William Archibald adapted the current legit success, "The Innocents." "Cherry Orchard" is the Chekhov play on which Joshua Logan has based "The Wisteria Tree," Helen Hayes-starrer which is due in New York soon.

Johnston-Arnall Ready 'Surprise' British Accord?

There would be no surprise in informed industry circles if the "exploratory talks" on which Eric Johnston and Ellis Arnall will shortly embark in England resulted in consummation of an agreement on renewal of the Anglo-U. S. films pact.

Although the word "exploratory" continues to be used in referring to their London visit, both the Motion Picture Assn. of America prexy and the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers topper will be prepared to work out a deal. It undoubtedly would require, however, approval of their constituent bodies in the U. S. before final okay.

It is understood that Arnall may be accompanied by James A. Mulvey, prez of Samuel Goldwyn Productions, who repped SIMPP when the original pact with Harold Wilson, president of the British Board of Trade, was worked out in March, 1948. Johnston is expected to have with him John G. McCarthy, MPAA's international division chief, and will have the services of Fayette W. Allport, the Association's rep in London.

Reference to the talks as "exploratory" is understood for the purpose of putting the American team in an improved bargaining position. Under the circumstances, this method of handling the negotiations is thought better than sending over the special MPAA bargaining committee, consisting of Johnston, Nicholas M. Schenck, Barney

British Censors Again Warn H'wood on Violence

London, March 7.

For the second time within a few months the British Board of Film Censors has warned Hollywood and British producers that there must be a stop on films displaying violence, cruelty and sadism. This is the expected sequel to the new wave of violent crime which has been sweeping England. Inevitably motion pictures have been blamed for influencing the gangster type of criminal.

The Board of Film Censors say they mean business. Secretary of the BBFC, A. T. L. Watkins, explained that they had already told producers that scenes of torture, beatings and cruelty must be cut out and now they felt they had had enough of screen brutality.

Dr. Clifford Allen, noted Harley Street psychiatrist, in a letter to the British Medical Journal, contends that the prevailing diet of sadism on the films is causing young people to grow up with a

MUST MAKE IT UP, FREEMAN WARNS

Hollywood, March 7.

Pressing need for an early revamping of production-distribution methods is sounded by Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount studio exec, who sees a $50,000,000 hole between the cost of production and the amount of money being returned from the domestic market. In a speech before the American Society of Cinematographers Monday (6) night, Freeman said only 12 pix out of a total of 146 averaging $750,000 last year actually earned back more than the cost of production.

Citing facts and figures to ring the tocsin for reform, Freeman asserted the total revenue collected by major studios in 1949 dropped to the $400,000,000 level against total revenue of $525,000,000 in 1947. "The cost of producing pictures here last year will exceed $250,000,000," he said. "In order to break even these pictures will have to gross $450,000,000. The difference is not being made up at the moment."

In noting the startling fact that only 12 pix broke the profit ice, Freeman outlined the following breakdown. Of the 146 pix, 29 grossed only 50% of their cost. Another 59 grossed only up to 75% of their nut; 33 up to 90%; 13 up to 100%; six hit between 100% and

Bob Hope's $40,000 Net Per at N.Y. Par

Bob Hope's current date at the Paramount, N. Y., will net him around $40,000 for each of the two weeks. That's believed to be the top sum ever earned by an actor on Broadway.

Hope's deal calls for him to receive 50% of the Par's gross take with a guarantee of $100,000 for the two-week stand. Otherwise expressed, it calls for a $50,000 weekly guarantee with an even split on the gross over $200,000 for the two weeks.

Out of that the comic has to pay for the show, on which he has a minimum weekly nut of $18,500, plus transportation, overtime and some other expenses. He is giving Jane Russell $10,000 weekly, Les

Stop Finding Reasons Why They're Not Attending Pix; Start Action To Get 'Em Coming: Bob Weitman's Ideas

Need for the film industry to "set off its own atomic bomb" in the entertainment world in order to rekindle public interest in theatregoing was stressed this week by Robert M. Weitman, United Paramount Theatres v.p. He's plugging as the first step to fire up enthusiasm a series of Hollywood star caravans, similar to those which toured the country for charitable purposes and bond-selling during the war.

Stirred by VARIETY's editorial of last week, "There's Nothing to Fear but Fear Itself," which discussed industry attitudes on television competition, Weitman is hot for a huge and dramatic nationwide crusade to create talk and interest in films. This must be supplemented by live action on the part of showmen in local areas, he declares. He aims to light the way, he asserted, in United Paramount's houses.

"There are too many polls and too much analyses on why people aren't going to pictures any more," the managing director of Paramount's Broadway flagship declared. "We've got to turn the em-

Goldman Calls Off Settlement, To Press WB Suit

Philadelphia, March 7.

William A. Goldman, Philly circuit operator, is calling off all settlement negotiations on his $8,400,000 triple-damage suit against the Warner Bros. circuit and the eight majors. Goldman said this week he will notify the film companies within the next few days that he intends to go to trial at the earliest opportunity. Case is scheduled to go to bat March 27 in the Federal district court here.

While Goldman would not confirm nor deny it, a tentative settlement would have resulted in the acquisition of seven or eight Warner nabe houses in Philly by the local operator. Under the deal which would have ended all anti-trust litigation by Goldman, he was to purchase these houses at a reduced price from Warners. By so

National Boxoffice Survey

Coal Peace Cheers Keys; 'Cinderella' Cops First Place, 'Samson' Second, '12 O'Clock' Third

Business in key cities this session continues sluggish, but end of coal strike and more moderate weather in numerous keys is beginning to be reflected in a smart pickup in boxoffice takings. Return of miners to pits meant end of brownout in N. Y. and revived interest in theatres in other keys.

"Cinderella" (RKO), which was pushing up near top last week, soared to No. 1 position with trade sock to terrific on most dates. Walt Disney opus is surprising by its sturdy night trade. Second place is being taken by "Samson and Delilah" (Par), after being in top groove for five successive weeks. Fact that it is extended-run in nearly all situations this round and being pared somewhat by the offish tone in some keys is hurting. Third coin goes to "12 O'Clock High" (20th), up from seventh a week ago.

"Francis" (U) is capturing fourth place although being launched in only one new key this week. 'Young Man With Horn" (WB) will finish in fifth position, being nice to robust in a majority of dates. "Key to City" (M-G) is taking sixth spot while "The Outlaw" (RKO) will be seventh.

"Willie Comes Home" (20th) and "Dear Wife" (Par) round out the Big Nine list in that sequence.

Runer-up films, in order of strength, are "Third Man" (SRO), "Sands Iwo Jima" (Rep), "Malaya" (M-G), "Chain Lightning" (WB) and "Red Shoes" (EL).

"Johnny Holiday" (UA), given terrific campaign in Indianapolis, is making a socko showing on tee-off there. "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th), another newcomer, is spotty, being nice in two cities but not so promising in three others. "Paid in Full" (Par) is rated neat in Philly but only okay in Buffalo.

"Great Rupert" (EL) shapes smart in St. Louis. "Love Happy" (UA), which has been out on test dates previously, looks big in Philly, "Nancy Goes to Rio" (M-G), with vaude, is sturdy in Washington.

"All King's Men" (Col) looms strong in Louisville and fine in Wash. "Sundowners" (EL), light in Omaha, is doing okay in Boston.

"Pinky" (20th) shapes great in St. Louis. "Woman in Hiding" (U) is oke in Pittsburgh. "Heiress" (Par) looks solid in Chi.

"Fallen Idol" (SRO), fair in Detroit, continues nice in N. Y. "Capt. China" (Par), which soared to new high at N. Y. Par with Bob Hope and his show onstage, is only light in Philly.

Stanley Kramer Paying Thru the Nose to Clear All Rights to 'Cyrano'?

Last hurdle to production of "Cyrano de Bergerac" was cleared by Stanley Kramer in New York last week with the purchase of the Brian Hooker translation of the Edmond Rostand classic. Kramer contracted to pay $40,000 in cash and deferments to Walter Hampden and Hooker's widow for the screen rights.

20th-Fox Chi Conclave Geared To 'Guide Showmen to Better Business'

Chicago, March 7.

Twentieth-Fox's exhibitor showmanship meeting kicks off at the Drake hotel here today (Wed.), with more than 300 delegates from all parts of the country sitting down with 20th execs in an effort to line up a plan of action to draw more people to the nation's film boxoffices. Chief item on the agenda of the two-day conclave is the presentation by 20th of a plan for more aggressive film merchandising, embodied in a "Showman's Guide to Better Business."

Company toppers, who arrived here today (Tues.) to set up the meet, declined to divulge the exact nature of the plan before the opening session tomorrow. It is believed to involve general recommendations to exhibs for more exploitation and ballyhoo on each picture they play. Twentieth execs will underscore the steadily-increasing quality of most product emanating from Hollywood and emphasize that special merchandising is needed to regain the audience which has apparently lost the film-going habit. Meet is to be chairmanned by 20th prez Spyros P. Skouras.

Stress will also be laid on the so-called "found" audience, first defined by N. Y. Times film critic Bosley Crowther at 20th's recent showmanship meet for theatre ad-publicity execs in N. Y. Crowther's thesis is that the success of art pictures proves more filmgoers are readily available for more adult pictures. Since most of these patrons are not regular customers they thus will represent a "found" audience if the industry takes the right steps to corral them.

Twentieth has arranged for the fullest possible variance in points of view among the various guest speakers. Thus Samuel Pinanski, Theatre Owners of America prez, and National Allied prexy Trueman Rembusch will be among the guest speakers, along with Motion Picture Assn. of America prez Eric Johnston. In addition to Skouras, 20th veepees Al Lichtman, Andy W. Smith, Jr., and Charles Einfeld will also address the group. Mitchell Wolfson of the Dometco circuit will serve as moderator of the sessions.

Twentieth division and branch managers gathered here today for a short sales meet to discuss the company's forthcoming product, preliminary to the showmanship meet. They too will take part in the two-day conclave.

INDIE BUDGETS DOWN, SEZ BANKER GIANNINI

Hollywood, March 7.

Independent film producers are working on shorter budgets, about 15% less than those of last year, according to Bernard Giannini, veepee in charge of motion picture financing at the Bank of America. This means, he said, that the bank will back a greater number of indie projects this year.

The average indie budget today, Giannini declared, is somewhere between $500,000 and $700,000, a healthy sign because the producers are cutting expenses to coincide with the general reduction in boxoffice returns.

Sachson's Sales Repping

Arthur Sachson, former general salesmanager for Samuel Goldwyn Productions, has been named sales rep for Al Rogell. The indie producer is now completing the editing of his first film for United Artists release, "The Admiral Was a Lady." It stars Wanda Hendrix.

Sachson, who was assistant general salesmanager for Warner Bros. for many years prior to joining Goldwyn, is due in New York from the Coast tomorrow (Thursday). He has been there about three weeks confabbing with various indie filmmakers. He plans opening an office in New York to rep a group of them.

Darryl F. Zanuck trained Monday (6) for two-week vacation at Sun Valley. He was accompanied by his wife.

He returns to studio March 21.

Wald Will Make Lardner 'Haircut'

Hollywood, March 7.

Warners is dusting off the Ring Lardner yarn, "Haircut," several years on the shelf, for early summer production by Jerry Wald.

Story deals with a smalltown gal whose reputation is blighted by barbershop gossip.

WB Plans to Roll 20 Pix in 4 Mos.

Hollywood, March 7.

In the face of recurrent reports of a mass layoff at the Warner Bros. studios, WB exec veepee Jack L. Warner announced yesterday (Tues.) that the company, with four major productions now before the cameras, plans to roll some 20 more within the next four months.

Schedule for spring and early summer, Warner said, is designed to keep production "on an even keel." He emphasized that WB plans "no slackening in our efforts to maintain a steady pace in the production of Warner pictures." Company will do "all in its power," he added, "to stabilize both production and employment."

Because of slackening grosses both at home and in foreign markets, Warners last week was reported to have ordered axing 50% of its total studio personnel. These reports followed hefty cuts in the Paramount studio payroll. Warner veepee, however, scoffed at the 50% rumors, claiming the "actual reduction will be 5%," which, he said, reflects the company's intention of maintaining the necessary number commensurate with production activity." Warner added:

"Employment in this studio, as in every other, follows the production seasons. There are times of more and times of less active production in the motion picture in-

B'NAI B'RITH HONORS CHARLES SKOURAS

Hollywood, March 7.

"We have heard in song and story about what might happen when Greek meets Greek, and now we learn what happens when Jew meets Greek. We are honoring him for his fine qualities of citizenship and humanity—for all of those things which have made him a great American." Those words, spoken by Mayor Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, thematically sum up a Beverly Hills B'nai B'rith dinner Saturday (4) night in tribute to Charles P. Skouras as "the man of the year." Dinner also raised $30,000 for charity.

Black tie, $15-a-plate dinner drew over 1,000 to Ambassador hotel, with show featuring George Jessel, Phil Silvers, Danny Kaye, Andrews Sisters, Mario Lanza, Billy Daniels, Patti Moore and Ben Lessy and Wiere Bros.

Skouras was given plaque by organization's new president, William H. Kopp; Sid Rogell, outgoing prexy, and Mrs. George Taussig, head of Women's Auxiliary. Plaque was symbol of the sacred Torah and cited Skouras for his "extraordinary achievements in promoting the basic principles of B'nai B'rith: benevolence, brotherly love and harmony."

Ned Depinet and Henry Ginsberg also spoke. Skouras introduced his wife, two daughters, son and brothers George and Spyros.

Jessel summed up the evening with: "If there were more Americans like Charlie Skouras we wouldn't need the H-bomb. We could do it with goodwill and popcorn."

Cobb Quits 20th

Hollywood, March 7.

Lee Cobb obtained a release from his 20th-Fox contract, which had three years to run.

Thesp traded the pact for an option on one picture, to be produced this year.

5-FILM PROGRAM FOR NEW FIDELITY PICTURES

Hollywood, March 7.

Taking name of Fidelity Pictures, Chester Erskine Productions and Fidelity Pictures have been merged into an independent producing setup, with a five-film program being prepared for this year.

Group is financed through Bank of America and Joseph Justman interests. A. Pam Blumenthal is chairman of board and treasurer; Howard Welsch, president; Erskine, exec veepee. Greg Bautzer and Lew Wasserman (MCA) handled the deal.

Deal was signed Monday (6) for UI to distribute first two pix Fidelity makes.

Films on '50 schedule include "Man on the Run," Ann Sheridan-Dennis O'Keefe co-starrer, with Norman Foster directing, to roll March 30 at Motion Picture Center; "Illegal Bride," Ginger Rogers starrer, rolling May 15; "Life of Helen Morgan," Paulette Goddard starrer," "My Wife, the Celebrity," original screenplay by Erskine, and "The Gentleman from Chicago."

Plenty Rooters (Financial) For 'Jackie Robinson'

William J. Heineman, Eagle Lion's distribution veepee, has hit on a fancy formula to win friends and influence people for "The Jackie Robinson Story," film biog of the Negro baseball player that Heineman is producing for EL distribution. Heineman has taken in some 35 angels on the pic, most of whom are either employed by EL or will work with the pic once it goes to the theatres. These backers have posted the film's end money in return for a 40% slice in the profits.

Included are branch and district managers, contract dept. employees, officers of the company and the Monroe Greenthal agency which handles the EL account. Also in on the pic is Jay Emanuel, circuit op and publisher.

Heineman takes 25% of the profits as the film's producer. In his first film venture, sales chief has also gone on the completion bond. Robinson, who plays himself in the film, gets 10% of the profits besides the right to name his charity for another 5%. Lansing Corp., financial syndicate headed by Robert R. Young, which has backed other EL projects, has posted first money. Young is controlling stockholder of Pathe Industries, EL's parent org.

Atty. Kramer Active Again in DOS Affairs

Milton Kramer, who resigned about a year ago as board chairman and general counsel of Selznick Releasing Organization, has begun to resume an active interest in the affairs of the company. Interest is entirely in legal matters, however, and it is believed that Kramer will not again accept an executive post with SRO or any of the other David O. Selznick affiliates.

Kamer, who went to England in December in connection with Selznick's battle with Sir Alexander Korda, returned to London by air last Thursday (2). Trip is said to have no connection with the Korda matter, but to sew up the legal papers on a production deal DOS is planning in England. Kramer is expected to be abroad a week or two.

Selznick, who is in New York, leaves March 18 for Puerto Rico, where he'll vacation with his sons. Selznick exec Daniel T. O'Shea is in New York confabbing with him on a number of points, but particularly in regard to the Korda arbitration.

Gary Cooper's Next

Hollywood, March 7.

Gary Cooper's next starrer will be Warners' "Dallas." Jack Warner also has assigned two femme leads, Jane Wyman for "Ethan Frome," and Virginia Mayo opposite James Cagney in "The West Point Story."

How Not to Influence B.O.

One of the more obvious irritation techniques, concerning which the metropolitan New York theatres should be most sensitized, are the haphazard timetables on films' starting times, as published in almost every metropolitan daily. The monotonous manner in which they are consistently awry would indicate an almost deliberate campaign on the part of the theatres to drive the customers away.

Irate patrons have been heard to complain to the cashiers whose reply is usually a laconic, "You should call up before you come." Told that the newspaper timetables are supposed to be the barometer for all theatres the usually deadpan girls in the cashiers' cages start filing their nails, primping their coiffs or, just as often, cracking wise.

'Freedom of Press' Issue in Appeal From Atlanta's Ban on 'Boundaries'

"We'll go to the Court of Appeals just as soon as we can get the papers ready," Judge Samuel Rosenman's office in New York declared yesterday (Tuesday), following the opinion of a Federal district court in Atlanta the previous day on the censorship suit brought by Louis de Rochemont on "Lost Boundaries." Judge M. Neil Andrews ruled there that films are not part of the press and thus are subject to censorship.

While the decision has the immediate effect of keeping the picture out of Atlanta, Ambrose Doskow, Judge Rosenman's aide as counsel for de Rochemont, declared the court's action was heartening. Judge Andrews, he said, practically invited an appeal to the Supreme court.

That would not have been assured had the City of Atlanta lost Monday's decision and is regarded as highly important, the Rosenman aide declared. It will provide a definitive and encompassing opinion on the all-important question to the film industry of its right to freedom from censorship under the Constitutional guarantees accorded the press.

On the basis of the High Court's obiter dictum (supplementary remarks) in the Paramount all-industry anti-trust case, Doskow asserted, the de Rochemont attorneys feel certain that they will get a favorable opinion. The Supreme court stated in handing down its decision in the Par case in 1948:

"We have no doubt that motion pictures, like newspaper and radio, are included in the press, whose freedom is guaranteed by the First Amendment (to the Constitution)."

Since this was dictum and not

Cowan Nips Gruen In $200,000 Suit

Los Angeles, March 7.

Judge Leon R. Yankwich tossed out Gruen Watch's $200,000 damage suit against Lester Cowan out of L. A. Federal court. Action charged Cowan, producer of the picture, "Love Happy," with failure to carry out an agreement to use a Gruen watch sign in one of the scenes in the film and with substituting a Bulova sign.

Court ruled that the Gruen contract was optional and that the producer had a right to use Bulova if he saw fit. The watch sequence called for Groucho Marx to swing on a pendulum in a chase on Times Square.

Charge 'Thief' Nix Restricts Imports

In the wake of booking cancellations on the Italian pic, "Bicycle Thief," due to withholding of the Production Code Seal, indie foreign distribs will form an organization in the next couple of days to buck the Motion Picture Assn. of America. New outfit will aim at liberalizing application of the code to foreign pix in the manner of many state censor boards which recognize that such films play to a different type audience.

Row between Joseph Burstyn, distrib of "Bicycle Thief," and the MPAA was climaxed this week with the cancellation of the pic at Warner Bros.' Princess theatre, Philadelphia, and the Comerford circuit's Little Art theatre in Scranton.

Burstyn, who is checking with his lawyers on a counteraction, said that Warners had originally booked the pic into 70 theatres. Withholding of the seal, he claimed, would severely cut into the pic's grossing potential through dates outside the art house circuit.

Charges by Burstyn that the MPAA was trying to "sabotage" foreign language pix in the U. S. were flatly denied by Joseph I. Breen, Production Code administrator. Pointing to flock of foreign pix okayed for the seal, Breen said the PCA is "not concerned in any way with the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures of any kind." He said the Code Authority only asked for the removal of two brief sequences in "Bicycle Thief" and would then readily grant the seal.

Burstyn's next step will be to appeal the PCA decision to the MPAA board of directors, composed of the major companies' prexies. If that move fails, he may

NIVEN SAILS FOR ADDED 'PIMPERNEL' SCENES

David Niven, who sailed from New York Saturday (4) on the Queen Mary, will make added scenes for Sir Alexander Korda's "Return of the Pimpernel" upon his arrival in Britain. Also aboard were Nunnally Johnson and Jean Negulesco, producer and director, respectively, of 20th-Fox's "Mudlark," which rolls in England this month now that the Ministry of Labor has given the pair its official sanction to work there.

Passenger slate, in addition, included Gracie Fields, who is bound for Europe to cut several recordings for Radio Luxembourg; the Don Cossack Chorus, "Holiday On Ice" company of 65; Vienna Boys Choir, returning abroad after a U. S. concert tour, and the Mack Triplets, vaude turn.

DISTRIBS' SLIDING SCALE SLIDE

M-G Appears Stalemated in N.Y. Tiff With Skouras, Century, Brandt

Although the battle over terms between Metro and three important New York circuits is costing both sides plenty of coin, none of the contestants shows signs of backing down. Metro's demands for higher terms on certain pictures than the standard 25% and 30% deals that have predominated has lost the company bookings in most of the Skouras, Century and Brandt chains in the metropolitan area.

Estimate is that the adamancy on both sides is costing M-G as much as $25,000 in rentals per picture for its better-grade product. How much the absence of Metro films is costing the theatre ops, who've had to substitute catch-as-catch-can bookings, is impossible to estimate.

Century has booked "Battleground" into about half-dozen spots. That was said by the circuit's buyer, Sam Goodman, yesterday (Tuesday) to be no sign of weakness. He explained the theatres were Century first-run situations and that there had never been difficulty over terms as far as they were concerned. The batttle involves subsequent-run houses.

Rough estimate is that Metro, by skipping most of the houses of the three chains rather than accept the old terms, is losing about $25,000 in rentals on a moderately good picture from Century, $15,000 from Skouras and $12,000 from Brandt. Those figures would vary widely, of course, in accordance with quality of the product, competing pix, etc.

Recouping 50%

Of the total, distrib is said to be able to make up close to 50% by booking its films in indie houses in competition with the webs. In some situations, M-G loses out because there is no other house, while in others it does quite well in view of the fact it is able to get higher terms and better playing time from the indies.

Although most distribs feel

Mary Pickford, Others On Museum's Pix Forum

Mary Pickford, co-owner of United Artists, will talk pictures at a symposium on the film industry which the Museum of Modern Art is planning under the chairmanship of Mrs. John D. Rockefeller. Miss Pickford has accepted along with Madeleine Carroll and Arthur L. Mayer, former U. S. Army film administrator in Germany.

Symposium is tentatively slated for April 18 or 25. Prof. Charles Siepmann, head of New York University's dept. of communications, will act as moderator.

NC Allied Blasts MG's 'Unfriendly' Demands for %

Minneapolis, March 7.

In a blast at Metro and its sales veepce, William F. Rodgers, in its latest bulletin to members, North Central Allied charged the company with selling out its promise of a year ago to indie exhibs by allegedly demanding percentage terms in all situations for "Battleground," currently its top grosser.

"Metro has decided to sacrifice the goodwill it has enjoyed since Bill Rodgers' promise of a year ago to the Allied forced percentage committee, that the company would sell flat in all situations where its top product had earned the company $200 or less," the bulletin averred. "It has abruptly taken 'Battleground' out of this overall policy and is demanding in all situations, however small, 40% (35% in the cities) to a split figure, and 50-50 over that." Allied group claimed Metro rejected its protest against these terms and urged its members to "refuse to sign a contract" for the picture.

NCA would object to the terms allegedly being asked by M-G regardless of Rodgers' promise, the bulletin said, since it is "opposed to forced percentage in the smaller situations on principle. No theatre in the $750-$1,000 gross class can operate at a profit playing product on this basis," NCA said. "There is no need to state the reasons; you know them, and Metro knows them."

Allied cautioned exhibs that the "other distributors cannot be outdone and a new rash of percentage and the resultant higher flats will be upon you. And along with it may come the boy from the corner filling station with his little clock (local checker), the inevitable auditors, the accusation that you are a crook and the blue-backed papers from Sargoy & Stein (attorneys for distribs on percentage chiselling actions)." NCA concluded:

"One last word: When Bill Rodgers made his commitment, he casually made the reservation in approximately these words, that 'of course Metro reserves the right at some future date to ask percentage on an exceptional picture.' That was merely the door that is historically and traditionally left open when a display of 'friendliness' is made. We suggest you slam it shut in Metro's face."

Legion's 'B' to 4

National Legion of Decency affixed its "B" (Morally Objectionable in Part for All) label on three Hollywood films last week, as well as one British import.

Both J. Arthur Rank's Noel Coward starrer, "The Astonished Heart," and Columbia's "Her Wonderful Lie," were rapped for "immoral actions," while "Sarumba" (EL) and "Stage Fright" (WB) were criticized for their "suggestive sequences."

$17,000 Italo 'Titan' Starting to Look Like A Little Titanic Via UA

American backers of "The Titan," the camera study of the painting and sculpture of Michelangelo, will be off the hook within a couple weeks on their entire investment in the "sleeper." Picture—which has no human beings in it—is recouping the whole $17,000 that the group put into down payment and editing out of "The Titan's" preem run at the Little Carnegie, N. Y., which opened Jan. 21.

The three general partners in ownership of the 70-minute pic, Robert Snyder, Ralph Alswang and Robert Flaherty, turned down an offer of a $50,000 guarantee against 50% of the gross for U. S. distribution rights. Offer was made by Goldberg brothers, operators of the Little Carnegie.

Group, instead, took United Artists' deal for distribution at 28⅓% of the gross. UA will get no fee on the Little Carnegie rentals, since the booking was made prior to its taking over distribution.

UA will handle the pic through the special unit headed by Capt. Harold Auten which was set up for distribution of "Henry V." Black-and-white film was shot in Rome in 1938-40 by Swiss producer Curt Oertel, who shares equally in the profits with the American owners.

Financing of the down payment and editing was organized on a limited partnership basis, similar to a legit show. Snyder, Alswang and Flaherty, as general partners, get 50% of the U. S. group's return, minus a small share to Fredric March, who did the commentary. A large number of other backers put up rest of the coin. Biggest investor is a v.p. of Jam Handy, commercial filmmaking outfit, who put up $5,000.

REPORT SELLERS NOW WANT OUT

Increased pressure on distributors to get higher terms for their product is viewed in some sales circles as likely eventually to lead to the demise of the sliding scale percentage system. Sliding scale was devised during a period of rising grosses. It was favorable to distribs under those circumstances. On the other hand, in light of the currently falling market, system is said to work entirely to the advantage of exhibitors.

Sliding scale was primarily developed and is most broadly used by Metro, but has also been widely adopted by other companies. Under it, films are not sold at a set percentage of the gross, but the ratio fluctuates upward or downward, depending on how much biz a picture does. Greater the b.o., higher the percentage.

Basic defect with the s.s. system, as distribs see it, is that it is geared to the exhibs' house expenses. It is a form of guaranteeing the theatre owner a profit on every s.s. film he plays. Distribs say the days are coming to an end when they can guarantee profits to an exhib, that he must share fully with them the chances a producer takes on every picture.

While Metro denies that its s.s. system is set up on the basis of a theatre operator's house expenses, other distribs say that's the way it works out. Metro hinges its sys-

Schwalberg-O'Donnell's Par-Interstate Huddle

Dallas, March 7.

Alfred W. Schwalberg, Paramount's distribution veepee, pulled into this city over the weekend to huddle with Robert J. O'Donnell, Interstate circuit topper, ironing out differences on the handling of lesser Par product through the big Texas chain. Reportedly, O'Donnell wants these pix test-booked in a number of situations with their b.o. scores in these spots determining whether the films should ride the entire circuit.

Schwalberg, for his part, is asking for the films to be treated as heretofore. Par's product has been given across-the-board bookings in all the circuit's theatres in the past.

Exhibs Increasingly Wary Not To Overbid; Keeps Rentals Down

Growing ability by exhibs to call their shots on the grossing possibilities of pix offered via the competitive sales method is holding down rentals to a level comparable to pre-decree days. That claim is being widely made by distrib execs who sight an increasingly conservative reaction to the ask-and-bid system on the part of exhibs. Days of overbidding and ruinous pic booking by rival theatremen are now nearing the curtains, sales execs contend.

In a large number of situations, exhibs have withdrawn from bidding completely. In many of these instances, theatre ops have voluntarily relapsed to later runs rather than continue an attempt to win product from larger and stronger houses. After two years of competitive selling, the system has stabilized to a point where no great expansion is likely.

In only one field, it is said, will the bid method be expanded further. Big boost in competitive selling of product is likely to settle the current feud between drive-ins and conventional houses. While the method was used fairly widely during the '49 hot spell, all distribs expect to put it to a greater test in '50 as a way of ironing out the upped demands of ozoners for earlier runs.

"Exhibs seem to know better than we do what a film can do in their territory," one sales exec declared. "When those first bids for first-run bookings come in, we know whether we have a boxoffice grosser or just another film. That wasn't always so. Moreover, those conservative but accurate guesses are keeping rentals from inflated levels."

Because competitive selling bars any adjustments, the pressure towards lower bids is proving that much greater, distribs say. Where an exhib previously took a chance on top terms with the rebate in mind if the film fell on its face, that sort of thinking no longer holds. After getting burnt more times than not during the early competitive selling stretch, exhibs are leaning backwards in the price offered.

Contrary to exhib claims that competitive selling is a rental-boosting device, distribs now contend that what they make in big pix are lost in the medium and small offerings. "When an exhibitor loses out on a big picture, he takes it out on us by refusing to buy the lesser ones," it is noted. Added to this rental-whittling resentment is the now accepted fact than an exhib will not offer any bid for small stuff. His refusal has forced distribs to drop the method for anything but top product.

TOA's Many Restrictions Augur Drastic Curb to COMPO's Potency As Originally Envisioned in D.C.

Tight strings tied to its ratification of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations by the Theatre Owners of America spells the end of COMPO as originally mapped. Under the limits laid down by TOA's exec committee last week, COMPO will be on a non-paying, probationary basis for at least six more months. It will not operate as an independent all-industry group under a full-time staff.

When Gael Sullivan, TOA's exec director, puts in an appearance at the next COMPO meet as the exhib group's rep, it is understood he will request the probationary period for the coming half-year. If the organization catches on with the grass-root exhibs during the period, then TOA will consider a revision and expansion of the COMPO program. Whether a ~~COMPO, limited and restricted to~~ voluntary administration, can rack up any sort of performance remains an industry guess.

Although TOA has not specifically stated so, its officials want the industry public relations project to continue on a voluntary basis without any sum approaching the $600,000 annual budget mentioned in Washington. Sullivan will request that Ned Depinet, RKO prez who has served until now as COMPO chairman, or some other industry biggie hold down the spot as coordinator without pay.

TOA plan calls for all committees to serve on a voluntary basis with their personnel drafted from

'Irma' Troupe Slated For Europe in Next Pic

Hollywood, March 7.

Marie ("Irma") Wilson will be introduced to the broadening influence of travel this summer when Hal Wallis takes his "My Friend Irma Goes Abroad" troupe on a tour of Europe.

Same cast will perform in the picture, with sequences in London, Paris, Rome and probably Copenhagen. Wallis will also thaw some frozen coin.

Par 'Samson' Plea Gives Chi Decree Biggest Test Yet

Chicago, March 7.

Latest and possibly most critical of a series of tests of strength against the Jackson Park decree came last Wednesday (1) in Chi Federal district court, when Paramount asked for an indefinite pre-release engagement for "Samson and Delilah."

Paramount lawyers Al Teton and Sam Block put producer Cecil B. De Mille, who was in town to open the Chicago Red Cross drive, actor Henry Wilcoxon and central division manager James Donohue on the stand to testify as to the importance of securing the pre-release run. Jackson Park attorney Thomas C. McConnell, opposing granting of the run, concentrated on trying to tear down testimony of the witnesses and emphasizing that exceptions to the Jackson Park decree were "eroding" a decree which had "proved its benefit to the community."

Decree provides for two-week limitations to most first runs in the Loop and elimination of clearance before subsequent runs. Para-

Walker Continues At RKO But Hughes Sets In 2 New Board Members

Resignation of J. Miller Walker last week as member of the RKO board will not affect the exec's employment with the company. Walker stays on as both veepce and secretary of RKO, it is said. When he took over the chores as board member, it was with the understanding that the post was temporary and would ultimately be filled by a nominee of Howard Hughes, RKO's controlling stockholder.

Noah Dietrich, Hughes Tool Co. exec veepee, takes over the board chairmanship in a move to put Hughes into stronger control of the board. Dietrich fills a vacancy caused by last year's resignation of Floyd Odlum, Atlas Corp. head. Odlum was paid $44,000 yearly for the spot. Whether Dietrich will be compensated has not been disclosed.

A. D. Simpson, vice-chairman of the National Bank of Commerce of Houston, Tex., and Thomas A. Slack, Hughes Tool Co. veepee and general counsel, take over the board jobs from Walker and George H. Shaw. Latter was an Atlas designee.

UA's Sears, Kelly And Lazarus Cook's Touring

United Artists' top execs are doing a shuffle this week. Prexy Grad Sears left over the weekend for a vacation in Miami Beach and expects to be back next week. Exec v.p. ~~Arthur W. Kelly, who returned~~ from the Coast only about 10 days ago, returns there tomorrow (Thursday). Paul N. Lazarus, Jr., exec aide to Sears, who has been vacationing in Phoenix for the past two weeks, is expected back at his desk at the h.o. tomorrow.

Kelly is understood going west to confab on pending production deals in line with the company's plan to keep one of its top officials in Hollywood much of the time since the resignation of George Bagnall, its v.p. there. Kelly, who also reps partner Charles Chaplin's interest in UA, will likewise huddle with him.

Miniature Reviews

"The Outriders" (Color) (M-G). Joel McCrea in good outdoor drama. Topnotch for action trade.

"A Woman of Distinction" (Col). Screwball comedy teaming Rosalind Russell and Ray Milland. Good b.o.

"The Reformer and the Redhead" (M-G). Hilarious comedy. June Allyson-Dick Powell starrer abetted by a friendly lion.

"Barricade" (Color) (WB). Western programmer in color. Spotty entertainment.

"The Girl From San Lorenzo" (UA). Okay Cisco Kid westerner for dualers.

"Great Plane Robbery" (UA). Lightweight meller with Tom Conway; mild entry for lower rung of dualers.

"Horsemen of the Sierras" (Col). Another Durango Kid saddle opus, good for the juve action market.

The Outriders
(COLOR)

Hollywood, March 3.

Metro release of Richard Goldstone production. Stars Joel McCrea; features Arlene Dahl, Barry Sullivan, Claude Jarman, Jr., James Whitmore, Ramon Novarro. Directed by Roy Rowland. Story and screenplay, Irving Ravetch; camera (Technicolor), Charles Schoenbaum; music, Andre Previn; editor, Robert J. Kern. Tradeshown March 1, '50. Running time, 93 MINS.

Will Owen	Joel McCrea
Jen Gort	Arlene Dahl
Jesse Wallace	Barry Sullivan
Roy Gort	Claude Jarman, Jr.
Clint Priest	James Whitmore
Don Antonio Chaves	Ramon Novarro
Keeley	Jeff Corey
Bye	Ted de Corsia
Father Damasco	Martin Garralaga

"The Outriders" is sturdy meat for the action fan. Its assets are polished off by smart directorial pacing and actionful color-lensing.

Richard Goldstone's production is a sound example of obtaining value for the dollar spent. Much use is made of special effects to dress the film, giving it a scope beyond its actual cost. Payoff to both the distrib and the exhib should please.

Principal motivation of Irving Ravetch's story and script is a $1,000,000 gold robbery. Joel McCrea, Barry Sullivan and James Whitmore are Confederate soldiers who escape from the Yankees, join up with a gang of renegade rebel raiders. They are dispatched to New Mexico to figure an angle to lead a wagon train of gold slated for the Yanks into an ambush. They join the train when they help beat off an Indian attack. Before the ambush destination is reached McCrea has fallen for a comely widow, Arlene Dahl. Action comes to a conclusion when McCrea helps defeat the ambushers, saves the train and wins the girl.

Roy Rowland's direction packs a wallop. The scenes are carefully staged for story development without sacrifice of action. Some are alive with tingling suspense, such as the crossing of a raging river at high flood. The roar of the water as the wagons attempt the crossing emphasizes the suspenseful danger of the situation, and the sequence is one of the best of its kind ever done on film.

McCrea sits easy in his saddle and character, and Miss Dahl is luscious in color. Sullivan gets hard-bitten menace into his role, and James Whitmore is good as the third member of the adventuring trio. Ramon Novarro is excellent as the elderly Mexican who is lending his gold to the union, and there's a nifty bit of shifty villainy contributed by Jeff Corey. Claude Jarman, Jr., and the others come through ably.

Andre Previn's music makes itself too obvious at times but otherwise fits into the action graphically displayed by Charles Schoenbaum's lensing. Editing contributes to the movement, and the other technical credits have a decided part in making this one good outdoor entertainment. Brog.

A Woman of Distinction

Columbia release of Buddy Adler production. Stars Rosalind Russell, Ray Milland, Edmund Gwenn; features Janis Carter, Mary Jane Saunders, Francis Lederer, Jerome Courtland. Directed by Edward Buzzell. Story, Hugo Butler, Ian McLellan Hunter; screenplay, Charles Hoffman; camera, Joseph Walker; editor, Charles Nelson; music, Werner R. Heymann. Previewed Feb. 16, '50. Running time, 85 MINS.

Alec Stevenson	Ray Milland
Susan Middlecott	Rosalind Russell
Mark Middlecott	Edmund Gwenn
Teddy Evans	Janis Carter
Louisa	Mary Jane Saunders
Paul Simone	Francis Lederer
Jerome	Jerome Courtland
Herman Pomeroy	Alex Gerry
Dr. McFall	Charles Evans
Miss Withers	Charlotte Wynters
Chet	Clifton Young
Station Clerk	Gale Gordon
Pearl	Jean Willes
Merle	Wanda McKay
Laura	Elizabeth Flournoy
Charlie	Harry Tyler

"A Woman of Distinction" is a loosely-tied grabbag of screwball and nonsensical doings about two warring-but-loving pedagogues which grooves pretty closely to the Hollywood pattern of this sort of comedy. Sans much logic, the Rosalind Russell-Ray Milland teamwork is good for more laughs than not and the gags overcome a yarn that lacks sound motivation. Bright enough escapology earmarks this film for fairly solid returns in its theatre rounds.

Taking the improbable story for what it is and no questions asked, "Woman" at times hits a high level for irrepressible laugh content. Scripter Charles Hoffman showed considerable invention in working out his pieces of business. This goes double for one scene in which Miss Russell, a presumably dignified dean of a woman's college, is enmeshed in a race between two souped-up collegiate flivvers. At other times, film is hampered by situations more flat than sparkling but the overall if uneven effect is funny.

Featured is a running duel between Miss Russell, the woman of distinction too busy for romance, and Prof. Milland, who is dragged into a faked news-headlined affair with the aforesaid dean through the connivings of an overly-diligent press agent. Hovering in the background is Edmund Gwenn as father to the dean who is concerned over his daughter's refusal to round out teaching with domesticity. Also figuring is Mary Jane Saunders, limned as adopted child of Miss Russell.

Principals are thrown together accidentally several times, each meeting ending violently with Miss Russell enraged in her mistaken belief that Milland is spreading the newspaper reports. Finally, Milland is invited to the college by Gwenn, doubling for Cupid. Balance of footage centers on risible mishaps of the duo at the school as the dean finds every act of disavowal plunges her deeper in hot water. Last-minute merger results when Miss Russell foreswears the blackboard for the hearth.

Although she is not the conventional picture of a pseudo-frigid professoress, Miss Russell pitches in with nice change of pace. Actress works unrelentingly on every gag situation and her convortings lend esprit and sparkle where it helps the most. Frequently, it is that difference that wins the yocks.

In the unlikely role of a lecturing English professor, Milland pieces together the necessary ingredients of genteel sobriety, confusion and indignation. His foiling to Miss Russell's antics is soundly conceived. Gwenn delivers with his customary quiet and humorous competence. Minor roles are none of them too important but all well done.

Director Edward Buzzell gets his picture off the ground with a fast start and is generally successful in keeping its developments sprightly. Photography is workmanlike; editing could have been a touch more generous with the scissors. Production values are tiptop, Columbia having hauled out the enamel from the top-drawer to give this film its AA polish. Wit.

The Reformer and the Redhead

Hollywood, March 4.

Metro release of Norman Panama-Melvin Frank production. Stars June Allyson, Dick Powell; features David Wayne, Cecil Kellaway, Ray Collins, Robert Keith. Directed by Panama and Frank, from their screenplay, based on story by Robert Carson; camera, Ray June; music, David Raksin; editor, George White. Tradeshown March 2, '50. Running time, 88 MINS.

Kathleen Maguire	June Allyson
Andrew Rockton Hale	Dick Powell
Arthur Colner Maxwell	David Wayne
Dr. Kevin G. Maguire	Cecil Kellaway
Commodore Parker	Ray Collins
Tim Harveigh	Robert Keith
Leon	Marvin Kaplan
Lily Rayton Parker	Kathleen Freeman
Jerry Nolard Boyle	Wally Maher
James I. Michell	Alex Gerry
Mr. Eberle	Charles Evens
Thompson	Paul Maxey

"The Reformer and the Redhead" is a captivating bit of nonsense, strictly escapist and fun. The laughs are based on rather broad frenetics but there are plenty of subtleties underpinning the fun to give sound basis for the almost continuous chortling. It's a recommended 88 minutes of light entertainment.

June Allyson, Dick Powell and the other human members of the cast deliver delightfully but the character that will be talked about the most is Herman, the friendly lion. Since canines and equines, i.e., "Lassie" and "Francis," have developed fans, there's no reason to suppose felines can't do the same, particularly with Herman as the shining example.

Norman Panama and Melvin Frank share almost complete credit for this one, having produced, directed and scripted from a story by Robert Carson. In each classification this team of ex-radioites snatches a strong credit. Production dress has just the right amount of polish. The direction hits constantly at the risibilities. The script crackles with zingy dialog that the cast times perfectly.

Powell is a young lawyer running for mayor on a reform ticket. He makes political opportunity by rattling a skeleton in the closet of the group that controls elections in the town. He seems set for a bright career until a redhead, in the person of Miss Allyson, enters his life. She's the daughter of the zookeeper, Cecil Kellaway, just kicked out of his job by the political party. She believes in Powell, love blooms, then gets a setback when she discovers his conniving, but everything is made right for the finale clinch.

Toppers are Powell's first encounter with Herman, who wants to be a friend, and later Powell's capture of a man-killing lion in the belief that it is his old feline pal. There are numerous other touches that serve to emphasize the clever Panama-Frank handling and make this one recommended.

Powell and Miss Allyson wallop over their roles. Particularly delightful is Miss Allyson's forthright approach to courtship. David Wayne, Powell's cynical partner, takes down his proper portion of the laughs, as does Marvin Kaplan, their man-of-all-work in the law office. Kellaway, Ray Collins, the political bigshot; Robert Keith and Wally Mahr are among the others who contribute to the fun.

Technical assists are highly expert, whether Ray June's lensing; the music by David Raksin; the editing by George White, or the special effects and montages. Brog.

Barricade
(COLOR)

Hollywood, March 3.

Warners release of Saul Elkins production. Stars Ruth Roman, Dane Clark, Raymond Massey; features Robert Douglas, Morgan Farley, Walter Coy, George Stern. Directed by Peter Godfrey. Written by William Sackheim; camera (Technicolor), Carl Guthrie; editor, Clarence Kolster. Tradeshown Feb. 28, '50. Running time, 75 MINS.

Judith Burns	Ruth Roman
Bob Peters	Dane Clark
"Boss" Kruger	Raymond Massey
Aubry Milburn	Robert Douglas
The Judge	Morgan Farley
Benson	Walter Coy
Tippy	George Stern
Kirby	Robert Griffin
Bandy	Frank Marlowe
Peso	Tony Martinez

"Barricade" never rises above the programmer class. The plot basis is good, as are the Technicolor hues in which the western setting is dressed, but it is still relatively unimportant filmfare slated for the secondary market.

Majority of audiences will find William Sackheim's scripting of his story dull. Plot idea has all that is necessary to set up an action western but the few good moments of movement are smothered in the too-talky phrasing of the script.

Raymond Massey is seen as a ruthless goldmine operator who uses fugitives from the law to dig his gold. He maintains his camp like a prison. Into that setup wander Ruth Roman, Dane Clark, both fugitives, and Robert Douglas, a lawyer who is seeking to prove Massey murdered his own brother to take over the mine. Characters stand around and spout endless reams of time-worn maxims and only occasionally get off the soapbox long enough to mix in physical action. Plot is finally resolved when all the heavies meet violent death and love regenerates Miss Roman and Clark.

Cast is adequate to the light demands of script and Peter Godfrey's direction. Physical props of Saul Elkins' production are in keeping with the western setting, and color lensing by Carl Guthrie gives them the proper display. Brog.

The Girl From San Lorenzo

United Artists release of Philip N. Krasne production. Stars Duncan Renaldo, Leo Carrillo. Directed by Derwin Abrahams. Screenplay, Ford Beebe; camera, Kenneth Peach; editor, Marty Cohn. Tradeshown N. Y., March 1, '50. Running time, 59 MINS.

Cisco	Duncan Renaldo
Pancho	Leo Carrillo
Nora	Jane Adams
Jerry	Bill Lester
Cal	Byron Foulger
Kansas	Don Harvey
Sheriff	Lee Phelps
Wooly	Edmund Cobb
McCarger	Leonard Penn
Blackie	David Sharpe
Rusty	Wes Hudman

"The Girl from San Lorenzo" is standard for the Cisco Kid series. A fast-paced westerner, it will neatly fill the bottom slot in dualers. Pic is cut from the series' regular formula, with plenty of galloping and gunplay for the juves and a light seasoning of romantic interest for the nabe trade.

Yarn is based on a confusion of identities, with a gang of varmits pulling off a succession of stage holdups and trying to pin the rap on the Cisco Kid (Duncan Renaldo) and his sidekick (Leo Carrillo). The Kid, however, rips the masquerade wide open and rounds up the culprits for the inept local sheriff. Before the windup, there's a couple of exciting cross-country chases involving runaway stage coaches. Strictly minor love affair is handled by Jane Adams and Bill Lester, who are the objects of the Kid's unfailing generosity.

Regular team of Renaldo and Carrillo turn in par performances with the usual quota of heroics and comedy. Okay bits are also turned in by Lee Phelps, as the sheriff, and David Sharpe, and Don Harvey, as the heavies. Herm.

A Royal Affair

"A Royal Affair," French-made, which opens at the Normandie theatre, N. Y., today (Wed.), was reviewed in VARIETY from Paris, Jan. 11, 1950 under its original tag "Le Roi." Starring Maurice Chevalier, pic deals with the days of the First Republic, with a mythical king's visit to France and the furor it causes in the lives of many important diplomats. Reviewer (Mosk) notes, "on its frothy theme, good treatment and Chevalier's pull, pic will please in all stateside situations." Review also stated "the Chevalier charm is in good evidence, and he gets a chance to deliver a few songs in his usual socko manner."

Film is being released by Discina International.

Great Plane Robbery

United Artists release of Sam Baerwitz production. Stars Tom Conway; features Margaret Hamilton, Steve Brodie. Directed by Edward L. Cahn. Screenplay, Richard G. Hubler and Sam Baerwitz, from story by Russell Rouse, Clarence Greene; camera, Jackson J. Rose; editor, Norman A. Cerf. Tradeshown in N. Y. March 2, '50. Running time, 61 MINS.

Ned Johnson	Tom Conway
Mrs. Judd	Margaret Hamilton
Murray	Steve Brodie
Mary	Lynne Roberts
Carter	David Bruce
Sebastian	Marcel Journet
Bill Arthur	Gilbert Frye
Police Inspector Bruce	Ralph Dunn
Miss Bennett	Lucille Barkley
George Harris	Paul Campbell
Jane	Beverly Jons

"The Great Plane Robbery" is so cluttered with corn that often it is difficult to find the plot. It may slip by on the lower rung of the duals.

Film concerns a daring robbery aboard a transcontinental plane. One deliberate murder and another uncalled-for slaying comprise the main excitement. Before the actual plot is unfolded, the story has been padded out with countless inane episodes which seldom advance the story.

Ultimate in hokum is the alleged laugh tag-line when the loud and homely N. Y. femme proclaims she is in L. A. for a reunion of bathing beauty winners—she was "Miss Coney Island" in her youth. Some of the airplane passengers behave like nobody ever seen in real life, with a gin rummy game as tedious as it is pointless.

Tom Conway, a firstrate actor, does okay as the heroic skipper on the plane. But it is a tossup whether his worst struggle is with the screen villain or the absurd script. Margaret Hamilton makes the talkative, toothy Mrs. Judd sufficiently annoying, but why so much footage was devoted to her is still a mystery. Steve Brodie is ploughed under in a bandit role, while Marcel Journet is overly villainous as a supposed jeweler with a weighted foreign accent.

Screenplay is just one of those things. Director Edward L. Cahn turns in a sub-standard job but it is dubious if much could have been done with the material and the obviously skimpy budget. Wear.

Horsemen of the Sierras
(SONGS)

Columbia release of Colbert Clark production. Stars Charles Starrett; features T. Texas Tyler, Lois Hall, Tommy Ivo, Smiley Burnette. Directed by Fred F. Sears. Screenplay, Barry Shipman; camera, Fayte Browne; editor, Paul Borofsky. At the New York, N. Y., week of Feb. 28, '50. Running time, 59 MINS.

Steve Saunders The Durango Kid	Charles Starrett
Smiley Burnette	Smiley Burnette
Patty McGregor	Lois Hall
Robin Grant	Tommy Ivo
Duke Webster	John Dehner
Phineas Grant	Jason Robards
Morgan Webster	Daniel M. Sheridan
Bill Grant	Jock O'Mahoney
Ellory Webster	George Chesebro
T. Texas Tyler	Himself

Another in the Durango Kid series, "Horsemen of the Sierras" is a fair entry for the action market, with appeal for the younger set.

Interest for the moppet trade is provided by presence of Smiley Burnette, the obese cowboy buffoon, and Tommy Ivo, as an orphan kid who is the rightful owner of a valuable ranch and whom some gangs are trying to bump off. Charles Starrett offers plenty of slam-bang as the U. S. marshal who dons his Durango Kid disguise for swashbuckling work that a government officer generally isn't able to do.

Story line is complex, involving two families in a Hatfield-McCoy feud that entails a high quota of quick-on-the-trigger shooting. Leaders of the two warring factions are secretly in cahoots, fanning the clan battle in the hope of wiping out all their rivals for the oil-rich ranch.

Burnette sings some nonsensical songs, lets his prisoners escape and gets scared witless in a haunted house, to please juve audiences. Lensing is good, and tight editing brings the film down to a fast 59 minutes. Bril.

Singoalla
(FRENCH)

Paris, Feb. 28.

Discina release of Terra Film production. Directed by Christian-Jaque. Screenplay, Pierre Very, Christian-Jacque; dialog, Pierre Very. Stars Viveca Lindfors, Michel Auclair; features Louis Seignier, Henri Nassiet, Johnny Chambot, Marie-Helene Daste. Camera, Christian Matras; music, Hugo Alfven; editor, Jean Desagneaux. At Studio Etoile, Paris. Running time 100 MINS.

Singoalla	Viveca Lindfors
Erland	Michel Auclair
Priest	Louis Seignier
Gypsy Chief	Henri Nassiet
Elfrid	Marie-Helene Daste
Sorgbarn	Johnny Chambot

Pic is a medieval costumer based on an old Swedish legend of skullduggery between the nobles and the gypsys. It lacks the rhythm and genuine poetic feeling necessary to give it art house flavor. A mixture of styles gives it a glorified oater air with leering villains, a full fledged attack on a covered wagon train with bows and arrows in good evidence. There is marquee appeal in Viveca Lindfors, and with its exotic background pic would loom in second-run spots.

Story concerns a nobleman who meets a fiery gypsy during a hunt and falls madly in love. Complicated story becomes sheer hokum due to the sketchy characterization of the leading players. Overlong love scenes are cloying. Michel Auclair doesn't have the persuasive strength necessary to play the brooding nobleman, and Miss Lindfors plays the gypsy in too flamboyant a manner. There's standout playing of young Johnny Chambot as the spurned son.

Pic has been made in three versions, Swedish, French, and English, with Miss Lindfors starring in all three. Christian Matras' lensing is also standout. Christian-Jaque has directed in a heavy-handed manner, and his usual pictorial and rhythmic sense backfire in this. Production value is above average, and decor and music give pic a fine background. Mosk.

Bara en Mor
(Only a Mother)
(SWEDISH)

Stockholm, Feb. 28.

Svensk Filmindustri production and release. Stars Eva Dahlbeck, Ragnar Falck; features Ulf Palme, Hugo Bjorne, Ake Fridell, Mona Geijer-Falkner, Max von Sydow, Margareta Krook, Mimi Pollack, Elsa Widborg, Olof Widgren, Ulla Smidie, Sif Ruud, Ernst Brunman. Directed by Alf Sjoberg. Camera, Martin Bodin; music, Dag Wiren. At Skandia, Stockholm. Running time, 92 MINS.

This is a drama from the daily life at a farmer's home in a Sweden of the past. The Swedish government some years ago ended the life of this type of farmer-worker. They were known here as "statare," a type of people who had almost no help from law or trade organizations. Their chiefs could use them as they wanted, and when they were too old to continue their work they were thrown out from their homes.

"Bara En Mor" tells the story of a woman of this type; her love for two men, and a family that was growing faster and faster, with many more children than they could afford. The film is very dramatic, and Eva Dahlbeck in the role of the mother gives one of the best performances of 1949.

Film, which has some nude scenes, may run up against censorship regulations in the U. S. In countries where censors aren't afraid of a couple of nude scenes, this film will be a great success. Technical credits are outstanding. Winq.

Maneges
(The Riding School)
(FRENCH)

Paris, Feb. 14.

Discina release of Andre Paulve production. Directed by Yves Allegret; original script, Jaques-Sigurd. Stars Simone Signoret, Bernard Blier; features Jane Marken, Frank Villard, Jaques Baumer. Camera, Jean Bourgoin; editor, Maurice Serein. At Balzac, Paris. Running time, 85 MINS.

Pic is an intelligent, biting study of the selfish, erring wife and the faithful, adoring husband. It is done in a brilliant visual manner and accompanied by fine thesping. Though told in flashback, film packs a tremendous amount of suspense and solid enduring characterization. It rates as a definite art house and sureseater entry. There is marquee appeal in director Yves Allegret and star Simone Signoret, noted for their work in "Dedee." Word-of-mouth and crix will probably assure it a surefire stateside run.

Story depicts the sordid meanderings of a predatory mother and

THEATRE TV EXCLUSIVES BY 1951

Stamford's 6 Theatres Reflect N.Y. Times' Poll on Kids' TV Yen

Stamford, Conn., March 7.

Stamford's six theatres echo the results of the first all-pupil television poll announced this week by the Burdick Junior High School in this town. The survey, an official job of the school administration, showed that the students ranging from 11-15 years old (with television sets at home) are concentrating their entertainment on video at the expense of filmgoing. To this conclusion, managers of the six houses add their painful aye.

Film biz in Stamford varies from bad to terrible, a theatre-by-theatre checkup by VARIETY indicates. Television is tagged as one of the heavies but there are other factors such as generally poor industrial conditions in this town of some 47,000. But the big fact is that the kiddie business is considerably worse off than that of adults.

Poll showed that the moppets spend 27 hours weekly in front of their home tele sets. Of the 200 with sets in their own parlors, 150 go to flickeries less; 25 go more and 25 about the same. This lessening of the film habit is borne out by what exhibs say. Theatres are doing virtually no kid business during the weekdays. Whatever comes in does so over the weekend.

'Can't Compete' Vs. Video

According to the management jointly operating the Palace and Strand, tele has hit all ages of filmgoers but that of the teenagers worse than others. Strand, an action house, opens now only over

Anti-20% Drive Gains Momentum

Aiming at a climax to be timed with the introduction of the tax bill on the floor of Congress in about five or six weeks, film industry drive against the 20% Federal admission tax is continuing to pile up commitments from Congressional reps across the country. While the New York phase of the industry drive has already racked up 100% Congressional support, other sections are getting increasing number of pledges from representatives and senators.

One of the most potent factors in garnering the lawmakers' commitments has been the widespread editorial support given the industry by the nation's newspapers. In virtually every large city, one or more of the leading dailies have come out against the tax on grounds that it discriminates against those who are seeking entertainment.

Typical comments in the press are evidenced in recent editorials in the Cincinnati Post, which asked whether it was "fair to make this foremost medium of popular entertainment continue to bear a really hurtful share of Federal taxation."

The Wilmington Journal wrote: "There is not much doubt that

FBI Aids in Recovering 18 Hot Feature Prints

Seattle, March 7.

Federal Bureau of Investigation has seized 18 hot prints of major company features and turned them over to the industry. Films were recovered from an undisclosed person who claimed to have bought them during the war from a Navy gunner while serving on a Liberty ship. FBI probe indicates that the gunner picked up the prints in New Caledonia.

Prints, all 16m, were part of the thousands donated by the industry to the armed services. Recouped pix have been handed over to Sargoy & Stein, special counsel to the distribs on copyright affairs.

Breen's TV Talk

Joseph I. Breen, chief of the film industry's Production Code Administration, has accepted an invitation to be guest speaker at the next luncheon meeting of the American Television Society, slated for the Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y., April 20. With the video industry having mulled a code of ethics for the last five years, it's expected that Breen will discuss the film code and how it might be adapted to TV.

Robert Montgomery, who's now producing the "Lucky Strike Theatre" series of dramatic shows for NBC-TV, guested at the ATS luncheon at the Roosevelt Friday (3) and took an indirect swipe at Hollywood for having in the past tended to play down to its audience. He cautioned the video industry against falling behind the audience instincts, declaring that "if we feel contempt for them, they will sense it and we'll lose them." (See story in Television section.)

TOA's Intensive Analysis of TV In Relation to B.O.

Full-scale television activities are plotted by the Theatre Owners of America to signify the growing exhib interest in video as a threat or promise. Working on three fronts, TOA has given the greenlight to extensive preparations for the forthcoming Federal Communications Commission hearings on theatre tele. At the same time, group is issuing a call for an all-industry confab on the general subject of video and has set up a permanent research bureau.

Si Fabian, Robert J. O'Donnell and Gael Sullivan, exec director of TOA, have been tapped to maneuver the industry conference. All producer-distribs will be invited to sit in on the huddle aimed as a full discussion of the relationship between films and television. Both Eric Johnston, prez of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, and Ellis Arnall, head of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, will be asked to lend a hand.

Discussions will be aimed to take in the question of booking features on tele. TOA wants producers to withhold all pix made specifically for the theatre market. Develop-

EAGLE LION'S 19 DATES DOMINATE L.A. NEXT WK.

Los Angeles, March 7.

From the looks of things, Eagle Lion is taking over the first-run showcases in this city next week for the biggest display of the company's output since its formation, four years ago. EL will have 19 houses, many of them big first-runs, tied up with its new product in the second half of March.

Company kicks off with "Red Shoes" going into general distribution at regular prices. It opens Tuesday (14) at the five Fox-West Coast houses of the Chinese unit. "Guilty of Treason" plays the Pantages and Hillstreet, RKO houses, starting March 17. "Rupert," Jimmy Durante starrer, takes over the five Music Halls on either the 17th or 24th.

Besides these, "The Sundowners" opens at the two Paramount houses and the Baldwin Park. "G.I. Joe," EL reissue, plays the Marcal and Pickfair. "Amazing Mr. Beecham" is booked to open at the Paris and Beverly Cannon this week.

BIG-SCREEN TELE IN 10-12 HOUSES

Enough theatres will be equipped with large-screen television units by the end of the year to make possible the first exclusive theatre TV broadcasts.

To date, 10 houses either have installed video equipment or have them on order, and two or three more will be ready to go by late fall or early winter. Combined seating capacity, it's believed, will make possible a large enough gross potential for them to bid successfully against the TV networks for certain sports and special events, which will thus not be available to home receivers.

Latest large-screen TV orders were placed last week by the Century circuit, N. Y., with RCA. Plans call for installation in the chain's new 2,200-seat Meadows theatre, Fresh Meadows, L. I., and in its 2,500-seat Albemarle, Brooklyn. Other houses already set for theatre TV are the Broadway Paramount; Fabian's Fox, Brooklyn; two theatres in Boston, and houses in Detroit, Milwaukee, Chicago, Kansas City and San Francisco, as well as one in Toronto. It is also expected that current negotiations will result in at least one Los Angeles theatre buying equipment and Si H. Fabian, prez of the circuit bearing his name, is reported readying additional installations in several of his upstate New York theatres.

Once the Federal Communications Commission grants the necessary channels for theatre TV, it is expected that the orders will pile up even more rapidly. Thus, Fox-West Coast's plan for linking 24 theatres in southern California

TV Cuts Into Bus Riding, Detroiter Sez; Theatre Owner in Strong Denial

Detroit, March 7.

The financially-embarrassed city-owned transportation system, the Dept. of Street Railways, put the finger on television to explain what has happened to thousands of its former evening-hour bus and streetcar riders and similar riders in other big cities. The statement was immediately challenged by Earl J. Hudson, president of the United Detroit Theatres and a former member of the Street Railway Commission.

Leo J. Nowicki, DSR general manager, said the evening and weekend passenger loads have been falling off in far greater percentages than the general decline in riding. "Many other big city transit companies are experiencing similar drops," he declared. "The transit industry believes that television sets are keeping people home evenings, or in their immediate neighborhoods, instead of moving around on public transportation vehicles."

Nowicki added: "The decline is especially marked in cities with television broadcasting stations."

Hudson demanded: "What does he mean—television is to blame? If the DSR would improve service and not make people stand around for a half hour waiting for a bus or a streetcar, patronage would pick up.

"The Michigan, United Artist, Palms (theatres operated by Hudson's chain) as well as all our neighborhood and suburban theatres enjoyed satisfactory business last week despite the terrible weather. 'Samson and Delilah' (Par), at the Madison—another UD house—is playing to 20% more patrons daily here than it is drawing in any other theatre in the country," Hudson declared. "We give service and comfort plus entertainment—our evening business is all right, television notwithstanding."

Asked for a rebuttal, Nowicki was unable to reconcile the high patronage of entertainment establishments with the low patronage of the DSR.

RKO and Par Postponements Cue Govt.'s Liberal Stance on Decree

Both the Government and the N. Y. federal court's easy attitude towards the time limitations fixed in anti-trust consent decrees was again demonstrated this week when RKO and Paramount obtained delays in carrying out their decree provisions. From all indications, none of the majors will be held to the letter of divestiture provisions providing they demonstrate good faith in efforts towards that end.

United Paramount won a change in provision granting the new circuit a blanket two years to unload a list of 69 theatres. Previously, UP was bound to divest half these houses in one year; the balance in two. RKO was handed another delay until March 15 for the company to file a plan providing the breakup of partnership interests.

UP amendment was granted, with Dept. of Justice okay, on an affidavit of prexy Leonard Goldenson. He stated that extensive negotiations were required to liquidate the holdings and that necessary clearing of titles was holding up the chain. Goldenson listed 15 theatres in the 69 that have already been divested.

Still in the throes of settlement talks with George P. Skouras, RKO obtained the postponement with Government consent. Early inking of a pact with Skouras is expected. Moreover, talks with Walter Reade, Jr. are slated again for this week following the latter's return from a Swiss vacation. Reade and RKO jointly own some

Rep Execs on Coast

Hollywood, March 7.

Republic prez Herbert J. Yates and James R. Grainger, company's sales chief, planed in to the Coast accompanied by William Saal, Yates' exec assistant.

Following a studio o. o., Grainger is due back at the New York homeoffice March 27. En route to the h.o., he'll stop off at the San Francisco, Denver and Dallas exchange areas.

Schines-Majors Settled a Flock Of Theatre Suits

Raft of anti-trust actions both threatened and brought against the Schine circuit and the eight majors in upper New York state have been settled after negotiations covering the greater part of one year. While attorneys who dickered the peace pact refuse to disclose the amount involved, it is understood that several hundred thousands of dollars will be paid to the suing exhibs.

Deal involves approximately one dozen exhibs with theatres in the Albany, Rochester and Auburn sectors. Two suits seeking damages in excess of $2,000,000 brought by the Rochester Theatre Co. and the Auburn Operating Co. are covered in the settlement in addition to claims which were held up pending negotiations.

Under the terms of the joint settlement, the Schine chain will kick in with 50% of the amount being paid. That percentage is standard operational procedure when a big circuit plus distribs are named defendants in an exhib treble-damage action. Balance of the payment will be allocated among the eight distribs on the basis of rentals that each garnered in the Auburn-Albany-Rochester sector.

CATHOLIC BISHOP BANS 'STROMBOLI' IN ALBANY

Albany, March 7.

"Stromboli" was banned for 280,000 Catholics of the Albany diocese by Bishop Edmund F. Gibbons, Friday (3) as the picture began a week's run at the Fabian-owned Grand. RKO release had been playing at Warners' Lincoln in nearby Troy.

Reject Ban in Canada

Regina, Sask., March 7.

Local Council of Women here rejected a suggestion that they urge a ban on "Stromboli" in Saskatchewan. The suggestion came from member organizations which were against showing of the film and wished council support.

The council expressed the opinion the films should be accepted or rejected by the censor on their own merits, and that the private lives of actors and actresses should not be taken into consideration.

The provincial censor, Rev. D. J. Vaughan, has not yet received a print of "Stromboli" but has indicated he will deal with it strictly on its merits.

IA'S VANCOUVER MEET

Regular semi-annual meeting of the general exec board of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees has been set for the Vancouver Hotel, Vancouver, B. C., April 20.

Headed by IATSE prexy Richard F. Walsh, the board is slated to discuss organization of the video field and the pension issue which is still pending the major studios.

Par's Divvy Sends Stock Up Again

Paramount has shelved the question of regular dividends for stockholders for the time being. With the return of Barney Balaban, Par's prez, last week from a brief Florida vacation, board sessioned and immediately ordered a 50c divvy on outstanding common stock, payable March 29 to stockholders of record March 16. At the same time, company indicated no longrange policy was possible until more complete results of its divorced operations are tabulated.

Dividend declaration reacted strongly on the New York exchange. In big trading, Par's common immediately climbed back to 19 after suffering losses earlier in the week. There had been some doubt of a divvy because of reports of lagging business during the first couple of months of operations.

Balaban confirmed the company's intention of shrinking common stock holdings "as rapidly as possible and as conditions justify, so that the structure bear a realistic relation to the current outlook for future earnings." In the first two months, Par has picked up 73,710 shares at an estimated cost of $1,475,000. With its tremendous cash resources, it is expected that outstanding stock will be slashed substantially within the year.

As things now stand, Par faces an annual dividend charge of $6,-

Cinecolor to Help Finance Indies

Hollywood, March 7.

Cinecolor's stockholders voted to expand the company's policy of helping to finance indie producers who make use of its tinter process. Path of indie production will be smoothed by deferred payments of negative, laboratory and printing charges.

Company has been using this policy in a limited way for 18 months and is ready to do it on a more comprehensive scale.

Meanwhile, Cinecolor announced that its new three-color process will be ready for use in June.

'Horn' Blows Nice 43G in Tame L.A.; 'Willie' NSG at $42,000, 'East Side' Mild 26G; 'Francis' Fancy 31G, H.O.

Los Angeles, March 7.

Mild grosses continue to feature local first-run pace, with nothing outstanding in current frame. "Young Man With Horn," in three theatres, is expected to pick up nice $43,000. "Willie Comes Home" looms mild at $42,000 in five sites. Moderate $26,000 is likely for single week of "East Side, West Side" - "Challenge Lassie" in two houses.

"Dear Wife" looms slow $22,000, also in two spots. "Indian Scout"-"Cry Murder" is dull $24,000 for five situations.

Standout among holdovers is "Francis," catching nice $31,000 for second tim around in five houses. "Stromboli" is down to $24,000, okay, after big $39,700 opening week in two sites.

Estimates for This Week

Beverly Hills, Downtown, Hawaii, Hollywood, Forum Music Halls (Prin-Cor) (834; 902; 1,106; 512; 2,100; 55-$1)—"Davy Crockett" (UA) and "Cry Murder" (FC). Slow $24,000. Last week, "Never Fear" (EL) and "Once Upon Dream" (EL) (2d wk-4 days), $9,200.

Chinese, Los Angeles, Loyola, Uptown, Wilshire (FWC) (2,048; 2,097; 1,248; 1,719; 2,296; 60-$1)—"Willie Comes Home" (20th) and "Girl From Lorenzo" (UA). Mild $42,000. Last week, "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) and "Blonde Bandit" (Rep), $32,400.

Downtown, Hollywood, Wiltern (WB) (1,757; 2,756; 2,344; 60-$1)—"Young Man With Horn" (WB). Nice $43,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB) (2d wk), $21,600.

Loew's State, Egyptian (UA) (2,404; 1,538; 60-$1)—"East Side, West Side" (M-G) and "Challenge to Lassie" (M-G). Mild $26,000. Last week, "Malaya" (M-G) and "Blonde Dynamite" (Mono) (2d wk-5 days), $15,700.

Pantages, Hillstreet (RKO) (2,812; 2,890; 50-$1)—"Stromboli" (RKO) and "Tattooed Stranger" (RKO) (2d wk). Okay $24,000. Last week, sock $39,700.

Los Angeles, Hollywood Paramounts (F&M) (3,398; 1,451; 50-$1)—"Dear Wife" (Par) and "Unmasked" (Rep) (LA only). Slow $22,000. Last week, "Samson" (Par) (4th wk), fine $25,800 at upped prices.

United Artists, Ritz, Studio City, Vogue, Culver (UA-FWC) (2,100; 1,370; 880; 885; 1,145; 60-$1)—"Francis" (U) and "Girl in Heart" (Mono) (2d wk). Fine $31,000. Last week, smash $44,400.

Orpheum (D'town) (2,210; 50-95)—"Blue Grass Kentucky" (Mono) (2d run) with vaude headed by Eddie Peabody. Neat $17,000. Last week, "Passport Pimlico" (EL) (2d run) with vaude headed by Nick Lucas, $17,200.

Four Star (UA) (900; 60-$1)—"Song Remember" (Col) (reissue) (3d wk-3 days). Near $1,000. Last week, good $2,500.

Fine Arts (FWC) (679; 60-$1)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th) and "Pinky" (20th). Special Academy nomination run. Slim $2,500. Last week, "Spring Park Lane" (EL) (5th wk - 6 days) and "Eiffel Tower" (RKO) (3d wk-6 days), $1,700.

H.O.'s Hobble Hub But 'Wall' Okay at $20,000; 'Key' Sharp $28,000, 2d

Boston, March 7.

Biz is on skids this stanza with town surfeited with holdovers, bitter winter weather being no help. Only newcomer, "Outside the Wall" at Boston in for eight days is shaping not more than average. "Key to City" is holding well in two spot's for second week.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (Jaycox) (1,200; 50-95)—"Foolish Heart" (RKO) (5th wk). Still okay with $10,000 after neat $12,000 for fourth.

Beacon Hill (Beacon Hill, Inc.) (780; 40-99)—"Bicycle Thief" (Indie) (3d wk). Nifty $8,000 after solid $10,000 for second.

Broadway Grosses

Estimated Total Gross
This Week $566,500
(Based on 18 theatres.)
Last Year $545,000
(Based on 16 theatres.)

'Holiday' Smash $11,000 in Indpls.

Indianapolis, March 7.

Film biz here has recovered from last week's bliz, and grosses are fair to good at most spots. "Backfire," paced by Tommy Dorsey's band on stage at Circle, is drawing top coin, with "Malaya," at Loew's, leading straight filmers. but "Johnny Holiday," Keith's newcomer, is really standout with smash session.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Gamble-Dolle) (2,800; 50-90)—"Backfire" (WB) with Tommy Dorsey orch onstage. Nice $21,000. Last week, "Dancing in Dark" (20th) with Eddy Duchin orch, Vivian Blaine, others, onstage, slow $17,000.

Indiana (G-D) (3,300; 44-65)—"Young Man With Horn" (WB) and "Cry Murder" (FC). Modest $9,500. Last week, "Montana" (WB) and "Sarumba" (EL), $8,000.

Keith's (G-D) (1,300; 44-65)—"Johnny Holiday" (UA) and "Belle Old Mexico" (Rep). Smash $11,000. Last week, "Samson and Delilah" (2d wk), okay $7,000 after nifty $14,000 opener at $1.20 top.

Loew's (Loew) (2,427; 44-65)—"Malaya" (M-G) and "Tension" (M-G). Nice $12,000. Last week, "Key to City" (M-G), strong $16,000 in 10 days.

Lyric (G-D) (1,600; 44-65)—"Purple Heart" (20th) and "Guadalcanal Diary" (20th) (reissues). Sturdy $6,500. Last week, "Dangerous Profession" (RKO) and "Mysterious Desperado" (RKO), $4,000.

'Horn' Resounding 16½G Tops New Pitt Films; 'Samson' $23,000 in 2d

Pittsburgh, March 7.

Things took a little spurt all around town over weekend with warmer weather and news that coal strike had ended. It was first ray of sunshine here generally in some time. "Samson and Delilah" is still leading the pack, with Stanley threading its way back into the money again on "Young Man with a Horn." Fulton and Harris are both doing fair with "Woman in Hiding" and "Borderline," respectively.

Estimates for This Week

Barry (Skirball) (1,100; 45-80)—"Guilty of Treason" (EL). Mild $5,000. Last week, "Red Shoes" (EL) (6th wk), $4,500.

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 45-80)—"Woman In Hiding" (U). Nice notices and they're helping. Okay $7,000. Last week, "Dancing in Dark" (20th). $5,500.

Harris (Harris) (2,200; 45-80)—"Borderline" (U). Fair to middling

'Willie' Sturdy $16,000, Mpls.; 'Woman' Oke 10G

Minneapolis, March 7.

"When Willie Comes Marching Home", "Woman in Hiding" and "Intruder in Dust" are major newcomers and they add up to substantial boxoffice. "Willie" in particular seems to have plenty of what it takes at Radio City. The high-stepping "Sands of Iwo Jima," in second week at State, still is a standout.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Par) (1,600; 50-70)—"Blossoms in Dust" (M-G) (reissue). Fast $6,000. Last week, "Dear Wife" (Par) (2d wk), okay $5,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 50-70)—"Congorilla" (Indie) and "Borneo" (Indie). Good $5,500. Last week, "Pinky" (20th) (3d wk), nice $5,200.

RKO-Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 50-70)—"Woman in Hiding" (U). Fair $10,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB), $11,000.

RKO-Pan (RKO) (1,600; 50-70)—"Chain Lightning" (WB) (m.o.). Okay $7,000. Last week, "Father Is Bachelor" (Col), same.

State (Par) (2,300; 50-70)—"Sands Iwo Jima" (Rep) (2d wk). Fine $12,000 after tremendous $20,000 initial stanza.

World (Mann) (400; 50-70)—"Intruder in Dust" (M-G). Good $3,000. Last week, "Facts of Love" (Indie), $1,800.

Radio City (Par) (4,000; 55-70)—"Willie Comes Home" (20th). Doing very well at $16,000. Last week, "Key to City" (M-G), $15,000.

'Francis' Terrif $20,000 Leads K.C.

Kansas City, March 7.

Big biz is going to "Francis" at Tower-Uptown-Fairway combo this week, with smash session and likely holdover. It is city's standout. Orpheum, with "Mother Didn't Tell Me," is doing moderately good. "Stromboli" will make a drab showing at the Missouri, taking a beating from crix, church and customers. It will be one of slowest weeks in months for the RKO house. "Samson and Delilah" at Paramount getting a strong play for third week and may stay a fourth.

Estimates for This Week

Esquire (Fox Midwest) (820; 45-65)—"Siren of Atlantis" (UA) and "Red River" (UA) (reissue). Usual $3,000. Last week, "Tunisian Victory" (Indie) and "Desert Victory" (Indie) (reissues), $3,500.

'12 O'Clock' Soars to Great $18,000 In Cincy; 'Borderline' 8G, 'Thelma' 10G

Cincinnati, March 7.

"12 O'Clock High" is soaring high and is way ahead of three other firstruns this heat with enough to hold general biz at better than par. "Thelma Jordon" and "Beyond Forest" are nip and tuck for second honors and several paces ahead of "Borderline," also favorable. Weekend weather was clear for a change and welcomed by exhibs after season's worst cold and snow.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 55-75)—"Thelma Jordon" (Par). Moderate $10,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB), ditto.

Capitol (Mid-States) (2,000; 55-75)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th). Socko $18,000. Last week, "Willie Comes Home" (20th) (2d wk), slow $6,000.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 55-75)—"Key to City" (M-G) (2d wk). Solid $9,500 in wake of big $15,000 preem.

Keith's (Mid-States) (1,542; 55-75)—"Borderline" (U). Favorable $7,500. Last week, "Malaya" (M-G) (2d wk), $6,000.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 55-75)—"Beyond Forest" (WB). Fairish $10,000. Last week, "Ambush" (M-G), $11,000.

Shubert (Mid-States) (2,100; 55-75)—"Willie Comes Home" (20th). Moveover for third downtown sesh. Oke $5,500. Last week, "Outside Wall" (U), thin $3,000.

Det. Rebounds as Coal Strike Ends; 'Outlaw' Sock $50,000, 'Ruth' Hep 23G

Detroit, March 7.

Relief over end of coal strike was immediately apparent here at first-runs. "Outlaw" is shaping to terrific $50,000 at the Fox for best biz in months. "Dear Ruth" looms good at the Michigan. "Samson and Delilah" is falling off slightly at the Madison in its seventh week but still good. "Guilty of Treason" is okay at the Palms.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Mich) (5,000; 70-95)—"Outlaw" (RKO) and "Tattooed Stranger" (RKO). Socko $50,000. Last week, "Guilty Bystander" (FC) plus Lionel Hampton orch onstage. Disappointing $30,000 after heavy weekend and early week biz.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; 70-95)—"Dear Ruth" (Par) and "Hidden Room" (EL). Okay $23,000. Last week, "Borderline" (U) and "Blonde Dynamite" (Mono), $13,000.

Palms (UD) (2,900; 70-95)—"Guilty of Treason" (EL) and "Unmasked" (Rep). Pert $16,000. Last week, "Backfire" (WB) and "Silent Conflict" (UA). $14,000.

United Artists (UD) (2,000; 70-95)—"Fallen Idol" (SRO). Fair $12,000. Last week, "Bengal Lancer" (Par) and "Beau Geste" (Par) (reissues), $14,000.

Madison (UD) (1,800; 75-$1.20)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (7th wk). Starting to slip but still oke at $10,000. Last week, $13,000.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; 70-95)—"Red Shoes" (EL) (2d wk). Steady $8,000. Last week, $8,500.

Downtown (Balaban) (2,900; 70-95)—"Challenge to Lassie" (M-G) and "Tension" (M-G). Thin $6,000. Last week, "Ambush" (M-G) and "Cry Murder" (FC) (3d wk), good $7,000.

'Cinderella' Wow 18G on Prov. 2d

Providence, March 7.

"Cinderella" is giving RKO Albee a smash second week to lead the city with really big biz. State's "Mrs. Mike" is fair while Majestic's second week of "12 O'Clock High" looms as nice.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 44-65)—"Cinderella" (RKO) (2d wk). Earlier than usual daily openings helping to socko $18,000. First week was record-breaking $22,000.

Fay's (Fay) (1,400; 44-65)—"Take Me To Ball Game" (M-G) (reissue) and vaude. Good $6,500. Last week, "Beyond Glory" (Indie) (reissue) and vaude, fair $5,500.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 44-65)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th) (2d wk). Good $13,000 after hitting neat $18,000 in opening week.

Metropolitan (Snider) (3,100; 44-65)—"Red Shoes" (EL) (2d wk). Only fair $5,500. First week was so-so $9,500.

State (Loew) (3,200; 44-65)—"Mrs. Mike" (UA) and "Satan's Cradle" (UA). Average $14,500. Last week, "Battleground" (M-G) (2d wk), nice $16,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 44-65)—"Fallen Idol" (SRO) and "Once Upon Dream" (EL). Opened Monday (6). Last week, "Samson and Delilah" (Par) (3rd wk), steady but not outstanding $10,000 at $1.25 top.

'Rio'-Vaude Tuneful In Wash., 22G; 'Foxes' NSH 19G, 'Cinderella' 20G, 2d

Washington, March 7.

"Cinderella," in second week at RKO Keith's, is still mid-sector's brightest spot, with weekend biz for the Disney tinter almost up to last week's sock level. "Nancy Goes to Rio," with vaude, at Loew's Capitol, shapes sturdy, but not sensational for big musical. Remainder of city looks dull.

Estimates for This Week

Capitol (Loew's (2,434; 44-85)—"Nancy Goes to Rio" (M-G) plus vaude. Sturdy $22,000. Last week, "Willie Comes Home" (20th) plus vaude, smart $25,000.

Keith's (RKO) (1,939; 44-80)—"Cinderella" (RKO) (2d wk). Smash $20,000 or near, with weekend biz exceptional. Last week, flashy $25,000.

Metropolitan (Warner) (1,163; 44-74)—"Desperados" (Col) and "Renegades" (Col) (reissues). Okay $5,500 for oldies. Last week, "Backfire" (WB), fair $5,000 for first-run.

Palace (Loew's) (2,370; 44-74)—"Prince of Foxes" (20th). Disappointing $19,000, with unfavorable reviews hurting. Last week, "12 O'Clock High" (20th) (2d wk), very steady $15,500.

Playhouse (Lopert) (485; 50-90)—"All King's Men" (Col) (16th wk). Slipped for first time but still fine at $6,000. Last week, same.

Warner (WB) (2,164; 44-74)—"Thelma Jordon" (Par). Sluggish $12,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB), below hopes at okay $14,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (654; 44-80)—"Foolish Heart" (RKO) (7th wk). So-so $3,500 for final week after slipping to about same take last week.

Wilder's First

Hollywood, March 7.

Billy Wilder tees off his new producer-director contract at Paramount with "The Human Interest Story," a newspaper yarn.

Lesser Samuels and Walter Neuman are working with Wilder on the screenplay, with shooting slated to start in May.

'MEN' STRONG $16,000, L'VILLE; 'HORN' HOT 8G

Louisville, March 7.

Balmy weekend weather plus some strong films on downtown screens is bringing biz back to main stem currently. Only hampering factor was the Southern Assn. of Colleges basketball tourney at the Armory. Topper by wide margin currently is "All the King's Men" at State. "Mother Didn't Tell Me" at Rialto, and "Young Man With Horn" at the Mary Anderson also shape solid.

Estimates for This Week

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,200; 45-65)—"Young Man With Horn" (WB). Robust $8,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB) (2d wk), nice $6,500.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 45-65)—"Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) and "Radar Secret Service" (Mono). Nice $13,000. Last week, "Willie Marching Home" (20th) and "Palooka Meets Humphrey" (Mono), strong $15,000.

State (Loew's) (3,000; 45-65)—"All King's Men" (Col) and "Secret St. Ives" (Col). Strong $16,000, and may hold. Last week, "Key to City" (M-G) (2d wk), satisfactory $11,000.

Strand (FA) (1,200; 45-65)—"Live By Night" (RKO) and "Threat" (RKO). Fine $6,000. Last week, "Dakota Lil" (20th) and "Treasure Monte Carlo" (Indie), big $7,000.

'Samson' Giant $25,000, Seattle; 'Key' Trim 13G

Seattle, March 7.

Outstanding news here this round is the terrific biz being registered by "Samson and Delilah" at Paramount with scale upped to $1 top. Also doing nicely is "Key To City" solid at Music Hall.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; 59-84)—"Stromboli" (RKO). (2d wk). Way off at $2,500 in 4 days. Last week, big $8,000.

Coliseum (Evergreen) (1,877; 59-84)—"Capt. China" (Par) and "West of Wyoming" (Mono). Good $9,000 in 8 days. Last week, "Sundowners" (EL) and "Palooka Meets Humphrey" (Mono), not bad $7,800.

Fifth Avenue (Evergreen) (2,349; 59-84)—"Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) and "Blue Grass Kentucky" (Mono) (2d wk). Way off at $6,500 after last week's great $14,300.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,650; 59-84)—"Ambush" (M-G) and "Flying Saucer" (FC) (2d wk). Good $6,500. Last week, great $12,200.

Music Box (Hamrick) (800; 59-84)—"Foolish Heart" (RKO) (2d wk). Solid $4,000, after swell $7,300 last week.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,200; 59-

'12 O'Clock' Lofty $40,000 Paces Chi; 'Heiress'-De Wolfe Rousing With 56G, 'Female' Fat 15G, '3d Man' Big 16G, 3d

Chicago, March 7.

Top quality pics in first-runs and holdovers are doing fine business this week. Coal shortage is helping rather than hindering since kids got an extra day off last week. Theatre marquees are dimmed. "12 O'Clock High" is building to sock $40,000 at Woods for best showing of session. "The Heiress," with Billy DeWolfe topping stageshow at Chicago, looks solid $56,000. "Deadly Is Female" is in for fat $15,000 at Grand.

"Third Man," in third week at Selwyn, shapes to reach $16,000, only $1,000 behind record opening week. "Cinderella" is mighty $30,000 in second frame at Palace. "Battleground" looks stalwart $15,000 in fourth frame at State-Lake. "Quicksand" and Eddie Hubbard disk jockey revue, in second week at Oriental, is still okay at $35,000.

Estimates for This Week

Chicago (B&K) (3,400; 50-98)—"The Heiress' (Par) with Billy DeWolfe onstage. Solid $56,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB) with June Havoc onstage (2d wk), slow $31,500.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,500; 50-98)—"Guilty of Treason" (EL) (2d wk). Moderate $8,000. Last week, oke $10,000.

Selwyn (Shubert) (1,000; 98-$1.20)—"Third Man" (SRO) (3d wk). Word-of-mouth building gross to sensational $16,000. Last week, $13,000.

State-Lake (B&K) (2,700; 50-98)—"Battleground" (M-G) (4th wk). Continuing staunch at $15,000. Last week, $17,000.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 50-98)—"Intruder in Dust" (M-G) (2d wk). Smart $10,000. Last week, $13,000.

Woods (Essaness) (1,073; 50-98)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th). Boff $40,000. Last week, "Foolish Heart" (RKO) (5th wk), great $11,000.

World (Indie) (587; 80)—"Bicycle Thief" (Indie) (3d wk). Stalwart $6,000. Last week, $6,500.

'Rupert'-Vaude Frothy $17,500, St. Loo; 'Pinky' Sockeroo With $17,000

St. Louis, March 7.

With a break in bad weather over the weekend, biz at top film houses shot upwards. "12 O'Clock High" is displaying hefty boxoffice power at the St. Louis, for best showing in the city. "Pinky" is comparatively as big with great session at the smaller Ambassador. "Great Rupert" with vaudeville shapes smart at the vast Fox. "Key to City" looks okay in second round at Loew's.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (F&M) (3,000; 50-75)—"Pinky" (20th). Great $17,000. Last week, "The Heiress" (Par), $11,000.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 50-75) — "Great Rupert" (EL) and vaude. Smart $17.500. Last week, "Port of New York" (EL) and vaude, $15,000.

St. Louis (F&M) (4,000; 50-75)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th). Lofty $18,000. Last week, "All King's Men" (Col) and "Pirates of Capri" (FC) (2d wk), $12,000.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net, i.e., without the 20% tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Horn' Husky In Frisco, $15,000

San Francisco, March 7.

Boxoffice takings appear to have been slowed down a bit by the summer temperatures. The number of holdovers in the larger houses also is hurting the overall biz picture. "Young Man With Horn," nice at St. Francis, is making the best showing of newcomers although "Red Shoes" is rated fine at United Artists. "Mother Didn't Tell Me" is thin at the Fox while "Intruder in Dust" is just okay at Golden Gate.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,844; 60-85)—"Intruder in Dust" (M-G) and "Appointment Crime" (Indie). Okay $13,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO) (2d wk), dropped down to $9,200.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; 60-95)—"Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) and "Call of Forest" (Lip). Thin $15,000. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB) and "Unmasked" (Rep) a fair $17,500.

Warfield (Loew's) (2,656; 60-85)—"Malaya" (M-G) (2d wk). Off to $13,500. Last week, hefty $28,000 in 10 days.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 60-85)—"Backfire" (WB) and "Capt. China" (Par) (2d wk). Possible $13,000. Last week, big $21,500.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; 60-85)—"Young Man With Horn" (WB). Nice $15,000. Last week, "Samson Delilah" (Par) (6th wk), $9,000.

Orpheum (No. Coast) (2,448; 55-85)—"Francis" (U) (2d wk) and "Bodyhold" (Col): Fancy $16,000. Last week, "Francis" alone, tremendous $25,000.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,207; 55-85)—"Red Shoes" (EL). Fine $10,000 or near. Last week, "Deadly is Female" (UA), only $4,000.

Stagedoor (Ackerman-Rosener) (370; 85-$1)—"Saints and Sinners" (Indie) (2d wk). Good $5,500. Last week, nice $6,500.

Clay (Roesner) (400; 65-85)—"Chips Are Down" (Indie) (4th wk). Good $2,200. Last week, $2,500.

Larkin (Roesner) (400; 65-85)—"Scott of Antartic" (EL) and "Canterbury Tail" (EL). Nice $3,600. Last week, "Devil in Flesh" (Indie) (10th wk), okay $2,400.

'Key' Smooth $16,000 In Buff; 'Francis' 11G, 2d

Buffalo, March 7.

Biz is not strong this round, with some of new fare failing to hold up. "Key to City" and "Chain Lightning" loom as best bets. "Francis" is doing well on holdover.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loews) (3,500; 40-70)—"Key to City" (M-G). Fine $16,000 or better. Last week, "Twelve O'Clock High" (20th), $15,500.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 40-70)—"Paid in Full" (Par) and "Pirates of Capri" (FC). Okay $14,000 or close. Last week, "Capt. China" (Par) and "Backfire" (WB), $13,500.

Center (Par) (2,100; 40-70)—"Chain Lightning" (WB). May climb to sturdy $11,000 or over. Last week, "Samson and Delilah" (Par) (4th wk), $8,500.

Lafayette, (Basil) (3,000; 40-70)—"Francis" (U) and "Rugged O'Riordans" (U) (2d wk). Holding well at $11,000. Last week, socko $17,000.

Century (20th Cent) (3,000; 40-70)—"Trapped" (EL) and "The Black Book" (EL). Mild $9,000. Last week, "Foolish Heart" (RKO) and "Stampede" (Mono), good $13,000.

'12 O'Clock' Tall $20,000, Mont'l; 'Samson' 38G, 2d

Montreal, March 7.

Bitter cold weather is not slowing biz at most first-runs. Both the holdover of "Samson" at Loew's, still huge, and "12 O'Clock High" at Capitol are doing great. Even comparatively bigger at smaller Imperial is "Iwo Jima," with giant takings.

Estimates for This Week

Loew's (C.T.) (2,855; 40-65)—"Samson" (Par) (2d wk). Holding well at wow $38,000, following $47,000 opener.

Capitol (C.T.) (2,412; 34-60)—"12 O'Clock" (20th). Sock $20,000. Last week, "Intruder" (M-G), dim $5,000.

Palace (C.T.) (2,625; 34-60)—"Lady Takes Sailor" (WB). Good $13,000. Last week, "Tell To Judge" (Col), strong $14,500.

Princess (C.T.) (2,131; 34-60)—"Pirates of Capri" (FC). Nice $9,000. Last week, "Malaya" (M-G) (2d wk), fair $9,000.

Imperial (C.T.) (1,839; 26-45)—"Iwo Jima" (Rep) and "Belle Mexico" (Rep). Colossal $12,000. Last week, "Seabiscuit" (WB) and "House Across Street" (WB), $9,000.

Orpheum (C.T.) (1,040; 34-60)—"Barbary Pirate" (Col) and "Girl's School" (Col). Oke $4,500. Last week, "Traveling Saleswoman" (Col) and "St. Ives" (Col) (2d wk), $3,500.

'Outlaw' Record $26,500, Philly

Philadelphia, March 7.

"The Outlaw" is setting an all-time record at the Stanton this week. Pic has been getting substantial biz all day long, and street lines at night. Old high was set during a holiday week. Other new product looms only fair. "Love Happy" shapes smash at Karlton. "Young Man With a Horn" looms fair at Mastbaum.

Estimates for This Week

Aldine (WB) (1,303; 50-99)—"Outside Wall" (U) (3d wk). Down to $9,000, after hefty $15,500 second week.

Boyd (WB) (2,360; 50-99)—"Francis" (U) (2d wk). Nice $15,000 after neat $19,000 opener.

Earle (WB) (2,700; 70-$1.25)—"Samson and Delilah" (5th wk). Holding up well with $17,000. Last week, sturdy $22,500.

'12 O'CLOCK' HIGH IN OMAHA WITH $13,500

Omaha, March 7.

"Twelve O'Clock High" is easily top grosser this week at Paramount, with great $13,500. "Chain Lightning" and "Mule Train" looks average at Brandeis. "Sundowners" at Orpheum is light.

Estimates for This Week

Paramount (Tristates) (2,800; 16-65) — "Twelve O'Clock High" (20th). Very big $13,500 or near. Last week, "Mrs. Mike" (UA), okay $10,800.

Brandeis (RKO) (1,500; 16-65)—"Chain Lightning" (WB) and "Mule Train" (Col). Average $7,500. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO) (2d wk), $3,600 in six days.

Orpheum (Tristates) (3,000; 16-65) — "Sundowners" (EL) and "Song Surrender" (Par). Light $9,500. Last week, "Francis" (U), smash $15,000 and better than expected.

State (Goldberg) (865; 16-65)—"Bagdad" (U) and "The Guilty" (Mono). Fair $4,500. Last week, "Battleground" (M-G) (6th wk), great $4,000.

B'way Toboggans Without Snow; Hope-Russell in Hustle for Record 142G With 'China,' 'Mother' NSG 48G

Continued cold weather, Lent and the economic downbeat took a heavy toll at most Broadway first-runs up until the first of this week, with the current stanza witnessing most business still on the skids. Lifting of the brownout Monday (6) plus milder temperatures began to help business, with the end of the coal strike and trade pickup in other business lines counted on to give N. Y. deluxers a further lift.

Presence of Bob Hope and overflow houses at the Paramount might normally have been expected to bolster trade at many Broadway theatres, but the dearth of free-spending money had the opposite effect, many opposition theatres reporting that the Par's great week was further cutting into their takes.

Despite opening in rain Wednesday (1) morning, Hope and Jane Russell, with supporting stageshow and "Capt. China," are hanging up a record of $142,000 in the first week at the Paramount flagship. This tops the old high of $130,000 made the first seven days by "Samson and Delilah" last Christmas week. With Hope the obvious magnet, the combo failed to dip in the face of bitterly cold weather up until Sunday (5), with upped scale and six stageshows daily (excepting Sunday) making it all possible. Peculiar feature of his appearance at the Par is that Hope has been drawing big crowds show after show; usual sluff-off just before 6 p.m. not being the case.

Principal new bill, "Mother Didn't Tell Me," with stageshow, is a major disappointment at the Roxy, with a very slow $48,000 likely. "Mafia" at the Rialto is probably the brightest newcomer, with sock $10,500. "Borderline" started out stoutly, being passably okay $14,000 at the Criterion for first week.

Biggest holdover is "Cinderella," with smash $48,000 in second session at the Mayfair, Walt Disney opus doing surprisingly strong night business, with, of course, the sock matinee trade. Second week of "Three Came Home" is down to around $30,000 at the Astor but big in view of conditions.

"Stage Fright," with stageshow, is off to mild $104,000 for second frame at the Music Hall, but stays a third.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 60-$1.50)—"Three Came Home" (20th) (3d wk). Initial holdover session ended Monday (6) night held comparatively well in view of conditions, with $30,000; first week was rousing $38,000.

Bijou (City Inv.) (589; $1.20-$2.40)—"Red Shoes" (EL) (72d wk). Off a bit to $8,000 after $8,500 last round. Holding consistently around this level, week after week, though brownout hurt this stanza. Stays on indef.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 55-$1.50)—"Malaya" (M-G) (3d wk-3 days). Second frame slipped to $33,000 after very mild $45,000 opener, below expectancy. Going just three extra days past second week, then "Black Hand" (M-G) with Art Mooney orch, Pied Pipers, Harvey Stone come in Saturday (11).

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 50-$1.75)—"Borderline" (U). First week ending next Friday looks likely to reach fair $14,000. In ahead, "Woman in Hiding" (U), $16,000 in 10 days.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 50-$1.20)—"Outlaw" (RKO) (3d wk). Down to $20,000 this round after nice $26,000 last session, which is much better than many recent opening weeks here.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 50-$1.20)—"Cinderella" (RKO) (3d wk). Holding very well in view of general conditions, with smash $48.000 in initial holdover frame ended last night (Tues.). First week was giant $51,000, one of biggest opening weeks here.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 55-$1.20)—"Dakota Lil" (20th) and vaude. Dull $15,000, and loss on week. Last week, "Father Is Bachelor" (Col) and vaude, mild $17,000 in eight days. House has been in red several weeks now.

Paramount (Par) (3,664; 90-$1.80)—"Capt. China" (Par) and Bob Hope, Jane Russell, Les Brown orch, Condos & Brandow onstage (2d wk). Bob Hope is giving Par flagship new all-time high of $142,000 in first seven days ended last night (Tues.). Opened with record day, and kept up terrific pace, with six shows daily excepting Sunday, when house opened at $1.80. Leaning strictly on Hope, et al., for draw, with most crix reviewing stageshow and giving pic light mention. Stays over just one week as originally scheduled. "Francis" (U) opens March 15.

Park Avenue (U) (583; 90-$1.50)—"Astonished Heart" (U) (4th wk). Third week ended Monday (6) was off sharply to $6,000 after $9,500 for second.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 80-$2.40) — "Stage Fright" (WB) and stageshow (2d wk). Down to $104,000 after mild $115,000 opening week despite nice crix appraisal. Goes third week, with "Woman of Distinction" (Col) coming in prior to Easter Show film, which is "Daughter of Rosie O'Grady" (WB).

Rialto (Mage) (594; 44-98)—"Mafia" (Indie) (2d wk). First week ended last night (Tues.) was very big $10,500, and naturally holds. In ahead, "Peddling in Society" (Indie), $7,000.

Rivoli (UAT-Par) (2,092; 90-$1.80)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (11th wk). Again off at $16,000 after $19,500, below hopes, for 10th week. However, both are okay for this stage of run.

Roxy (20th) (5,886; 80-$1.75) — "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) with Beatrice Kay, Buck & Bubbles, Beatrice Kraft and Her Dancers heading stage bill. On first week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks slow $48,000, highly disappointing and one of dullest initial stanzas here in months. Holds but only briefly. In ahead, "Willie Marching Home" (20th) and stageshow (2d wk), $47,000.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-$1.50)—"The Outriders" (M-G). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Key to City" (M-G) (5th wk), only $9,500 after slight $10,000 last week.

Strand (WB) (2,756; 55-$2) — "Chain Lightning" (WB) and Latin Quarter Revue onstage (3d-final wk). Down to $24,000 or less this round after slow $29,000 for second round, less than expectancy. "Perfect Strangers" (WB), with George Shearing Quintet, Tito Guizar, Roger Ray, George Andre Martin onstage, opens Friday (10).

Sutton (R & B) (561; 90-$1.50)—"Fallen Idol" (SRO) (17th wk). The 16th frame ended Monday (6) held very nicely at $6,900 after $8,200 last week. Continues.

Trans-Lux (60th St.) (453; 74-$1.50) — "Tight Little Island" (U) (11th wk). The 10th week ended last Saturday (4) was still holding well at $6,000 after $7,500 in week ahead. Stays on.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 95-$1.50) — "Third Man" (SRO) (5th wk). Continues to show real stamina, with current session about $25,000 as against last week's $27,500. Holds again.

'Horn' Hep 17G, Toronto; 'Willie' Hefty $10,000

Toronto, March 7.

With heavy snowstorms at beginning of week, biz eased off, with "Young Man With Horn" leading and "Willie Comes Marching Home" up there with the newcomers. Meanwhile, holdovers of "Heiress" and "Hamlet" are doing satisfactorily.

Estimates for This Week

Downtown, Glendale, Scarboro, State (20th) (1,059; 955; 698; 694; 35-60) — "Dakota Lil" (20th) and "Blondie's Hero" (Col). Big $11,000. Last week, "Savage Splendor" (RKO) and "Threat" (RKO), $12,000.

Eglinton, Victoria (FP) (1,080; 1,140; 40-70)—"Heiress" (Par) (2d wk). Fine $12,500 after last week's big $16,500.

Fairlawn, Odeon (Rank) (1,200; 2,390; 50-$1.20) — "Hamlet" (EL) (2d wk). Fine $15,000 after last week's smash $18,000.

Imperial (FP) (3,373; 40-70) — "12 O'Clock High" (20th) (3d wk). Okay $10,500 after last week's $15,000.

Loew's (Loew) (2,096; 40-70) — "East Side, West Side" (M-G) (2d wk). Nice $7,500 after last week's $9,500.

Nortown, University (FP) (959; 1,556; 40-70) — "Young Man With Horn" (WB). Terrific $17,000. Last week, "Jolson Sings Again" (Col) (5th wk), $8,500.

Shea's (FP) (2,386; 40-70) — "Willie Comes Marching Home" (20th). Big $10,000. Last week, "All King's Men" (Col) (4th wk), $6,000.

Uptown (Loew) (2,743; 40-70)—"Ambush" (M-G). Light $5,000. Last week, "Intruder in Dust" (M-G), $4,500.

Sharp Upbeat in Legit Is Seen In Aussie; More Foreign Talent Wooed

Sydney, Feb. 28.

Sharp upbeat in live shows in Aussie is envisioned from 1950 on, according to plans now being set by J. C. Williamson, D. B. O'Connor and the Fullers, with the Tivoli loop included.

Williamson has "Oklahoma!," now in its second year; "Annie Get Your Gun," in its third year, and "Streetcar Named Desire," which got away to a boff start in Melbourne recently. The Fullers currently have "One Wild Oat," already passed its 100th performance in Sydney, and "Is Your Honeymoon Really Necessary?" Dave Martin has a hit with Arthur Askey in "The Love Racket" in Melbourne.

D. B. O'Connor, responsible for the importation here of the Old Vic Co. with Sir Laurence Olivier, the Ballet Rambert and the Stratford-on-Avon Shakespeare Memorial Players, planes to London this week to look for more talent for Aussie and New Zealand tours. O'Connor is bringing back the Stratford-on-Avon Players in 1952 for a year's run; most likely will hook another deal with the Old Vic Co., and possibly reline a Down Under repeat with the Ballet Rambert.

The Fullers are still dickering with Maurice Chevalier to do an Aussie trip, and general manager A Ben Fuller, presently in London, is said to be about to sign up British, U. S. and French talent for here.

Williamson, leader in legit, is presently dickering with several topflight British and U. S. stars for here. Apart from "Oklahoma!," "Annie," "Streetcar" and Gilbert-Sullivan opera troupe, and Robert Morley, now in New Zealand with "Edward, My Son," Williamson will do "Song of Norway" and "Harvey" here this season.

Legit is presently so strong that pleas will go out to the government for permission to erect new houses in Sydney and Melbourne as soon as possible. Sites have already been gotten; it's just a question of securing a governmental okay. New Robert Menzies Liberal Party government, it's rumored, will soon ease the dollar takeaway for imported U. S. talent, with a revaluation of the Aussie pound seen a certainty in the very near future.

FULLER SIT-IN STRIKE FOR ADELAIDE HOUSE

Adelaide, Feb. 28.

Sir Ben Fuller planed in from Sydney to "squat" at the Majestic here to prevent being ousted when house comes under the auctioneer's hammer March 31. Majestic is owned by the Tolley Estate, execs of which declare that the Fuller lease expires April 17, '50.

Fuller said before leaving Sydney that the price asked for the theatre was "away up in the clouds," pointing out that under still operative wartime regulations he can't be evicted irrespective of who buys the theatre. He said he's going to stay "put" until the estate execs "see reason."

Majestic, a 1,000-seater, is used by the Fullers for pix, legit and revue.

New British Group Set To Aid on Financing Films

London, March 7.

A new organization which will provide film completion finance has been established by a new company with a nominal capital of $420,000. Outfit is known as Film Finances, Ltd., and will provide completion guarantees for independent producers.

Principal figure behind the new organization is W. B. Cullen, well-known city and West End business man, and his co-directors are A. H. P. Hope and R. E. F. Garrett. The new outfit aims to regularize the business of completion guarantees and by technical advice to assist independents to limit budget excesses.

It's reported that Film Finances, Ltd., has come to an understanding with the government's National Film Finance Corp. in regard to loans advanced by them.

U.S. Acts Set for Blacks' Hylton London Revue

London, Feb. 21.

George and Alfred Black, besides operating their own show at the Opera House, Blackpool, this year, in which they star Tessie O'Shea, Nat Jackley and Ben Yost Guards, will also be responsible for the show at the Winter Garden theatre. This will be headed by Jimmy Edwards, Joy Nicholls and Dick Bentley, toppers in BBC's No. 1 radio show, "Take It From Here."

Show will be presented in conjunction with Jack Hylton, and unlike the present presentation at Victoria Palace, will be a revue, not a straight vaudeville show. Supporting the trio will be several American acts, including the Costello Twins and Nicki, the dog which proved one of the outstanding attractions in Emile Littler's "Little Miss Muffet" pantomime at the London Casino.

$ Lack Still Nips U.S. Films Abroad

Washington, March 7.

The dollar shortage continues to squeeze the American film industry in all parts of the world. Not only are the American companies failing to get much of their earnings out, but U. S. pictures are running up against increased barriers in many of the nations, according to reports of the motion picture photographic branch of the U. S. Dept. of Commerce.

New Commerce Dept. studies reflect the situation in Bolivia, Argentina, Iraq, Indonesia, Indo China and Uruguay. In Bolivia, while the Ministry of Finance has continued to allot $18,000 monthly for the import of foreign pix, banks have not been granting foreign exchange for the purpose since the end of last September. There was no assurance that the near future would see any improvement.

In Argentina, Hollywood is not only failing to get its money out, but it cannot get import licenses. No such licenses for U. S. pictures have been issued since March, 1949. Result has been reissues of many old prints already in the country. The release of U. S. pictures in Argentina has fallen steadily. In 1948 U S. released 261 pictures there. In 1949 the number was down to 195, including 52 reissues.

There is trouble getting money out of Iraq and of working out an arrangement for systematic distribution there. While U. S. pictures have been grossing about 80% of all the boxoffice in Indonesia, says Commerce Dept., "U. S. distributors receive less than 50% of the allocation of foreign exchange. We are also having trouble in Indo China. Most of the American films which have gone in there recently have been sold outright to French interests, which have imported them as French pictures."

Uruguay, normally one of the best countries to do business with, and with the fewest restrictions, is now running into increased difficulties in obtaining the necessary dollar exchange to pay for imported pictures.

British Treasury Okays $164,000 'B' Pool Payment

London, March 7.

First payment in the "B" pool since sterling devaluation has now been authorized by the Treasury. It is a token payment of $164,000 and makes the total now paid $1,064,000. There have been two previous payments, one last August for $500,000 and an earlier one of $400,000.

It's claimed in London that it will take some time before the final figures of British films earnings in America can be calculated and thus, in consequence, the complete reckoning of how much should be paid into the pool must be delayed.

Never Rains But—

Metro's foreign dept. is laid low on a wholesale basis with a variety of ailments and infirmities. David Lewis, Continental supervisor, is home, ailing. Charles Goldsmith, British coordinator, has been hit by the virus. Joseph Rosthal, legal adviser, is confined to his chair by gout.

Added to these troubles, Maurice (Red) Silverstein, Latin American supervisor, is away from his office because of his wife's pneumonia bout. Seymour Mayer's wife is undergoing a siege of phlebitis. Mayer is exec aide to Arthur Loew, head of the dept.

International Film Producers Congress In Paris Draws 16 Nations

Paris, Feb. 28.

The Congress of International Film Producers opened Saturday (25) with 16 nations in attendance (France, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Great Britain, Greece, Israel, Italy, Norway, Netherlands, Portugal, Sweden and Switzerland). The U. S., though not a participant, has sent an observer to study any new projects set up. Reps will meet every day at the Film Palace and discuss such matters as establishing a common film statute, the question of author's rights, technical relations in co-production, international exchange and the question of television.

During the conference France will screen five of her latest unreleased films, and the pick of her better short subjects. There is no contest involved, France is playing host and giving foreign producers an eyeful of her latest hopefuls. Pix chosen are Georges Lacombe's "Prelude to Glory," featuring the Italian child musical prodigy Roberto Benzi; E. E. Reinert's "Rendezvous Avec La Chance," Jean Cocteau's "Orphee," Marcel Carne's "La Marie De Port" and Marcel Achard's "La Valse De Paris," with Pierre Fresnay.

Galas and lavish cocktaileries will also be included to lighten the business burden. On hand to lend the needed filmic glitter will be such lovelies as Brigette Auber, Cecile Aubry, Niclole Courcel, Marie Dea, Daniele Delorme, Nicole Stephane and Jacqueline Gauthier. If no industry shaking decisions are forthcoming from this conclave it at least has served as a means of usage of the $1,000,000 Film Palace and has given the French film industry some needed publicity.

Parnell, Talent Fined On Panto Presentation

London, Feb. 28.

Fines totaling $200 were imposed at Sheffield on charges that parts of a pantomime had not been approved by the Lord Chamberlain (who is censor of the theatre in Britain).

Artists concerned, the O'Gorman Bros., were each fined $14. Penalties of $28 were imposed on Val Parnell, the licensee, and Lewis Edward Pierrepoint, the manager. The production manager was fined $84, with an additional $30 costs.

Eire May Have Its Own Coney On Bull Island, Dublin Bay

Dublin, March 7.

Plans have been submitted to the Dublin City Council for the establishment of a pleasure park on Bull Island, Dublin Bay, by Pleasure Parks, Ltd. Two golf clubs are already located on the island, which is linked to Dollymount, nabe area of the city, by bridge. Island is also location of a bird sanctuary. Company seeking to lease site is ready to spend an initial £700,000 to provide pleasure gardens, amusements, swimming baths, cinema, terpery and other beachside entertainments, and payment of a rental of about £5,500 per annum is proposed for payment to the City Council when full development of site is reached.

Council will be asked to spend about £300,000 on initial development of site before company takes over. Area currently yielding no contribution to Council would, when developed, return about £14,000 a year in addition to rental. Council has an additional plan, sponsored by its town planners, to dam part of the Bay in the vicinity of Bull Island to provide boating lake under its "Blue Lagoon" scheme which got shelved for economy a year or two back.

J. B. McGarry and D. McIlvenna have represented the company in talks with Council officers, but other interests will be consulted before Council takes final decision.

RKO's 20th British Anni Marked by Special Drive

London, March 7.

The 20th anniversary of the formation of RKO in the United Kingdom is being celebrated by a special sales drive which will cover 26 weeks from yesterday (6) until Sept. 2.

RKO was first formed in Britain during 1930 and in the last 20 years has achieved a high reputation for showmanship and fair trading. During the period of the drive, much of the company's top product will be available, including "My Foolish Heart," now on West End pre-release, "Gunga Din," "The Return of the Bad Men," "Holiday Affair," "A Dangerous Profession," "Tarzan's Magic Fountain," "Mighty Joe Young," "She Wore a Yellow Ribbon," "Stromboli" and a host of other major productions.

Europe Producers To Limit Pix Fests

London, Feb. 28.

Positive moves to limit the number of continental film festivals to one annual jaunt, have been taken at the first meeting of the newly-formed International Federation of Film Producers Assn. which has been held in Cannes. A motion to this effect was unanimously adopted and a sub-committee is now probing the question in greater detail.

For some time there have been mixed feelings by producers in London — and it is believed they were shared by Hollywood filmmakers—on the value of continental festivals to the industry. Last year British producers officially participated at Knokke, Cannes and Venice, largely because it was felt that a definite boycott would have a detrimental effect on the future selling of British product. It's understood that there will be no festival in Cannes this year, but the Venice biennial will take place as usual towards the end of August.

A British film festival next year, to coincide with the Festival of Britain 1951, is still being mulled, but nothing has yet been decided. Economy reasons have necessitated the slashing of the budget for sponsored documentaries which were to be made available for showing at the exhibition theatre, and only a small number is now contemplated. Feature films are not being sponsored, but pix which measure up to a high standard and have particular merit in connection with the festival will be given a special festival seal.

British producers are also proposing to take a more active interest in the documentary section of the Edinburgh Festival in August and will seek for a larger representation than in previous years. In many cases, films made and sold as entertainment, such as "Scott of the Antarctic," would, by their very nature, qualify for presentation as "realist" subjects.

Gambling Gets Big Hypo At Argentine Resort

Buenos Aires, Feb. 25.

Another eight roulette tables, six chemin de fer and two trente et quarante tables have been inaugurated at the Mar del Plata Casino, in addtion to the 80 already in operation at the start of the summer season, at this mammoth Atlantic Coast resort.

The new gambling rooms are operated separately from those of the Casino proper, and form part of the new Provincial hotel, operated by the Buenos Aires provincial government. All profits from the gambling are taken by the government and are supposed to be re-invested in the building of roads, public buildings and new piers and amusement parks, or in the creation of industries which will add to the wealth of the already rich province.

BBC MULLS TWO SHOWS WITH IRISH COMEDIANS

Dublin, March 7.

Two new comedy shows currently being mulled by the BBC for English listeners will feature Irish comedians. Harry O'Donovan, scriptwriter for Jimmy O'Dea, whose "Irish Half-Hours" was a peak listening program a couple of seasons back, has been huddling with BBC execs and a new series may be coming up this summer.

Ted Kavanagh. who scripted the late Tommy Handley's ITMA show, may also come through with a new series. This one will feature Noel Purcell, who is currently topping the bill for a season at the Theatre Royal here. Purcell is leaving for London next week for a series of "Irish Week" appearances at terperies.

BBC is currently in an Irish mood, apparently, as Eamonn Andrews—ace gabber on Radio Eireann—has recently been signed to do the Maurice Winnick "Ignorance Is Bliss" show.

'Salesman' OK in Vienna; 'Desire' Sock in Aussie

Vienna, March 7.

Critical accolades that greeted the opening of Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" at the Josefstaedter theatre last week, marks the 15th successful German adaptation of an American play to be produced here by Ernst Lothar. Both Anton Edthofer and Lothar's wife, Adrienne Gessner, were praised for their respective performances as the salesman and his wife.

Drama is scheduled to follow its showing here with engagements in Zurich, Munich and Berlin.

Lengthy Run for 'Desire'

Melbourne, March 7.

J. C. Williamson production of "Streetcar Named Desire" looks set for a nifty run here and elsewhere. Despite some semi-cold reviews, play is hot at the b.o.

Show hasn't been curbed on dialog, Williamson claims, pointing out it's the London version used for this booking.

See Dangers in Aiming European Films for Mass Yank Audience

Problem of broadening the American market for Italian and French pictures admittedly is a tough one, according to Alfredo Guarini, veepee of ENIC, an Italian film organization which controls the Cinecitta studios in Rome as well as chain of 160 theatres throughout Italy. In New York to work out a joint production deal with U. S. filmmakers, he pointed out this week that continental producers would likely lose part of their domestic revenue if they tailor their product specifically for the mass Yank audience.

While some European picture execs feel that the way to accomplish a financial cleanup in the U. S. is to win extensive circuit bookings, Guarini thinks that the added overhead in making such an invasion might not be worth the trouble. Instead, he believes it more practical to concentrate on turning out films of artistic merit such as "Bicycle Thief" and "Shoe Shine," which have no difficulty in pulling patrons to the art houses.

Guarini is skeptical of the value of dubbing as a means of developing American audiences. This technique, he said, may be suitable for a "commercial" feature, but it would spoil the subtle situations of an artistic picture. He noted that in Italy dubbing is the rule for practically all imported product. But often it is so inaccurate as to change the meaning of a film completely. Oddly enough, he declared, "Joan of Arc" (RKO) was improved by dubbing whereas "Letter to Three Wives" (20th) suffered since the American dialog could not be translated faithfully.

Meanwhile, all possibilities of improving U. S. grosses for Italian film imports will be explored by Dr. Renato Gualino, prez of the Italian Film Producers Assn., who is serving on the Motion Picture Assn. of America's new Advisory Unit for Foreign Films. He arrived in New York last week to confer with MPAA head Eric Johnston and B. Bernard Kreisler, who heads the organization's consultative service for foreign pic producers seeking an American market for their product. Delegates from five other countries are due here later this year.

'Volcano' Gets Italy B.O. Boost from Interest In 'Stromboli' Rivalry

Genoa, March 7.

Greatly aided by tremendous advance publicity and public interest aroused by the rivalry between the two "island" pix ("Stromboli" is still to be released here), plus the Anna Magnani name, "Volcano," Artisti Associati-Panaria production, has turned in near-record grosses in initial Italian runs.

Figures show that 460,000 persons paid a total of 101,612,000 lire (approximately $156,000) to see "Volcano" in first-run engagements in the 10 principal cities.

Figures compare favorably with recent $138,000 gross of "Captain From Castile"; $126,000 for "Heaven Can Wait"; and $113,000 for "Forever Amber," though it is not up to the sensational $200,000 figure of "Joan of Arc" on its 10 firstrun dates. Breakdown by cities shows Rome ahead with $3,120, Milan $2,300, Turin $2,000, Genoa $1,600 and Catania (Sicily) ringing up a surprising $1,600 on 50,000 admissions. Returns from remaining cities were consistently strong.

Pic's big returns are surprising in view of the almost totally negative press reaction (including trade reviews) it had to buck.

Glasgow Orch Pit Strike Going to Arbitration

Glasgow, Feb. 28.

New development in current strike of musicians at three Glasgow theatres is the skedded meeting in London March 13 of the National Arbitration Tribunal.

It will consider the dispute between Independent Theatres Assn. and the Scottish Theatrical Proprietors and Managers Assn., jointly, and the Musicians Union.

Strike in orchestra pits is now in its second week. Standby musicians and one organist are filling in.

Rank Reversing; Will Stick to Cartoon Field

Washington, March 7.

The J. Arthur Rank Organization has reversed its previous position and will continue to produce cartoon films. About two months back, it had planned to get out of the animated cartoon field.

"The Rank Organization," according to the motion picture-photographic branch of the U. S. Dept. of Commerce, "now states that they are not terminating contracts with manufacturers who make products using the David Hand cartoon characters, but are in fact negotiating new contracts with manufacturers of other products which make use of these characters."

Jap 150% Admish Tax Cut to 100%

Tokyo, March 7.

Japan's 150% admission tax, heaviest in the world, was reduced Wednesday (1) to 100%. New rate will apply to all cinema and legit houses, although earlier plan called for reduction of levy to 70% for stage presentations. Tax was cut to 40% on admissions to museums, zoos, exhibits, etc., and for theatrical performances or sports events sponsored by students or amateur performers. Heretofore, flat 150% tax was tacked on all admission fees.

Reduction, which was recommended last fall by Prof. Carl S. Shoup of Columbia U., who headed a special mission in Japan to study tax problems, should hypo the lagging Nipponese theatre biz. High admission fees, coupled with the "tight money" situation in Japan today, have cut attendance figures about 45% from last year's, with the national b.o. gross dropping about 25%. Trade circles look for immediate upsurge in attendance, providing exhibs keep their own prices the same and pass on the full tax savings to the customer.

Experts predict slash will result in 3,000,000,000 yen ($8,000,000) drop in annual revenue from admission tax. Proceeds are split evenly between municipality and prefectural (state) governments. Reduction bill outlaws additional surtax which some local governments have added for good measure.

Japan's admission tax jumped from 50% to 200% shortly before the end of the war. In March, 1947, it was reduced to 100%, and in December of that year went up to 150%, where it has remained until this month. Industry has campaigned vigorously for reduction since early in the occupation, but got nowhere until the Shoup Tax Mission also recommended the cut, which virtually cinched it.

Britt Makes Debut in 'Ice' 100 Performances Late

London, March 7.

Maj Britt made her postponed London debut in "Cinderella on Ice" Feb. 28, coinciding with show's 100th performance. Swedish star broke her ankle on the eve of production and now steps into the title role, making a graceful and talented "Cinders."

Originally skedded for four weeks' run at Empress Hall, Earl's Court, where show opened as a Christmas attraction, demand for seats was so heavy that its season has been extended, with a break of four days to house the badminton championship games, already booked.

Discina Gets French Pix

Discina International Films acquired U. S. distribution rights to the French imports, "Operetta" and "Rubens," from the Interfilm Corp. Deal also included "Carnival in Flanders," a reissue.

First on Discina's 1950 release slate is "A Royal Affair," which preems at the Normandie, N. Y., March 8. Pic stars Maurice Chevalier.

SRO to Distrib 'Volcano' Through France, Belgium

Distribution rights to "Volcano" for France and Belgium have been acquired by Selznick Releasing Organization. Pic is the Anna Magnani starrer directed in Italy by William Dieterle and produced by Feruccio Caramelli's Artisti Associati. Motion Picture Sales Corp. has U. S. rights.

David O. Selznick has also been making deals for other product for distribution by his SRO abroad. Among pix recently acquired for France and Belgium was "Queen of Spades," an Associated British production.

Russkis Two-Time Forst When Viennese View Two Pic Versions Day & Date

Vienna, Feb. 28.

Vienna was treated to the strange situation of two different versions of one pic playing against each other in the same town, day-and-date. Film is the much litigated "Wiener Madeln," produced by Willi Forst in wartime and finally brought out in Forst's own release late in 1949 after five years of haggling over its ownership.

While Forst was cutting and synchronizing his own version of the Agfacolor musical starring himself, Russians at Zurich were working over a negative copy they had seized in 1945 when they took Berlin. They did their own cutting job and had it printed in Agfa labs in Prague, preeming their version in Berlin before Forst could break his own in Vienna.

But they waited till Forst's version had played almost 12 weeks at SRO in the Apollo in Vienna's French zone before opening the Kremlin-style "Madeln" in top Soviet house, Tabor, in the Red sector. Mostly local crix ogled the Moscow version and said that while it excelled in color (Zurich print is a poor job), the Forst version was the more entertaining. Exception was taken by the Commie press, which of course plumped for the Red edition.

Strangest move of all was that after playing to good biz for only three days, the Russkis yanked their "Madeln" and replaced it with the Soviet pic, "Seed of the Storm." No reason was given, since Forst had found it impossible to take any legal action. Industry is now waiting to see next Red move in the situation.

'ABSURDLY HIGH' QUOTA BRIT. PROBLEM: WARTER

London, March 7.

"Absurdly high" quota was listed by Sir Philip Warter, Associated British Picture Corp. topper, as one of the three major headaches facing the industry. The other two were the high incidence of entertainments duty and the growing menace of TV.

Warter, who was speaking at the ABC Showmanship Award dinner, said that as a result of collaboration between exhibitors and producers the Films Council was recommending that quota should be reduced to a reasonable level. He had long striven for this joint cooperation and was gratified that a last it had come about.

J. D. Goodlatte, ABC managing director, made a presentation to their winning showman, H. Clayton-Nutt, and 21 other district winners received certificates of merit. He also welcomed back C. J. Latta from his recent extended trip to the States.

British Ban on German, Jap Vauders Is to Stay

London, March 7.

Ten-year ban on the employment of German and Jap vaude artists in Britain is to stay. A ballot of Variety Artists Federation members showed vote of three to one in favor of its retention.

Ban was instituted at the end of the war in 1945, but there had been in recent months a growing demand that it should be lifted. It can now be expected to run its full course.

Brit. Pix Industry Awaits Offer On TV Showings; Deadlock Likely Till '52

London, March 7.

Three main sections of the British film industry will outline Thursday (9) the trade's views on radio and television to the Beveridge committee now taking evidence to determine the future five years' charter for the British Broadcasting Corp.

Since the postwar resumption of the British TV service, the film industry has been at loggerheads with the official policy and has insisted on some swap before contemplating any form of cooperation.

So far the requested recompense hasn't been forthcoming and as a result there has been a solid industry bar against film transmissions. Only oldies which have long since exhausted their commercial life, and generally speaking, can bring no credit either to the British or Hollywood studios, have been given a TV airing.

The compromise which the industry is seeking is that, in return for rights to a limited number of films, picture theatres should be permitted either to re-transmit BBC video programs or to receive their own TV entertainment direct from a central studio.

All the main circuits have been waiting for a government greenlight, and so have a number of independents. The two Rank groups, Odeon and Gaumont-British, have been raring to go for more than a year, and in 1948 demonstrated to the industry the fine receptive quality of their big-screen equipment. Since that date, A. B. Pathe expressed interest in the TV field and Sidney L. Bernstein's Granada group asked unavailingly for sanction to put up its own transmitting station.

It now seems that the deadlock is to continue until the expiration of the present BBC charter in 1952. It is possible, of course, that occasional transmissions in picture theatres may be sanctioned, but the general policy is expected to remain as is for the next two years. So long as the official reaction exists, there is no prospect of reversing the trade's attitude to permitting the telecasting of current motion pictures. In any event, the rentals offered of less than $1,000 for a single screening are regarded as being completely unrealistic.

Fredman Quits Imperadio To Be Indie Sales Exec

London, Feb. 28.

Eric S. Fredman has quit the board of Imperadio Pictures and has set up his own sales organization. His resignation doesn't mean his separation from the Wilcox organization, and he will be planing out to New York in the next 10 to 14 days to sell "Maytime in Mayfair" to American exhibs.

Fredman, who joined the Wilcox organization on demobilization from the Army in 1945, is setting up as an independent sales executive, but will continue handling foreign sales of Wilcox products. For the time being he is operating from the Wilcox office, but will be opening his own premises in the near future.

British Seek to Up French Pix Quota

London, March 7.

With the cooperation of the British government, new representations are to be made in France by British film producers to up the present quota of import licenses for British pix. Present quota allows for 121 films from Hollywood, with a further 65 from the rest of the world. Of the latter figure, the British share in 1949-50 was 20.

Sir Duff Cooper, recently appointed roving commissioner on the continent for the British Film Producers Assn., has been briefed and is expected to open discussions with the French authorities at an early date. At the same time, the producers have asked the Board of Trade to acquaint the British Embassy in Paris with the full facts so that their support may be forthcoming if required.

Cooper will also be asked to raise the method of distribution of visas for permitted films, as undue delay had been experienced during the current year. The last four permits for British films have only recently been received in London.

Sir Henry L. French, BFPA chief, explained at a press conference in London last Friday (3) that U. S. pix made in England come within the American quota and are not part of the British allocation. His definition of an American-made British film was one in which the entire continental earnings went to Hollywood and not to Britain. Participation films like "The Third Man" and "Gone To Earth" would rank as British, and if selected would come within the present export quota.

Vidor to Film Mining Pic on Scot Locale

Edinburgh, March 3.

King Vidor is planning to fly to West Lothian village near here to direct pic on Scottish mining tragedy, based on novel, "The Miracle at Cardenrigg," by local ex-pit worker Tom Hanlin.

Picture will be produced in Scotland at actual locale of the novel, fictitious Scots mining village bearing strong likeness to community near author's home-village of Armadale, West Lothian.

Story tells of tragedy which befalls miners when pit is flooded and men are trapped. Hanlin gave up digging coal few years back to devote himself to writing. He has won Atlantic Award with novel and published many short stories.

Pendennis Pictures will produce. Vidor directed "The Citadel," story by A. J. Cronin, which opens in Welsh mining community before moving to London's medico centre of Harley street.

Hamburg Opera for Eire

Dublin, March 7.

Hamburg State Opera Co. will perform seven operas here next month during a three-week season sponsored by the Dublin Grand Opera Society.

Frans Vroons, who is coming with the company, will also do special recitals.

Hamburg Pix Industry Due for Sharp Upbeat With State Finance

Hamburg, Feb. 28.

Plans are in work with Hamburg state authorities to give the local film industry—only second to Germany's biggest, Munich—a 7,000,000 marks (about $1,650,000) state credit.

Credit will go into three channels. About 2,750,000 marks ($650,000) would go as an investment credit to turn a former factory into a film production centre, with a capacity of 8 to 12 pix per year. It would provide for a five-year lease and a further 20-year option on the property at 2½% interest.

Another 750,000 marks ($170,000) would go as a credit to Real Film, a local production company and biggest in western Germany, at 5½% interest, repayable in 15 years. The credit is to boost Real's yearly capacity from eight to 12 pix.

Finally, a 3,500,000 marks ($630,000) credit would go to out-of-town producers, with the condition that pix, made with the aid of such credits, would be produced in Hamburg.

Venice Film Fair Agenda For Picture Bookings Set

Genoa, Feb. 28.

Further details on the Venice Film Fair, to run concurrently with the Film Festival (Aug. 20 to Sept. 10), where producers may show their pix to prospective buyers or to the press, have been announced.

Companies and producers who wish to show their films at the Fair, which will run independently of the Festival proper, must apply by July 30, submitting titles and technical data on the films.

Phil Reisman Sees Early Return Of U.S. Pix Imports Into Argentina

Resumption of U. S. film imports into Argentina within a matter of a few months was foreseen this week by Phil Reisman, RKO's foreign chief. Reisman returned to New York over the weekend from a tour of Latin America, including Buenos Aires.

RKO exec also forecast that the Yank companies would have all of their frozen coin out of Brazil by the end of this year. He said that economic conditions had improved materially all over Latin America, and particularly in Brazil since coffee prices had gone up.

"The most significant change noticeable," said Reisman, "is the fact there is now no anti-American or anti-Hollywood feeling in South America. What restrictions there are exist not as the result of discrimination, but because of economic conditions. They just don't have sufficient dollars. Things are improving, however, and with that I expect that the film situation will get better."

Although he feels that pix will again be going into Argentina shortly, Reisman opined there is little chance of getting any money out. No American films have been shipped into the Peron-dominated country for more than a year now. Those that were there before the ban was placed on import permits have just about been played out.

Reisman reported on his Latin American tour to foreign managers of the other major companies at a meeting at the Motion Picture Assn. of America yesterday (Tuesday.)

Argentine Minister Due

Washington, March 7.

Increased economic collaboration between Argentina and the U. S.—and with it an easing of the ban on importation of Hollywood films—is seen resulting from the impending visit here of Ramon Cereijo, Minister of the Treasury and chief of the National Economic Council. Cereijo, making his first U. S. trip, will head an Argentine delegation due March 20.

The attitude on U. S. imports of President Peron's economic chieftain is believed to have been softened somewhat by the recent visit to Buenos Aires of Edward G. Miller, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State. More specifically on the film question, Cereijo met recently in B. A. with U. S. Ambassador Stanton Griffis, who is former chairman of Paramount's executive committee. They worked out a plan which all the U. S. companies have not agreed to, but which may eventually in some form be adopted. It will be a gentleman's agreement, however, not an official decree.

Plan, as revealed several weeks ago, calls for importation of 12 to 17 pix per company per year. Distribs would have to agree that 25% of their earnings be invested locally and 75% remain in B. A. bank accounts indefinitely until dollars are available.

fantasy life of violence. The use of American gangster slang, he says, proves that these youths get their ideas from the films. It's time film producers gave up glorifying the gangster, he said.

French Getting Tough

Paris, March 7.

George Huisman, prexy of the French official pictures censorship board, has been fired from the job by Information Minister P. H. Teitgen for being too easy. The French mean to clamp down stringently on anything like lasciviousness or crime. M. Savin, an official in the Cour des Comptes, has been appointed in place of Huisman as prexy of the censorship board, whose membership has been increased from 14 to 18 so as to permit including a rep of the Families Assn.

Minister has also promulgated more ukases, one making trailers subject to censorship as well as the features, and another extending to 18 the age (formerly 16) debarring minors from certain showings.

Latin-American Chain Being Built for Mex Pic

Mexico City, Feb. 28.

Peliculas Mexicanas, distributor of Mexican pix abroad, headquartered here, is building a cinema chain in Latin-American key cities so as to enable Mexican films to meet competition. First house, the Cine Azteca, is skedded to open March 15 in Rio de Janiero, and work starts this month on another in Bogota, Colombia, according to Juan Bandera, company general manager. Bogota house will be ready in eight to 10 months. Cinemas are to follow in Havana and Lima.

Bandera said chain is aimed at the big towns because Mexican pix take care of themselves in the Latin-American hinterlands. Each cinema costs from $255,000-$400,000, Bandera said.

Russ Pix Crowd On China Screens

Washington Feb. 28.

The motion picture department of the Chinese Communist state's ministry of cultural affairs has released the 1950 plan for the state-owned film industry, revealing that approximately 75% of the films to be shown in China will be Russian products. Announcement said that 76 Soviet feature films will be synchronized into Chinese. Additionally, a large number of Soviet documentaries and educational films will also be shown.

At the same time, China's three nationalized motion picture studios, located in Manchuria, Peking and Shanghai, will produce only 26 features throughout 1950. Additionally, 66 newsreels, documentaries and cartoons will also be produced by the state-owned Chinese enterprises. This brings the number of features (Russian and Chinese) to 102.

Announced further stated that "the films produced by China's young state-owned film industry are still unable to meet the growing demand of the people, especially that of the workers and peasants," and therefore "efforts will be made to help private film companies in China to produce more pictures."

"Progressive" films from abroad will also be shown to the public, the statement added. It also said that 700 mobile cinema teams will be formed, to tour factories and the troops.

BRIGHT LONDON FUTURE FOR LONSDALE'S 'WAY'

London, March 7.

The Frederick Lonsdale touch has transformed the trivial theme of his new comedy, "The Way Things Go," into a bright and, at times, sparkling entertainment. Its opening at the Phoenix last Thursday (2) was received with considerable enthusiasm, and it earned unanimous raves from the London crix the next morning.

Show is presented by Stephen Mitchell and is acted by a top cast headed by Michael Gough, Glynis Johns and Ronald Squire.

London Legit Bits

London, March 7.

Peter Dearing has acquired new play by Dennis Sands titled "Deadlock." Play is skedded to open in West End, probably at the Comedy theatre, replacing "On Monday Next," end of May, after provincial tryout, and will star Freda Jackson . . . David Gray, director of "Detective Story," due at the Princes mid-March, is holding auditions for some of the male and femme roles. Has already signed Diana Chase (of the Billing and Chase vaudeville act) for comedy role, and dickering with Shirley McHugh, wife of Jimmy McHugh, former London head of Music Corp. of America, for one of the leads. Top male part will be played either by local star Hugh Macdermott or Douglass Montgomery.

British Ask United Aid To Offset Audience Drift

London, March 7.

Arthur Watts, newly-elected head of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn., tonight (Tues.) appealed for a united industry effort to stop the drift of patrons from theatres.

Speaking at the organization's banquet, Watts declared that net receipts don't float like clouds from record to record and emphasized that everyone must buckle down in a determined effort to bring prosperity to the industry.

Pix Potential In Orient Still Big, —Opines Ritchey

Balancing the Far East and European markets, Monogram International prez Norton V. Ritchey said in New York last week that there is a much bigger potential in the Orient, although actual returns are about even. He pointed out that quotas and trade restrictions tend to hamper continental business, whereas fewer regulations in the Far East bring about a larger volume of transactions in that area.

Ritchey's sizeup of those sales spheres were made at an industry press conference held for the company's Far East supervisor, William Osborne, who just arrived in the U. S. for homeoffice confabs after two years abroad. Overall business in his territory, Osborne said, has declined after the postwar peak of 1946-'47, but current grosses are still better than the prewar take.

Both Monogram execs were optimistic over Indonesia, where the company has established its own organization following withdrawal of the Motion Picture Export Assn. in that area last January. Japan was viewed bullishly in light of a recent distribution agreement inked with Shochiku Film Enterprises, Ltd., whereby latter firm will handle Monogram and Allied Artists product in that country for a five-year period. Deal calls for an okay from SCAP, but Ritchey feels that with the present trend toward Japanese economic independence, it won't be long until the license is granted.

Hongkong boxoffice, Osborne declared, is the best since the war's end, principally due to the influx of wealthy refugees from the mainland. There's a theatre building boom underway, with three firstrunners being erected by local interests. Remittances on film earnings are made on a basis of 70% official rate, while the balance is exchanged on the open market.

Monogram, as have other companies, has virtually written off China, but business is fairly profitable in Nationalist Formosa, thanks to a recent 50% reduction in the import duty, which usually came to around $800 per print. Summing up the outlook in other Far East countries, Osborne said that competition from native pictures, coupled with a lack of firstrun houses in Bombay and Calcutta to accommodate U. S. product, is tending to hurt Yank grosses in India.

too small for the company's requirements.

CBS-men say studio equipped to handle 10 or more television shows in years to come would be a primary requirement, since the net doesn't "want to make the same mistake when they built KNX." Within one year after opening, KNX was too small for company operations, with farming out of several shows necessary for lack of space. Studio at Columbia Square here is monopolized by Ed Wynn and net has Alan Young, Amos 'n' Andy, and several other teevee shows in preparation for the fall season, making CBS expansion of video production facilities imperative.

Russ, Poles Hold Pix Fests in Sweden; Polish Industry in Six-Year Plan

Stockholm, Feb. 28.

Sweden has seen its first real film festivals. The first opened here three weeks ago and was arranged by the Soyuzintorgkino, official representive of the Russian film industry, in connection with the 30th anniversary of Russian film production.

The second film festival opened here last week (22). This time it was the Polish Embassy, in cooperation with Film Polski and the Swedish-Polish Assn., that arranged it. Polish films shown were "Ulica Graniczna" ("Border Street"), a drama dealing with the Nazis hunting of Jews in occupied Warsaw in 1939; "Skarb" ("The Treasure"), a comedy of Warsaw after the war, and "Zakazane Piosenki" ("Forbidden Songs") another war-story glorifying the Polish underground and especially the Red Army.

Festival gives some interesting figures and information about the Polish film industry of today. There were 800 cinemas in Poland before the war, while only 100 were usable after the war. Now many have been rebuilt and many new ones have been opened. The total of cinemas in Poland today is 600. Many of them still use old equipment, which will be remedied in the present six-year plan. This plan also includes the building of many new cinemas, especially six new ones in Warsaw.

The state-owned Film Polski began in November, 1945, and started immediately to build up a large industry in Poland. Poland's Hollywood is located in the city of Lodz, with studios, laboratories, etc. A new laboratory in Warsaw was built in 1948 and there are plans of building a great "film-city" around Warsaw as well. The 16m film has also been introduced to Poland in large scale. Ambulating cinemas, which were completely unknown before the war, exist today to the total of 600, but the six-year plan includes a total of 3,000 such ambulating cinemas, all to use Polish-made equipment. Also, special film-schools as well as dramatic theatre-schools have been started in Poland by the present regime.

Production of documentary films seems to be the most important, no less than 70 documentaries being produced between 1945-48. Also, newsreels are regularly produced. During 1945-49 a total of 250 newsreels were shown. Number of feature films produced between 1945 and 1949 was 11, but the new plan calls for an annual production of 25 features.

Hearing Due on Pix Mgrs. Appeal vs. Rank Wage Cuts

London, March 7.

Appeal by cinema managers against wage cuts introduced by J. Arthur Rank's Circuits Management Assn., which embraces the Odeon and Gaumont-British groups, will be heard by the National Joint Appeal Board next Tuesday (14). Appeal is being lodged by the Society of Cinema Managers who claim that the downgrading clause in their agreement with the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. gives the right to cut salaries only where receipts fall below a certain weekly average for 12 months preceding the agreement of December, 1946.

The Society claims that CMA has calculated on the 12 months previous to June 25, 1949, and also claims that the seven days' notice on reductions was "completely inadequate and unreasonable."

Jap Comm'l Radio Bill Before Diet

Tokyo, Feb. 25.

The long heralded but frequently stalemated Radio Bill which will inaugurate commercial broadcasting in Japan has reached the stage of public hearings in the national legislature and may be on its way to final passage, along with two other related bills. Legislation to permit private broadcasting in Nippon has been in the "formulating" stage since October, 1945, but the measure is accorded a good chance to make the grade at last in the current session of the Diet (legislature).

In addition to the Radio Bill, which will break the Broadcasting Corp. of Japan's 25-year monopoly and permit private radio ventures, the other two measures under debate are the Broadcast Bill, which would reorganize BCJ as a public service corporation and permit it to continue to support itself by collecting listeners fees, and a bill to establish a Radio Regulatory Commission, similar to the American FCC, which would govern the entire industry.

Prominent Japanese in both the entertainment and business worlds have testified before a Diet committee on the proposed bills, with varying degrees of enthusiasm. Yaeko Mizutani, popular stage and screen actress, and Yoshie Fujiwara, Japan's leading operatic tenor, told the legislators the establishment of private broadcasting stations throughout Japan would result in a deconcentration of talent and a scramble for artists which would tend to disorganize the theatrical and entertainment industries.

A dozen or more business leaders have charged that the bills put too much stress on government supervision and would encourage the "bureaucratization" of the broadcasting biz. Others have warned that there are not enough channels for commercial transmitters unless many of the frequencies now used by BCJ are reassigned to new stations.

The government had received 39 applications for commercial broadcasting permits up to Feb. 15 and expects as many as 50 when the enabling legislation is passed.

BONDED IN BOUNCER RAP

Monroe, Mich., March 7.

Awaiting trial on a charge of passing a worthless check, two Hollywood film officials were freed on $2,500 bonds last week. The defendants, Harold Erickson, director, and Ray Pierson, producer, of Miramar Films, Inc., left for Los Angeles after posting bond.

The pair are accused of passing the check in payment for moving equipment from location to location here last summer during filming of part of "The Spark," starring Harold Lloyd, Jr.

Rossellini 'Machina' In Retakes; He's Still on It

Rome, Feb. 28.

Skeleton crew went to the Amalfi coast last week to re-shoot some extra scenes and retakes for Robert Rossellini's "La Machina Amazza Cattivi" ("The Machine That Kills Evil"). Picture will be wrapped up in about two weeks, according to Rudy Solmsen, local rep for Ilya Lopert, who will distribute the film.

Although the added sequences were handled by Luciano Emmer, Rossellini is still supervising the picture, contrary to reports that he had withdrawn from the project. Producer, who has been tied up with his current venture, "St. Francis of Assisi," was in constant touch with Emmer during the lensing.

Milan's Icet Studios Sets 2 Pix for Spring

Milan, Feb. 28.

Milan's Icet Studios has announced that its production of "Odissea" will start rolling early in May. Film's director, G. W. Pabst, left for Hollywood to sign an American actress for the role of Penelope. Giorgio Venturini, who is producing "Odissea," hopes to reach an agreement with a prominent British star for the role of Ulysses.

Studio also has plans for a color production titled "Captain Kidd's Treasure," shooting to start this Spring, with Errol Flynn, Dennis O'Keefe and Adriano Rimoldi mentioned for the leads.

Maneges

daughter. The daughter marries a simple riding-school owner, who though much older loves her devotedly. The mother and daughter laugh at him behind his back. She runs through his money, carries on with many men, and finally decides to run off with a suave diplomat in her mad quest for material security. He leaves without her, and in her anguish she gets into an accident. At her bedside the husband learns the truth from the mother. He walks out after hearing that his wife will be paralyzed for life, leaving the mother screaming for pity, and the nurse shouting about the perfidy of men.

Film is told in an unrelenting, forceful manner, and becomes a searing social critique of a certain segment of middleclass materialistic society. Director Allegret has paced the film to perfection, and his piercing observation tells the story in visual terms. Pic's exciting cinematic pace is not hampered or underlined by any incidental music. The only music is justified by a band or radio playing. There is a creative use of sound and dialog that blends with the image.

Mlle. Signoret is excellent as the ambitious, sensual wife, and Bernard Blier scores as the hapless, lovesick husband. Jane Marken is remarkable as the vicious mother. Newcomer Frank Villard is impressive as the handsome philanderer. Camerawork is fluid and the editing is outstanding. The film is underlined with a bitter irony that makes it one of the most important social films to come out of France this year. The film's sordid theme and uncompromising treatment may make it a target of the Legion of Decency. It is somber filmfare.

(MEXICAN-SONGS)

Mexico City, Feb. 20.

Peliculas release of Filmex production. Stars Jorge Negrete, Elsa Aguirre, Alicia Caro; features Domingo Soler, Julio Villarreal, Rodolfo Landa, Miguel Angel Ferriz, Arturo Martinez. Directed by Rene Cardona. Story by Jesus Goytortua Santos; adapted by Mauricio Magdaleno; camera, Augustin Martinez Solares; music, Manuel Esperon. At Cine Mariscala, Mexico City. Running time, 93 Mins.

This is forthright tale of a ruthless soldier of fortune and a religious girl. It is pure Latin tragedy, not in the least relieved by humor, although it has some singing in it.

Jorge Negrete, a boxoffice guarantee for any pic, and Elsa Aguirre, not yet 20 but already a star, top cast effectively. Crowding them is Alicia Caro, who is pretty and piquant. Negrete sings three typically Mexican songs in his w.k. style, to great effect.

Negrete is a diamond-hard colonel of irregulars, hanging to a tree four helpless enemies, indifferent to the grief of a bewitching girl (Miss Caro). This is a sharp departure from Negrete's usual romantic roles.

Los Perez Garcia
(ARGENTINE)

Buenos Aires, Feb. 15.

Independencia release of Julio Villarreal-Luis Landini production. Directed by Fernando Bolin and Don Napy. Story by Oscar Luis Massa, adapted by Napy; camera, Roque Giacovino.

With Martin Zabalua, Sara Prosperi, Juan Carlos Altavista, Beatriz Taibo, Julian Bourges, Gustavo Cavero, Manolita Poli, Carlos Gines, Pedro Prevosti. At Normandie, Buenos Aires. Running time, 78 MINS.

This bright, punchy entertainment is an adaptation for the screen from the family series of radio scripts of the same name, broadcast throughout 10 years or more over Radio Mundo, with most of the original cast playing identical roles in the screen version. If the boxoffice success achieved by this sample is any criterion, this should be the forerunner of quite a bevy of "Perez-Garcia" pictures, which should have an assured market in Latin-America.

Although some members of the cast make their first screen appearances, chiefly Beatriz Taibo and Juan Carlos Altavista, they acquit themselves better than most local veterans. Martin Zabalua, a fine legit and radio actor, as the head of the family, is especially effective and proves himself an excellent screen character actor.

An unusual feature for a local production is the light, humorous touch. This goes over big with fans accustomed to the heavy emoting of the melodramatic fare beloved by Argentine studios. Another big attraction is the familiar touch of daily life in a Buenos Aires suburb and sequences shot in well-known spots.

The story has the Perez-Garcias moving in to their newly-bought (on the installment system) suburban home, with daughter Luisa on the threshold of engagement to beau Julian Bourges, while son Raul (Juan Carlos Altavista) yearns for every blonde that crosses his path. Meanwhile Perez-Garcia senior is caught up in the toils of his own kind heart, as he helps out an old sweetheart fallen on evil days. Mrs. Perez-Garcia sees through his subterfuges, but understanding her husband's kindly motives, privately fosters his philanthropy, proving again, when all is cleared up, how strong is the tie that binds them.

Sara Prosperi, as Mrs. Perez-Garcia, and Manolita Poli, as the old sweetheart, both veteran legit actresses, give sound interpretations. Bourges, as Luisa's beau, is poorly directed, descending to slapstick comedy. Pero Prevosti has a small but telling bit as a screwball business-man.

Despite some imitative Hollywood touches, this is as creditable a piece of direction as has come out of an Argentine studio in a long time, and is actually far better entertainment than any of the heavy-budget, grandiose productions which have been awarded recent Academy prizes. A few more pix in this style and Argentina will go far towards achieving her ambition of wrestling the Latin-American market for her films.

Sullivan Re-Registers As TOA D.C. Lobbyist

Washington, March 7.

Gael Sullivan, executive director of the theatre Owners of America, has re-registered with Congress as official lobbyist for the exhibitor body. His report, made in accordance with the Federal lobbying statute, declared he received no pay "in addition to annual salary" but did not disclose the salary.

Former Rep. Joseph E. Casey (D., Mass.) and a one-time aide to Franklin D. Roosevelt, registered as lobbyist for the Radio Manufacturers Assn. to work against the administration proposal for a 10% tax on television receivers. Casey reported receiving a $5,000 retainer and a $1,000-a-month salary.

Sam O'Neil, former publicity director of the Democratic National Committee, registered as lobbyist to work for the repeal of the 20% admissions tax on tickets sold for symphony orchestra concerts. He said he was receiving a $1,500 retainer and $500 a month. Also registered in this connection was Arthur Gaines, manager of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. They represent about 25 large symphony orchs throughout the country.

RKO, Par Decrees

14 houses in Trenton and New Brunswick areas.

Skouras-RKO dickering will likely end in a division of the six Bronx theatres now the subject of a suit brought against the major. Since RKO owns more than a 50% interest, company will either take more than half the houses or receive cash in compensation for an even division.

Most of the houses in the Paramount bracket are scattered through Florida. UP has been privately offering to sell some of these theatres. In each instance, chain has asked for a bid rather than set a price on the flickeries.

In his affidavit, Goldenson listed the following houses as already divorced: State, Bradentown, Fla., sold; Ritz, Fort Myers, Fla., lease expired; Ninth Street, St. Petersburg, Fla., sold; Belleview, Clearwater, Fla., lease expired; Beach, St. Petersburg, Fla., lease cancelled; Princess, Sanford, Fla., sold; Baby Grand, Winter Park, Fla., lease cancelled; State, Austin, Minn., lease sold; Gopher, Minneapolis, lease sold; Provo, Provo, Ut., lease cancelled; Strand, Knoxville, Tenn., lease expired; Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. C., lease sold; Carolina, Sumter, S. C., lease sold; Palace, Hamilton, O., lease expires in April; Eastman, St. Cloud, Minn., sold.

Sullivan Org Defers Many Things Till Fall

Theatre Owners of America's running battle to cut competitive bidding sales and promulgate an industry sales code is being shelved for many months. No action will be taken on a code until the delegates at the next TOA convention can vote on the proposals. Exec committee last week made that decision after attempts to work out the rules proved too time-consuming.

Convention will be held Oct. 30-Nov. 2 at the Shamrock hotel, Houston, Tex. Robert J. O'Donnell, Interstate circuit exec, will act as convention chairman. Meet was planned for Denver but hotel space proved insufficient.

Meanwhile, proposed code was again dumped into the laps of Walter Reade, Jr., and his committee. They will continue sifting suggestions and working out specific provisions for o.o. by the convention.

Regulations will cover four subjects. First will be directed at competitive bidding combined with a restriction on its use only when demanded by exhibs. Other topics are prints, arbitration and clearances.

Ultimately, distribs will be asked to meet with TOA on a final code adoption. That must wait the convention action.

TOA Curbs COMPO

both the majors and exhib groups. On that level of operation, budget would be confined to a few thousands of dollars essential for limited expenses as these come along.

COMPO would act as it did in the tax battle under the TOA blueprint for it. In that recent fight, Abram F. Myers, National Allied board chairman, acted as head of the COMPO tax committee working with Sullivan. Since this unit put across its program successfully on a voluntary basis, TOA's officials are convinced other jobs can be handled in the same manner.

Afraid of That % Levy

Behind the decision to knock out both the $600,000 budget and the 1/10th of 1% levy on film rentals as a way of collecting that coin, another argument was raised at the TOA exec meeting. Circuit ops expressed the fear that this system for raising money might catch on with local politicos once the Federal admissions bite is lowered or repealed.

Around the council table, exhibs warned of the danger of a flood of local taxes. These, it was argued, might be levied directly on film rentals in line with the COMPO collection system if that was publicized. By so doing, politicos could still collect the tax gravy from theatres without suffering the public resentment against a bite which the ticket-buyers must meet.

Five conditions were imposed on ratification by the TOA board. They were: 1. Participation limited to a one-year period (similar to the National Allied restriction); 2. modest program be carried out with no big budgets; 3. local autonomy be preserved, with COMPO activity to be advisory; 4. COMPO obtain as much gratis talent from the industry as possible; 5. no policy be carried out without unanimous approval of all elements of the industry.

TOA's stress on local autonomy results from a stream of protests and warnings from the national org's regional groups. These feared that grass-root p.r. supervision would be taken over by a centralized unit. Moreover, many regional officials felt that COMPO could cut the ground from under TOA's expanding activities unless restricted in its own actions.

TOAers, including the exec committee, were suspicious that COMPO would get out of hand if its program becomes overly ambitious. There was no disposition to permit the industry project to become another Motion Picture Assn. of America with highly paid execs and an autonomous organization.

HITCHY REPORTS TO WB

Par's JP Test on 'Samson'

mount asked a pre-release run of indefinite duration, a "reasonable" clearance time during which pic would not be played at all in the area, and then a normal first and subsequent-run situation.

Judge Michael Igoe has granted 12 exceptions to the decree since its promulgation in November, 1947. McConnell has argued not only that such exceptions have tended to destroy the purposes of the decree, but has challenged Judge Igoe's right to grant such exceptions. He has filed an appeal challenging that right with the U. S. circuit court of appeals.

Indication that this plea is a critical one came when Judge Igoe deferred a ruling on the petition, while he read McConnell's brief to the court of appeals.

Other Revelations

Hearing was revelatory in many ways. James Donohue, testifying under cross-examination by McConnell, testified that rental terms on "Samson" were 70% of the gross, but with the provision that the exhibitor make a minimum of 10% of the gross as profit over his expenses. It was also revealed that Paramount is asking bidders for pic what price they will charge.

It was this disclosure that led McConnell to charge that Paramount was indirectly violating the recent Supreme Court decision prohibiting price-fixing by distributors. While Paramount is unable to fix the admission charge in the contract, McConnell declared, they have a declaration of intentions in writing in the bidder's offer. Paramount, McConnell said, will choose the bidder who will charge the most, and will make sure that the exhibitor keeps his price at the level he said he would.

Donohue denied such intentions, declaring that knowledge of what the exhibitor would charge is "necessary information" in compiling potential grosses and in coming to a decision on whom to award the picture. De Mille devoted most of his testimony to the religious nature of the picture, but also predicted that nearly half of his expected audience of 75-80,000,000 would be non-filmgoers. He disclosed that he was to receive 50% of the profits of the picture.

Paramount's case was built around the argument that a word-of-mouth campaign was necessary to gross the $7,000,000 necessary to break even on costs, and that such a campaign took time and necessitated pre-release handling. Testimony pointed up the religious nature of the film and on that point pleaded for an exception to the decree.

'Story of Man's Faith'

Clashes between De Mille and McConnell brought smiles to courtroom audience. McConnell, trying to discredit producer's testimony that this "is a story of man's faith in God, his fall to the devil and the flesh, and his supreme rising again," asked if it was not the story of a seduction.

"It is a story of triumph over seduction," De Mille replied.

"Miss LaMarr's costumes are very seductive, aren't they?" McConnell asked.

"Actually, if we wanted to remain true to history, the Minoan women wore nothing above the waist," De Mille replied.

"You had to get past the censor," McConnell commented.

"We had to maintain standards of good taste," De Mille replied.

On another tack, McConnell asked whether the picture followed "your pattern of extravaganza and spectacle."

"No, this picture is not an extravaganza or spectacle."

"What is it, then?"

"It is a work of art."

Wilcoxon testified that he had undertaken his nation-wide speaking tour to give the public the benefit of the research gone into the film, which, he declared, is generally wasted. But with McConnell charging that the tour was nothing but a promotion stunt, Wilcoxon, under cross-examination, was unable to remember who at Paramount sent him on the tour and under whose supervision he worked.

McConnell devoted his final arguments to an attack on Paramount's "hypocrisy and cant" in representing the film as a religious one. Professing a religious nature and a "great respect for the Bible," he nevertheless attacked Paramount for trying to use religion as an excuse to make money, and declared that there was nothing at all religious about the film. "However they dress it up," he declared, "it is still an old fashioned road show."

Theatre TV

for a theatre TV circuit is predicated now on the FCC's okaying the channels required. Comerford circuit in eastern Pennsylvania, which achieved a sellout last fall in Scranton via its special pickups of the World Series, also is interested in permanent installations once the FCC makes it possible for the chain to be tied in to a central program origination point. Fact that Loew's filed for appearance before the FCC at the upcoming theatre TV hearings indicates that circuit too is set to spring its large-screen plans.

Very Rapid Progress

According to Nathan L. Halpern, theatre TV consultant to Fabian and the Theatre Owners of America, large-screen video, at this early stage in its development, is growing more rapidly than did regular TV broadcasting in an equivalent period. Commercial video for theatres, Halpern pointed out, is about a year old. In 1946, a year after the war's end gave commercial telecasting the green light, only six or seven stations were operating in all parts of the country. According to Halpern, several other large circuits have indicated their willingness to launch theatre TV once they are insured of getting a steady program feed.

While it is not certain that the FCC will grant the necessary channels by the year's end, the various houses could form their large-screen chain without them. Only necessity would be the coaxial cable and American Telephone & Telegraph, which now has extended it to St. Louis, plans to add K. C. to the circuit by the end of the year. Thus, all the houses except those in the far west could broadcast simultaneously shows originating in New York—or, for that matter, in any city along the cable route.

RCA units purchased by Century are designed to provide a 15x20 foot picture at an optimum throw of about 65 feet. In announcing the order, Fred Schwartz, circuit veepee, declared: "It is our conviction, based on our own observations and the experience of other exhibitors, that theatre TV is the cure for boxoffice doldrums. It is not merely an effective answer to the competition of home TV programs, but a vital new force in the entertainment world."

TOA TV Analysis

ment of new techniques on trailers made for video will also come up.

As for the FCC, Nate Halpern, Fabian circuit video expert, and Robert H. O'Brien, secretary-treasurer of United Paramount, have been authorized to coordinate the 25 petitions for hearings by TOA members. Duo will also handle research and hire the necessary engineering aides. They will aim to balance the presentation with that of other industry elements.

Permanent research committee is also being created under the Halpern-O'Brien supervision. This TOA wing will handle educational program on both regular and theatre video. Series of questions will be sent to exhibs to check their knowledge of both subjects.

Aside from television, TOA exec committee also mapped an organizational drive for the theatre group. Leonard Goldenson, Robert Coyne, Mitchell Wolfson, Sherrill Corwin, Fabian, O'Donnell and Sullivan will push this campaign. Top TOA talent will go into various sectors where the group is not now functioning to drum up membership.

Org also decided to move into censorship fights only when requested by local groups. Exec committee, in another resolution, endorsed the motive behind the Chicago showmanship meeting called for this week by 20th-Fox.

"Should I let him go back to his wife?"

Par and WB Studio Retrenching Key to General H'wood Caution

Hollywood, March 7.

Big Five studio operations under divorcement will be sliced to the bone. Trend was set last week with pink-slipping at Paramount and Warners, with an announcement by Jack L. Warner that "there will be a cutback proportionate to the amount of actual production." At the same time, the girding-up for better product that started three years ago is being continued.

Three factors will control what happens in Hollywood in the "new era," one studio topper said. These are:

1. Economic conditions;
2. Boxoffice potential of product; and
3. Cooperation of exhibitors.

Stressing that "nothing really concrete can be determined for from six months to a year," production-distribution having been divorced from exhibition effective last Jan. 1, one studioite who prefers not to be quoted pushed the point that if economic conditions remain good throughout the country "everything will be all right." He added, "We will, however, need more aggressive selling in the field."

Bookings, he continued, will have to be watched more closely. Coast end of the biz wants the sales staffers to get preferred playing time, best terms and maximum runs wherever possible—"squeezing every possible dollar out of a booking." Film-makers, in turn, will turn out the best product possible, "but whether it's a new feature, a reissue, a short or a newsreel, we've got to remember the old saw that 'a buck is a buck no matter where it comes from.'"

As for the second factor, good pix, he said, "Public tastes seem to be shifting. It is getting harder to tell what audiences want. But if you'll go down the list of unreleased pictures you'll find the casts are stronger, even in the supporting division. You have to give 'em something for the oldsters, the youngsters, the jazz fans and the opera addicts."

"You have to have that extra strength for boxoffice insurance," topper continued. "Costs are a headache where strong casts are concerned, but we are still retrenching, weeding out here, cutting there. The overhead is now under 30%, against 45% for a short period recently. In 1945 we had 120 actors under contract. Now we have about 40."

On the third factor, exhibitors, production topper said, "The exhibitor should realize that the studios are up against a tough problem, too, and that he has to be fair. He should realize that we are all in the same boat—that what helps one helps the other, and that, by and large, the distributor is not out to rook him.

"Many exhibitors have a blind spot. They figure that anyone connected with a big company is out to get them. But now, more than ever before, they have to realize that unless the studios can get the money to make their pictures the theatres are not going to get the product we used to turn out.

"If the exhibitors don't come across with a little more money for top pictures, he won't get the top ones. If we can't get our money out of a $2,500,000-to-$3,000,000 picture, we won't make it. And he won't do business.

"By the same token we know the exhibitor has to make a living too. So it has become a matter of compromise, of give-and-take. We're ready."

3 Top MPEA Execs In For Confabs With Maas

Motion Picture Export Assn. currently has three of its top foreign reps in New York for confabs with v.p. and general manager Irving Maas. Maas this week said there was no significance to the simultaneous visits beyond the need for a general review of the situation in the territories where MPEA operates.

Last of the trio to come in was Charles Mayer, managing director for Japan, who arrived Sunday (5). Others are Jean Birkhahn and Louis Kanturek, who handle European territories. This is Birkhahn's first visit in four years and Kanturek's first in two years. Mayer was here last summer.

EK's $49,770,699 Net

Eastman Kodak's net earnings for 1949 totalled $49,770,699, a shade under the peak profits of $51,263,118 registered by EK in '48. Gross sales also slid somewhat to $396,232,518 from the prior year's high of $414,977,519. Equivalent earnings on outstanding common amounted to $3.80 per share.

Breakdown of sales shows that 9% of EK's total volume came from dealings with film producers. Company spent $30,456,786 in the past year improving and expanding plant facilities.

Stamford TV Poll

weekends for a smattering of moppet patronage along with the hardened adult action addicts. Palace manager declares that there are 12,000-15,000 children in Stamford "but the theatres just can't compete with free entertainment."

Rialto, a 447-seat second-run house, now cops no children patronage during weekdays. Number of regular adult customers "who used to come two or three times weekly" have dropped out "because they tell us they have television sets," according to the management. Many of the adults, it is said, are spending their spare coin in paying off on recently bought sets. "Besides, general business is off in this town and the people are short of cash," Rialto spokesman stated.

Operator of the Stamford and Avon theatres is somewhat lighter on the downbeat. Two houses have suffered a drop of about 20% in business in the past year, mainly because of video competition. "As far as the grownups are concerned, if you have the right pictures, you do business," manager declares. "But the business from kids is definitely off." The main tele bite comes in the youngest class—children running from five-eight years of age—according to the Stamford.

Stamford is about 40 miles from New York. Town is within the telecast range of all Gotham stations. It is largely an industrial town and its chief factory, Yale & Towne, is operating only part-weekly.

Burdick school poll was widely read because of its front page coverage by Jack Gould in the N. Y. Times on Monday (6). All exhibs here had either read the story or heard about its conclusions.

WB Plans 20

dustry, as well as in other industries. Right now, although we are shooting four pictures, with others scheduled to go within the next several weeks, we are still not operating at capacity. For that reason, we don't require as many employees as when we are producing more pictures.

"There will be a cutback, therefore, proportionate to the amount of actual production. Those employees not directly involved in the present production program will be laid off. Employees necessary to planning and operation for future production will be continued in their employment." He did not elaborate on the number of studio personnel included in the 5% layoff.

Four WB pictures now before the cameras include "Lightning Strikes Twice," Henry Blanke production starring Richard Todd and Ruth Roman; "Captain Horatio Hornblower" (Technicolor), starring Gregory Peck and Virginia Mayo; "Sugarfoot," starring Randolph Scott, Adele Jergens and Raymond Massey, and "$2,000,000 Bank Robbery," with Steve Cochran and Virginia Grey co-starring. Slated to roll within the next 10 days are "Tea for Two," Techni musical, co-starring Doris Day and Gordon MacRae, and "Breaking Point," Jerry Wald production starring John Garfield.

Of the 20 films planned for the next four months, 20 will be lensed in Techni and they will include a total of 64 stars or featured players.

$50,000,000 Lag

110%; four up to 125%; and two went between 125% and 150%.

The top picture that the industry releases in this country today, Paramounter added, will be seen by not more than 33,000,000 people out of a population of 150,000,000. Average American film will reach 22,000,000-24,000,000 people. Freeman then declared that the cost of making films is still as high as two years ago and that the domestic market is down so much a film cannot earn more than what it would have returned in 1946-47.

Four factors are cited by Freeman as hurting the industry in the course of asking for a slash in production costs. These are high costs of films; accompanying high admission prices; television; and films unsuitable to the public tastes.

Many of the major company films that cost $1,250,000 are grossing $800,000-$1,000,000, Freeman declared. One unnamed Paramount pic currently in release was turned out at a $1,450,000 nut and will gross under $500,000 in the domestic market.

1-Pic Companies Found Legal In Govt. Tax Snarl

Washington, March 7.

Hollywood's single-picture corporations, attacked as tax dodge schemes for several years, are technically strictly legal—because after four years of trying, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has not been able to find a way to take a single case into court and collect full income taxes.

This is the reason President Truman and Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder have both called upon Congress to close the legal loopholes so as to bar such corporations in the future.

First hint that the Bureau of Internal Revenue was just maneuvering in order to keep the public from setting up too many equivalents of the one-picture corporation came last week in the testimony of Ellsworth G. Alvord, prominent tax attorney, in testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee. Alvord, appearing on behalf of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, declared that the President's tax message and a law to close the loophole would in effect make the old corporations legal. Actually, however, for all practical purposes they have been legal, since the Government has been unable to figure out a way to show that they are illegal.

The single-picture corporation, and similar business gimmicks, were invented to take advantage of the fact that long-term capital gains pay a tax of only 25%, which is much less than straight income tax in the upper brackets. Bureau of Internal Revenue is reported to have in its files upwards of 15 single-picture corporation cases, including the Samuel Goldwyn one, which got most of the publicity. At one time, several of the corporations offered to make compromise settlements. Internal Revenue nixed these deals, thereby losing the extra revenue which would have been received. Now it will get nothing.

Mule on a Bicycle To Bally U's 'Francis'

Universal is concentrating on a five-borough drive in metropolitan New York to get its "Francis" off to a fast start. Company has called in five of its exploiteers and assigned one to each borough for tieups, drumbeating, publicity plants, etc., in conjunction with personal appearances around the Army mule that stars in the pic. "Francis" preems at the N. Y. Paramount theatre March 15.

Working each borough as though it was a key city, U has grooved Ben Kaufman to the Bronx; Bill Gandel to Queens; Bob Weill, Brooklyn; Jerry Evans, Manhattan; and Herman Kass, Richmond. In all, U has taken on 15 special fieldmen to bally the film.

Mule will do the subway circuit for personal appearances in every borough.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Atlas Corp. annual report for year ended last Dec. 31, which showed upped asset value of nearly $3 per share, reveals lagging interest in picture company shares. Corporation statement puts common stock asset value (for Atlas) at $30.12 as against $27.18 in previous year.

Paramount common stock represents the biggest Atlas investment in the film industry, statement showing 50,000 shares held in the corporation portfolio, valued at $1,100,000. Walt Disney Productions is next heaviest, company having $308,500 principal amount of Disney 4% bonds Series A, and 93,050 Walt Disney Production common value at around $558,300.

Atlas also held 11,000 shares of Madison Square Garden Corp. valued at $112,750, and some 234,012 RKO option warrants, which expired Jan. 31 this year. No note was made of what action was taken on these since the report was compiled prior to that date. No other film company shares are mentioned.

"Nothing to Fear But Fear Itself" editorial in last week's VARIETY, on the subject of television's threat to films, brought a large number of letters. Theme that dominated most of them was the necessity for distribs and exhibs to do a bigger selling job to counteract the new competition.

More or less typical was a note from Paramount pub-ad chief Max E. Youngstein. Declaring he has made a check recently with some of the circuits, particularly with reference to smaller situations, Youngstein states: "In every case where the exhibitor put on a special campaign and took special effort, the picture has done better and, in many cases, far better than in situations where they just go through the motions and depend on the picture alone to pull people in. I realize how trite this must sound, but in my opinion neither the exhibitor nor the distributor is doing as much as he can to bring in dollars."

Vagaries of pix into video is interestingly illustrated in Columbia Broadcasting System's TV story department. It is made up of four former members of the New York story department of Columbia Pictures. It's headed by Arthur Heineman, who was associate story ed for Col. His staffers include Janet Wood, who was formerly Col's eastern story ed (formerly assistant at Metro), Beatrice Aronson, and Lucille Gallon, who serves as Heineman's secretary and was formerly secretary in the film company's story department.

After being on the United Artists release slate for three years, "Conspiracy in Teheran" is finally getting a New York preem. It opens Friday (10) at the Ambassador. Pic was produced in Italy by Stephen Pallos, former associate of Sir Alexander Korda, and sold outright a couple years ago to Selected Films, Inc. Originally labeled "The Plot to Kill Roosevelt," it's about the reported attempt on the former President's life while attending the Big Three conference at Teheran during the war.

A neat job of public relations for Hollywood will be spotlighted in the April issue of Movie Life mag. The monthly fan publication will feature a four-page spread on religioso filmites labeled "Hollywood Goes to Church." Pictured among the churchgoers are Ricardo Montalban, Audrey Totter, Ann Miller, Ann Sothern, Barbara Hale, Scott Brady, Marta Toren, Rex Allen, Sally Forrest, Peggy Dow, Billie Welsh and Betty Nigles. Spread is similar to one featured in the mag last October.

Jack Ellis, former United Artists sales exec and now an indie film distrib ("Pygmalion" and "Major Barbara"), is having his first song recorded this week. It's labeled "Who Pushed the Button When No One's on the Floor (The Elevator Man's Lament)." Tower Records, of Chicago, is waxing it. It is published by Charles Tobias, N. Y. Ellis, brother of show biz attorney Emil K. Ellis, has long been a tunesmith and has had several songs published, but none recorded before.

"The Elephant Who Forgot," a modern fable which Fred Allen wrote for the January, 1949, Anniversary Number of VARIETY, will be filmed in J. D. Trop's "Storyland Tales" series, according to a Trop announcement in New York last week. Series are several 16m color shorts which Trop has been making with an eye to the TV and educational markets. He also picked up screen rights to "The Duck That Flew Backwards," a Saturday Evening Post yarn by Don Tracy.

U. S. Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin has enlisted the aid of Metro to plug industrial safety measures. Culver City lot will turn out a special short with Pete Smith producing-narrating under the label "Wrong Way Butch." David Barclay is directing and Dave O'Brien plays the title role. Smith was tapped by Tobin because of two previous safety shorts, "Seventh Column" in 1943 and "Safety Sleuth" in '44.

Appeal 'Boundaries' Decision

actually an applicable part of the decision, the Atlanta judge went back to the only High Court ruling on the point at issue—whether state and local governments have the right to censor.

The opinion on that point was handed down in 1915, before films had become such a broadly recognized form of communication. Under that ruling, states were specifically granted the right of censorship and were not considered as part of the press. Court, on the basis of the Par dictum, obviously thinks differently now, but Judge Andrews apparently didn't feel free to use dictum as grounds for his decision.

"In essence," the Atlanta jurist stated, "that part of the ordinance under scrutiny empowers the censor to determine what is good and what is bad for the community and that without any standard other than the censor's personal opinion. As here applied it attempts a degree of thought control. But unless motion pictures can be offered the coverage extended the press, it is clear that the police power of the state has not been exceeded."

Suit grew out of the ban on the pic, the theme of which is anti-Negro bias, edicted last August by Atlanta censor Christine Smith. Action was brought by de Rochemont, the producer, his RD-DR Corp. and Film Classics, the distributors. It sought to enjoin Miss Smith from preventing the showing.

Miss Smith's ban was based on the opinion the film "might adversely affect the peace, health, morals and good order of the city." The censor was repped by assistant city attorney J. M. B. Bloodworth. Judge Roseman argued the case in Atlanta for de Rochemont Feb. 6. Morris Abram, Atlanta attorney for FC, repped the plaintiffs in court Monday.

Getting the case to the Supreme Court is considered by industry attorneys to be of the utmost importance, since it is the broadest and most significant test ever made of the constitutionality of state and other governmental censorship of films. A favorable decision would have the effect of outlawing all pre-censorship.

This test is much broader than the "Curly" suit being fought by the Motion Picture Assn. of America, Hal Roach and United Artists in Memphis. That is in the state courts and is primarily a suit to review individual action in regard to a single picture.

Judge Roseman's point of attack is that pre-censorship is a deprivation of freedom of expression without due process of law, as required under the 14th Amendment, as well as violation of the freedom of press guarantee in the First Amendment.

U Stepping Up Both Production And Distrib to Swell '50 Revenues

In a drive to build its volume of sales, Universal is boosting sharply both production and release of films during the current fiscal year, ended in October. Decision was made during recent studio huddles of Nate Blumberg, U's prez, with William Goetz and Leo Spitz, exec chiefs of production. Company will turn out 36 pix for the 12-month stretch instead of 30 originally planned.

Production boost represents a 50% lifting of the sights over last year when 24 pix rolled before the cameras. Upping of releases is also steep since U grooved 29 films, including four of British filmmaker J. Arthur Rank, in the course of calendar '49.

Behind the move is the abbreviated runs of films in the current market. U's toppers believe more playing time is available for its product as a consequence. Because the company feels a need to up its gross rentals as a way of cutting both studio and sales overhead on a per-picture basis, decision was made with the idea of cashing in on the greater playing time that can be picked up.

One other reason reliably reported is the need to fill a hole in releasing schedules caused by diminished production of Rank's product. While four pix were handed general releases in 1949, only one, "Hamlet," is currently being so treated. Company is still mulling policy on "The Astonished Heart," film made jointly with Rank in England. None other Anglo imports shape up presently for general release.

Three of the current pix are already completed and five others are being lensed. Remaining 28 will be filmed within the next eight months. This assures a high level of production for the balance of the year.

Among the pictures which will roll during the eight months are "Harvey," "Song of Norway," "Tomahawk," "The World in His Arms," "Desert Legion," "Up Front with Mauldin," "The Milkman," "Frenchie" and "Desert Hawk." Trio completed are "The Sleeping City," "One Way Street" and "Peggy." Five before the cameras are "Winchester 73," "Louisa," "Ma and Pa Kettle Back Home," "Panther's Moon" and "Saddle Tramp."

'Bicycle Thief'

possibly take the issue to court. Howard Hughes, who ran into PCA code trouble over ads for "The Outlaw," brought a multi-million dollar suit against the MPAA on a "restraint of trade" peg. Suit is still pending although it's understood Hughes will not press the case if the PCA does not interfere with current advertising on the pic. Hughes' suit, however, resulted in the elimination of a provision in the PCA by which a fine of $25,000 was imposed on any member distrib or exhib who violated the code. Adherence to the code is currently on a voluntary basis.

Burstyn's fight against the PCA is supported by the National Council on Freedom From Censorship, an affiliate of the American Civil Liberties Union. In a letter to MPAA prexy Eric Johnston, Elmer Rice of the Council said the PCA action was "a shocking demonstration of censorship power" which deprives "the American people of an opportunity to judge for themselves whether the film should or should not be seen." He said the MPAA stand was inconsistent in view of its own fight against censorship by municipal and state boards.

WB, Philly, Defers 'Thief'

Philadelphia, March 7.

As result of Motion Picture Assn. of America ban on "The Bicycle Thief," Warners' Princess theatre, local foreign pic showcase, has set back indefinitely film's opener here. "Bicycle Thief" was skedded to bow at the Princess March 10.

Local Warner Bros. office said lack of MPAA seal did not necessarily mean circuit couldn't pick up film. Orders in present instance, however, came from New York. Local cancellation means loss of about 70 playing dates for "Bicycle Thief" on WB circuit i area.

Seek Drive-In Ban In New Albany Bill

Albany, March 7.

Bills barring erection of Drive-Ins in "any city" have been introduced by Assemblymen Roman and Lama, New York.

Lama in January introduced a measure banning future construction of Drive-Ins in cities of 250,00 or more population.

B. O. DOLDRUMS SHUT SO. CAL. THEATRES

Los Angeles, March 7.

Boxoffice blues have shuttered 23 film houses in Southern California, and 12 more have adopted policy changes, largely because of a lack of proper product. Most of the shuttered theatres are in small towns serviced by the Los Angeles exchanges, but six in the city area have either closed completely or shifted to weekend operation.

Two of the shuttered houses are drive-ins, the Cina Car, near Cypress, and the Motor-Vu, near Bostonia. Two houses have closed in Long Beach and four more in Arizona, which is included in the Southern California zone. Nine theatres have switched to Spanish-language pictures on a time basis. Some of the dark houses have posted "Remodeling" signs but there is no sign of remodeling in the near future.

20th Ready to Start Production on 8 Pix

Hollywood, March 7.

Eight "A" productions will get the gun at 20th-Fox during March and April, meaning that at least six films will be in work at the same time late this month, something that hasn't happened since last October.

March starters are "I'll Get By," "Stella and the City Man," and "All About Eve." April program calls for "Trumpet to the Morn," "Old 880," "The Mudlark," "American Guerrilla in the Philippines" and "The Halls of Montezuma."

Hope's $40,000

Brown & His Orch $7,500 and the Condos & Brandow dance act $1,000. Hope's total nut on the two weeks will be about $50,000.

Gross for the initial week, which closed last night (Tuesday), was above $140,000. On the strength of the crowds during the first stanza, Paramount circuit exec Bob Weitman opines there will be very little dropoff the second session. If that proves true, the two-week house take should be around $275,000 and probably won't be below $260,000.

Since Hope gets 50%, his share will be $130,000—using the minimum figure. Subtracting the $50,000 expense item for the show from that, it leaves the comedian a net of $80,000 for the two weeks or $40,000 a week.

If Hope fails to hold up to expectations for the second session or his expenses run higher than he anticipates, he'll have a tussle on his hands for the record Broadway take for a single. Danny Kaye received $37,000 from the Roxy for his first week and had no show to pay. Jack Benny received $40,000 from the Roxy, but had to pay his troupe out of that.

Roxy, incidentally, is said by Hope to have offered him a $65,000 weekly guarantee after rumors of the Par deal got around, but the comic preferred to stick with the latter because of his long tieup with the Paramount studio.

Hope is doing five shows daily d six on Saturday at the Par for total of 36 a week. Brown's nd starts getting overtime after e 29th show.

British Pact

Balaban, Spyros Skouras, Ned Depinet and Joseph H. Hazen.

It was originally intended that this committee go to England. However, because of the British elections, certain preliminary negotiations were not acocmplished. Johnston was expected to have cleared up some points with Wilson by phone, letter and via Allport's representation. Instead, negotiations will have to go into the meeting with Wilson and start pretty much at scratch. Thus the "exploratory" label on the talks.

If Johnston, Arnall and their group get what they want, the prexies won't have to go over. If the negotiations get sticky, the group can demur by the necessity of calling in the "first team."

Decision to handle the talks in this way was made at a meeting of major company toppers with Johnston in Miami Beach last week. It was decided to ask Arnall to go along on the "exploratory" phase since SIMPP's okay must be had before the British government could close a deal with the U. S. industry as a whole.

Arnall was invited last week and agreed to go along after discussing the situation with his members at a session in Hollywood on Thursday (2).

When the trip to London will be made is still in doubt. However, it will be as soon as Wilson indicates he is ready to see the Americans. That should be within two to three weeks. Present pact expires June 13.

Kramer's 'Cyrano'

also in New York currently. They expect to put the pic before the cameras in June. Jose Ferrer will be starred. United Artists will release.

With the $40,000 for the Hooker version, Kramer's total investment in cash and deferments to clear the rights to "Cyrano" will represent more than $100,000. Deals took 8½ months to consummate.

Producer had previously given the equivalent of $64,000 in frozen pounds and deferments to Sir Alexander Korda for rights which the latter held from the Rostand estate for "Cyrano" in a number of countries abroad. Price also included a script prepared for Korda by Ben Hecht, but none of which Kramer will use.

Kramer also gave 10,000,000 francs (about $14,000) to acquire a French version of the picture. This was to insure that the latter would not be reissued in competition with the new film. Another version was made in the U. S. by Atlas in 1925.

While the "Cyrano" rights are in the public domain in the U. S., they are still controlled by the Rostand estate in certain territories abroad, which necessitated Kramer's buy of the original property. The Hooker translation is still under copyright control in this country.

Va. Legislature Kills Local Tax Proposal

Richmond, March 7.

A bill enabling towns and counties of Virginia to impose their own admission and other taxes was killed last week by the finance committee of the Virginia legislature, after two spirited sessions during which the proposed enabling act was fought by motion picture interests throughout the state.

Still on the books are similar acts which allow 12 Virginia cities to impose local taxes which run from 5% in some localities to a straight 2c. or 3c. per ticket in other cities. In many instances the permission to levy local taxes was included in the original charter granted these cities by the legislature.

Richmond Theatre Managers Assn. and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia went to bat to quash the new bill, and were represented by Robert Barton, counsel for the Virginia MPTO. Also speaking against the issue were Morton C. Thalhimer, president of Neighborhood Theatres; William Crockett, Virginia Beach, president of the MPTO of Virginia, and William Grist, theatreowner from Charlottesville.

British Technicians, Actors Renew Demands for Own Aides on U.S. Pix

London, March 7.

British film workers and actors renewed their demands this week that American companies lensing pictures here must employ more British craftsmen. Assn. of Cine & Allied Technicians urged Board of Trade prez Harold Wilson to include a protective clause in the new Anglo-American monetary agreement, and British Equity is demanding that any U. S. film produced here must include at least one British star, if the film qualifies under the quota regulations. (British Equity has jurisdiction over both film and legit actors.)

New demands are expected to toss further difficulties into the upcoming Anglo-U. S. talks on renewal of the 1948 pact. One of the prime agreements that the British are expected to press for is wider use by American companies of their frozen British currency for production in this country. American film workers, too, have complained about Yank filming abroad with the charge that any production lensed outside the U. S. must necessarily cut into their employment. Yank producers, as a result, may be caught in the middle in the renewal talks, with the British government pressing for more production in England and American film workers fighting against it.

ACAT is planning representations to the Labor Ministry and is forming a united front with British Equity. Ministry last week attempted to force a reciprocity deal on 20th-Fox before issuing work permits to producer Nunnally Johnson and director Jean Negulesco to lens 20th's "Mudlark" here. Attempt apparently fell through, however, and the Ministry is now shooting for a compromise, recommending that 20th agree to a British director on one of its three current productions here. In addition to "Mudlark," these include "Night and the City" and "21 Bow Street."

British Equity is incensed at the signing of two American femme stars to play typically British roles in American films being produced in England. Virginia Mayo has been set for such a role in Warners' "Capt. Horatio Hornblower" and Irene Dunne has pacted for a lead in 20th's "Mudlark." Equity recognizes that its attempts to force American producers to use at least one British star in any film lensed here that falls under the quota regulations may backfire via counter-measures against British artists on Broadway and in Hollywood. Equity, however, is prepared to take that risk.

ACAT, pressing for the protective clause in the monetary agreement, claims that the Wilson-Eric Johnston pact prevents a sympathetic Labor Ministry policy. In addition, according to the union, the BOT, Foreign Office and Treasury are to be exerting pressure in favor of American film companies. Top technical credits on 11 U. S. films made in England since the 1948 agreement are entirely American, ACAT points out, naming that as a factor in its current unemployment. Number of union members now idle has reached 734.

N.Y. Bill Seeks OK For Unchaperoned Kids

Albany, March 7.

Children would be admitted to film theatres unaccompanied by adults at any time when school is not in session or after 6 p.m. if a section in the orchestra were set aside in charge of a licensed matron, under a N. Y. state bill introduced by Senator Santangelo and Assemblyman Ciodfi of Manhattan.

N. Y. City has such an ordinance, but sponsors say enforcement is spotty.

UA PRODUCERS CAN'T SEE MEX STANDOFF

Indie producers distributing through United Artists are burned over total losses they have taken on earnings in Mexico as result of a kind of Latin American farce comedy routine with a tragic ending. There is some thought of legal action against UA in an effort to recoup the coin.

Difficulty goes back to UA's decision some months ago to close down its branch in Mexico and franchise the distribution of its pix there. A group of exhibs and financial men acquired the franchise of the Mex company, Artistas Unitas, and began distributing UA films.

They were operating for only a few months when they decided the deal was not a profitable one and they abandoned it. Under Mexican law, the employees of the company took over.

They continued distributing the pix, but since they were preferred creditors under the Mexican statutes, they took all the coin that came in. None of the proceeds from rentals was sent to UA and so the latter had nothing to share with its producers.

This went on for a number of months and the producers, naturally, began to squawk. Arthur W. Kelly, UA exec v.p. and foreign chief, went to Mexico City about a month ago to investigate. He withdrew the franchise from Artistas Unitas and gave it to another outfit, Brooks & Miers.

Employees of UA, however, have refused to give up the films they have in their possession and are continuing to distribute them and pocket the coin—as they are apparently entitled to do under the Mex law. All new films are being shipped by UA to Brooks & Miers, but the setup is not fully under way yet and indies have received no coin from the B&M operation.

UA now has its attorneys in Mexico City trying to find a way to get its pix back from UA and to recoup some of their earnings. In the meantime, producers whose films have gone unrecompensed are beefing that UA was not diligent enough in quickly calling it quits when the original operators of UA walked out and its operating employees ceased to send payments to New York. They have been considering legal action if UA is unsuccessful in getting them some of their money for Mexican distribution.

000,000 if it is to maintain the pace of $2 per share paid out for the past few years. Conservative policy would require yearly earnings of almost double that figure to warrant the payments. Balaban is known for careful fiscal planning.

Because of the worldwide nature of Par's business, company prexy said, it is impossible at this time to estimate the earnings for the first quarter of 1950. He promised that these figures would be aired early in May. No statement was made with reference to the annual stockholder meet, generally held in April or May.

"Jolson Sings Again" (Col) added some sock coin on extended-runs in Toronto and Montreal. "Woman in Hiding" (U) collected some healthy rentals, topping the runnerup list one week. "Whirlpool" (20th) struggled to finish ninth place one week but was mainly very spotty.

"Young Man With Horn" (WB) did not fare so well on its initial playdate at N. Y. Music Hall. "Outside the Wall" (U) hit a record on the first week in Philadelphia and started stoutly in another key.

Sid Grauman, Famed Showman And Prankster, Dies in L.A. at 71

Sid Grauman, Hollywood theatre impresario who died of a heart ailment at the Cedars of Lebanon hospital Sunday (5) at the age of 71, was one of the most fabulous showmen to leave his mark on the film capital. Known most widely for his "immortalization" of stars via their hand and foot prints in the concrete in front of the Grauman's Chinese theatre in Hollywood, Grauman gained a reputation in industry circles for his spectacular showmanship in the exhibition field and his practical jokestering.

George Jessel will be eulogist at the funeral services at Forest Lawn Thursday (9). George Ward, Christian Science reader and close friend of Grauman's, will officiate. Kenny Baker will sing a hymn. Pallbearers have not yet been chosen. Grauman's friends are asked that, instead of flowers, mourners for the showman send contributions to the charities he supported: Motion Picture Relief Fund, Boys Town, Braille Institute, Salvation Army, Jewish Home for the Aged.

Grauman's Chinese and Egyptian theatres will remain dark on Thursday (9) until 3:30 p.m., opening after funeral services conclude.

Although Grauman had few relatives, mostly cousins with whom he had no close social relationships, wires are coming in from all over the country from persons claiming kinship. This is due to fact that no will has been discovered. Reports are that Grauman had made none.

Grauman's work in developing Hollywood as a colorful business center recently stirred a drive among a group of filmites to make him "Mayor of Hollywood." Last October, the Chamber of Commerce tossed a testimonial banquet for him at which he was lauded by all the industry toppers. He was one of the few people in show business to be honored by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

Among his intimate friends, he was known as a great gagger. Once, in the early 1920's, Grauman sent out an SOS from the Alexandria hotel, where he lived, for Charles Chaplin. He said a woman had been murdered and he needed help. Chaplin came running, horrified when he saw a bloodstained corpse in Grauman's bed. Grauman pleaded for help in averting a scandal, but Chaplin finally told him it couldn't be done, that they must call the police. After he had the comedian on the verge of a nervous breakdown he made him take a closer look at the "corpse." It was a dummy smeared with catsup.

Too Macabre for WB

He topped most of his other practical jokes when the Warners laid the cornerstone of their Hollywood Blvd. theatre. Stars, civic luminaries and film toppers of every magnitude appeared at the ceremony, driving up in lavish limousines to the pleasure of a vast audience of fans in bleachers. Grauman, who ran the rival Chinese and Egyptian theatres, also attended. He hired a hearse, complete with pallbearers, and drove up to the Kleig-lighted entrance for the ceremonies. The Warners were hopping mad for a long time, but eventually forgave him.

Sometimes the joke was on Grauman. He had made a rule that he was not to be called in his Ambassador hotel suite until noon. When the stock market crashed in '29, he could have salvaged some of his wealth, but early calls couldn't get through the switchboard. Grauman had more than $6,000,000 at that time, but the crash wiped him out. He didn't whimper. He always said: "Chalk it up to experience."

Grauman was the son of another showman, D. J. Grauman, who was a tent man in the west before organizing the Georgia Minstrels at the turn of the century.

Also a Klondike Kid

During the Klondike strike in Alaska, the Graumans traveled north. The younger Grauman put on his own show in Nome while his father was doing likewise in Dawson City. In addition to operating the show, Sid Grauman sold San Francisco newspapers on the side and got up to $2 per copy. He once sold a paper for $50 to a storekeeper who, in turn, charged miners admission to get the news.

In the early 1900s the Graumans opened the first picture theatre in Frisco, a store large enough for 800 kitchen chairs, screen, scenery and piano. Called the Unique, the house was transformed by Sid Grauman from a crude establishment into a colorful entertainment spot. Out in front a big banner was planted, reading "One Hundred Feet of New Film Now Being Shown." The house also featured vaudeville and one of the acts that played there was the Musical Laskys (Jesse Lasky and his sister).

Tried Gotham

He went to New York later and leased a theatre on east 125th street. He put on the first vaudfilm show in N. Y. and introduced his prolog idea. It involved taking four or five of his acts and putting them into a presentation where they did their specialties. But he lost about $500 a week in N. Y. and sold out to the Sullivan & Considine interests.

Grauman finally returned to Frisco after a stay in Scranton, Pa., where he ran the Garden theatre. In Frisco, the Graumans built the Empress and the Imperial, both of which coined money. Sid Grauman later staged a show, "Midnight in Frisco," with a cast of 100. The production made money but Grauman tired of that end of show business and decided to go back into the picture field.

Expanding his scale of activity, Grauman built the Million Dollar theatre at Third and Broadway in Los Angeles, then considered the finest film house in the country.

Grauman later got the idea to build a deluxe L. A. house, the Metropolitan, which was opened in 1922. The house, now known as the Paramount, cost around $3,500,000 and seated 3,595. Famous Players-Lasky were his partners in the venture.

Another idea of Grauman's was to operate an exclusive $1.50 two-a-day picture house. He launched the Egyptian in Hollywood, a novel house which seated 1,800 and cost around $600,000. It was the first house to use a forecourt for the entrance with stores on one side of the court. Besides introducing the live tableaux on stage which typified the film to be shown, Grauman originated the gala Hollywood preem with its klieg lights, stars and sidewalk crowds of fans.

In 1927, Grauman built his most famous theatre, the Chinese, which was not the largest but the best-equipped house in the world.

Many Innovations

Among some of the innovations in theatres credited to Grauman were the rising orchestra pit; straight projection from the cantilevers under the balcony to give a better throw than from the rear balcony booth; trousered usherettes and the overhead spot which covered their stations so that people at first sight thought they were waxed figures.

Grauman subsequently transferred his interests in the Chinese to the Fox-West Coast chain. He had no interest in the Chinese at the time of his death but was on the theatre payroll as managing director. He also had interests in the Hollywood Rollerbowl, El Capitan theatre and owned the parking lots flanking the Chinese.

Grauman had no close relatives. At his bedside when he died were his doctor and longtime friend, Dr. Myron Prinzmetal; Gertrude Skall, his secretary for the last 21 years; and Harry Brand, publicity head of 20th-Fox.

Spring and Republic Bloom in the Canyons

Hollywood, March 7.

Republic is galloping along the March trail with six pictures, including two high-budgeters, one Roy Rogers tinter and three fellow travelers. First is a Vera Ralston starrer, still untitled, starting with outdoor shooting in Death Valley. Second big-budgeter is "The Golden Tide," to be produced and directed by Joe Kane.

The Roy Rogers color film is "Sunset in the West." Three others slated for a March start are "Covered Wagon Raid," "Prisoners in Petticoats" and "Phantom Ruler."

5-Point Attack to Test Metro's 'Crown' Campaign

Metro has put "Stars in My Crown," film treating with the life of a Protestant minister, through three varying test campaigns in pre-release engagements to probe the film's b.o. possibilities on a five-point basis. Company chose the Capitol, Concord, N. H.; Capitol, Lancaster, Pa., and Loew's, Richmond, Va., for its trio of bally drives, each differing in treatment.

Five objectives were laid down by Howard Dietz, Metro's ad-pub veepee, to determine future handling of the film. These were: 1. Determine whether to revise film; 2. See how far churches and schools would cooperate; 3. Learn the best ad slant both generally and in local situations; 4. Learn type of exploitation most practicable for the pic; and 5. Pick out a method of impressing family audiences on the "wholesomeness of the film."

Bally in each town varied. Special trailer of Joel McCrea, film's star, addressing the audience, was used in one engagement. Richmond test included personal appearance of Joe David Brown, author of the book. Richmond played up action aspects whereas other two dates built up on religious angle and other phases of film.

Metro reports that results of three tests met the five initial objectives while the film knocked out big grosses in each spot. Complete breakdown of each campaign is being prepped for circulation among exhibs booking the film.

Lester Cowan Sets Big Teevee Film Pitch Via 'Love Happy' Trailers

Hollywood, March 7.

Lester Cowan this week will kick off the biggest television sales pitch ever concocted for plugging a feature picture. Cowan, producer of the Marx Bros.' starrer, "Love Happy," is setting video trailers for showing in every market in the country.

Included in the last day's shooting of "Love Happy" were four three-minute TV trailers featuring the Marx Bros. Cowan and the comics worked up four charades blurbs based on some incident in the film. Rolling of these spots ran the producer $6,000.

Trailers will be run one, two or three weeks, depending on the length of the film run in local markets. Viewers will be asked to send in answers to the charades game, in each market, and will receive for correct answers $100 as first prize, a watch as second, Marx Bros. dolls and masks for third place and tickets to local house showing the film as final prize.

On the third or fourth week of the trailers, whichever is the final stanza, viewers will be asked to send their answers to the N. Y. headquarters of UA, which is releasing the film. Answers to the national scale contest will be tabulated and winners will come in for top draw awards.

This marks the first time a motion picture producer, active in the industry, has tacked video trailers onto his shooting schedule. Cowan plans to use the same tactics for exploitation on future films.

These spots were first tested on Tim Hawthorne's show over KLAC-TV last week. Following the success there, Hawthorne was set in to emcee the opening of each blurb. Because of the entertainment value in the films, stations throughout the country are offering to run them off without charge for time, as part of such informal shows as they might have.

Goldman Settlement

doing, Goldman, who already operates a large number of subsequent-runs and several deluxers, would have become the biggest theatre operator in Philadelphia and its suburbs.

Talks with major company attorneys ended two months ago, Goldman said, when some form of a tentative understanding was reached. However, this never crystallized into a hard-and-fast deal. Philly exhib has been active in the past couple of weeks preparing his case. He has just returned from western Pennsylvania where a number of witnesses were readied.

Goldman won a verdict of approximately $600,000 from the majors in his first suit. Current action is based on the same monopoly charges but refers to a different time period. He is reported readying a third action.

D.C. Okays WB

Washington, March 7.

Warner Bros. has obtained a clean bill of health from the Government so far as the important downtown Philadelphia theatre situation is concerned. In response to a request by Warners for a clarification on the Philly first-run setup, Dept. of Justice has advised WB lawyers that the major will not have to divest any of its downtown houses, it is reliably reported.

At the same time, D of J is requiring Warners to unload a number of its nabe houses in Philly as a way of opening competition in the outlying sectors and suburbs. Number to be divested is the subject of discussions in the course of current settlement negotiations, renewed since the New York Federal district court ruled on a final decree.

Once the dominant exhib in Philly, recently Warners has been facing stiff competition from William A. Goldman and 20th-Fox. Goldman operates three theatres, while 20th controls the Fox theatre. Warners' first-run houses are the Aldine, Boyd, Earle, Mastbaum, Stanley and Stanton.

H. S. Cole, operator of Bonham here, plans to start March 15 on a drive-in near here.

E. P. Kilroe on Copyright Reciprocity With Dutch

Motion Picture Assn. of America is opening negotiations with the Netherlands government in an attempt to work out a copyright reciprocity agreement which would halt the pirating of American pix in that country. Edwin P. Kilroe, copyright attorney for 20th-Fox, will act as rep for the MPAA in a trip to Holland slated in the next six weeks. Any reciprocity deal signed by Kilroe will cover all literary properties including pix, books and plays.

Kilroe's trek will follow an indirect invitation to the MPAA to send a negotiator. Holland is the only country in western Europe that does not have an arrangement with the U. S. to extend copyright privileges to Yank citizens in return for the same right granted here to Dutch writers and film producers. Room for such agreement is provided in Section 8 of the U. S. Copyright act.

Talks come after two big infringement cases were brought in the Dutch courts to test the pirating of American pix. One of these suits, revolving around "Daddy Longlegs," is still pending in the courts. Other referred to "Gone With the Wind." Latter suit was finally adjusted.

Individual reciprocity deals must be arranged because the U. S. has never subscribed to the Berne Convention which laid down the rules for international copyrights. This country had a reciprocity agreement with Holland at one time but it was later revoked by the Dutch ministry.

Kilroe will meet with Dutch officials. He had been active in handling industry copyright tangles for a number of years.

Civil War Yarn For Nat Holt at Par

Hollywood, March 7.

First venture by Nat Holt as a Paramount producer will be "The Great Missouri Raid," a tale of the Reconstruction period, authored by Frank Gruber.

Paramount recently handed Holt a contract calling for two pictures a year.

Sliding Scale

tem on past experience with product playing the house. For instance, it reportedly had its top execs touring the country prior to the release of "Battleground" to make sure that the rental paid by an exhib for "Stratton Story"—a very successful film—would be pegged at the 40% mark on the sliding scale for future films. This was to insure at least 40% on "Battleground."

A Dated Formula

Most of the sliding scales are worked out to guarantee an exhib a profit equal to around 50% of his film rental. Distribs claim that any such guarantee is unwarranted now, that no other business operates on such a pattern, and that in any case 50% of film rental as profit is too high. They say the figure is really much biggter than that because most exhibs include unwarranted and inflated items in making up their operating budget for submission to a distributor.

Most exhibs favor the s.s., because to them it seems fair that their film rental should be in proportion to what the picture earns, especially in times like the present, when many films gross below expectations. That latter factor is what's burning some of the distribs. There are too many pix now doing less biz than anticipated, and so while rentals of a few may go up from the medium point on the scale, a great many more go down from there.

Distribs are now gradually coming around to the point of feeling that the exhib should be equally responsible with them for getting the producer off the hook on an expensive picture. Trend is foreseen, therefore, if it can ever be pushed through, of a reversion to the old pre-decree setup, when Metro, for instance, each season sold four at 40%, eight at 35%, eight at 30%, and others at 25%, 20% and flat. In that way, at least, it knew that it would get better than 30% for 20 of its films. Under a sliding scale in a falling market, it is not certain how many will come in at over 30%.

the contract is that it may drag out the litigation to considerable lengths. When a report of a special master is confirmed by the court, it can be appealed to a higher bench. Arbitration award, on the other hand, cannot be appealed.

Series of suits and countermoves challenge the right of Selznick to distribute Korda's "Earth" and "Third Man" in the U. S. and Korda's right to release his version of "Earth" in the eastern hemisphere. Selznick participated in the Korda productions financially besides supplying Jennifer Jones (Mrs. Selznick), Joseph Cotten and Alida Valli. He also granted the Britisher eastern hemisphere rights to his "Portrait of Jennie" and "The Paradine Case."

While D.O.S. claims that "Gone" without retakes is a "flop" which will hurt the reputation of Miss Jones unless changed, Korda, on his part, asserts that Selznick breached the deal in a number of respects. Britisher also feels he should get some part of the U. S. profits.

Louis (Schwartz &) Frohlich is handling the case for Korda. James Hayes of Donovan, Leisure, Newton, Lumbard & Irvine is directing the trial chores for D.O.S.

Hearing in London

London, March 7.

An action by the Selznick Releasing Organization against London Film Productions, British Lion Production Assets and British Lion Film Corp. concerning recent production of "Gone to Earth," will be heard in the High Court Friday (10). It was stated at a preliminary hearing last Tuesday (28) that evidence would have to be obtained from America and from other sources.

Counsel for SRO said they were applying for a motion to restrain the defendant companies from exhibiting or publishing the existing or any other version of the film which did not substantially reflect the screenplay or which varied from the story of the novel.

For the defense it was pointed out the case was a heavy one, and the judge might want to see the film.

Nat'l Drive-In Assn. Sees No Conflict With TOA, Allied; Big Headaches Loom

Philadelphia.

National Assn. of Drive-in Theatres sees no conflict in recent campaigns launched by Allied and Theatre Owners of America to sign up ozoners to their organizations.

The Drive-in Assn., headquartering here, operates in 20 states, according to its counsel, Harry A. Kalisch. Membership drive of the association hopes to swell representation to every state. Group plans to set up a code for the roadside film industry this spring.

"Drive-in owners have their own separate problems," Kalisch said. "Naturally, we would expect our members as film men to be interested in Allied, TOA or any other organization in the industry."

Competition and basic differences between outdoor and indoor operators will obviate any all-inclusive group being able to handle the problems of ozoners, Kalisch said. The Drive-in Assn. had observers at the recent conference of Roadside Business Assn. in Detroit. Discriminatory legislation is pending in 41 states and laws affecting roadside business and advertising have been passed in several commonwealths.

Hypo in Wooing Rural Audiences Seen Result of Nielsen's Hooper Takeover

The A. C. Nielsen takeover of C. E. Hooper's AM network service is likely to have far-reaching consequences in programming content, web researchers forecast. Shift toward airers that appeal to a national audience and away from those of chiefly big city appeal is viewed probable.

Reason is that the Hooper pocketpiece, now suspended, was based on the 36 cities which had four-network coverage. Nielsen, on the other hand, has his audimeters in homes representing a cross-section of the country, including non-telephone and rural homes. Result is that although Walter Winchell shows up in Hooper's Top 10, he's low on the Nielsen listing. With the non-metropolitan listeners showing different preferences from city dwellers, and with Nielsen the new network yardstick, more emphasis will be placed on the rural audience. A small town slanted "Lum 'n' Abner" is likely to get more attention than a sophisticated Henry Morgan.

Further effect is likely to help radio in the AM-TV battle, with Nielsen showing less of a video impact on ratings because of its broader sample. Hooper survey, due to its city emphasis, showed TV cutting into audiences for metropolitan-slanted programs more than the national Nielsen reports. Additionally, webs which hypoed promotional activity in the Hooper cities, to boost their Hooper ratings, will now have to spread their ballyhoo over a wider area.

With Nielsen becoming the yardstick, closer scrutiny will probably be given to program and commercial content. Nielsen's collateral services showing minute-by-minute audiences, duplication of listeners, carry-over from stanza to stanza, and audience turnover from week to week, will make sponsors more sensitive to these factors. Army Air Force Colonel Gets $7,500 Award For Autry Airer Damage

Chicago, March 7.

Army Air Force Col. Frank L. O'Brien was awarded $7,500 in damages in a Federal district court suit here last week against CBS, J. Walter Thompson ad agency and William Wrigley Co. AAF officer contended that a 1942 CBS "Melody Ranch" broadcast starring Gene Autry and sponsored by the gum company, invaded his privacy and hindered his advancement. Defendants' attorney said decision would be appealed.

Suit in which plaintiff had asked $50,000 damages grew out of a dramatization on the Autry show of an actual air force rescue in which the AAF officer took part off the Alaskan coast four days after Pearl Harbor. The colonel charged that his part in the rescue was made to seem inferior in building up Autry's role on the show, playing the part of O'Brien's partner in the rescue. Officer claimed the dramatization made him appear "cowardly, incompetent and irresponsible."

Spokesman for the agency said the material for the air version of the rescue had been supplied by the AAF. The show at that time was public servicing a pitch for air force recruiting.

Highlight of the jury trial was the spinning of the record of the broadcast. Defendants claimed no spinning of the record of the show was available but one was produced by colonel's uncle, Martin R. O'Brien, owner of WMRO, Aurora, Ill.

Omaha Buses Airing

Omaha, March 7.

Main artery buses of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Street Car Co. started giving riders an earful of radio this week. In a general unofficial vote, the bus radio won out by a large majority. Many complained that radio might distract the attention of drivers and cause accidents.

Broadcasts carry commercials, news and music only and emanate from KBON's FM station. No talk of equipping street cars with radio.

Sox, Braves Grapefruit League on Hub's WHDH

Boston, March 7.

WHDH, Hub indie, is set for exclusive coverage of Red Sox and Braves pre-season Grapefruit League games. Station will carry 20 games from training camp sites, with veteran sportcaster Jim Britt handling play-by-play chores. Leo Egan, station sports director, is also in Florida to assist Britt and tape interviews with Hub baseball luminaries.

Tab will be picked up by Herald-Traveler, Atlantic Refining Company and Narragansett Brewing Co., who also bankroll games during official season.

They Still Need Their Hoopers

Networks and sponsors whose transactions have hinged on Hooper ratings will still be able to buy reports on shows they're concerned with. C. E. Hooper is continuing his telephone surveys as part of his expansion of local measurements, despite sale of his national measurement to A. C. Nielsen, and will supply web ratings on request until Nielsen can speed up his reporting from a six-weeks-later to a one-week-later basis.

The problem of late reports concerns backers who want to find out quickly what airers are doing, and talent like Jack Benny, whose pay is reportedly geared to Hooperatings. These will be able to get Hoopers within a week by paying a fee to Nielsen, who will act as Hooper's sales agent.

In explaining his AM network rating sale to Nielsen, Hooper said last week that it was cued in by diminishing interest in AM web ratings and consequent reduced subscriptions. He added that the Hooperatings, based on 36 cities, has been averaging markets in which TV is important together with those in which it plays no part. "The former type of single national index is now comparatively meaningless," Hooper said, and his new emphasis is on local information, which he is gathering in 100 cities.

WLIB Not Looking For Trouble, But—

Washington, March 7.

M. S. Novik, head of WLIB, New York, advised FCC yesterday (6) his station has no intention of stirring up a controversy where it believes none exists, but that it will affirmatively seek out all points of view on subjects which are obviously controversial.

In replying to an inquiry from the Commission regarding its editorial broadcasts in January in support of a national Fair Employment Practices Commission, Novik said WLIB received 324 pieces of mail commending the station's position on the subject, but had no requests to present opposing views.

To a specific request from the agency for information on opportunities made available or affirmative steps taken to present differing viewpoints on the subject, WLIB said it made no such efforts on FEPC because if it had "it would have caused controversy where no controversy, in fact, exists."

Questioning the clarity of the Commission's policy on editorializing, Novik said that many factors are involved in determining whether a subject is controversial and

'Titanic' Duel for Dollar Between Radio & Video Seen by ABC's Grabhorn

Chicago, March 7.

Predicting a duel of 'titanic proportions" between radio and TV for the advertising dollar, Murray Grabhorn, ABC veepee in charge of owned and operated stations, speaking at a Chi Radio Management Club luncheon, warned radio execs that advertising expenditures must keep pace with national income if they are to avoid a pinch.

Pointing out that during the post-war years ad funds have lagged behind national income growth, Grabhorn said 1949 estimated advertising spending would have been upped 1.2 billions had it held at the 3% of national income rate that prevailed from 1934-39.

To meet the video challenge, Grabhorn predicted a possible shift of emphasis from nighttime to daytime AM broadcasting and an increase in music, news and special events programming.

Detroit Disk Jock Finds Audiences Like Hymns

Detroit, March 7.

After first getting assurances from his listeners that they liked the idea, WWJ disk jockey Bob Maxwell played an entire program of hymns on his morning show. Response was so great that he plans to conclude each day's "Maxwell and the Music" program with a hymn. He plans a repeat of the complete show in the near future.

At conclusion of "Lenten Services," now being carried daily by WWJ, the time slot left vacant will be filled with a quarter-hour daily program of hymns, with Maxwell as commentator.

Corwin Tag Nixes UN Airer in Balto

Baltimore, March 7.

"The Pursuit of Peace," a series of six hour-long documentaries on the United Nations to be aired at intervals of a month on MBS, has hit a snag in Baltimore. WCBM, Mutual affiliate, has decided not to accept the airers, which kick off Sunday, March 26, at 9 p. m., because Norman Corwin, chief of special projects for UN Radio, is supervising.

A station spokesman said, "WCBM is pleased to state that it is a pleasure not to accept these programs. We reject the offer on one point only—we object to any association with Norman Corwin, a self-admitted leftist. It would be like having Fulton Lewis cover the Russian activities of the UN." (Lewis is a daily MBS commentator.) The WCBM letter to Mutual expressed surprise and "deep regret" that Mutual had "seen fit to employ this man."

A Mutual spokesman in N. Y. told VARIETY that Corwin is working directly on only two of the stanzas. "The station's point is far-fetched," he added, "because the series has nothing to do with leftists or rightists, but is merely the straight story of the UN. It has been officially approved by the UN policy committee."

NBC is also carrying a series of six broadcasts on the international organization and CBS is airing two regular programs dealing with the UN.

Saskatch Solons Air

Regina, Sask., March 7.

Broadcasts from the floor of the Saskatchewan Legislature are being carried daily by CKRM here.

CKCK, Regina, instituted the legislative broadcasts in 1946, and aired four sessions.

CBS' 16 Out of 20 on 'Extra-Week' Nielsens

Way in which guest stars hypo audiences is shown in the "extra-week" national Nielsen ratings for Jan. 22-28, which show the special hour program for "Chesterfield Supper Club" jumping from 70th place to fourth. Guesters of Bob Hope, Arthur Godfrey and Eddie Arnold boosted the rating from 9.7 to 21.4. "Lux Radio Theatre" moved ahead of Jack Benny, with the Robert Cummings-Ann Blyth performance in "I'll Be Yours" racking up a 28.2, for 11,077,000 homes. All other stanzas in the Top 20 reached more than 6,000,000 homes.

CBS, which in the previous week's report had 17 of the 20 shows, dropped to 16. NBC, which had only two in the roster, garnered four, with "Mr. and Mrs. North" joining the parade along with the special "Supper Club" broadcast. ABC's lone entry in the previous report, Walter Winchell, didn't make the ranking.

ABC Loyalty Probe Documentary First Since Editorializing Ease

For the first time since the FCC lifted its ban on editorialization, ABC is launching a major hour-long documentary. Titled "Clear and Present Danger," it will deal with the international situation in relation to loyalty probes in this country. Airer, to be broadcast May 1, the labor movement's May Day, will be scripted by Morton Wishengrad and produced by Robert Saudek, ABC public affairs veepee, who collaborated on the web's Peabody Award-winning "Communism—U. S. Brand."

Saudek feels that dropping of the Mayflower Rule can cue a rebirth of public affairs broadcasts. Rather than editorializing on a day-to-day basis, he believes, because radio is so potent a medium, broadcasts of this type should be undertaken only after sound study. Web staffers, therefore, have spent months sifting transcripts of the loyalty investigations in the U. S., Canada, England and Hungary. In addition to studying trial records, Saudek's staff surveyed the works of authorities on loyalty to gather various viewpoints. Cooperation was given by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, among other government agencies.

After a detailed analysis of the subject, the documentary will go on to make specific recommendations. Affiliated stations will receive confidential memos prior to the broadcast to inform them of its chief points, so their responsibility as licensees for editorialization will be covered. Recommendations will concern the effectiveness and advisability of loyalty programs at the national, state and educational levels, as well as the executive and legislative aspects of the issue.

Better Business Bureau Censures N.Y. Fur House On 'Misleading' Airers

Ben Tucker's Hudson Bay Fur Co. of Brooklyn was strongly censured this week by the N. Y. Better Business Bureau for its "Name the Song Contest" on local stations.

On Feb. 9, one of the contests was aired over WINS to identify the song "Easter Parade," with the announcement that a $25 gift certificate would be awarded to the first 25 contestants submitting the correct title, BBB charged. The following day, at various hours, representatives of the bureau sent Tucker more than 25 postcards, the BBB declared, and the senders later received more than 25 gift certificates, "despite the fact that not all of those receiving these credit checks sent in correct answers."

"It is abundantly clear," BBB wrote the fur firm, "that this is in no sense a bonafide contest, but is merely a selling device which is misleading, confidence-destroying and inimical to the best interests of advertising."

In some Ben Tucker radio advertising, BBB asserted, representation was made that furs had been reduced 50%. Bureau's shoppers, however, "showed that garments were being offered at more than the 50% of the purported original prices," BBB charged.

Defer Lee Will Hearing

Los Angeles, March 7.

Probation of the will of the late Tommy Lee (Don Lee Network), involving about $10,000,000, was postponed to March 30 by Judge Newcomb Condee in Superior court to hear a petition filed by Mrs. Nora S. Patee, one of Lee's three nearest blood relatives. The others are Mrs. Dwight Merrill and Cuyler Lee.

Lee's will, written briefly in 1934, left his estate to an uncle by marriage. Mrs. Patee declares the document was not properly written, dated or signed as required by law. She contends that Lee's intention was to leave his fortune to his blood relatives. Meanwhile Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, an adopted daughter of Don Lee, has filed a claim to the millions.

Richards' Hearing Finally Is Set To Get Underway Next Week in L.A.

Washington, March 7.

One of the most important proceedings ever to be held before the FCC, begins next Monday (13) in Los Angeles, when the agency looks into news slanting charges against G. A. Richards, principal owner of stations KMPC in L. A., WJR in Detroit and WGAR in Cleveland.

Last-minute efforts by Hugh Fulton, newest counsel in the case, to get another postponement were made at a pre-hearing conference last week, but Benedict Cottone, FCC general counsel, refused the request. Fulton also filed a formal motion for a month's continuance, on the ground he had only been retained a few weeks ago and needed time to prepare his case. But it was regarded almost certain the motion would be denied. J. Fred Johnson, who will preside as hearing examiner at L. A., said the proceedings will begin on schedule. He is now enroute to the Coast and the Commission's legal battery is already there with trunkloads of evidence.

Fulton, who was counsel for the Truman Committee which investigated war expenditures in the Senate, was until recently occupied with the Technicolor anti-trust case. Ex-Sen. Burton K. Wheeler,

NBC Mulls 5 Shows

NBC is mulling five new shows, including a Paul Douglas-Judy Holliday starrer, "Samson and the Lady"; a vehicle for Charles Boyer, and an adult western with Jack Holt and his son Tim.

Also in the works are a 60-minute psychodrama titled "One Hour to Kill," and a science-fiction stanza, "Out of This World," to be scripted by Ray Bradbury.

WCFM Hits Back At Satevepost; No Lip Service

Washington, March 7.

Washington's co-op FM station, WCFM, is preparing to strike back at the Saturday Evening Post for its editorial in the current issue, charging the outlet with being part of a propaganda machine which is "pushing this country faster and faster toward the handout state."

In a broadcast prepared for delivery tomorrow (8), George Bernstein will tell his station's listeners he feels heartened that WCFM's "small voice" in behalf of liberal causes "is loud enough to cause a reaction by so well-heeled an agent for propaganda" as the Satevepost.

Bernstein declares that if the well established radio outlets were more scrupulous in giving all sides equal time "it would not be necessary for stations like WCFM to devote so much of their time to the broadcasting of arguments not heard elsewhere."

Only two weeks ago, he charges, the UAW was refused sale of time by stations WJR and WWJ in Detroit for discussion of issues in the Chrysler case, but when UAW discussed the subject on its own FM station it gave Chrysler opportunity to give its viewpoint, he adds, and when WCFM attacked

Hotpoint's Easter 'Dinner' One-Shot

Continuing its emphasis on holiday one-shot programming, Hotpoint, Inc., this week pacted for the 5 to 6 p. m. slot on CBS Easter Sunday (April 9). Stove outfit plans to air an adaptation of "Dinner at Eight," George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber play, which will star Charles Boyer, John Garfield and Rosalind Russell. Show will originate from Hollywood.

Hotpoint first got hot with the holidays last Thanksgiving, when it bankrolled a full-hour variety show on CBS television. On Christmas Day it sponsored Jack Benny, starring in a radio version of "Man Who Came to Dinner," also on CBS. Maxon agency handles the account.

ACWA Label on 'Town'

Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America last night (Tues.) took over sponsorship of "Town Meeting of the Air" on WJZ, N. Y., to plug purchase of clothes with the ACWA union label. Group will back the ABC co-op stanza for 13 weeks.

Agency is Ben Sackheim.

WSRS Settles Pay Suit

Cleveland, March 7.

A suit for back wages and commissions against WSRS was settled out of court by three former station salesmen who received a total of approximately $1,300. Their original suit, filed more than a year ago, was for $3,000.

Ex-salesmen are Bob Miller, George Folks and Fred Morrison.

WEBS STRIVING FOR STRONG FARE

Upcoming summer hiatus period in radio may be one of the most hotly-contested in the industry's history. Both NBC and CBS are planning to toss some of their best new package ideas into the warm weather hopper in an effort to line up winners for potential fall sponsorship. Whichever web comes up with the hottest ideas, it's pointed out, the public will be the winner via a raft of more top-quality shows than they've traditionally been fed during previous dog days.

NBC has a special goal at stake this summer. As a result of CBS board chairman William S. Paley's talent raids during the last two years, NBC has come out on the short end of the Hooper and Nielsen ratings during the current season. Paradoxically, though, the web has had fewer open half-hours than CBS and so has done less creative programming than its chief competitor. This summer, with the majority of its sponsors taking the usual 13 weeks' vacation, NBC plans to go all-out in wrapping up new package ideas.

NBC has scheduled a meeting of its top execs in Atlantic City this weekend, when it will talk over the entire summer problem. Emphasis is to be placed on sales and programming.

CBS Creations

CBS, with an eye to selling out next fall, has indicated it will also not let any warm weather grass grow under its feet. With its emphasis on creative programming having paid off handsomely in recent years with such shows as "My Friend Irma," "Life with Luigi," etc., the web has already turned the attention of its creative programming department to the upcoming summer. To date, more than 150 ideas have been submitted by staffers in N. Y. and Hollywood and CBS, figuring the number of time units it will have to fill this summer, has started to sift them out.

Tentatively set so far for a warm weather audition is "Granby's Green Acres," a half-hour situation comedy, which it is planned to air from the Coast once a week. Also being lined up is "Shy Guy," based on an idea by CBS' Jess Oppenheim. It also will probably go as a half-hour once a week.

ABC, seeking to catch up with CBS and NBC, is also lining up its summer program ideas. Mutual, as usual, will be faced with a comparatively easy summer problem, since it loses less of its fall and winter bankrollers than do the other webs.

Taped Airers Being 'Censored'?

Problem of bringing taped and waxed programs into this country was underscored last week by MBS commentator Cecil Brown. Gabber reported that tapes of his European interviews and comments were at first held up three weeks by U. S. Customs officials and that subsequently delays averaged three days.

Reason for the stall, Brown said, is that the customs collectors have no established plan for setting an evaluation on disks and tape, bucking them between the plastics and music appraisers. "In effect," Brown charged, "the customs office is setting itself up as censor and suppressor." He added that the broadcast material should pass through with the same speed that news dispatches are handled. A 20% duty is levied, which means that news is being taxed, Brown declared.

Problem has also bothered WOV, N. Y. multi-lingual outlet, which brings in tapes from its Rome studios. National Assn. of Broadcasters has been informed of the situation and is trying to have the barriers removed.

CIO Claims Two Southern Stations Refuse to Sell Time for Labor Airers

Omaha FM'er Gives Up

Omaha, March 7.

KOAD, only exclusive FM station in the area, suspended operations Wednesday (1). It was owned together with KOWH (AM) by the Midcontinent Broadcasting Co. KOAD started operations July 1, '46, and ran identical programs with KOWH. Both stations were sold by the World-Herald to Midcontinent about a year ago. Opinion of KOAH execs was that "the public didn't care for FM enough to buy sets in quantity."

Dropping of KOAD leaves only one source of FM in the area. KBON has both FM and AM.

NBC's Hope Bally In N.Y. Seen Cued By CBS Threat

Intensive ballyhoo campaign launched by NBC last week to plug Bob Hope's appearance at the Broadway Paramount is viewed in the trade as a significant move by NBC to keep the comic tied to its network strings. Behind the move reportedly looms the threat of a switch by Hope to the rival CBS web.

NBC took approximately $50,000 worth of newspaper ads alone to plug the comic's current Paramount stand. In addition, it inserted spot plugs for his stage appearance at every opportunity on its N. Y. radio and television station. Web might have been expected to promote Hope's personaling as a welcome method of promoting its own radio show but, it's pointed out, seldom if ever has a radio comedian been ballyhooed so heavily by a network.

Reports persist that if Hope splits with Lever Bros., his sponsor, at the end of the current 39-week cycle, CBS board chairman William S. Paley will move in to lure the comic to his web. Latest rumor has it that Arthur Godfrey, who has long been buddies with Hope, is running interference for Paley in the negotiations. Godfrey spoke intimately of Hope during his recent guest appearance before the Radio Executives Club in N. Y. and the two are reported to be cooking up a cross-guest shot on each other's radio shows.

Hope's contract with Lever Bros. has four more years to run, but the comedian reportedly is dissatisfied with his bankroller and wants out. Hope's package price on his next option pickup climbs from its current $22,500 to $25,000.

MBS MAY UP DEADLINE ON RELIGIOSO AIRERS

Mutual may up its 1 p. m. deadline for sponsored religious shows on Sundays to 2 p. m. Reason behind the possible shift is the fact that ABC has skedded religious shows on Sunday until as late as 4 p. m. ABC airs Baptist and Lutheran programs, on a split network basis, at 3:30-4 p. m.

Encroachment of religioso broadcasts on what is usually regarded as cream commercial periods is another sign of the times.

WEAN's New Manager

Providence, March 7.

Mowry Lowe, announcer, special events man and more recently conductor of a disk spot on WEAN, Yankee Network, in Providence, was this week named acting manager of the radio station.

He took over with the promotion of Joe Lopez to the home office in Boston.

Washington, March 7.

Charges that two Southern radio stations have refused to sell it time for its labor programs have been filed by the CIO with the FCC, VARIETY learned yesterday (6). Complaints were directed against WKLY in Hartwell, Ga. and WAIM in Anderson, S. C.

Through the law firm of Jerome A. Cooper in Birmingham, of which Hugo L. Black, Jr., son of the Supreme Court Justice, is an associate, the CIO asked the Commission to conduct an investigation and take punitive steps against the stations. It claimed the stations refused programs "of general educational and economic interest to a vast audience of working people."

Complaint charged that WKLY broke a contract executed in January after carrying the first program three weeks ago. Following this broadcast, it advised, a nearby South Carolina newspaper printed a story reporting a public apology by the station's owner "for having broadcast that kind of thing." The newspaper, The Anderson Independent, further quoted the owner, Louie Morris, as saying, "I'm against the CIO. I don't approve of its policies or its tactics, and furthermore, we had already turned down the application of some of the CIO crowd for time on the station . . . we are getting new industries here in Hartwell and we don't want this CIO crowd to muddy up the water."

Morris was reported as saying he had gotten considerable adverse criticism from WKLY listeners and that he hastened to explain to them that the CIO program was broadcast by accident in his absence.

Upon refusal of WKLY to carry subsequent programs, the CIO said, it attempted to buy time on WAIM, but was told none was available. The CIO told the Commission that Morris also publishes the only paper in Hartwell and that Wilton Hall, owner of WAIM, publishes the only daily in Anderson. Both stations, said the CIO, operate roughly within the same area.

CBS May Woo Gardner Over

Hollywood, March 7.

CBS may be able to woo Ed Gardner and "Duffy's Tavern" over if present negotiations can be completed. Show's origination in Puerto Rico is present barrier to finalizing of the deal. Net is more interested in buying the Gardner package than in the mere sale of time, but tax situation prevailing in the Puerto Rico situation may stand in the way.

Both Gardner and his sponsor, Blatz Beer, have been unhappy with the season's ratings in the Thursday slot (last Hooper was 9.1) and want to make a change. NBC may come up with a time change which would stall CBS negotiations.

Calkins & Holden Merging With CM&S in Barnes Hypo

Calkins & Holden, 48-year-old agency which has been expanding its radio activities with the addition on Jan. 1 of Jess Barnes, former MBS sales veepee, and Walter Lurie, ex-MBS senior producer, is merging with the new Carlock, McClinton & Smith outfit. Consolidation was affected by Barnes. Calkins, Holden, Carlock, McClinton & Smith will have billings in the neighborhood of $9,000,000.

New firm will handle Prudential Life's $2,800,000 ad expenditures. Insurance company, which previously aired "Family Hour of Stars" on CBS, backs the "Jack Berch Show" on NBC.

JIMMY DORSEY SHOW

With Jimmy Dorsey orch, Claire Hogan, Kenny Martin; Bob Shipley, announcer
Writer: Charles S. Monroe
Director: Oliver Daniel
Producer: Robert Ray
30 Mins.; Sat., 5 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from N. Y.

Pushing the upbeat of dance bands on the airlanes, CBS is regularly spotting the Jimmy Dorsey orch in the Saturday p.m. segment formerly rotated among various musicrews. It's a firstrate choice, since J. D. is currently climbing on the hit lists at a steady clip and, at the same time, happens to be one of the hottest pop items for Columbia records. This session still pitches for the U. S. Treasury's Savings Bond drive.

Show has a solid beat, with Dorsey dishing out the best brand of music in his career. Up front on the Dixie bandwagon, orch has an inner group, called the Original Dorseylanders, which grinds out a crack style of ragtime. On last Saturday's stanza (4), "Rag Mop," one of Dorsey's current clicks, was taken for a hot ride with a topflight vocal by Claire Hogan, band's femme vocalist. Another solid bit in the Dixie vein was "Jazz Me Blues," which followed a deadpan longhair intro by announcer Bob Shipley, who did a neat overall job of bantering with Dorsey.

Change-of-pace numbers included "I Can Dream, Can't I," vocalled strongly by Kenny Martin and a Dorsey standard, "Green Eyes," with Miss Hogan and Martin sharing the lyrics. One of the high marks on the airer was scored by Charlie Teagarden, trumpet sideman, who delivered a firstrate instrumental and vocal rendition of the oldie, "Ain't She Sweet." Gab portions of the show were handled palatably by Dorsey and Shipley, but the accent was where it belonged—on the music. Herm.

TOM MOORE SHOW

With Moore, the Temptones, Vicki Stevens, Harold Turner, Tony Fontaine; Holland Engle, announcer
Writers-directors: Glenn Ransom, Carlyle Stevens
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 10:30 a.m.
Participating
WGN, Chicago

This new Tom Moore show, moving in as it does right after the CBS morning Arthur Godfrey spread, is an obvious attempt by WGN to strike the hot iron. And if the Chi housewives are not surfeited by the format, the Moore show, with its pleasant potpourri of chatter and music, has the qualities to attract a goodly number of the Godfrey gals.

Moore's style lends itself well to the folksy patter and homey poesy used on the stint. On the show caught (27), his material was a few degrees on the right side of cuteness and hit for mild chuckles with no appearance of strain.

One of the strengths of the half-hour program is its generous musical budget, which cuts down on Moore's load and balances the segment. The Temptones, a well-knit instrumental and vocal quartet, give body to the musical portions and the Vicki Stevens-Harold Turner piano-organ duo adds sparkle with lively-paced numbers. Tony Fontaine soloed the day's ballad. He will alternate with two other vocalists during the week.

The show was scratched a trifle by laughs from studio personnel, which while they give the impression that everyone's enjoying his work, they add nothing to the program, especially if the listeners dont' think it's that funny. Dave.

OPERATION—GOOD SAMARITAN

("Crisis in Asia")
With Alfred de la Fuente, Leon Janney, Mary Patton, others; Charles Carshon, narrator; Leslie Olmsted, announcer
Writer-producer: Albert Crews
Supervisor: Clay Daniel
15 Mins.; Mon. (6), 9:45 a.m.
WNBC, N. Y.

This drama-documentary series is a transcribed package aimed as a pitch for the Church World Service and the splendid work its agents are doing among the displaced persons in Europe.

Teeoff stanza Monday (6), titled "Crisis in Asia," graphically told of the plight of religious-minded Koreans caught in the maelstrom of the Communist conflict. Missionaries of that area gave vivid descriptions of the suffering and hunger rampant there and what the church group, through its agencies is doing to alleviate the condition. It climaxed with a fervent plea for support of all peoples to aid in the work. Written and produced by Albert Crews of the Protestant Radio Commission, with an assist from WNBC's production chief, Clay Daniel, it fills the bill adequately for this type of program. Edba.

YOUR HOME BEAUTIFUL

With Betty Moore (Vickie Vola), Johnny Thompson; Paul Taubman, music; Bob Shephard, announcer
Producer: Herbert Rice
Director: Merton Koplin
15 Mins.; Sat., 11 a.m.
BENJAMIN MOORE & CO.
MBS, from New York
(St. George & Keyes)

"Your Home Beautiful," a 15-minute potpourri of home furnishing hints and songs, made a timely preem on WOR-Mutual Saturday (4), in view of the fact that spring housecleaning and redecoration generally is only a few weeks away. Format has interior decorator Betty Moore, whose radio voice is that of Vickie Vola, suggesting color schemes for the house. On the initial program the kitchen was discussed while other rooms are to be analyzed in subsequent broadcasts.

Color suggestions are brought out in a chatty discourse between Miss Vola, baritone Johnny Thompson and announcer Bob Shephard. Ideas are projected with enthusiasm and the tints are easy to visualize on the basis of the description. Couple of tunes warbled by Thompson help to break up the dialog and represent a good change of pace. Plugs were conservative, which was understandable since the show's overall makeup carried an implied message to dialers—that when they think of decorating, think of Moore Paint. Gilb.

CAMPAIGN KICK-OFF

With President Truman, Gen. George C. Marshall; Henry Fonda narrator
Writers: Ken Greenberg, Arnold Perl
30 Mins.; Tues., 10:30 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC, CBS, MBS, from N. Y., Washington

With a $67,000,000 goal to be reached this month in its annual fund-raising campaign, the Red Cross auspiciously began the drive Tuesday (1) in a half-hour "kick-off" show carried by ABC, CBS and MBS. Appeal to the public wasn't glossed over with a baker's dozen of guest celebs on hand to syrup the issue, but was forcefully projected via a starkly effective documentary based upon several cases contained in the organization's files.

Three case histories, all widely divergent, served to illustrate the broad scope of the Red Cross' aid in times of disaster, war and sudden illness. First recounted the story of a Georgia boy, paralyzed when a tornado struck, who was rehabilitated by the RC. Not only was he helped by medical aid, but the group also bought him tools to set him up as a watchmaker.

Story of the Georgia youth, as were the experiences of a hospitalized 13-year-old Washington, D. C., boy and a veteran who suffered from the loss of speech, were recounted in their own words, apparently by tape recordings. The authenticity was greater emphasized by the terse, to-the-point questions and observations of narrator Henry Fonda, who neatly welded the trio of interviews into a cohesive whole.

Gen. George C. Marshall, head of the Red Cross, outlined the charitable body's 1950 financial objective and also cited the unit as a "great, spiritual force." President Truman, in a four-and-one-half minute address, pointed out the agency's almost indispensable position in community life and urged the public to support some 2,000,000 campaign solicitors. Program marked another milestone in radio's traditional cooperation with worthy charitable causes. Gilb.

CATHOLIC HOUR 20TH ANNIVERSARY PROGRAM

With Eddie Dowling, Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen, Emmet A. Blaes, Niles Trammell, Others
30 Mins., Sun. (5), 6 p.m.
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CATHOLIC MEN
NBC, from N. Y.

Two decades of continuous Catholic broadcasting on the same spot over NBC and independent affiliated stations were marked by a program of dramatization, commentary and speaking Sunday (5). Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen brought it to a moving climax with one of the most sweeping endorsements of radio's and NBC's policy of free time for religious programs ever uttered by a spokesman for a major faith.

The Monsignor said that broadcasting companies have done something which "no other industry since the beginning of time" did. They have "given religion a free ride." NBC, he continued, has donated to "Jews, Catholics and Protestants millions of dollars in radio time, freely, wholeheartedly and sincerely." Monsignor Sheen said

ONE GREAT HOUR

With Lawson Zerbe, Bob Herman, Virginia Bass, David Pritchard, Hal Studer, Ronny Liss, Charles Carshon, Denise Alexander; Berry Kroeger, narrator; John St. Leger, announcer
Writer-director-producer: Albert Crews
30 Mins., Thurs. (2); 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WOR, N. Y.

This half-hour airer presented by WOR in cooperation with the Protestant Radio Commission was a fair dramatization of the plight currently being faced by homeless children in postwar Japan. Program, however, did succeed in conveying a fairly vivid picture of the tragic conditions confronting a number of the Japanese kids today. Put on in behalf of the Church World Service and that org's work in taking care of these stray Japanese juves, show was weakened by tendency to go overboard in pulpiteering. Less preaching would have added to the broadcast's effectiveness.

Yarn dealt with a Japanese soldier's quest for his younger brother, after returning home from the war to find his parents dead and the kid gone. Throughout his search, the pitiful picture of boys stealing for food and sleeping in railroad stations was brought into play, along with the creditable work done by a Christian orphanage in caring for some of the parentless children. Show wound up with the soldier finding his brother and both taking up residence in the orphanage to give a helping hand and learn the ways of Christ. Cast turned in routine performances.

MATINEE AT THE PALACE

With Bob Snyder, Marty Ross
2 Hrs.; Sat.-Sun., 3 p. m.
PARTICIPATING
WOKO, Albany.

Modified disk show from lobby of Fabian's largest upstate theatre, the Palace, has improved since debut two months ago. Level would rise further if Bob Snyder and Marty Ross reduced the gags and kidding, and cut the many plugs for various sponsors. A certain amount of talkiness stems from the two-man format and 120-minutes of air time. Snyder, one-time band booker, who does a morning spinner and two other programs on the station, obviously knows music and musicians. Ross, who originated the teenage jock idea in the capital district, also is musically hep.

Both are radio-wise, too. Snyder, easy and friendly, possesses a deep masculine voice, which he doesn't always use to the fullest advantage. Ross talks well, has a puckish sense of humor (when kept within bounds) and reads copy convincingly. Their characters, especially Ross's "Knothead" (which resembles "Finnegan" of "Duffy's Tavern"), are overworked on some broadcasts. Interviews with musicians and entertainers are moderately well done; those with passing patrons—chiefly children—are included. Former angle could be expanded. Impromptu messages for theatre and its bills have recently incorporated timely pleas for signatures to admission tax repeal petitions. In all, program serves the Palace effectively.

Radio Followup

In one of her infrequent radio appearances, Gertrude Lawrence on Sunday (5) used one of her greatest stage successes, "Lady in the Dark" (1941), as a springboard for a repeat click on "Theatre Guild on the Air." Costarring with Hume Cronyn and Macdonald Carey (the latter of the original Broadway cast), Miss Lawrence was a beguiling Liza Elliott in this musical drama with its psychiatric undertones.

Of course, Miss Lawrence again sang her wellknown "Jennie," and sang it well, while her speaking performance was always ear-arresting. One had to listen intently, of course, so as not to lose the continuity. One could not certainly, tune in the middle and expect to pick up the thread of the performance. Overall, it was an effective performance.

Cronyn aptly underplayed the psychiatrist, handling an unrewarding role well. Carey, as Liza Elliott's arch antagonist, was excellent. A weak spot was the role of the cowboy star, played undistinctively by James Monk. Arthur Vinton, as the magazine publisher, was persuasive, as always. Keene Crockett, the photographer, was another plus factor among the performances.

WEE-WATTERS IN SPOTLIGHT

Stanton, Trammell Charm Coast But Just Ain't Sayin' What Else

Hollywood, March 7.

Everything is calm and peaceful again along these channels and frequencies. The high commands of NBC and CBS have departed and just where they left their marks still remain top drawer secrets. Their ambassadorial touches were everywhere evident and this "lost horizon" is the better off for their visits, all too infrequent.

The big guns who kept the trade in a dither for a few days were Columbia's Dr. Frank Stanton and and NBC's Niles Trammell. If what they were after required salesmanship and charm, the results were conclusive. Trammell passed off his visit as "just talking to our people about television" and incidentally to see the proud flesh of his good friend, Warren Wright (Calumet stables), run at Santa Anita.

Stanton's reason for basking in this clime was supported by advance publicity. The net's western affiliates held their annual gabfest and the good doctor must have sensed a few rankling problems that required his personal attention. True, he got around to meeting his stars, inspecting proposed TV studio sites and huddling with Howard Meighan and his cabinet, but no side trips or social lionizing. His agenda was too crowded for that and as briskly as he moves, he must have just managed to clear the decks before he moved north for a Frisco stopover before heading back to his home base.

Sez It Isn't So

Trammell was in town when the rumor spread through the trade on Bob Hope's imminent washup with Lever Bros. Would he try to sew up the comic for NBC to get the jump on William Paley? He Ellis Vamping Grant With Mars?

Chicago, March 7.

The abrupt March 29 cancellation by Mars, Inc., of "Curtain Time," half-hour Chi-produced drama package owned by Grant Ad Co., aired Wednesday nights, is believed to indicate that Ralph E. Ellis, account exec, is leaving the agency with the Mars account in his pocket.

Pulling of "Curtain" leaves candy company at the moment without a major radio network show. Company dropped the "Dr. IQ" stint last year. Hint of a possible shift to video is seen in "Curtain" cancellation as the show, costing around $4,500 weekly, has consistently pulled a respectable 10-14 Hooperating.

Grant is offering the drama package to other sponsors. Show has been aired for the past five years, first year on ABC and last four years on NBC.

KIOA Sued for $4,940 Pay in Firing Hassle

Des Moines, March 7.

Dan B. Hosmer, former director of production and supervisor of continuity for KIOA, Des Moines, has brought suit against the Independent Broadcasting Co., for $4,940 damages. In his petition he alleges he entered into a written contract of employment with the company on Feb. 8, '49, providing for a salary of $4,560 a year for two years.

He alleges the company wrongfully and without cause discharged him on Dec. 31, '49, and has since prevented him from performing his part of the contract. He contends he is entitled to 13 more months' salary under the contract. A copy of the contract attached to the petition sets out that the contract may be canceled on two weeks' notice by mutual agreement of both parties.

Pitt's 1st Mr. & Mrs. Via Native Son Menjou

Pittsburgh, March 7.

First Mr. and Mrs. show to come through Pittsburgh will be "Meet the Menjous," transcribed Adolphe Menjou-Verree Teasdale program, which KQV has sold here for dual sponsorship by Meadow Gold Dairy and Hafner's Coffee. It will start April 1 with an opening 13-week contract, and is to be aired over the local Mutual outlet five mornings weekly at 10.

Menjou, by the way, is a native Pittsburgher. His father used to run a smart restaurant here, which was patronized by leading locals around the turn of the century.

Mutual to Co-op Ballcasts; Sells Wheaties 1-Shot

Mutual's "Game of the Day" baseball play-by-play will be offered on a co-op basis, the web having failed to come up with one sponsor to take the entire show. Stations will be able to sign local bankrollers on either of two plans: (1) sale to a single backer; or (2) sale of 30-second spots after each half-inning and one 60-second spot at the end of the game.

Frank White, MBS prexy, said that reason for the move was the demand from affiliates to sell the major league ballcasts on a local basis. Some 350 outlets in 31 states will take the games, which will not be aired in areas where major league ballgames are played. Games will, however, be broadcast south of the Mason-Dixon line and west of St. Louis, a territory which includes about 41% of the U. S. population.

Web has sold Wheaties a "Welcome Back, Baseball" one-shot on Sunday, April 17, at 7:30 p.m., with a Coast repeat at 8:30. Bob Hope and Bing Crosby will be starred. Wheaties is also backing a "Welcome Back" show on CBS, April 16. Agency is Knox-Reeves.

'TUNE-O' TUNES OUT TO AID COAL SITUATION

Detroit, March 7.

An unprecedented request by the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. resulted in a two-day suspension last week of "Tune-O," half-hour CKLW across-the-board-show emceed by Eddie Chase. Bell asked suspension because exchange was same as that being used to take emergency requests for coal. The quiz-coal situation was just too much for telephone facilities.

"Although the request to clear the telephone lines came only 10 minutes before air time, the station and sponsors (Schafer Bread and Aunt Jane's Jams and Jellies) were glad to cooperate during the crisis," J. E. Campeau, president and managing director of CKLW, said.

The "Tune-O program here has become so popular that the station has had to add four telephone operators to its staff. A half-million "Tune-O" cards have been requested by listeners so that they can participate in the quiz.

Tobacco Road on Air

Washington, March 7.

Erskine Caldwell, author of the best-seller, "Tobacco Road," has acquired a part interest in WPHO, Phoenix.

Novelist participates in the outlet's refinancing plan, approved today (Tues.) by the FCC.

RURAL MARKET VALUE GROWING

Wee-watters are benefiting from a growing agency interest in small stations, based on the return to a buyers' market, the need for harder selling and a drive to tap the rural market.

Advertising fraternity, mulling the new Broadcast Measurement Bureau study, is finding that it can't rely only on the 50 kw powerhouses to cover the available markets. Although they previously depended on the big stations in a city like Chicago to blanket the broad area surrounding the Windy City, they now find that suburbanites and residents of outlying hamlets are spending more time dialing their local outlets.

Keystone Broadcasting System, transcription web which services 400 rural stations, reports an increase in business from national advertisers. KBS, which sells its groups with a minimum of 80 outlets, for the past 10 years has had plenty of drug sponsors, because it reaches a market that is self-medicating. However, food advertisers are now coming in and the soaps are looking over the situation.

Additional reason for interest in the farm belt now is the growth of television. Villages beyond video range can be served by AM stations and because of their isolation from other means of recreation and entertainment, the intensitv of their listening is greater than in the metropolitan centres. Farm income, too, is relatively stable and represents an important source of sales, KBS toppers stress.

Mutual is also selling the rural market heavily, pitching the fact that 300 of its 500 affiliates are in one-station communities. Loyalty of listeners to their local broadcasters, it's emphasized, gives bankrollers on these outlets an impact which isn't measured by Hooper. One of the reasons behind Ford's big one-shot program purchases on MBS (in January and

AFRA Stepping in as Kay Resigning at WJW Stirs Up All Cleve. Community

Cleveland, March 7.

Executive board of AFRA here has been voted authority to attempt to bring about an understanding in the WJW "Kousin Kay" controversy that has stirred all Cleveland.

Dispute has flared far beyond its petty squabble stage, with Walt Kay, conductor of kindly "Kousin Kay's Korner" half-hour Monday-through-Friday stint at 6:30 being backed by ministerial groups, newspaper editorials and "thousands of just plain listeners." Kay had taken closing moments of his show (25) to protest spotting five-minute "Call to Post" in last five minutes of his stanza, saying he felt horserace results didn't show good programming.

Station offered to forget the entire episode of editorializing if Kay returned Monday without further ado, but Kay maintained that would put him in an unfavorable light, and he asked the right to make brief comment. Kay also said WJW could make a spot between his show and the following five-minute sportscast clearing him; otherwise he felt his resignation would be in order. Station accepted his resignation.

Controversy has now grown far beyond "I'm right, you're wrong" stage. Station owner, Bill O'Neil, now in Florida, turned back Kay appeal, saying his stand is that of on-the-scene station execs, but that he'd be glad to talk "to Walt about the situation" when he returns to Cleveland, March 13.

AFRA, seeking to improve public reaction to radio, will seek O'Neil meeting at that time. Kay is a member of AFRA.

CBS Offers Sponsor Full Football Season Via Multi-Game System

CBS, convinced that its recently-devised system of reporting a number of college football games each Saturday is now fully developed, has decided to pitch the idea to prospective advertisers for next fall. If the web succeeds in lining up a sponsor, it will mark the first time that any network has had an entire season of football games bankrolled.

On the older system of airing only one game each week, the webs had always found it difficult to find a bankroller on anything but an occasional one-shot basis. With all four nets pitching for the top game from week to week, none of them could guarantee a sponsor a complete season's wrapup, since it was impossible to determine whether they could obtain broadcast rights before the season started.

Through its multi-game system, CBS feels it now has that problem licked. System has been built up gradually, starting several years ago with a pickup of two games per Saturday until last season, when the web aired reports of up to 20 separate games on the most hotly-contested weekends. If a bankroller can thus be guaranteed before the season opener that it will be cut in for the top games throughout the fall, CBS thinks it can sell its football on a full-network basis.

Multi-game roundup is produced by the web's public affairs division, with sports chief Red Barber in charge of the operation, as well as chief announcer for the games.

'Hour' on 10th Anni to Air From Carnegie With Pinza

"Telephone Hour" has inked Ezio Pinza for a special appearance April 10 to mark the stanza's 10th year on the air. Star of "South Pacific" will sing three operatic numbers, backed by a chorus of 60 and with the orchestra augmented from 57 to 75 instrumentalists.

Broadcast will originate from Carnegie Hall, first time the NBC airer has come from there. Agency is N. W. Ayer.

WMCA Gets 7½G For FM Adjunct Going Storecast

Washington, March 7.

WMCA, N. Y., is getting $7,500 for its FM station, which owner Nathan Straus finds "too burdensome" to operate.

Application filed last week with FCC to transfer the facility to WYOU, Inc., asked that the WYOU call letters be reserved and said the buyers wish to create "a specialized form of program service for housewives and for those daytime listeners who do not want to hear the 'soap opera' type of dramatic show which permeates the network schedules."

Purchasing company plans a staff of three announcers, three engineers and one program assistant, under the direction of Richard P. Malkin of Brooklyn as general manager. Program proposal calls for 62% use of recorded commercial shows, 22% recorded sustaining and the remainder live sustaining. Buyers contemplate a broadcast week of 72 hours, instead of the present 42 hours, with not more than 12 minutes per hour for commercial spots.

Stockholders in WYOU are Stanley and Barbara Joseloff, Ben and Betty Gordon, and Gloria Hirtz, all of New York; John B. Kelly, Paul F. Harron and Joseph Lang, all of Philadelphia; Patrick J. McCall of Mantzville, Pa.; and Douglas Arthur of Glenside Gardens, Pa.

The Joseloffs and Gordons have interests in Storecasting Corp. of America. McCall, Harron, Kelly and Lang have Storecasting interests in Philly. Harron and Kelly each hold 31% interests in WIBG in Philly.

Value of the WMCA-FM property to be assigned is listed in the application as $26,000. WMCA lists its current assets as of last Nov. 30 at $1,280,000.

NEGRO MARKET LOOMING LARGER TO N.Y. INDIES

Emphasis on the Negro market is continuing to grow among New York City indies. WLIB, which Morris Novik took over from the N. Y. Post last year, will soon open studios in the Hotel Teresa, leading Harlem hostelry, to cement ties with the community. WWRL is also planning an uptown studio.

WWRL this week added several Negro-slanted airers, with stanzas in this category now accounting for 22 broadcast hours per week. Latest addition is Doc Wheeler, ex-bandleader featured on WMCA's "Harlem Amateur Hour," who is doing a morning "Kitchen Kapers" strip. A daily "Spiritual Time" show was also launched last week. Indie already airs Negro sports, swing and Mr. and Mrs. series.

WNEW last week preemed stanzas with two Negro vocalists, Herb Jeffries and Juanita Hall.

Log Nix Certified In Lorain Trial

Cleveland, March 7.

Government's anti-trust suit against Lorain (O.) Journal opened last Wednesday (1) with testimony diclosing the paper refused to accept a WEOL log, even as paid advertising, and that WEOL sought out-of-state listeners as part of Government evidence.

WEOL is key prosecution evidence, showing how the Journal and its officials allegedly conspired to restrain news and advertising, nine miles from Lorain.

Roy Ammel, president of the Elyria-Lorain Broadcasting Co., admitted the station had put on special programs inviting listener response from outside Ohio, to establish interstate dealings after Government served notice it would

Wilson, Sharpe Combine On Coast AM-TV Setup

Hollywood, March 7.

J. Don Wilson, former ABC v.p. in charge of radio and television programs, is affiliating his radio and television production interests with Don Sharpe Agency of Hollywood. Sharpe will concentrate on sales and talent representatives, with Wilson supervising production, including current programs handled by Sharpe like "Night Beat," "Screen Directors Playhouse," "The Dick Powell Show" and others.

Both men will combine their talents in radio and television packages, featuring top Hollywood names.

Sharpe's N. Y. Chores

Don Sharpe arrives in New York today (Wed.) on multiple deals concerning radio and television packages. Agent will finalize negotiations on a new radio series to star Douglas Fairbanks, and will also discuss possible time changes for the Dick Powell "Richard Diamond, Private Detective" series.

Sharpe will also follow up sponsor interest in "Night Beat," Frank Lovejoy starrer, and discuss Brian Donlevy's "Dangerous Assignment" program, which is being prepared for fall television.

Color Near, Dual Standards Likely As FCC Seen Ready to Make Up Mind

By JACK LEVY

Washington, March 7.

With a growing conviction that the development cannot long be kept from the public and that the industry objections are a smoke screen to avoid any disruption of manufacturing operations, the FCC is moving toward adoption of dual standards which will give the broadcaster and the viewer a choice of color television systems.

The very existence of controversy in the color video development is proof of public interest and imminence of arrival. (Witness recent articles in Life, Time, Fortune, Coronet and syndicated columns). With color, it is now a question of "how" the development shall be brought to the public in the traditional system of free competition for public acceptance.

Only a very short time ago, the idea of dual or multiple standards (permitting three systems) was being laughed at as technically impractical and economically unsound. But last week's hearings, which brought out the fruits of earlier spadework to spur competition to perfect color processes, disclosed Chairman Wayne Coy taking the helm in charting the course toward solution of the complicated problems involved. It has become evident that positive action is being seriously considered.

Currently, both RCA and CBS are cool to dual standards. RCA, because of its position with its licensees, doesn't want manufacturers breaking away even a little bit to pay rights for use of CBS patents for color transmission and possibly for some devices at the receiver.

CBS, on the other hand, feels

Roach Revamps Vidpix Program

Hollywood, March 7.

Hal Roach Studios, Inc., is undergoing a reorganization, with H. R. P. Lytle, corporation finance attorney in charge of the management and Roach devoting his time chiefly to television film activities. Under the new program the company will go in for an augmented TV campaign.

Creditors of the company, in return for partial cancellation of their claims, will receive preferred and common stock in the corporation under the realignment. Heaviest single creditor was Roach himself, who cancelled a note for $770,000 in return for such stock.

Company once borrowed $1,500,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corp., of which more than $500,000 has been repaid in recent years. New plan paves the way for renegotiation of the remainder of the loan with RFC. The new board consists of Lytle, Hal Roach, Sr., Hal Roach, Jr., and Sid Van Keuren.

In addition to his video production program, Roach owns copyrights on hundreds of comedy shorts, including many early Harold Lloyd reels, which will soon be made available for television.

Passion Play to U.S. For Television by ABC?

Oberammergau Passion Play, which dates back over 300 years and involves the entire population of the Bavarian town in its production, may be staged in the U.S. by ABC-TV in late fall. Web would fly over a score of the principals from Germany for a condensed televersion of the day-long drama.

Play, which will be put on for the first time since 1934, has never been done outside the German town. Network is now attempting to get State Department and Military Government approval to import the troupe, and if arrangements can be completed, the Passion Play would perform in German, with English translation interpolated.

You Always Run

Detroit, March 7.

During telecasting of "I Believe in America" over WXYZ-TV, Henry Brown, director of the Detroit Historical Assn., was asking Detroit Fire Chief N. C. Higby and Edward J. Blohm, assistant chief, the relative merits of fire-fighting techniques of today compared with those of yesterday. Two firemen rushed into the studios just then and notified the chief that a three-alarm fire at an apartment house required his immediate supervision.

Quick-witted Higby shouted: "Yesterday, today, tomorrow—when there's a fire you run." And he did.

No Need to Link TV Cable to WU Facilities—AT&T

Washington, March 7.

American Telephone & Telegraph, testifying before the FCC on whether it should be required to interconnect with the television cable and relay facilities of Western Union, said today (Tues.) that its investments in the field approximate $40,000,000 and will exceed $60,000,000 by the end of '50.

Bell counsel Ernest North said that AT&T now interconnects with 26 cities and will increase its facilities by year's end to link more than 40. (There are now 66 cities with TV stations.)

Bell contended that all its channels are adequate to meet all requirements for TV service in the area where WU also has facilities, and that there is no public need for linking Bell and WU facilities. Public requirement, North said, is for through service with many outlets and Bell is undertaking to meet that intercity demand. On the other hand, he argued, WU has video relays only between N. Y. and Washington.

Previously Bell had been required to interconnect with private lines of the broadcasters and the present question is whether it will also have to link up with WU. On this point, Bell declared that since WU does not undertake to meet demand for complete service, it can't compete with Bell unless it furnishes its customers Bell's channels to piece out its offerings.

WU position is that it should be allowed to interconnect its net with AT&T.

TECHNI'S GEER TV TUBE 'BUY TIPS VIDEO ENTRY

Hollywood, March 7.

Technicolor has purchased the patent covering a color television tube invented by Dr. Willard Geer, of Southern California U. Buy indicates the company will move into television strongly. Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus says Technicolor is appropriating $500,000 for research, part of which will be applied to professional and commercial application of the Geer tube.

He also said, "One of the great advantages of the Geer device is that it may provide a means for converting black-and-white television sets and television sets in production to receive color television broadcasts in a way which will avoid obsolescence."

Capp, Burrows to Tell All They Know About Comedy

Al Capp, creator of "Li'l Abner," and CBS comedian Abe Burrows are slated to air their views on American-type comedy Friday night (10) via CBS-TV's "People's Platform." Duo will kick around the subject, "Is American Humor Funny?"

Show, aired in the 10 to 10:30 slot, is sponsored by Household Finance Corp. Charles Collingwood is moderator.

KTTV SHIFTS TO NASSOUR LOT; TO SHOOT VIDFILM

Hollywood, March 7.

KTTV has set a deal to take over production facilities at Nassour studios. Station will beam its shows from Nassour sound stages and also film some shows on the lot for syndication throughout the country. KTTV will give up its present Bekins Building studio, but will keep El Patio Theatre for duration of its six-month contract.

It's likely that Nassour lot will be cleared of most other tenants. Nassours, William and Edward, will remain, probably moving into some limited television film production.

Tri-State Net On Midwest Sports

Cincinnati, March 7.

Linking of WCPO-TV here with WHIO-TV, Dayton, and WTVN, Columbus, this week for telecasts of Friday night wrestling matches staged in Cincy's Music Hall Arena, is seen as first step in information of a seven-city, three state TV network to carry sports and other indoor and outdoor events of sectional interest.

Scripps-Howard WCPO-TV has Mutual, ABC and DuMont affiliations. Most other outlets in new web are CBS stations. Cleveland, Toledo, Indianapolis and Louisville stations are expected to join the network upon completion of coaxial cables and microwave relays.

Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus spread competes with the Crosley TV network which has been operating in three cities for some months.

New web is reported to be lining up Cincy Reds and Cleveland Indians baseball for summer and Midwestern Conference football games for the fall. WKRC-TV, local CBS affiliate, is said to be giving up its exclusive video rights to the 12,000 seat Cincinnati Garden, upon expiration of present contract this summer, leaving spot open for feeds to the tri-state web of boxing, hockey and basketball.

Video Is Seen as Bringing Modern Teaching Methods To Most Isolated Schools

Greensboro, N. C., March 7.

Members of the House Ways and Means committee were told in Washington that television eventually will make it possible for the poorest and most isolated public schools to enjoy the benefits of the most modern teaching methods.

In a statement filed with the committee, which is holding tax hearings, P. T. Hines, general manager of the Greensboro News Co., Greensboro, said that television station WFMY-TV (owned and operated by the company) is already working with the public school system in testing methods of audio-visual teaching, in cooperation with the U. of North Carolina.

Hines had protested personally to Federal officials against a proposed 10% tax on television receiver sales, added in his statement that the future possibilities of television in the educational fields are tremendous. He pointed out that only last week public school teachers from all over North Carolina met in Greensboro to study the use of television in the classroom and that WFMY-TV broadcast a special program for their study.

Hines said that the television and FM station owned by Greensboro News Co. represents an investment of approximately $500,000, including $100,000 for operating capital.

Chi TV School Class

Chicago, March 7.

A class devoted entirely to TV has been set up at South Shore high school here. The course was started after a survey showed that 500 of the school's 1,600 pupils came from homes having video sets.

Organized on a workshop basis, course will be devoted to writing, lighting, makeup, research and program criticism.

Mowing the Opposition

NBC television's new two-and-a-half-hour "Saturday Night Revue" cut drastically into the top competing shows on other networks last week (4). Up for the first time against CBS-TV's "Ken Murray Show," which is aired alternate weeks from 8 to 9 p.m., the NBC stanza cut the Murray Hooperating from its previous 29.5 (for Feb. 18, before the NBC show was launched) to an 11.7 last week.

While the NBC opus is carried in whole or in part by most of the web's interconnected stations, for reasons of comparison the Hoopers are based only on the web's four owned-and-operated station areas. These four—N. Y., Chicago, Cleveland and Washington—carry the entire two-and-a-half hours, and so the ratings are considered representative. Average Hooper for the NBC "Revue" dipped slightly last week, from its opening night (Feb. 25) mark of 38.4, to a 35.3 last week.

Other competing programs took it on the chin as heavily as did the Murray show. While no Hooper is available for CBS' "Ed Wynn Show" last week, the NBC competition was marked during the preceding week. Thus, before the NBC program started, Wynn drew a 17.2 rating (for Feb. 18), which dropped to 7.9 opposite NBC's first show (Feb. 25). Drop is believed to have been even more pronounced last week (4), since the rating on NBC's show for the half-hour opposite Wynn (9 to 9:30), climbed from the first week's 39.6 to 41.6. DuMont's "Cavalcade of Stars" was similarly affected. On Feb. 18, before the NBC series started, the DuMont show had a 36.9 average. Against the first week of NBC's competition, the rating dropped to a 10.5 for the first half hour (9 to 9:30) and 9.6 the second half hour.

'Make Haste Slowly,' TV'ers Warned By McLaughlin, Denny at Chi Conference

Chicago, March 7.

Optimism as to the TV industry's future sounded a strong note at the second annual television conference which opened here Monday (6). But frequent warnings against too speedy advancement indicated that many leaders feel the industry is still something of an infant despite the "TV coming of age" theme of the meeting.

In a keynote address delivered to 250 TV officials attending, both John B. McLaughlin, Kraft Foods ad manager, and Charles R. Denny, NBC exec v.p., warned there is still much to be learned about the medium despite its initial success. They cautioned against mistakes made by radio in its infancy, and urged video men to make haste slowly to put the industry on a strong foundation.

Caution was reflected in the afternoon panel session devoted to selling, buying and using video, with frequent emphasis on still unmet problems. Most of the five panel members, although sharing the enthusiasm about TV as a potent advertising medium, admitted wrestling with problems of cost, effective programming and sponsor acceptanceship.

McLaughlin raised eyebrows with a strong attack against spot and station break advertising riding on the coattails of expensive shows. "If all of us who are buying and paying for big shows de-

Connolly's CBS Switch

Thomas D. Connolly has been named manager of CBS-TV program sales, switching over from a similar position in the web's radio department.

He'll supervise selling of CBS-TV house-built packages, reporting directly to sales veepee J. L. Van Volkenburg.

CBS Criticizes DuMont Color As 'Poor Copy'

CBS television, pressing for adoption of its field sequential color system by the FCC, hopped on the color video system unveiled by Dr. Allen B. DuMont at the Institute of Radio Engineers show in N. Y. Monday (6) to point out the similarity of the two methods. While CBS, of course, is plugging its color for commercial broadcast use, DuMont described his system as one designed only for industrial and scientific use on closed circuit transmissions.

DuMont method employs the same filter wheels before the camera and receiver but, where the CBS system is set up to operate on TV's current six-megacycle band width, DuMont has designed his for an 18 mg. band. This, he claimed, provides for the greatest possible detail and definition and, he charged, the commercial systems being promoted by CBS, RCA and Color TV, Inc., all are trying to cram three colors into space of only a single-color band. DuMont system scans 180 fields, as compared with CBS' 144, and operates on a 525-line standard, as compared to CBS' 405.

Dr. Peter Goldmark, CBS research chief, told the press after the DuMont demonstration that he didn't "mind DuMont using the CBS system, but I feel hurt that they didn't do a better job with it." Color shown by DuMont was not true at all time, with the whites especially showing poor definition. Slight flicker in reception was attributed by DuMont to the use of Diesel generators to power the demonstration. He said the cost of his system for a one-color chain would be slightly under $20,000.

Animated Cartoon Series For Kiddie Consumption

Charles J. Basch's Television Screen Productions is producing a series of five-minute animated cartoons designed for kiddie consumption. Strips, labeled "Jim and Judy in Teleland," will run three-and-one-half-minutes, leaving the remaining time for commercials.

Four shows have already been completed, with a total of 13 episodes scheduled to be wrapped up by May.

75% of Sets in 10 Leading Markets

Washington, March 7.

Approximately 75% of TV sets in circulation are concentrated in 10 leading markets, according to a geographical breakdown of receiver shipments issued last week by the Radio Manufacturers Assn. Report showed that about 2,400,000 of the 3,182,000 sets shipped out by RMA member factories since postwar to Jan. 1, '50, went to New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles, Newark, Boston, Detroit, Cleveland, Baltimore and Washington.

However, as new TV markets open, proportion of total sets in the big centers declines. Shipments during the fourth quarter of 1949 showed about two-thirds going to the top 10, with remainder going to 40 other areas. Distribution to such cities as Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Cincinnati and San Francisco showed noticeable increase in final quarter of year.

RMA breakdown indicated that number of TV sets in some 16 states is still negligible.

Report reflected establishment of first TV stations in Miami and Jacksonville, Phoenix, Nashville, Greensboro, N. C., Huntington, W. Va., Portland, Ore., Tulsa, San Antonio, Birmingham, Albuquerque, Indianapolis, Oklahoma City and Charlotte, N. C.

RMA production constitutes 80 to 85% of total industry output.

TV DISHING OUT THE CULTURE

Kid Shows, Sports Topped NBC '49 List; Films Ran Only 11.7% of Total Time

Despite the apparent stress currently being placed on vaudeo and dramatic programs by the television broadcasters, a wrapup of the various show categories aired by NBC during the last year discloses children's shows and sports still topping the list. In addition, the web's report, made available only this week, reveals that early estimates of the importance of film to TV have not yet borne fruit, since film shows accounted for only 11.7% of NBC's total broadcast hours during 1949.

While the survey covers only NBC-TV's program operations, it's believed that it is fairly representative of the entire industry. Other networks may have aired more feature film than NBC during the last year and NBC might have gone more heavily in some other branch of programming but, with TV competition among the webs as hot as it is, most of them are following virtually the same programming pattern. Industry analysts point out, however, that the survey cannot be construed as representative of future program operations. Medium is still in an experimental stage programwise and thus the entire picture may change before it settles down into a steady pattern.

Of a total of 1,922 hours and 28 minutes of programming during 1949, NBC devoted 346 hours, or 18% of the total, to shows for moppet viewers. Sports represented 16.5% of the total, which drama had 1.5.2% and variety programs 11.8%. Runners-up, in order, were musical shows, 9.1%; quiz and audience participation,

Carson Ford Stint To Cost Him 15G

Jack Carson's starrer on CBS-TV's "Ford Theatre" Friday (10) will cost the pic star in the neighborhood of $15,000. In order to take the role in the television production of "Room Service," Carson had to cancel two weeks of engagements for his "Jack Carson Show" in Detroit and St. Louis—for which he gets $7,500 a week—and is paying salaries of the 11-man troupe, plus their hotel expenses.

Sylvan Taplinger, talent buyer for Kenyon & Eckhardt, snagged Carson for his video debut by getting Bob Wolf, of K&E's Coast office, to contact the film performer as soon as he learned that Carson had severed his contract with Warners. Carson, who is getting about $2,500 for the Ford guester, agreed, he said, "because "I've alway wanted to do a three-act play. 'Room Service' is a vehicle I like and I want to see how I like TV and how TV likes me." He feels that the Ford airer has a great deal of prestige and expresses amazement "at how far TV has advanced."

Carson, who has been rehearsing for a week, said that video requires "a much tougher schedule than films." His troupe, which includes Robert Alda and Janis Paige, will resume its tour in Detroit March 24. Carson will start work on a film for RKO around April 15.

Because of his father's death, Carson flew to the Coast Monday (6). He's due back today.

Horton in 'Hotel' for New ABC-TV Packard Stanza

Title for the Packard stanza which ABC-TV will preem March 23 has been set as "Holiday Hotel;" with Edward Everett Horton acting as the manager. Show, to be aired Thursday at 9:30 p.m., will combine situation comedy with vaude elements.

Bernie Green will serve as musical director. Agency is Young & Rubicam.

Crusade Critic

Some prankster, as yet unidentified, pulled a gag that had the audience chuckling at the American Television Society luncheon Friday (3) at the Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y. With Robert Montgomery as guest speaker, the jokester tipped a bellhop to parade around the room paging, "Call for Mr. Frank Costello."

Montgomery, through his ABC radio show, is carrying on virtually a one-man crusade to have Costello de-naturalized and deported for alleged gambling activities. He recently filed a plea for such a move in N. Y. federal court.

Don't Play Down To Your Audience, Sez Montgomery

Robert Montgomery warned the television industry last week that it must necessarily fail as a medium of entertainment if it makes the mistake of playing down to its audience. Without referring to the film industry by name, he intimated that one of the chief problems confronting Hollywood today is the audience lost because producers lost touch with the public. If TV producers begin to "feel contempt for the audience," he declared, "they will sense that contempt and we will lose them."

Speaking at an American Television Society luncheon at the Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y., Montgomery, who is now producing NBC-TV's "Lucky Strike Theatre," said that in his 26 years in show biz, he's only become certain of one or two things. One of these, he said, is that in any medium, "it's very easy for the people involved to forget its audience and begin to feel better" than the public to whom they are playing. "But in all the history of show business," he added, "no audience has ever failed—it has always been producers who have failed." Thus, he added, the greatest mistake possible is to underestimate the public.

Montgomery alluded to the oft-repeated allegation that the average American public has the mentality of a 12-year-old. "But it makes no difference," he asserted, "whether a person is 12 years old mentally. The approach to an audience is one of the emotions and instinct and has little to do with cerebral processes. Their instincts

Lester's Interviews With Film Celebs Are Set on CBS for Year

Hollywood, March 7.

Gene Lester's deal with CBS for a series of television pictures running over the period of one year was finalized Friday (3). This is the second deal CBS has made for the production of a series of vidfilms; the first being with IMPPRO for 13 "Cases of Eddie Drake" pix.

Lester's deal calls for a guarantee plus a percentage of coin derived from CBS affiliates beaming films. Pix, originally titled "Let's Call Hollywood," and now without a monicker, each run 15 minutes. Films are set up so each station appears to be holding an exclusive interview with a Hollywood thesp.

Lester already has eight films in the can and five ready to be rolled. Among those already on film are George Raft, Roddy McDowall and Virginia Bruce. Lester is producing and directing the series.

CORRUPTING KID CHARGES DERIDED

Television industryites are scoffing at reports that they're corrupting the morals of their younger viewers. They claim they are responsible for propagating more of the best in music, drama and other cultural activities than any other medium. In fact, they point out, more people probably saw Shakespeare last year on video than all those in the 350 years since the Bard penned his classics.

Striking back at the number of critics or allegedly disappointed viewers who have attacked video recently for putting too much emphasis on whodunit and horror shows, TV spokesmen charge such critics overlook the more cultural aspects of the medium. They reiterate that the whodunits are a part of commercial programming and that, if parents think such shows hurt their youngsters, then it's the parents' responsibility to keep the kids away from such programs. Even with injudicious selection of moppet fare, however, the videoites claim the kids are way ahead. This is the result of the medium's tremendous impact, whether for good or bad, on all viewers.

One parent, for example, related seeing his four-year-old daughter repeatedly pouring water from one glass to another. When he puzzledly quizzed her, she said she was "aerating" the stuff for her doll. She explained that this was what the frozen orange juice manufacturers did in their TV commercials. Parent pointed out that he probably hadn't used such words until he started college. Same father declared his daughter had learned to tell at the age of three, just to make certain she didn't miss her favorite TV shows. These are examples of the better things video does which its detractors fail to recognize.

Longhair List

As for TV's dissemination of culture, industryites point with pride to the classical music, ballet, legit, etc., which they program as a matter of course. To prove their point about Shakespeare, they list "Julius Caesar," which was aired twice last year on CBS' "Studio One" and once by the Amherst Masquers via NBC; "Comedy of

Small Mfrs. See Color Dooming 'Em

Washington, March 7.

Some small TV set manufacturers are worried that they may get squeezed out in the transition to color video. One such, Packard-Bell Co. of Los Angeles, fears that if FCC's decision on color causes a big drop in black and white receiver output without substantial production of color sets, it might be forced out of business.

In a petition filed by its Washington counsel, Seymour Krieger, company said the Commission decision will have a "vital effect" on the concentration of power in the big manufacturers of television receivers. These firms, said Packard-Bell, make a diversity of products and could weather the storm, while it has to depend virtually on TV business.

In requesting permission to present testimony in the current hearings, company urged adoption of standards for "good color television" as soon as possible, but such a system, it said, "should first be adequately field-tested and should be entirely compatible without modification and without the addition of gadgets which only skilled engineers can manipulate."

Company's gross sales of radio and TV sets last year approximated $5,500,000, of which 80% came from video. Firm is now producing at a $12,000,000 annual rate.

CBS Loses 2 More—Hope & Hoop—Due to Lack of Affiliates' Time

CBS television lost two more top shows to competing networks this week through its inability to clear time on enough affiliate stations. Web gave up the Bob Hope series of Frigidaire-sponsored holiday shows, starting with Easter Sunday, to NBC, and was forced to sit by while ABC copped pickup rights to the National Invitation Tournament in college basketball, starting at Madison Sq. Garden, N. Y., Saturday (11).

Hope series, of course, is the more important of the two and CBS almost had that one in its pocket. TV sales chief David Sutton returned from Chicago huddles with reps of Frigidaire and the Foote, Cone & Belding agency early last week with a pencilled order for the show. NBC also put in its bid for the series, one of the video plums of the year, and as of Thursday (2), both webs were ready to announce they had it sewed up. FC&B reps came to N. Y. Friday, though, to huddle with Hope in his dressing room at the Broadway Paramount, where he's currently headlining. When it became apparent that CBS couldn't clear the stations, the series was tossed into NBC's lap.

Same situation occurred with the basketball games. CBS has had a virtual monopoly on network pickups from the Garden for the last several years and thought it had the inside track on the NIT meet. Sponsor, who has not yet been identified, wanted more stations than CBS could provide, though, and so decided to swing the contract to ABC. Latter web declined comment on getting the series this week, so that it's not known how many of the tournament games will be televised.

At the heart of the CBS problem is the slowness with which the web's primary radio affiliates entered video. Other webs got in first both in number of owned-and-operated outlets and prime affiliates, forcing CBS, for the most part, to share affiliation in many

TV Impact Forces Agencies to Shift Setups, Sez Gibbs

Television boom's impact on show business is forcing small agencies to change, merge or perish, according to John E. Gibbs. Latter has, therefore, expanded his agency's activities from radio, on which he concentrated for more than a decade, to television, films and legit. Gibbs left Gotham for Hollywood yesterday (Tues.) to negotiate a tieup with a new Coast firm, Artists Agency Corp., replacing his link with Berg-Allenberg (who merged with the William Morris Agency).

Emergence of video as an important factor, cutting across traditional show biz lines, requires agencies to become more diversified, with those primarily in radio having to find new fields as a hedge against the AM decline, Gibbs said. As a result, he is concentrating on TV and has added Robert Lantz to his staff to specialize in films and legit, while Francis Head is moving into the same fields.

Importance of diversification is seen in the fact that talent crosses easily from one field to the other and that producers want material as well as stars. For the Lucky Strike-Robert Montgomery show on NBC-TV, in which Gibbs is associated, the agency could deliver not only Madeleine Carroll, but also Somerset Maugham's "The Letter." It handles the British author for radio and tele.

Video devours so much material, Gibbs stresses, that writers are a key factor in any agency. His office handles several AM and TV scripters, including Elaine Carrington, and represents the estates of Damon Runyon, Luigi Pirandello and Stefan Zweig, among others, which makes it relatively easy to get good properties.

As a package house, Gibbs' office placed "Welcome Travelers," "Marriage for Two" and "Dorothy Dix" on NBC and "Ladies Be Seated" on ABC. But the move towards expansion in other fields is spurred, he explains, "because the age of specialization has passed in this time of crisis."

Daytime Video Cutting Deep Into AM in N. Y.; TV Takes Lead in B'klyn

Television has outstripped radio in Brooklyn, according to Hooper data, and daytime TV in New York City has become relatively as important as evening video was 11 months ago.

In the Dec. '49-Jan. '50 N. Y. report, covering 6-11 p.m., TV's share of the broadcast audience is 44.7%, with the borough of Brooklyn passing the 50% mark. Station with the biggest audience is WCBS, with 15.9%, followed by WCBS-TV and WNBT tied at 13.3%. Those two video stations have larger audiences than WNBC, with 10.9%.

Hooper's explanation is that although N. Y. has roughly four times the number of radio homes than TV homes, New Yorkers are doing more viewing than listening. Taking into consideration reports that more people watch each tele set than listen to each radio set,

Luckies Grab Up 'Show Business'

CBS lost little time this week in sewing up a new sponsor for its Sunday night "This Is Show Business" stanza. With Crosley having decided last week to bow out after completion of the first 26-week cycle March 26, the web pacted with Lucky Strike to pick up the tab starting the following Sunday, April 2. Luckies will take the show for 13 weeks, into the start of the summer season.

Ciggie outfit's signing for "Show Business" underscores the tobacco industry's emphasis on video advertising, with all five of the major companies and some of the smaller

Alan Young Esso Show To Be Launched on Coast

Hollywood, March 7.

New Alan Young television show for Esso is scheduled for launching here next Tuesday (14) via KTTV. Half-hour comedy will be kinescoped for a teeoff on the CBS-TV eastern and midwestern network, starting April 6, when it will take over the Thursday night 9 to 9:30 slot.

Ralph Levy, who produces the Ed Wynn Show for CBS, will produce and direct. Leo Solomon and Dave Schwartz are to handle the scripting, with Lud Gluskin leading the orch. Young is to be the only star name on the show, but he will feature a different male and femme vocalist each week. Also set as regulars is a dance group under the direction of Tom Mahoney.

Tele Followup Comment

Second stanza of NBC-TV's two-and-a-half hour "Saturday Night Revue" (4) topped the initialer the preceding week in all departments. Production was tighter, skits were funnier, the Chicago hour's origination was better, guest talent was fine and the mistakes were more glaring—such as cutting into the middle of Mischa Elman's violin solo for a chain-break commercial.

Combination of the ratings and of the overall quality of the show indicates NBC should have little trouble in attracting the other participating sponsors needed for a sellout. But the web hit the depths of poor taste in the Elman fiasco. TV has had a difficult enough time in luring the topname concert artists and will have to treat them better than this. Slotting Elman at a different time probably would have solved the problem in this case, but even if it meant bypassing the commercial and bringing new stations in on the program after his number, that should have been done.

First hour from Chi, starring Jack Carter, again suffered from poor lighting and the Chi camera crew's apparent inexperience in working in a theatre, since the lensers failed to follow the several dance teams. Otherwise, the show was fine, highlighted by an extremely funny skit between Carter and Don Ameche and a couple of sock turns by Gertrude Niesen. Dorothy Claire wowed with her "Song Coming On" routine, including impressions of some top femme vocalizers, and Don Richards did a neat job with a pair of operatic arias. Benny Baker, another regular, looked good in a pair of skits. Surrounding talent was standard but good vaudeo fare, including LaBrach and Bernice, cyclists; Step Bros. (4), terpers (whose act was also cut into for a chain break, incidentally) and Elsa and Waldo, ballet satirists.

N .Y. end, produced and co-scripted by Max Liebman, was again sparked by the brilliant comedics of stars Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca, and rates a double nod for the writing of Liebman, Mel Tolkin and Lucille Kallen. Miss Coca's Venetian gondolier and Cinderella satire represented bright, adult comedy; Caesar's impression of a femme arising from bed was sock, and their pairing on the Samson and Delilah skit and the opening stop-action routine were fine. How long they'll be able to maintain the freshness and pace remains to be seen, but they certainly accomplished it this stanza.

Rest of the show, too, was top-quality. Operetta soprano Marguerite Piazza demonstrated that pop tunes can also be her forte with a neat rendition of "I See Your Face Before Me," in which she had good production mounting, and Liebman wisely chose some excerpts from "Carmen," which incorporated the necessary movement and action, for her duet with Robert Merrill.

Classics also got a ride via Elman's Slavonic Dance by Dvorak and his second, abortive number. Hamilton Trio terped a fine "Hallucinations" sketch and the other ballet numbers, particularly the "Mardi Gras" finale, rate a bow for choreographer James Starbuck. Acro-Maniacs were okay in their single showing. Trio of one-minute spots for the first three participating bankrollers were all inserted between 9:30 and 10 and indicated the lengthy program will be able to take them in their stride.

"Ken Murray Show" on CBS-TV, competing against the "NBC Saturday Night Revue" for the first time last week (4), didn't reach the level which will be required if it is to hold on to its share of audience. Probably its biggest draw was the appearance of filmactor Kirk Douglas recreating two scenes from "The Champion," together with Paul Stewart as his trainer and Arleen Whelan in the golddigger part originally played by Marilyn Maxwell. Included in the production were clips of the pic's montage effect which showed the fighter's stiff training sessions and the murderous kayos with which he climbed to the top. By comparison, the video version was weak. Probably because of the condensation, Douglas' characterization of the heel-champ shifted from the film's bitter indictment of his ruthlessness to a kind of glorification of his prowess.

By and large the Murray program stacks up as having small-town rather than sophisticated appeal, with its use of familiar gags and vaudeo talent. Jan Rubini played a brace of semi-classical violin numbers, accompanied by his young son, with Murray joining in for a "Johnny-One Note" routine on "Night and Day." Also in the rural-slanted groove was a bird act, with the aviary performers from the Academy Award-winning "Bill and Coo." A bit more zing was added by Darla Hood and the Enchanters in a bouncey rendition of "In My Merry Oldsmobile."

High spot of the telecast was a segment on the 1904 St. Louis Fair, with the entire cast involved in some good production numbers. Commercials by Jack Mulhall were neatly integrated into the show, with the St. Louis bit used to emphasize the 97-year-old aspect of Anheuser-Busch via the fact that already it had won several international prizes.

Milton Berle, prior to his takeoff for a two-week absence from the Texaco show to fill nitery engagement at Copa City, Miami Beach, came up with a divertissement that gave him a solid curtain. Tuesday's (28) display had the added ingredient of taste in several sequences, plus some of the bits that he does excellently. Furthermore, the talent collection delivered a high quota of entertainment.

One of the episodes, depicting the Rockefeller Center skating rink, was the setting of a good production number in which there was a distinguished bit of ballet twirls by Nancy Crompton. The production line in the background also contributed a hefty share in creating a pleasant effect during this number.

The acts were top-drawer items. Rudy Vallee reminisced with his songs of the '20's for good results, and aided in Berle's glee club number which has been a nitery and vaude mainstay with this comic. It's still a funny bit despite its w.k. character.

Probably the best single turn on the show was the Charlivels, act which recently wound up its first engagement in the U. S. at the Latin Quarter, N. Y. This amazing French import truly impressed with some of the fastest ballet and acro work imaginable. This trio similarly hit the televiewers with their tap and instrumental work as well.

Fran Warren made a good impact both vocally and visually. Her songs went over nicely.

Victor Jory and Berle got a good supply of laughs out of a psychiatric bit and the midterm commercials got an added bit of cuteness with moppet Kenny Shapiro subbing for vacationing Sid Stone. Hank Ladd takes over as emcee next week.

Ed Sullivan came up with another method of licking the talent scarcity problem on his "Toast of the Town" vaudeoer Sunday night (5) via CBS-TV. With filmster Margaret O'Brien as guest, Sullivan reprised those old silent clips' routine he did in vaude to demonstrate a possible yesteryear TV "Toast of the Town." Sullivan did an okay narration and the spot emerged pleasantly nostalgic.

Show withal was one of the better in the series. Vic Damone headlined and did a neat job with a couple of tunes for the windup but had to share the singing honors with Monica Lewis. Latter has improved tremendously since she guested on the first "Toast" show almost two years ago and earned herself a begoff (from the studio audience) this time. Anton Karas, composer of the "Third Man Theme," played it on his zither, with director-choreographer John Wray building a nice ballet for backgrounding. Those cameras, however, which never fail to come in for a closeup of a pianist's hands, missed the closeup on Karas for which the audience was waiting.

Trini Rayes opened the show with a colorful flamenco number and Jimmy Valentine, one-legged terper, repeated his waltz and jitterbug routines with his pretty partner for good results. Comic Micki Deems faltered with his opening monolog but closed better with an impersonation of Maurice Chevalier on "Valentina."

NBC turned to comic opera with Johann Strauss' "The Bat" for the third in its series of English-language works Monday night (6) and came up with a full hour of pleasant, tasteful viewing. English lyrics penned by Ruth and Thomas Martin often sounded like Gilbert and Sullivan, but that only added to the broad comedy vein in which the whole show was played. In an apparent attempt to render the classic more palatable to the mass TV audience, producer Samuel Chotzinoff and director Peter Herman Adler eliminated all the standard recitative, featuring only the most popular arias.

Under the supervision of Adler and TV director Charles Polachek, the cast emphasized the slapstick and, even under the cameras' closeup, demonstrated good thesping ability for the most part. Ethel Barrymore Colt as Rosalinda at times seemed too conscious of the lenses peering down her throat and failed to enunciate her lyrics clearly, but gave ample evidence of a sterling soprano voice. Edward Kane was standout as Eisenstein but Joseph Mordino, while tenoring nicely, did not overcome his heavy stage dramatics. Adelaide Bishop was appealing and sang well as the chambermaid, Adele, and Johnny Silver did a good job in the role of Blind (the Bat). Henry Calvin, as the prison warden, Ray Jaquemot, as Falke, and Gene Barry, as the titled Orlovsky, added to the fun.

Settings by Paul Barnes and costumes by Rose Bagdanoff were adequate for the average small-sized viewing screen, and Lillian Moore's choreography provided nicely-routined waltzes for the famed Strauss music.

Jerry Lester, in taking over as permanent emcee on "Cavalcade of Stars," hasn't approached the subject of being a video conferencier in the same manner that has characterized his work on a nitery floor, where he's generally a sock item. Lester might as well have been a straight emcee. His comedy introes were negligible and his work with other acts on the show was nothing to speak of.

There was one exception. He did his telephone quiz bit, and it's as strong a comedic session in this medium as it has been in cafes and vaudeville. This sequence indicates that had Lester elected to do more of bits he came up with, he'd register more incisively than he did.

Lester takes over this show at a crucial time, as far as this program is concerned. NBC offers the competition of one of the costliest shows on the video spectrum. If he's to bear up under that opposition, he's got to assert himself in a more definite manner than he did. It might be a good idea to utilize the antics that he's developed over the years.

The surrounding talent is on a par with the other "Cavalcade" shows. The vaudeo olios registered well. The Mayo Bros. shaped up fine in the opening tap spot; filmster Janice Paige hit it off nicely with song and the Irving Fields Trio displayed some colorful music with "St. Louis Blues" and "Oye Negra." Lester worked well with comedy balleteer Dorothy Jarnac in a choreographic interpretation of a letter and Metopera basso Salvatore Baccaloni profundoed into a good reception.

Arthur Godfrey and Gertrude Berg are easily the two top video hucksters extant. When Molly Goldberg leans out the window she almost makes a Sanka Anonymous do a backslide, and Godfrey sells those cigarets like they were reefers, and Lipton's tea like it was vintage grape. When the two merge on one program that's a parlay which even the late George Washington Hill never conceived. There was a taste of it when Miss Berg guested on Godfrey's "Talent Scouts" a fortnight ago, and when the latter-day Major Bowes on Monday visited The Goldbergs he turned their apartment into an alfresco Bronx road company of Nola Hall.

There were more auditions going on than in a Hollywood casting office at one and the same time, as Molly got herself in the middle by agenting the "Fingerhoods'" young hopeful, Arnold Stang. Actually that was the weakest payoff, as Stang was too studiously schmo as the gawky candidate in a Boy Scout uniform. The more natural and not as uninhibited performances by the Magid Triplets, three lads of around 5-6, who did a Lauder medley and came back for a studiously corny song-and-dance, were standout. Philip Hepburn, colored song-and-dance specialist, gave evidence of professional promise, and there was a one-to-fill rhumba specialty by another little girl, plus a bit with a dog. It wasn't the shambles, as might be expected, since Miss Berg very carefully scripted a sound framework by arranging the audition for Stang that resulted in the other neighbors wanting to know why she was so anti-neighborly as regards the other talented kids in the house. When Godfrey came on the scene he was beset by the talent parade and never got to Mrs. Goldberg's borscht, blintzes and strudel, but for the finale was seen at his private window packing in the groceries.

"The Goldbergs" remains one of TV's outstanders. It is consistently a cannily written, painstakingly produced effort. Each scene is made vignette and the hokum is rarely permitted to get broad as occurred when "Uncle" Eli Mintz started to do a little ballin'-the-jack on Monday night's session. His is usually a sharp sympathetic character of the hapless relative who "used to be a watchmaker, you know." Philip Loeb as the industrious Bronx husband likewise maintains parity, and Larry Robinson ditto as son Sammy and Arlene (Fuffy) McQuade as daughter Rosie. Dora Weissman and Betty Walker are yoohooing neighbors. On this show May Questel (yesteryear's "Betty Boop" of film shorts) also did a solid character bid as an overly ambitious mother. Walter Hart's direction and Worthington Miner's production round out the credits, all top-drawer.

"Garroway at Large," (NBC-TV), after faltering slightly under the weight of its new sponsor two weeks ago, came back strongly Sunday night (5) with a half-hour loaded with most of the sparkle and zing that have become trademarks of the series. Topper for the evening was a lengthy production number featuring the entire cast, based on a tune penned by Dan Brown, floor manager on the show. Titled "How Do You Act in Rome to Act Like the Romans Do," the number could have earned a place in any Broadway revue—given, of course, the same novel production accorded it on the Garroway stanza.

Show eased off on the trick camera effects on which it has relied so heavily in the past, but there were plenty of other original ideas, such as the finger-snapping on Bette Chapel's teeoff number and the use of a string quartet playing a minuet to segue into the "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend" number. Latter featured Connie Russell and Cliff Norton in a groovy rendition. Others among the regular cast, including Jack Haskell and the Charles Tate-Margaret Gibson terp team, were up to their usual top-drawer par. Garroway himself paced the show amicably as emcee and proved again that he's a capital salesman with his fine job on the Congoleum commercials.

Perry Como had some good company as well as excellent atmosphere in his Sunday (5) Chesterfield show. Como, pictured as sauntering in his boyhood surroundings, created a congenial setting which permitted graceful introductions of guests and surrounding talent. Show was one of the better Como video exhibits.

Wally Cox, this season's legit discovery through his work in the short-lived "Dance Me a Song," got his comedy across excellently. Pictured as a soda-jerker, Cox gave his now w.k. discourse on a juve delinquent, plus a bit on the queer habits of one of his customers, both of which added up to prime laugh-fodder.

The Fontane sisters highlighted their efforts with a colorful vocal of "Mississippi Mud," and Johnny Coy kicked off a neat tap number. Como made a pair of good contributions with "Rag Mop" and "Black Moonlight.'

Vincent Van Gogh's tragic life provided a compelling story for one of "Philco Television Playhouse's" most impressive productions Sunday (5). The NBC-TV stanza, via H. R. Hays' adult and perceptive adaptation of Edwin Alden Jewell's biography of the great Dutch painter, caught the full impact of Van Gogh's hectic career, his tortured soul, his love for humanity, his inability to find success in the commercial sense, his violent outbreaks of temper, his madness and eventual suicide.

Everett Sloane mastered a difficult role that made the artist's inner conflicts, helplessness and genius believable, his self-destructiveness frightening, and yet won sympathy for the mentally-sick and sadly misunderstood Van Gogh. Script opened with Van Gogh's declaration of love to his widowed cousin, which shocked her and the family and forced the artist to leave his native Netherlands. It included some highly dramatic sequences, such as that in which Van Gogh threatened his friend Gauguin with a razor and ended by slashing off his own ear. This demanding scene was given topflight direction—the camera fading in and out of focus as Van Gogh's mind snapped, his painting of the room spinning and superimposed on an extreme closeup of wildly searching eyes, and then a still-life of a razor and an ear on the floor. Another standout segment had Van Gogh masochistically bemoaning his "failures," and Edgar Stehli, as his doctor-friend, praising Van Gogh's greatness in drunken expansiveness and driving him to a new fit of madness—with the artist pulling out the gun with which he ended his life. Chester Stratton also added some moving scenes as Van Gogh's devoted brother.

Fred Coe's production and Delbert Mann's direction involved effective use of Van Gogh's canvases to set the scenes and the moods, and Otis Riggs' fine settings in several instances were patterned after the masterpieces.

Ted Husing, erstwhile sportscaster who is now one of the country's top-paid disk jockeys via WMGM, N. Y. radio indie, made a dual comeback into the sports field as announcer for CBS-TV Wednesday night (1) on the fights from St. Nicholas Arena, N. Y. Besides returning to his first love, he simultaneously returned to the web with which he had been associated for almost 20 years. Result should be advantageous for sports, for CBS and certainly for the viewers, since Husing demonstrated he has lost little of his oldtime knack.

Gabber parlayed his smoth voice and obvious knowledge of boxing into a sock descriptive job. As with many radio announcers entering video sportscasting, he showed a tendency towards over-spieling. But where the majority are prone to give out with too much word-description (for which there is no need because of the all-seeing camera), Husing inserted anecdota, side-facts, etc., which should have helped the viewer enjoy the bouts. He did make the one mistake of second-guessing the decision which, even though he was eventually correct, is an unwise thing to do. As for the plugs for Pabst Beer, which bankrolls the CBS pickups, he handled them, of course, impeccably.

"The Play's the Thing," new series title for World Video's "Actors Studio" shows, got off to an okay start Friday night (3) via CBS-TV with the presentation of John Galsworthy's "Apple Tree." Classic love yarn, neatly adapted by David Shaw, had been done previously on radio but this was its first TV airing and, with a good cast under the adept direction of David Pressman, made for a neat hour's viewing. By comparison with present-day dramatics, the "girl-from-the-other-side-of-the-tracks" motif was pure sentimentalism. But its turtle-like pace preserved the crinoline and lace atmosphere of Galsworthy's writing, which was probably the result sought. Story was soap-operaish but well-portrayed.

Patricia Kirkland depicted a believable Megin, the Welsh farm-girl whose chance love for a London gentleman resulted in her tragic suicide. John Merivale was fine as the romantically moody cause of it all and Grace Kelly, as the gentlewoman for whom he tossed aside his farm-girl, was both beauteous and competent in her role. Supporting cast, topped by Richard Malek as Mericale's friend, and John F. Hamilton as the old caretaker, was good. Several minor faults, such as having the characters appearing in the same clothes after a span of several years, were noticeable but did little to mar the production.

"The Big Story," Friday (3) on NBC-TV presented a documentary about a Houston jailbreak, with much of the production filmed on location in the Texas city. Story told how Houston Press reported Harry McCormick got wind of the impending break and tracked down three inmates who escaped from "The Walls"—Huntsville Prison—by forging pardons and having them mailed from the state capitol. The filmed scenes, using dramatic angles and technically expert lensing, added impact—with shots of grim rifle-toting sentries, sullen prisoners working in the yards, the forbidding cell blocks — which would be difficult to capture inside existing studios.

Arnold Perl's script worked up suspense through its factual handling of the details of prison organization and life, and its unfolding of the ingenious and daring methods used by the criminals to effect their release. And it got over the point that some of the prisoners were willing to expose the plan of escape, because the institution was using humane methods of dealing with the convicts, as well as to get a break from the

TOP THE CHAMP
With Bill Campbell
30 Mins.; Wed., 9:30 p.m.
SHUFFLE BOWLING LEAGUE OF AMERICA
WCAU-TV, Philadelphia

"Top the Champ" introduces to televiewers the game of shuffle-bowling, a fast moving new coin machine. Program is largely promotional aimed to install shuffle-bowling machines in neighborhood recreation centers. To spur interest a league has been formed with contestants representing various districts appearing on shows.

Shuffle Bowling League of America is headed by Angelo Musi, former Temple University and Philadelphia Warriors basketball star. Game is played on a machine about two feet by eight feet, with a puck employed instead of a bowling ball. Otherwise game has all the elements of bowling in style of play and scoring. Puck passes over electrically wired slots which represent the 10 pins used in bowling. Scoring counts strikes, spares, splits, all of which are totaled on an illuminated scoreboad at the end of "alley."

After some initial difficulties the camera angles on the machines are now better and give viewers a full-length picture of "alleys," stimulating interest in game for bars, clubs, fraternities, recreation centers, etc. Announcer Bill Campbell, with help of girl, introduces the contestants (whose names are placed at the head of the machines. Campbell, w.k. sportscaster here, also gives running commentary on play. All players, winners as well as losers, wind up with toasters, wrist watches, luggage, electric razors, washing machines, etc. Brand names are not plugged, but brand can be seen in closeup shot of product. Grand prize is an Oldsmobile.

Commercials, also handled by Campbell, are very restrained. Viewers are merely told that for complete details they are to contact either Commissioner Musi or the station. Interviews with sports celebs and night club acts dress up the show. On program caught (22) Campbell gabbed with Benny Bengough, Phils coach. Slate Bros., currently playing Little Rathskeller, did ta comedy turn. "Top the Champ" is also televised every Monday 9 to 9:30 p.m. over WFIL-TV, with Tom Moorehead, sports director of WFIL, conducting the show for that outlet. Gagh.

WESTERN NEW YORK DOG SHOW
With C. E. Harbison, others.
Producers: John Hutchinson, James Christiansen
60 Mins.; Sat. (25), 3:30 p.m.
QUAKER OATS
WBEN-TV, Buffalo
(Ruthrauff & Ryan)

This special remote provided an interesting hour for dog-loving viewers. C. E. Harbison, dog phychiatrist, was commentator. Various dog handlers were interviewed with pups and Harbison asked each what dog food they used. All came up with the right answer (sponsor's dog food), but one absent-minded owner.

Several dog acts were shown. Film clips were used for commercials. Dog show was 25th anni and attracted wide attention. However, armory lighting was none too good and continual background barking of entries detracted from enjoyment.

CBS Loses

areas. As a result, any time it comes to a showdown for station clearance, CBS has usually got the short end of the deal. Solution would lie in more of its prime AM affiliates getting into TV but that is now held up by the FCC-imposed freeze on new station grants.

Hope show is to be aired by NBC Easter Sunday (April 9) from 5:30 to 7 p.m. and will be carried by the full interconnected network. Next in the series will be broadcast Mother's Day, with succeeding programs tentatively set for Labor Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas. Hope gets a reported $40,000 per broadcast for his services as emcee, with another $60,000 to be apportioned to surrounding talent and production costs. Comedian and the agency are pitching for some of the top show biz names but none has yet been signed.

Hope's radio writing stable will probably handle the TV shows, abetted by several others to be recruited from among video scripters. Producer has not been set, although Hope is reported dickering with Max Liebman, producer of NBC's current "Show of Shows," the second 90 minutes of its new "Saturday Night Revue."

DON ALLEN'S VAUDEVILLE
With Moe Balsom, Johnny Eisenberger, guests
Producer: Warren Jacober
15 Mins.; Wed., 11 p.m.
DON ALLEN CHEVROLET
WBEN-TV, Buffalo
(Rising & Taylor)

Preem caught (22) shows variety format. Professional acts are culled from local niteries and visiting talent to build vaude show in the style of the oldtime N. Y. Palace.

Intro shows Moe Balsom conducting pit orchestra. He has been a theatre musician for many years. Orch is transcribed. Balsom then plays piano for singing and dancing acts but camera never catches this. Shot of live piano playing would help. First show featured tap team and Rosalind Courtright, thrush appearing at Statler. Show breaks in middle for singing commercial by Johnny Eisenberger. He attempts to portray song and dance man putting over song in traditional style. Close of each act brings transcribed applause. The attempt is to carry out atmosphere of vaude house. Show closes with Balsom "conducting" the transcribed orchestra.

Second show caught (1) showed little technical improvement. Hoofers Jordan and Parvis did creditable job and Carl Norman was okay with magico. Vocalist Don Cornell did a neat stint. Production, however, still suffers because of lighting and camera difficulties. In effort to provide a showcase for the performers, something better than canned applause and music should be worked out.

Color Near

that it has carried the ball on color development, that it has a ready system and that it deserves the whole cake. These respective considerations have strongly prejudiced the two companies toward single standards. Their thinking on the feasibility of dual standards has been sharply restricted, it is pointed out here.

Witnesses for both systems, when questioned last week before the Commission, admitted it would be "possible" to have dual standards but they didn't "like" it and they weren't particularly eager to suggest approaches. Yet each of the rivals say they're not "afraid" of dual standards.

Resistance Breaking Down

But there are signs that industry resistance is breaking down and it won't be surprising if the manufacturers themselves under the leadership of RCA and possibly even DuMont, come forward with a recommendation for dual or multiple standards. If they take such action it won't be because they're willing to accept the CBS 405-line color but because they'd rather have both CBS and RCA than just CBS which has the only system ready for commercial use.

Here's how dual standards would work: Television stations would probably be required to carry over and above regular black and white programs a minimum of one hour or two hours a day of either RCA 525-line or CBS 405-line color. CBS has indicated it would feed color over its network so that affiliates served by cable would not have to purchase new equipment to carry the programs. With RCA the problem would be more difficult, since present coaxial cables do not carry its color. But NBC or other nets could carry the color to affiliates where microwave relays interconnect cities and broadcasts could also be transmitted locally. Where necessary, stations could use kinescope recordings of color programs which experiments have proved feasible.

New black and white sets coming out of the factories would incorporate an adapter, patented by the government; it is an improvement of a similar device invented by CBS which receives either RCA or CBS color in monochrome (compatibility). Factories would also produce new RCA or CBS color receivers or CBS converters to make existing sets capable of receiving CBS color. These converters would include adaptation to provide compatibility so that all color programs could be received in monochrome.

When RCA has perfected its single tri-color tube—perhaps in a year—sets for CBS color or RCA color would incorporate the development, eliminating the mechanical wheel filter in Columbia's system and simplifying design and construction of new RCA sets.

AFTER-HOURS CLUB
With Fred Robbins, Joe Bushkin, others
Producers: Ford Bond, Albert Black
Assoc. Producer: Ken Hart
15 Mins.; Fri., 11 p.m.
PHILCO TV-WINSTON STORES
WCBS-TV, N. Y.

This little 15-minute stanza has in it the makings of a neat package to wind up an evening's programming for WCBS-TV, key N. Y. station of the CBS web. Pace is leisurely, entertainment can be good and, judging from the preem Friday night (3), it will generate the requisite informality for such a late-evening offering. But, also judging from the preem, there are a number of production factors that must be tightened.

Chief problem seems to be the time element. By the time emcee Fred Robbins introduces himself and partner Joe Bushkin, with Bushkin rambling through a couple of piano tunes, there's little chance left for the guest talent—and it's on the guests that the success of this program will depend to a large extent. On the opener, for example, Mel Torme, after singing one song, was almost rudely told by Robbins to keep his second tune down to a minute. Then Johnny Desmond and Peggy Ann Garner swung into camera view at about 11:14, just in time for Robbins to greet them and cut off for the final commercial.

Show's format is a good one. It presumably takes place in an after-hours nitery, where Robbins and Bushkin talk over show business, gab with the guests and generally relax as performers supposedly do when their day's work is done. Robbins, a top disk jockey, handled himself well before the cameras but tried just a bit too obviously for that informality, being reminiscent of NBC-TV's Dave Garroway in several spots. Bushkin did a fine job at the piano and, like most songwriters, sold his tunes with a raspy voice.

Program marked the debut of the new packaging firm of Ford Bond and Albert Black. Plugs for the Philco TV sets sold at Brooklyn's Winston Stores carboned the plethora of such commercials now on the air. Announcer was guilty of over-emphasizing the stores' addresses and telephone number unnecessarily, since they were staring viewers in the face from a card in full range of the camera while he spieled. Stal.

BLIND DATE
With Arlene Francis
Producer: Bernard L. Schubert
Director: Richard Lewis
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC-TV, from New York

"Blind Date" returned to ABC-TV Thursday (2), following several months' layoff, for a two week sustaining run prior to Esquire Polish's picking up the tab March 16. Arlene Francis is back as the personable, glib femmecee of the stanza, which has two teams of college men vie for dates with three models. Show uses a variety of techniques for change of pace from the boy-rushing-girl-on-telephone routine. On the telecast caught these included having one collegian pose as a soda-jerk, another make his pitch while impersonating a dentist and a third sell himself together with a canine friend.

The distaff representation is highly videogenic, while the males are generally bright. On last week's airer there was some amusing repartee, but the Penn-vs.-Princeton feud gag was repeated too often. Where the undergrads were really fast talkers and pitted directly against each other, pace and viewer interest was stepped up. In the final segment, for example, with a Penn athlete competing against a Princeton cheerleader, the balance shifted several times as the boys topped each other for an entertaining five minutes. With careful attention to format variations and selection of articulate and witty guests, appeal of a basically cute idea can be maintained. Bril.

FAIRTEEN CLUB
With Norma Cassell, Bill Hamilton, others
Director: Dick Liesendahl
30 Mins., Fri., 5:30 p.m.
FAIR STORE AND PEPSI COLA
WGN-TV, Chicago

This show is built around an inherently good idea although tarnished somewhat by poor direction and camera work. Aimed at the high school set, half-hour segment is laid in sponsors' teenage club house. The talent, drawn from the ranks of local high school kids and recent grads, has the appeal of familiarity and the critical benefits of amateur standing.

Norma Cassell acts as hostess and introduces the kids. On this particular show (3) she handled gracefully a number of fluffed cues and misplaced camera shots, most of which appeared to be neither her nor her young guests' fault. Acts themselves, ranging from an acrobatic trio to a modeling demonstration, were of varying quality and all suffered from lack of proper presentation.

Better editing of the kids' acts and more imaginative camera action could turn this moderately successful affair into a firstrate show with strong interest for the teenagers. Dave.

Inside Television

Impressive hold that television has taken on the activities of the nation's youth was pointed up in a survey conducted by the Burdick Junior High School of Stamford, Conn., revealing the kids who have video sets at home spend almost as much time each week on TV as they spend in their classrooms. While the survey, reported by the N. Y. Times Monday (6), showed that TV has cut into the students' outside reading, it also disclosed that 186 of the 222 children questioned have found TV increasing their "interest in events outside the school and home."

Students, ranging in age from 11 to 15, watch video an average of 27 hours a week, as compared with the 27 hours and 55 minutes they spend in their classrooms. Of those with TV sets, 197 said video does not make it more difficult for them to do their homework and 99 said TV never interferes with completion of their homework, although eight of those responding said TV does interfere, 55 said once in a while and 60 said seldom. Also, 89 of the children said their parents selected their video fare, while 74 said they chose their own and 59 said it was a mutual selection.

Milton Berle's "Texaco Star Theatre" ranked as the top program among the children, with Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town" second and WPIX's "Six-Gun Playhouse" (old western films) third. Despite all the hullabaloo about kids seeing too many whodunits and horror shows on TV, the only one listed by the Stamford students that could fall in this category was NBC-TV's "Lights Out," which they chose for a seventh-place tie with ABC-TV's Paul Whiteman Show.

N. Y. Daily News' WPIX, wrapping up 12 new advertisers during the last week in February, brought its total for the month to 34, representing the top month for new, extended and renewed business in the station's history. Latest additions include Simon's Fur Center Assn., which picked up the tab for "Ladies in Politics." Telco TV Service, now bankrolling the Monday and Thursday editions of "News on the Hour," is also picking up the Tuesday and Wednesday stanzas. New spot advertisers and participating sponsors include Bohack Stores, Eversharp Schick Razors, Carter Products for Arrid, Locks Labs, Jack Baker Sportswear, Radio Offers Co., Herbert Co. for Roy Rogers Socks, and Shop-By-Mail. Two spot renewals set last week were Stetson Hats and Bordens.

Bob Hope was forced to cancel his scheduled appearance at the N. Y. Heart Fund show, aired Saturday night (4) by the N. Y. Daily News' WPIX, because of his commitments with Frigidaire for the upcoming series of special holiday one-shots to be aired via NBC-TV. To compensate for his not appearing in person, the comedian recorded a two-minute monolog of gags and a pitch for the Fund campaign, which emcee Ed Sullivan inserted into the four-hour marathon show late in the evening.

N. Y. HEART FUND MARATHON SHOW
With Ed Sullivan, Ray Block orch, others
Producer: Warren Wade
Directors: Alex Courtney, Jack Murphy
4 Hours; Sat. (4), 10:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WPIX, N. Y.

Ed Sullivan put on a prodigious effort with the four-hour show over WPIX, Saturday night, when more than 50 personalities lent their efforts toward the raising of a reported $175,000 for the N. Y. Heart Fund. The program evidenced tremendous organization and careful planning, with viewers getting an insight into what it takes to dig up the coin. Show had a great quota of interest, but despite the presence of some of the top names present in New York, the entertainment values weren't up to par.

Apparently, producers aimed for quantity instead of quality. Sullivan, who gives an act sufficient time to grow on an audience on his "Toast of the Town," might have gotten superior entertainment values had he followed that principle on this display. Most of the entertainers did one short number and were off. This gave the session an appearance of brisk efficiency, which militated against the overall effect.

Naturally, on a benefit show of this type, it's easier to get performers on that basis. It wouldn't have been fair to some of them to have them offer a full act. For example, Sid Caesar came over immediately after working the NBC display "Your Show of Shows," and had to depart to make an appearance at the Waldorf-Astoria's Wedgwood Room. Others were similarly occupied with other chores. However, show might have benefited by more complete performances, and some of them might have been able to contribute a full installment.

Sullivan did well within the framework of this format. With one eye on the rapidly mounting receipts and another on the roster of acts available, Sullivan paced this show well. He aimed for variety in the sequence of those selected and apparently invited top acts in each category to appear.

A necessary part of this show was the announcement of contributions. Some top personalities worked the battery of phones at the head-table. Among those co-operating in getting heart-interest were Kirk Douglas, Faye Emerson, Robert Q. Lewis, Jane Pickens, Peggy Ann Garner, among others. They helped the Heart Fund considerably, inasmuch as a considerable number of viewers apparently felt it was worth a contribution to speak to some of these personalities.

Those interested in the outcome of this campaign would have found considerable joy in watching volunteer workers deposit loaded plastic-heart collection boxes into a box. Cameras panned the long rows of volunteer telephone solicitors writing up contributions, and the blackboard announcing the amount raised provided added interest.

The show was held at the Carnival (Capitol hotel) N. Y. Sets with heart-shaped entrances were good, and camera work was generally okay. Jose.

BEN GRAUER SHOW
With Grauer; Robert St. John, guest
Director: Alan Neuman
Writer-Producer: John Munhall
15 Mins.; Tues., 11 p.m.
DOUBLEDAY
WNBT, New York
(Huber Hoge)

The "Ben Grauer Show," which has replaced a similar Warren Hull stanza, aims at getting viewers interested in the Dollar Book Club, and as a literary tete-a-tete it succeeds. Grauer's camera presence is good and he comes across as a sincere spokesman for the tomes and the book club plan. On the preem Tuesday (28) his guest was Robert St. John, author of "Land of the Silent People." St. John, once a radio gabber himself, related some interesting ancedotes from a book he expects to write as well as from his already published works. One intriguing yarn dealt with espionage in the Balkans and concerned a Rumanian spy who bribed a secret police agent to steal his dossier from the files. When he got the report it ended with the notation of his arrest and sentencing to death.

While the living room setting is pleasant and film clips are introduced to lend visual appeal, additional devices should be worked out to make the program more dynamic and graphic. Bril.

TV's Daytime Dilemma: Service Shows, Entertainment or Combo

Television broadcasters, gradually spreading out into daytime television, are being confronted with a twin-pronged dilemma—should the emphasis be on entertainment shows or the so-called service programs?

Current switch is towards entertainment, but the cost of programming talent and production shows day after day may prove too costly for TV, it is feared, at its present stage of development. But any attempt to provide only fashion and cooking tips, shopping service, etc., for housewives might become so wearing that broadcasters would soon lose their audiences. Answer would probably lie in a combination of the two, including a video version of radio's disk jockeying and soap operas, with several stations around the country already moving in that direction.

DuMont, for example, which launched the first across-the-board daytime programming, started off by concentrating mostly on public service. In the last month or so, however, the web has revised its two-hour "Shoppers Matinee" to provide for more entertainment, featuring such talent as Bea Wain and Andre Baruch, Bill Williams, Cy Coleman trio, etc. NBC is eyeing a May start for its daytime operation in N. Y., based around an hour-long shoppers' service show starting Kathi Norris, who is shifting over from DuMont. NBC, too, plans to build other programs around Miss Norris' stanza, which will spotlight entertainment. ABC's "Market Melodies" so far has almost all service but the web brings in an occasional guest. CBS, on the other hand, is still mulling its daytime venture.

Disk Jocks

Some disk jockey shows for video have recently been aired by various stations in different sections of the country and with results good enough to catch the eye of the N. Y. programmers. Such a show, it's pointed out, will not be able to rely on merely the jock's spinning records and gabbing but will have to have some production values, such as stunts, gags, etc. Secret of such a program, however, will be the jockey who, it's agreed, must have the sock personality necessary to sustain the show. CBS points to Robert Q. Lewis, current emcee of its AM-TV program, "The Show Goes On," as a possibility because of Lewis' background as both a disk jock and a video comedian.

As for the soap operas, the cost problems are readily apparent, since each day's stanza must have full sets, costumes, lighting and all the other accoutrements required for TV dramatics. Proposed answer to this problem is a filmed series, cost of which could be spread thin by syndication to stations in all parts of the country. Such a series has been started by KFI-TV in Hollywood. (See separate story.)

CBS to Air Part of N.Y. Indoor Tennis Matches

CBS television signed this week to air part of the National Indoor Tennis championships, slated for March 18-25 at the Seventh Regiment Armory, N. Y. Web is paying $2,500 for rights to the event. If it picks up a sponsor it will air only the finals on the 25th but if the coverage goes sustaining, CBS may also carry some of the qualifying heats on opening day.

Ex-tennis star Vinnie Richards, now associated with the Dunlop sporting goods outfit, will probably repeat as announcer for the tennis matches if Dunlop repeats as bankroller. Gertrude ("Gussie") Moran will be among those participating in the tourney. Pickups are to be directed by CBS remotes chief John Derr.

Dallas—New panel discussion telecast is being presented each Sunday afternoon here on KBTV Telecast is titled "Over the Coffee Cups" and features Edward C. Fritz as moderator and Col. Alvin M. Owsley and Dr. Arthur Smith as regular panel guests. There is one guest on each telecast with several problems discussed each week.

KFI-TV'S PIX SOAPERS SET FOR NAT'L DISTRIBS

Hollywood, March 7.

"The Jonathon Story," first soap opera to hit local television, got underway Sunday (5) over KFI-TV. The strip show, which runs 15 minutes daily, has been packaged and put on film by Will Langkergood Productions. Case-Swayne Co. has laid out $14,100 for time and talent over 26-week period. Cast includes Eve McVaegh, Michael Hughes, Jan Arvan, Bob Cole and Charlotte Lawrence.

Production firm is rolling the pix at about $1,000 per 15 minute sequence. Layout is being offered at $30 per episode in markets with over 10,000 video receivers, $20 where there are less than 10,000 sets and $60 in N. Y. Firm estimates it will have to sell in 30 markets to break the production nut.

4 St. Louis Stations Cut B'casting Skeds Due to Coal Shortage

St. Louis, March 7.

Four St. Louis stations, KXOK, KMOX, WIL and KSD, last week began curtailing broadcasting skeds under an order of the Illinois Commerce Commission that seeks to reduce power consumption to conserve coal during the current strike. The four stations, of which KXOK is owned by the Star-Times Publishing Co., and KSD by the Post-Dispatch, receive their juice from the Illinois Power Co.

Exempted from the state order are WTMV, East St. Louis, and KSTL, KWK, WEW and KXLW, which are serviced by the Union Electric Co. of Missouri, which has plants in St. Louis. KFUO, the other station in the St. Louis area, receives its power from the Concordia Seminary power plant in St. Louis county.

KXOK, the ABC outlet, is signing off at 11:30 p.m. instead of midnight. KMOX is using commercial power produced from coal between 6 a.m. and midnight, and between midnight and 6 a.m. will use its own gas generator. KSD is cutting power output to its transmitter from 6 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., and WIL is omitting its daily 1 to 2 a.m. broadcast, and is on reduced power from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. The transmitters of the four stations are located in Illinois areas a short distance from St. Louis.

RWG GETS 12½% PAY RAISE FROM COAST CBS

Hollywood, March. 7.

CBS staff writers won a pay raise of 12½% in a new contract signed after nearly a year of negotiation. New scale is retroactive to May 1 of last year, when old pact expired.

Contract also calls for establishment of a new rate for Radio Writers Guild members assigned to network sustaining programs and improved working conditions. Signatories agreed on a two-and-a-half-year term for the new pact.

KFI-TV to Gross 130G On Angels Baseball

Hollywood, March 7.

KFI-TV has pulled a gross baseball billing of $130,000 as a result of the purchase of Los Angeles Angels baseball games. Station last week sold the second half of the games to Century Distributors for Emerson Television. Remaining half of the diamond battles went to Eastside Beer.

KFI-TV laid out $25,000 for the rights to the Angels ball games. Eastside and Emerson put on $40,000 apiece to sponsor the season battles. Horne Distributors for Admiral Radio will put down $12,500 for "Dugout Dope" preceding each game, while Dearden's Furniture and Earl Lamm Clothiers are putting up a combined $15,000 for a 10 minute shot following the games. In addition, station has cornered $22,500 in spots as a direct result of the games.

Hiken Rejoins Mansfield In Scripting Lahr Show

Nat Hiken was pacted this week by CBS-TV to script the upcoming Bert Lahr show. New chore will mark a reunion with Irving Mansfield, who's to produce, since Mansfield produced the old Fred Allen radio show when it was on CBS, which Hiken wrote. Scripter also penned Milton Berle's Texaco radio show last year on ABC.

Starting date for the Lahr series hasn't been set, but it will probably tee off some time next month. It's to be a half-hour revue-type stanza once a week.

TV Airers Geared To Lowest Taste?

Atlantic City, March 7.

Television programs, from necessity, are likely to be geared in the main to the lowest common denominator of public taste. Charles A. Siepmann, professor of education at New York U., made this prediction here last week (28) as he addressed a discussion group held in conjunction with the annual convention of the American Assn. of School Administrators in Convention Hall.

Prof. Siepmann said that television production costs are about four times that of radio broadcasting. This means, he concluded, that the commercial sponsor of programs on television "will be forced to play to the gallery" for mass response.

Siepmann said the FCC was intended as a regulatory control to make sure the commercialization of broadcasting was reconciled with the public interest. "The past record of the FCC, however, suggests that the most we may hope for is rear-guard action on its part to ward off extreme abuses of the public interest," he declared.

The N. Y. U. professor suggested that school authorities spend their limited finances for educational films.

Sears Mulls N.Y. Market For Daytime Video

Sears, Roebuck is mulling entrance into daytime video in New York City, a move which may have wide repercussions because of the mail order house's broad distribution and its effect on other firms such as Montgomery Ward.

Eastern headquarters of Sears (Philadelphia) has sent out a questionnaire to its catalog subscribers in N. Y. explaining that it is "thinking of sponsoring a show directed at women" and that subscribers can "be of assistance in making our decision." Letter asks: (1) do you have a TV set? (2) if not, do you ever watch TV? (3) if you prefer a particular station, which one? (4) do you watch TV during the daytime? (5) what hours? (6) what kind of program would you prefer?

Chicago office of Sears is auditioning one-minute AM spots for its "American People's Encyclopedia," via Ruthrauff & Ryan, for a possible entry into the spot radio field.

Gen. Mills Takes One-Shot On Chicago Golden Gloves

General Mills has picked up the tab for a one-shot telecast of Chicago's Golden Gloves boxing finals March 29 over ABC-TV. Sponsor bought 25 interconnected stations, plus six on a kinescope basis. WGN-TV, Chi, will make the pick-up for ABC.

SMPTE's 66th Conv.

Society of Motion Picture & Television Engineers is scheduled to hold its 66th semi-annual convention at the Drake hotel, Chicago, April 24-28. Meet will be the first since the society changed its name to include video engineers in its membership, which was dictated by the growing inter-relationship between films and TV.

Feature event of the convention, consequently, will be a comprehensive symposium on TV program production, covering the use of film production techniques in video studios and variations of these techniques required by TV. Other items scheduled are discussions on high-intensity projection and high-speed photography.

Inside Stuff—Radio

Employees of some stations are burning over the policy of their program department toppers to make any ideas they create on the job the station's property. While legally the broadcaster may have the right to latch on to any program developed by someone in their employ—just as a chemical manufacturer owns the products discovered by scientists in its laboratories—the staffers feel that this approach is shortsighted. They feel that if an employee can't own a show he has created, there's no reason for his knocking himself out to think up new stanzas. The result is that the station suffers.

In some cases, however, the stations and webs will permit their white-collarite, announcing and other employees to own a show, provided it remains on their air and is not given to a competitor.

To counteract the current slump in giveaway audiences, "Stop the Music" has launched a contest this month among station promotion managers of ABC affiliates. Prizes will be awarded in two classes—for outlets in cities over 100,000 population and for those in cities under 100,000. Judges are Alden James, Old Gold ad manager; Moran Kersta, William Weintraub v.p.; Philip H. Cohen, Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles v.p.; and Nick Keesely, Lennen & Mitchell v.p.

John B. Gambling, celebrating his 25th anni on WOR, N. Y., today (Wed.), will have a busy day. He'll do his 7:15 a.m. show from the stage of the Longacre theatre, to accommodate the fans who have requested tickets, and then appear on "Breakfast With Dorothy and Dick" from the same spot. He'll also be on "The McCanns at Home," Martha Deane, "Luncheon at Sardi's," Barbara Welles and Lyle Van shows. Switching to WOR-TV, he'll guest on "Dinner at Sardi's" and "Talent Parade." His father, wife and son will accompany him.

Growing interest among lawyers in legal problems of radio and television is seen in the fact that 200 barristers turned up for the Practicing Law Institute's (N.Y.) initial weekly lecture on the subject. Turnout was so great that ABC legal veepee Joseph A. McDonald and NBC assistant general attorney Robert P. Myers moved the sessions to ABC's Studio 6A. Course is given Tuesday evenings at 8.

Both CBS and NBC will offer special 30-minute shows over the weekend (11-12) to launch the 1950 Easter Seal campaign of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults. The NBC program on Saturday (11) will feature Lew Ayres in a drama labeled "Teddy Is My Son," while the CBS airer Sunday (12) will be an all-star show with Bing Crosby, Garry Moore, Jo Stafford, Jane Wyman and Dick Haymes. The Easter Seal Campaign begins tomorrow (Thurs.) and runs through April 9.

NBC's Coast Nielsen Showing Web Puzzler

NBC program toppers are mulling the paradoxical situation of the web getting only four programs in the last national Nielsen Top 20 listing, while it places 10 in the Pacific Nielsen report. CBS, conversely, got only nine of its airers in the Coast list, against 16 in the national chart. Mutual, which fails to show in the national list, garnered one spot on the Pacific Top 20.

Reasons behind its strong Coast showing are being studied by NBC, with the hope of using the data it gains in improving its position in the rest of the country.

"Hey Herb, What the H--- are YOU doing in the recording business!!"

I'm kinda glad you asked that question. Drop your option into a nearby chair - and I'll try to answer it.

Back in '47, after five pie-filled years with "Truth or Consequences" -- and four perfumed ones with Hildegarde -- I found myself on a world junket, producing Tape-Recorded Vox-Pop programs. It was then that the romance blossomed! I went mad for TAPE! TAPE! TAPE!

But it wasn't until one year later, when I stood transfixed watching ABC's editing chief, Steve Temmer, transform a Met Soprano's flatted high-C into a perfect E-natural (check New York Times story) -- that I really appreciated what could be done with this new phenomena.

So, my new Kellogg's show became Steve's (and ABC's) first outside Tape account! Everything was great! But like telling your friends about a new Chinese restaurant... pretty soon we couldn't get waited on...even ABC had difficulty getting its own shows serviced. BANG!!! No more outside accounts!!

Sooo, there we were with a hot little tape show on our hands and no place to go. This seemed ridiculous! Certainly it was high time that Tape -- the New Bride -- had a comfortable, modern functional home of her own!

Sooooo, why not do it ourselves? With Steve's technical genius, my 12 years in radio's saltmines, and a pass-key to Fort Knox, it seemed a natural. And -- in addition -- I had a terrific, top-flight production unit to offer clients. People who had worked with me for years and could tackle any creative assignment. Now, all we needed was one more genius -- someone who could add!...(figures and clients!) Harry Landon, with a five-year network sales service background, was the answer to our earnest prayers.

Soooooooo, about four contractors and two designers later, we opened the doors to the GOTHAM RECORDING CORPORATION, New Yorks only air-conditioned, sound-proof editing rooms that are decorated in comfortable living-room fashion! Of course, we have lines to all the networks and do off-the-air disc work, too; but, we're nuts about Tape for spots...auditions... transcribed series...everything!!! We think you will be, too!

Soooooooooo, why hold your shows together with band-aid? ...Switch to TAPE...at GOTHAM.

Hopefully, Herb Moss

P.S. Incidentally, in case you're still interested, that's what the h--- I'm doing in the recording business! Any questions???

that God would bless NBC for "helping to glorify Him."

Half-hour comprised a workmanlike presentation of "the bold experiment in pushing back the religious frontiers of the United States." Threading it was the story of a Catholic father, careless in his religious duties as The Hour began and brought back to full participation in the church's activities through listening to Monsignor Sheen and other speakers, and through his son's service in the war.

One of the anniversary's highlights was a playback of the late Cardinal Hayes' greeting on the initial broadcast, in which the New York prelate gently explained that the Hour would elucidate, explain and interpret the Catholic religion, but would attack or criticize no other faith. Eddie Dowling's commentary stressed the same point of "creating a better understanding."

PIX-O
With Jack Douglas
5 Mins.: Mon.-thru-Fri., 12:30 p.m.
VAN DE KAMP BAKERIES
KIRO, Seattle

Jack Douglas' new picture-bingo game seems to be a natural commercial program, excellently suited for any sponsor with a number of stores or outlets. It's a fast-moving, entertaining strip, too. Each day one tune is played and listeners circle that picture on a card which is suggested by the tune. Chief difference between Douglas' game and others is that pictures are used instead of numbers, which will probably aid in the television chances for the game.

Douglas does a fine job on the show, hitting the right note of banter with the announcer and commercials are well integrated. That the picture-bingo idea has caught here seems proven already. Van De Kamps had given out 48,000 cards at their 29 stores the second day the show was on the air and there were 75,000 out by the fourth day. Merchandise and cash prizes go to the first listener who makes "Pix-O."

Altogether it looks as though Douglas, and KIRO, have a winner in the bingo-type shows.

ALL YOUR STRENGTH
With Sir Cedric Hardwicke, others
Writer: Robert Cenedella
Producer-Director: Gerald Kean
30 Mins., Thurs. (2); 11:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WNBC, N. Y.

The first in a series of six monthly programs documenting United Nations activities, "All Your Strength" offered WNBT, N. Y., listeners a travel folder glimpse of the work done by the UN Economic and Social Council. Program hinged its dramatization on the similarity a mayor of a small Canadian town found between the problems encountered by the ESC and those put before him in his municipal position, the latter obviously being on a much smaller scale. Airer filled its purpose in giving a brief outline of the ECS operation, but it's doubtful whether program, at a half-hour before midnight, drew the full quota of dialers it might have if given an earlier spotting.

Show, produced by NBC in cooperation with the UN public information department, was aired over the network's local outlet as part of its "America United" series. The WNBC shot was a rebroadcast of the show, which was originally aired over the network, except locally, Feb. 26. The second of the UN documentaries is scheduled for airing sometime next month.

Cast headed by Sir Cedric Hardwicke turned in good performances.

11 MEMORY STREET
With Allen Sloane, narrator; others
Writer: Sloane
Producer-Director: Gerald Kean
Music: Lan Adomian
55 Mins., Sat. (4); 4:05 p.m.
WQXR, N. Y.

A neat dramatic production and an authentic flavor added to the effectiveness of this tape-recorded program, detailing the work done by the International Tracing Organization in tracking down European children separated from their homes during the war. Material for the airer, which concentrated on the steps taken by ITO to locate one Polish girl, was gathered by Allen Sloane, of the United Nations Radio Division. Sloane recorded an outline of the operation from beginning to end, using actual personnel involved in the ITO work.

The time and endurance spent by ITO in trying to locate these lost kids was vividly depicted via program's documentation of how the org, in searching for the Polish girl, eventually found she had been adopted by a Nazi family, but still was faced with the problem of proving the child was the one they were after. Broadcast had a few rough spots where the dialog was a little hard to catch, but the overall job was fine.

A running musical gackground, composed by Lan Adomian, enhanced the proceedings. Sloane handled the narration capably. Program was produced by UN Radio in association with the International Refugee Organization.

JUNIOR PRESS CONFERENCE
With Jack Chase, moderator
Producer: Henry Lundquist
30 mins., Tues., 8:30 p.m.
WCOP, Boston

A newcomer to the local airwaves, this half-hour airer immediately preceeding the ABC chain feature, "Town Meeting," was dreamed up by Jack Chase, WCOP's morning news editor, for a one-shot, but response has been so solid that it is now skedded for an indefinite run.

Using a panel of five or six high-school kids who come armed with pertinent and sometimes impertinent questions, each show offers a local political bigwig who attempts to answer questions fired at him. Kids show an amazing desire to keep well informed on local and government issues and a surprising alertness to political conditions. Last week's show presented Mass. Governor Dever in the quizzee chair in an amusing and glib sesh which covered such queries as whether socialized medicine should be adopted, which the Governor opposes; whether the local street railway fares will ever be lowered, or if the surburbs will ever become incorporated into Boston, a problem that has been kicking around for years.

Jack Chase, who serves as moderator, briefs the kids on questions and interweaves background stories regarding those quizzed, who have been Mayor Hynes, School Committeeman Muchnick and the Governor. Enthusiastic response by Mass. Dept. of Education, Mass. Teachers Federation and Mass. Civic League, who are wholeheartedly behind the project, seem to augar well for the future of the show, which has neat impact and is far from stilted.

Jack McLean, veteran newsman and WGR news director, has cooked up an original, engaging quarter-hour of talk. He culls the weekly smalltown papers in the surrounding area, picking out the best items for airing. His excellent news sense and humorous delivery makes the show sparkle.

McLean has built an unusual following for the day and hour, not only among the editors in this section, but among the villagers who are the subject of his comments.

Show caught (27) marked second anni under present sponsorship. The Dave Cheskin band produces a solid backing for chanteuse Elvera. Combo is the staff orchestra for WGR, only local station to have such a setup. They do well with both standards and pops. John Lascelles delivers inoffensive commercials at both ends of the show and Elvera sings three songs and handles the patter between numbers in a light, engaging manner.

Show has built a solid following over the two-year stretch for early evening musical listening.

that on some matters, such as promotion of racial and religious tolerance, a disservice would be done the public by permitting opposing views. Time, location and coverage of a station may be involved in a station's obligation to seek out contrary positions, he added.

To discuss the FEPC in New York in 1950 (several years after the state has set up a Fair Practices Commission), Novik said, "presents different problems to a licensee than if the discussion had taken place 10 or 15 years ago, when the matter was truly controversial and public opinion in the Metropolitan New York area had not been crystallized in favor of this legislation."

Novik said WLIB "will continue its policy of affording time to responsible persons who differ with the station on subjects of a controversial nature. In addition, the station will continue to adhere to its policy of affirmatively seeking out and presenting all points of view on matters which, in our community, would be controversial in nature."

warden. However, in some instances the story registered as trite, because of incomplete characterization and motivation of the law-breakers. Other entries in this series have used its realistic documentary technique and skilled production to tell "Big Stories" that were more convincing and significant.

"Celebrity Time" (ABC-TV) holds up as an amusing panel show, reason being that the guests are also given a chance to perform. On Sunday (5) visitors were CBS' Robert Q. Lewis, who did a neat monolog and song routine and Broadway comedienne Mary McCarty, who did her sock dime-a-dance number. Regulars on the series, emcee Conrad Nagel, Ilka Chase and John Daly, rounded out a pleasant show.

Questions were entertainingly formatted. One had the panelists pose behind cut-out representing celebs and another had them identify diskings of comics of 25 years ago. Commercial was also given a show biz approach, via a guitarist playing a Granados Spanish dance and then attempting it with the strings tied, pointing up the special way in which Goodrich tires have their strings inserted.

take action against the Journal. Defense agreed to accept interstate evidence.

Ammel also testified that the Journal refused to print the daily log even as paid advertising, even though the station would like to so advertise today. Only way programs get listed, he added, is through weeklies in Lorain County printing them "from time to time, free."

Government also produced witnesses, formerly paper employees, who testified that while they were in the advertising department, they were instructed to tell local merchants to advertise in the newspaper exclusively, or go elsewhere. William Gerhardt, testifying for the Government, said that while he was a classified ad salesman, he was told by Erwin Maus, then the Journal's classified advertising manager, that he could "threaten" any merchant advertising either in the competitive Sunday paper or WEOL that the Journal would cancel their contracts. However, it was admitted that merchants do advertise in both the Sunday paper and the Journal.

are always far ahead of you, so let us not make the mistake about falling behind them." If it were possible, he added, to put a TV set into every home now owning a radio set, TV would still fail "if we didn't fulfill our obligations as producers to give the people what they deserve and what they have the ability to accept."

As for other problems currently confronting the video industry, Montgomery underlined the difficulty of fashioning a comedy show to appeal to the average small group sitting before a TV set. He also pointed up the technical limitations in which the industry is forced to work at this stage of its development, declaring he is "disturbed" at the attitude of some critics who take the point of view that video is "thoroughly well developed." That, he said, "is like saying to a three-year-old: 'What political party do you belong to?' "

Errors" on NBC-TV's "Kraft TV Theatre"; "12th Night" on NBC's "Philco Playhouse," and "Romeo and Juliet," aired by NBC as a sustainer. Both NBC and CBS now have series of grand opera shows and both have put heavy stress on ballet. Upcoming is an adaptation of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Sarlet Letter" on "Studio One" and Philco aired a play about artist Vincent Van Gogh Sunday night (5).

Also underlining TV's propagation of the so-called finer things is the fact that educational discussion programs, which radio has always sloughed off in traditionally sustaining time, such as early Sunday afternoon, have been aired in prize commercial time via TV—and many have picked up sponsors, such as CBS-TV's "People's Platform" (bankrolled by Household Finance Corp.). CBS recently had its across-the-board series of pickups of United Nations sessions from Lake Success, N. Y., sponsored by Ford. Even the variety shows, bidding only for straight entertainment, wrap up cultural features, such as the inclusion of violinist Mischa Elman and opera singers Marguerite Piazza and Robert Merrill on CBS-TV's new Saturday night revue.

Daytime Video

N. Y. TV stanzas provide a huge circulation.

During afternoon hours, N. Y. video audiences now have a 22.5% share of the broadcast audience—which is better than TV's evening share in Feb.-March '49. This, however, is a relative figure and doesn't mean that there are now more daytime viewers than there were evening viewers last year. It does indicate, nevertheless, that daytime video is cutting appreciably into AM.

AM advocates, however, question the validity of Hooper's data on the grounds that telephone homes are not a representative cross-section, that the prestige factor prompts some AM-listeners called to say they have TV sets and that Hooper doesn't cover a large enough suburban area.

Also pointing up the video boom in N. Y. is the fact that of the Top 10 shows, combining AM and TV stanzas, five are radio and five video. Latest reports lists: Milton Berle (TV), 21.5; Jack Benny (AM), 17.6; "Lux Theatre" (AM), 17.5; Ed Sullivan (TV), 15.6; "Talent Scouts" (TV), 14.6; "Talent Scouts" (AM), 13.7; "Goldbergs" (TV), 13; "Arthur Godfrey & Friends" (TV), 12.2; Walter Winchell (AM), 12; Bing Crosby (AM), 11.6.

would, he indicated, if there was any truth to the rumor. "Nothing to it," was his laconic reply. Trammell also did a bit of visiting with NBC's remaining stars, and put in some time with Abner Greshler, manager of Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis. It's still anyone's guess what goes there.

Stanton had the trade press and downtown columnists called in for a q. and a. session and not once did he duck a query. The boys liked his directness in sending back as good as he received, and came away from the meeting feeling that they know more about color TV and the CBS sales and program picture than by any previous briefing. Among other things he told them that:

CBS will explore the fullest possibilities of 35m filming for TV.

A better job can be done live, but film is an improvement over TVR (kinescope).

"We're on third base but don't know how far from home" (referring to adoption of its TV color system).

CBS has a curious interest in Phonevision and if the public wants it, CBS will go along.

CBS is happy with its present TV association with L. A. Times but "we may find it advantageous to have our own station in this important originating centre."

No changes in radio are foreseen other than a closer examination of costs by sponsors.

Omaha Station Gets A Setback in Protest On Idaho Airer Expansion

Omaha, March 7.

WOW got a setback Saturday (4) when notified that it had lost its first round in the matter of the expansion plans of KID, Idaho Falls, Idaho.

Commissioner Frieda B. Hennock of the FCC gave WOW until March 27 to file exceptions to an FCC okay on KID's plans. The Idaho station wants to build a new transmitter, increase the power of its night broadcasts and shift from its present 1,350 to 590 kilocycles. WOW is on 590.

At hearings in Washington last September before Mrs. Fanny N. Litvin, FCC examiner, WOW contended that people who tuned in WOW near Wayne and Norfolk, Neb., and Sioux City, Ia., might also find KID. Mrs. Litvin handed down her decision favoring KID on Feb. 6. It is to be studied by the FCC.

Mrs. Litvin held that WOW renders interference-free service beyond its normally protected contour and the proposed KID operation was claimed to cause interference. WOW, Mrs. Litvin held, isn't entitled to protection beyond its contour which is fixed by the Commission's standards.

WHDH, Hub Indie, In Neat '49 Profit With $40,114

Boston, March 7.

WHDH, Hub indie, showed a profit of $40,114 in 1949, which is a neat jump over 1948's figures of $33,810 in spite of federal income tax of $29,000, whereas in 1948 it had no federal income tax liability.

Net sales of station time in 1949 were $780,556 compared to $622,199 in 1948, an increase of 25.4%. Hooper rating bureau according to WHDH, gave the station tops in listenership in the Hub on a 12 month basis.

'Make Haste'

cide to buy only spots, who is going to pay for entertainment?" he asked, pointing out that Kraft had spent millions of dollars to make the hour-long Kraft drama show good entertainment.

The ad exec voiced displeasure at stations for allowing spot advertisers to exploit an audience built by the program. "They are spending their advertising dollars much more wisely than we are, so why shouldn't we go into spots or chain breaks?" he asked in warning. He suggested that mistakes made by radio in use of spots can be avoided by TV. The industry must make money, he said. But sound structure is fundamental to making a longrun profit. "Maybe the run won't have to be so long at that."

Denny warned that the industry must not rest on its laurels. "There are some rotten shows on the air and there are some wonderful ones, but artistic perfection is not achieved overnight," the NBC exec said. Video is still an infant prodigy, not yet of age, and the progress so far is just a token of what lies ahead, he said.

Members of the panel session on "Three Viewpoints" were Robert Swezey, g.m. WDSU, New Orleans; Harry Bannister, g.m. WWJ-TV, Detroit; Alexander Stronach, ABC national TV director; E. G. Wade, v.p. in charge of radio and TV Wade ad agency, Chicago, and Seymour Mintz, ad manager, Admiral Corp., Chicago.

Plugging current Chi tele shows, Stronach predicted, because of cheaper labor costs here, that Chi will take on a larger role as a TV production centre. Big problem for ad agencies, according to Wade, is when to get into TV. Mintz, claiming the medium helped put Admiral into the big leagues of TV sets production, predicted an increased use of daytime video by advertisers.

Lester Waddington, radio director of Miles Labs, which spends $3,000,000 annually in AM and TV, today (Tues.) recommended in a panel discussion that major networks cut their AM rates in towns where video has made inroads in radio audiences. He also revealed that Miles is not satisfied with the "Quiz Kids" televersion on NBC-TV and said that he hasn't "seen any results so far."

Jack Craddock, of WEDO in McKeesport, at Pirates training camp in San Bernardino to transcribe interviews with players for use on his Sportscast show, sponsored by Henry Klein clothing store, which gets going March 13.

New Castle, Ind. — Robert L. Carroll has joined the staff of WCTW, in New Castle, as announcer and newcaster. He was formerly with WHAP, Hopewell, Va., and WTOM, Bloomington, Ind.

Schenectady, N. Y. — John Schmulbach has joined WGY, Schenectady, as account executive. Schmulbach was on the sales staff of WABY, Albany.

Frances Jarman, editor of "Women's News Letter," aired over WNDC, Durham, N. C., is currently in New York as guest of "Wendy Warren" for a full week, as a result of having won the national story-writing competition among women's news directors of all CBS stations.

Dallas—Clyde W. Rembert, managing director of KRLD, has been named to the CBS Affiliates Advisory Board. The board is composed of managers and owners of stations in the CBS network. Rembert was elected by Columbia outlets in District Eight, which includes outlets in Oklahoma, Texas and part of Louisiana.

San Antonio—Dan Williams is being heard in a quarter-hour daily program here for children, Monday through Friday. Known as "Uncle Dan," he spins stories especially for the youngsters. All shows are ad lib narration and acting from start to finish by Williams. He is also being heard each Sunday morning reading the comcis for the kids in a half-hour airing.

San Antonio—A series of radio broadcasts featuring dramatizations of great novels is to be heard each Thursday for a half hour on KMAC. The St. Mary's U. players will be heard in the opening broadcast with their dramatization of "Last Days of Pompeii," by Bulwer-Lytton. Second in the series will be presented by students of Incarnate Word College, with a script written by Mary Scheibl titled "The Triumph of Love."

the American Medical Assn. for opposing national health legislation it offered equal time to AMA for reply, which was accepted. "WCFM and the stations associated with it," he declares, "do more than pay lip service to freedom of the air. They practice it."

Bernstein says the liberal network commentators can be counted on the fingers of one hand. "But tune in your radio on some of the others—on Fulton Lewis, Henry Taylor or Upton Close—the list is a long one—and you have the bulk of radio propaganda—assuredly not propaganda of the left as the Satevepost understands the term. . . . The editors of the Post should not blame the lack of propaganda representing its point of view; it would blame, rather, the kind of propaganda that is used."

The Post editorial cites WCFM as part of the radio arm of a left-wing political triumvirate, including CIO's Political Action Committee, the AFL's League for Political Education and Americans for Democratic Action, which is stealing the propaganda show."

KCBS MARKS $1,000,000 FOR VIDEO ON FCC O.K.

San Francisco, March 7.

KCBS will spend $1,000,000 for video in San Francisco when the FCC gives it the greenlight on its application for a television outlet, Dr. Frank Stanton, CBS president, declared here last week (3). Moreover, it will go all out for color television as soon as federal okay and engineering facilities permit.

Stanton said that the five cities in which CBS planned video developments to the hilt were New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago and Boston.

Richards Hearing

who came into the case on issues involving a proposed transfer of voting control of the stations to a group of trustees, is still retained in a "technical" capacity.

Fulton made determined efforts at the pre-hearing conference to smoke out the Commission on the names of witnesses it will subpoena and the evidence it will offer. But Cottone adamantly refused on the ground the agency had already issued an order denying such information. Fulton had argued that he needed "a bill of particulars" in order to adequately answer testimony.

Concession Made

Cottone made one concession. He apprised Fulton that FCC would require him to furnish for authentication purposes a long series of documents of which the Commission has made photostatic copies, including original news scripts of commentator Clete Roberts, who was allegedly discharged for refusing to obey instructions to slant the copy.

Johnson promised that he would give ample opportunity to Fulton to present counter-testimony on KMPC and that he will move the hearings to Detroit and Cleveland on matters primarily concerned with WJR and WGAR. When Fulton attempted to segregate the proceedings entirely among the three stations, Cottone refused to stipulate. "Richards' qualifications," he said, "cuts across all three stations."

The Richards case has been pending nearly two years, but has been delayed time and again on affidavits that the hearings will endanger Richards' health, and to consider his proposal to transfer voting control. Complaints against Richards include charges of using his stations to promote racial and political prejudice. The current hearings are to determine whether these charges constitute grounds for refusing renewal of licenses and to inquire further into the transfer proposal.

Johnson is a former Alabama circuit judge who has been trying cases for FCC for 15 years. He is a World War I veteran.

Fred Ford, who will up the Commission's legal staff, has been with FCC for three years and formerly practiced law in Clarksburg, W. Va. He was with the Air Force in the last war and retired with the rank of major.

ample, high turnover programs pay off for established products (which want reminder copy), while shows which get repeater-dialers are important for new products and sponsors launching new sales themes. Eventually, it's reasoned, bankrollers will demand sharper results and shrewder quarterbacking via the qualitative analysis material Nielsen makes available.

Same Rates Still Apply

Chicago, March 7.

Former subscribers to Hooperatings will be serviced by the National Nielsen Ratings reports for the next three months at the same rates they paid Hooper, the A. C. Nielsen Co., said last week. The complete National Nielsen Radio Index is being offered clients on an individual contract basis.

TV-Network Hooperatings taken over by Nielsen will continue using the coincidental telephone sample for the next three months until the switchover to audimeter sampling can be worked out.

5.5%; talks and discussions, 5.2%, and news, 5.1%. Stringing out behind were such program categories as dance, concert, opera, special events, religion, novelty, etc. NBC apparently paid little attention to programming for women during the year, in comparison to the other three major webs, since the report reveals only a single half-hour women's show aired during the entire year.

Web's upsurge in TV billings during 1949 is evidenced by the fact that 45.4% of the total number of program hours were commercial. This does not mean, of course, that NBC is approaching the break-even point financially but indicates the growing interest of advertisers in the medium. Another breakdown shows the web devoted 24.3% of its total broadcast hours to public service shows, with the remaining 75.7% hours listed as entertainment. Picture was slightly different for WNBT, key N. Y. flagship station, which aired 27.1% of its total programs as public service.

With films accounting for only 11.7% of the total number of broadcast hours, 66.5% represented studio programming, with the remaining 21.8% being remote pickup shows — of sports, special events, etc. Analysis also points out that 71,2% of the network's hours originated in N. Y. Another 14.3% came from Chicago; 7.4% from Washington; 5.1% from Philadelphia; .3% from Cleveland, and 1.7% from "other points." Latter breakdown points up NBC's almost complete dearth of kinescope programs from the Coast, as compared to CBS with its Ed Wynn show and "Pantomime Quiz."

Wee-Watters

February, with the possibility of more this spring) reportedly is MBS' hold on the grass-roots areas.

Example of heavy local listening in small towns is shown in a study of Thomson, Ga., where before the inception of WTWA in 1948 sets-in-use was 17%. In February, '50, sets-in-use had climbed to 36%. Also significant is the fact that the 250-watt local outlet got 69% share-of-audience, while one Augusta station dropped from 47% to 15% and another declined from 18% to 3%.

One WTWA show, "Kobak's Korn," conducted by Ed Kobak, Jr., son of the ex-MBS prexy, garnered an 86% share-of-audience. Backed by a town furniture mart, the airer stresses community issues to pick up the high rating.

In Liberty, N. Y., only 100 miles from Gotham, the 250-watt WVOS reports a 50% increase in '50 billings over '49. Outlet has 300 sponsors, mostly local but with an increasing number of national spot accounts, and doesn't want web affiliation because biz is good. WVOS is in a mountainous area of distortion, where N. Y. stations don't penetrate during the daytime and skywaves bring in Detroit stations at night. Although BMB figures may show considerable big city station penetration, it's argued by advocates of rural radio, there are many areas of distortion where the wee-watters are needed for full radio coverage.

Keystone, admitting that the individual 250-watter's audience is small in comparison with a metropolitan clear-channel station, stresses that in bulk they are vital. By grouping stations in packages, KBS' cost-per-1,000 figure delivers listeners at a rate comparable to live chain operations, KBS toppers point out, with the result that more national advertisers are entering the rural field.

13 New AM'ers Okayed

Washington, March 7.

In a postwar record, the FCC today (Tues.) approved permits for 13 new AM stations, seven of which are full time. Most are in small towns and two are in Hawaii.

Commission also authorized today four new FM stations in the New York area. Permits were granted to Crosley Broadcasting Corp. (WINS); Debs Memorial Radio Fund (WEVD); Atlantic Broadcasting Corp. (WHOM); and Ebbets-McKeever Exhibition Co., the Brooklyn Dodgers owners.

CHURCH SERVICE IS FILMED FOR VIDEO

Hollywood, March 7.

Rev. Dorland Dryer's Worship Film Productions, for the first time locally, filmed a complete church service for television purposes. Filming was the first in a regular weekly video series.

The non-denominational and non-profit film featured a sermon by Dr. Louis H. Evans and the First Presbyterian Church of Hollywood; the Bach Anniversary Choir, and scriptural readings by Colleen Townsend, who recently gave up her film career to take up religious activities.

"Your Television Church" will first be released for Easter Day beaming. Following video transmission, the films will also be available for screen presentation in churches.

DISKS SOLIDIFY BAND SURGE

Buddy Morris' Blast at Film Cos.' Control of Music Pub Subsids

Warners, Loew's and 20th-Fox last week were hit with another legal broadside in N. Y. Federal court last week when Edwin H. Morris Co. filed an action to force the film companies to cut loose their music publishing subsidiaries. Also named defendants were Paramount Pictures, Universal Pictures and some 14 publishing firms.

Suit, which was brought under the anti-trust provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, asks triple damages in excess of $1,710,000. An injunction is sought to restrain the defendants from allegedly monopolizing the publishing of music used in films and from conspiring to fix prices and limit competition. In addition, the action wants the five picture firms to be permanently barred from owning or controlling any publishing house.

As a result of the asserted conspiracy to monopolize, according to the complaint, the defendants have frozen out the independent publisher by "succeeding in establishing control of at least 60% of all compositions" used in films. This wealth of copyrighted material became available to the five film firms, it's claimed, when they took over their "captive" affiliates. These, all of whom are defendants, include Feist, Witmark, Remick, Robbins, Harms, Miller, Harry Warren Music, New World, Atlas Music, Shubert Music, Advanced, Paramount Music, Famous Music and Movietone Music.

As filed by the firm of Spring & Eastman, the papers combine five separate complaints into an overall action. In each case the asserted conspiracies and unlawful acts of the defendants are said to have been carried on for the past six

What's The Angle?

Brill bldg. and Lindy's scuttlebutt on Edwin H. (Buddy) Morris' suits against the rest of the industry recalls that, at one time, he wanted to sell out to Loew's under a continue-as-managing-head deal. Another has to do with Johnny Burke & Jimmy Van Heusen, whom he set up as an indie publishing unit, and he was not estopped from publishing their songs even though they worked for Paramount, and most of them were Bing Crosby musicals. This is a reverse on Morris' allegations.

On the other hand, if it ever reaches the stage that any of the Hollywood-owned music firms must decentralize, there are bidders already for the sundry catalogs.

Leeds' Pickwick Into Big-Scale Operation With Brackman at Helm

Al Brackman took over active general professional managership Monday (6) of Pickwick Music Corp., Leeds Music Co. subsidiary, thereby signaling the beginning of large-scale promotion of pop and standard numbers in the Pickwick catalog. Pickwick is comprised of several ASCAP catalogs acquired over the past few years by Lou Levy, Leeds head, but which had remained more or less dormant until now.

Among new tunes Brackman will start working on immediately is "Scottish Samba," British number that has begun to climb into best seller lists abroad via an Edmundo Ros recording. Immediate plans also call for the release to record and transcription firms and two-beat bands of a number of Dixieland items in the Pickwick catalog.

New pub's list of coypyrights includes such standards as "Baby, Won't You Please Come Home?," "I'll Never Smile Again," "Sugar Blues," "I Found a New Baby," and "Mama's Gone Goodbye." Firm also controls Gordon Jenkins' "Manhattan Towers," which thus far has not been available in published form.

Brackman left the record promotion and exploitation post at Mills Music to head Pickwick. He was also formerly with the Robbins-Feist-Miller group.

Chi Cracks Down On Smutty Records

Chicago, March 7.

Chicago police last week cracked down on music establishments selling smutty records. States Attorney John Boyle sent 24 officers to raid 12 establishments last Thursday (2).

Boyle acted under an Illinois statute which prohibits sale of obscene literature, in view of recent Supreme Court decision classifying phonograph records as literature under obscenity prohibitions.

SPA Signs Leeds; Only 4 Holdouts

Lou Levy's Leeds Music this week signed with Songwriters Protective Assn., after having held out against the terms of the revised SPA basic contract since 1948. Only remaining SPA holdouts now are Chappell, Famous, Paramount and Southern.

Chappell's objection to signing with SPA is that the pub doesn't want to be bound by what it feels are the "stringent limitations" of the SPA pact insofar as its stage production music is concerned, although it does not object so strenuously to the SPA contract as applied to pop tunes.

Famous and Paramount are not holding out against the terms of the SPA pact because of any objection to them, per se. The firms, however, want to wait until they know where they and the industry stand under the provisions of the upcoming ASCAP consent decree before committing themselves to the SPA agreement.

Southern Music's refusal to sign an SPA contract has centered around the firm's feeling that certain clauses in the pact give other publishers advantages which would not be available to Southern if it were to sign.

DAN RICHMAN ADDED TO 'VARIETY' MUSIC STAFF

Dan Richman has been added to VARIETY's home-office editorial staff to specialize on the music and bands beat. He's a veteran of the music-bands field, having been a reporter on tradepapers for many years.

With resignation of Bernie Woods to become personal manager for Ralph Flanagan, Herm Schoenfeld is doing the Disk Reviews, and the music department is further enlarged via Joe Cohen, George Gilbert and Jesse Gross.

Keane Joins Varsity As Gen. Sales Manager

George L. Keane, who exited the sales manager post in the RCA-Victor pop division last summer, has joined Varsity Records as general sales manager and assistant to prexy Eli Oberstein. He stepped into the spot vacated by Joe Carleton, who went last week to Mercury as eastern artists rep and sales supervisor.

Personnel shifts were repercussions of Manie Sachs' recent moveover from Columbia to Victor and Mitch Miller's subsequent switch from Mercury to Columbia to head up the latter company's pop artists department.

WAXERIES RENEW PUSH FOR ORCHS

The current dance band push by the disk companies, climaxed by the recent spectacular RCA-Victor promotion, is putting name orchs in their most solid position since the peak point in the early 1940s. Caught up in an incipient rivalry among the various labels, the band biz has been put in the middle, and that's proving to be a payoff spot.

With each of the disk companies starting to shell out coin to plug its stable of batonists, bandleaders are getting a tremendous publicity ride across the country. That's expected to react favorably, not only in platter sales, but in the rejuvenation of band bookings in theatres and one-nite stands which have been laying off for the past couple of years. Although none of the other companies is priming the promotional pumps with budgets to compare with Victor's $175,000, there's a hope that the overall industry drive will succeed in reviving that dormant "dance band consciousness."

Economically, the bands with a solid dance beat have been placed in the competitive saddle. The recent moveover of a couple of bands from Columbia to RCA and the angling for additional name crews by the latter company are boosting values all along the line. It's that old law of supply and demand going into operation again.

Backgrounding the current brightened scene is the question whether the band biz can get a firm toehold within the next year on the basis of the disk company push. Some band managers see

See Compromise On Local 802's Vaude-Band Snag

More traveling name bands are expected to hit Broadway vaude houses in the near future because of a probable compromise between the stand taken by American Federation of Musicians Local 802, N. Y., which doesn't permit traveling bands to work theatres unless an 802 band is hired as well, and the demand by many bandleaders that they be allowed into N. Y. vauders. It's anticipated that a quota of traveling bands will be permitted to work any Broadway house.

Details are currently being worked out by James C. Petrillo, AFM head, as a result of the current engagement of Les Brown at the Paramount theatre.

Brown, listed as a traveling band, was hired by comedian Bob Hope for a two-week stand at this house, during which Hope is the headliner. Local 802 execs wanted current rules conformed to, but Hope is said to have put in a complaint to Petrillo, who permitted Brown to keep the date pending a formal decision.

Petrillo's entry into the N. Y. vaude-band situation is said to have been the result of squawks put in by bandleaders throughout the nation. It was argued that many topflight orchestras couldn't play Broadway and that the waning interest in bandshows wasn't being helped by the Local 802 regulation. It's been argued name band employment in New York is at its lowest ebb, probably because of the 802 action.

Special Marx Pic Plugs

Title song from Lester Cowan's Marx Bros.' starrer, "Love Happy," will benefit from a special fund which has been set aside for plugging the tune through a cooperative theatre budget.

Written by Ann Ronell (Mrs. Cowan), the number is published by Jewel Music.

Senate Finance Committee Called On To Kill Social Security Orch Clause

Washington, March 7.

The Senate Finance Committee was called upon yesterday (6) to kill a section of the new Social Security Bill which would legalize and put new life into the AFM's Form B Contract. The provision was slipped in by the House Ways and Means Committee and passed by the House before establishments which hire bands realized what had happened.

The bill, amending the Social Security Act to increase the size of the benefits and the number of beneficiaries, is now before the Senate committee for study. Asking elimination of the provision yesterday were Carter T. Barron, Loew's rep here, who spoke for the Big Five theatre-owning film companies; J. A. Osherman, attorney for the National Ballroom Operators Assn., and Norman Bomze, spokesman for the National Licensed Beverage Assn.

Form B was outlawed about two years ago by the U. S. Supreme Court in a test case taken there on appeal by Osherman. It provided that the establishment signing a name band — theatre, restaurant, nightclub, dancehall, radio network, etc. — is regarded as employer of all members of the band for the purpose of paying the Social Security taxes and keeping the Social Security records for the term of the engagement.

Legislation to restore this responsibility and take it off the backs of the name band leaders is included in the new bill. It would,

OK for Electrolux

Organist Ethel Smith received an unusual letter last week which stated that the Bethesda Methodist-Episcopal Church at Holtwood, Pa., had converted its reed organ into an electronic instrument with an Electrolux sweeper vacuum. Letter added that the "vacuumatic" organ, devised by an electrician church member, played beautifully.

Sole difficulty which, perhaps, Miss Smith might be able to adjust was the lack of music published for both Electrolux and organ.

Sacks Angling For New Artists

Hollywood, March 7.

Manie Sacks isn't hiding the fact that he's interested in grabbing top talent for RCA-Victor. While he was here for a week, before returning to N. Y. Friday (3), Sacks met with artists and their managers from other companies.

These included Dinah Shore, Frank Sinatra, Harry James, Les Brown, Doris Day, Ray Noble, Axel Stordahl and Margaret Whiting. All are with Columbia except Miss Whiting, who waxes for Capitol. RCA-Victor's new exec. in charge or artist relations has already grabbed Frankie Carle and Gene Krupa from Columbia, where he was artists-and-repertory topper for 10 years until he left recently for RCA.

Miller Back From Coast

Mitch Miller, Columbia's new director of pop artists, returned to New York Monday (6) after a two-week visit on the Coast. Miller set up several recording sessions while in Hollywood, in addition to becoming oriented in the company's Coast operation.

HENDERSON DISBANDS, BECOMES SINATRA AIDE

Skitch Henderson has broken up his band to take over the post of general musical director for Frank Sinatra and baton the NBC orch on the singer's across-the-board airer, "Light Up Time." Henderson, who started his new chores Monday (6), will reportedly take on one-niter dates with the network house band in spots nearby to New York. Henderson replaced Jeff Alexander, who was in the spot held for a long time by Axel Stordahl.

Henderson will also be at the keyboard when Sinatra opens at the Copacabana, N. Y., March 23, and will accompany the crooner to Europe this summer for bookings on the Continent and at the London Palladium.

Both RCA, Columbia Roll New Catalogs

Both RCA-Victor and Columbia are rolling new catalogs off the presses in the 45 and 33⅓ fields, respectively. More coincidence than competition, the catalogs are slated to hit the retailers the middle of March. Both listings are the second editions of the companies' slow-speed disk listings.

Victor's 45 rpm catalog will be a 64-page booklet listing both longhair and pop selections, including the lower-priced Bluebird line. Both companies charge retailers 5c each for the catalogs.

Nab Phoney Jap Publisher Of 'Buttons' in 1st Postwar Test of Copyright Law

Tokyo, Feb. 28.

In the first postwar test of the Japanese music copyright law, an American agent of a New York music publishing house has succeeded not only in nabbing an illicit Tokyo publisher in the act of pilfering an American song, but collected sufficient damages from the offender to give the legitimate publisher a profit on the bootleg sales and to pay the American copyright owner a standard royalty. Case is noteworthy, because it is thought to be the first time in the history of Japan that a foreign music publisher has collected royalties for a copyright infringement.

Purloined song was "Buttons and Bows," published by Famous Music Corp. Firm had assigned Japanese publishing rights to George Thomas Folster, NBC radio commentator in Tokyo, who doubles as a literary and music agent. Folster had made a deal with the Sogaku-Sha publishing firm for release of the song in Japan, but before legit sheets could be printed, bootleg copies bearing a phoney publisher's name appeared on Tokyo music counters.

Folster enlisted the aid of the Japanese police and the Japan Copyright Protection League who picked up most of the sheets and traced the publisher. When Folster threatened to go to court, the publisher agreed to kick in with sufficient coin to make up all losses suffered by the authorized publisher, the agent, and Famous.

The Copyright Protection League said the case, to the best of its knowledge, was the first time a foreign music publisher had recovered royalties on a pilfered song in Japan, although song-pilfering is an ancient Nipponese custom.

Constance Hope Solos

Constance Hope has exited RCA-Victor, where she served as a consultant, to open her own N. Y. merchandise, promotion and publicity office.

For the past six years she held down the directorship of artist relations for RCA-Victor's Red Seal label.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Les Brown "It Isn't Fair"-"Solid As a Rock" (Columbia). Four Hits and a Miss team up with Brown for an ace coupling. "Fair" revival, recently launched by Sammy Kaye (Victor), gets another boost with a warm, slow-tempoed vocal treatment that slates it for a juke ride. Flipover has a solid potential. A bounce number with a cute lyric, "Rock" is slightly marred by a blaring trick opening but the quintet, with an assist from Stumpy Brown, quickly take hold of the jump beat with trim results.

Ethel Merman-Ray Bolger "If I Knew You Were Coming I'd 've Baked a Cake"-"It's So Nice to Have a Man Around the House" (Decca). This team of legit musical stars is putting a saleable personality stamp on their brace of Decca pressings that should pat their "Dearie" and "Pajamas." "Cake" is a natural for their uninhibited comedy attaek and this version is one of the best. "House" is another cute romp on a ballad which the jocks can use for a change-of-pace. This tune, originally a special for Dinah Shore, has caught fire.

Harry James "You're a Sweetheart"-"My Baby Is Blue" (Columbia). James won't stir up much noise with these sides but it's a well-turned disk showing off his sound musical craftsmanship. "Sweetheart" is a pleasant tune with a good instrumental intro and neatly done lyric by the Skylarks. Reverse is in a slower vein carried by James' sweet licks on his horn. Dick Williams does an okay vocal.

Gordon MacRae "Oh! Oh! Oh! Ophelia"-"Two-Faced Heart" (Capitol). MacRae does a bangup job on a couple of rhythm numbers which jocks can fit into the current Dixieland kick. "Ophelia" is likely side and MacRae works over this tune with plenty of verve to get the most out of it. Reverse is another solid item smoothly rendered with that vocal beat never in doubt. Paul Weston's combo backs up in a lively style, dishing up the dixieland with a light commercial once-over.

Errol Garner - Johnny Hartman "Remember" - "September in the Rain" (Mercury). Mercury has made an attractive pairing of a standout keyboard artist and good crooner on some standards. Garner grinds out unusual rhythmic patterns in the solo 88 passages while Hartman delivers in a deeply romantic baritone. Neither side is the type to rocket these numbers to the top again but the jocks will be spinning them frequently for their quietly satisfying reminiscent moods.

Herb Jeffries "The Flying Dutchman"-"Baby, Won't You Say You Love Me!" (Columbia). Latching on to the increasing play being given to this folk-style number, this version of the "Dutchman" has a chance to click. Jeffries renders it in a full-bodied dramatic style with elaborate vocal and orchestral support. Some of the background effects could have been soft-pedaled to let the story through more clearly. Flipover is a well-cut Mack Gordon-Josef Myrow number from the 20th-Fox pic, "Wabash Avenue."

Margaret Whiting "My Foolish Heart"-"Stay With the Happy People" (Capitol). Two good sides in contrasting styles show Miss Whiting's versatility. An upcoming tune, "Heart" gets a moving treatment with her usual smoothly warm ballad manipulation. It's in a lushly sad key that should cut a hefty slice of this number's jock and juke play. Bottom deck has a fine chance too. It has a bright rhythm and an uplift lyric that's duck soup for Miss Whiting's lucid pipes and natural beat. Frank DeVol furnishes full backing on both.

Ink Spots "My Reward" - "You Left Me Everything But You" (Decca). Spots have a good chance to crack the hit list with either one of these sides. But both get the same stylized handling to militate against a twin click. Allan Roberts' "Reward" is fine torch item executed with a heavy accent on Billy Kenny's tenoring. Back side is another solid tune given a similar slow Kenny and spoken-break treatment. Either side has a potential that could have increased with a change-of-pace coupling.

Toni Arden "Rain" - "Mother, Mother, Mother Pin a Rose on Me" (Columbia). "Rain" is a fine oldie and Miss Arden's disk could push it far. It's an attractive cut with a winsome vocal that should garner high jock ratings. Reverse is a cute novelty switch, performed by Miss Arden with a light bounce that smartly sells it. There's a full orch backing on both sides.

Platter Pointers

Al Trace entered a good early starter in the "Cake" field with a gay cut of "If I Knew You Were Coming I'd 've Baked a Cake" (Columbia) . . . Decca could have a sleeper with the Jaxson Sisters' "Stranger in the House," a firstrate lyric rendered with plenty of spirit. Reverse is a jet-propelled workover on "Old MacDonald Had a Farm" that stretches the novelty angle too far . . . Steve Gibson Quartet has two good jock sides in "I'll Never Love Anyone Else" and "I Want a Roof Over My Head" (Mercury) . . . Dick Jurgens rides nicely along with a coupling of promising pops, "Daddy's Little Girl"-"We'll Build a Bungalow" with okay vocals by Ray McIntosh and Al Galente (Columbia) . . . Castle has come up with a solid jock item in Jimmie and Ruth Dodd's treatment of "Nashville Blues" and "Silver Dollar" . . . Coral has waxed a sort of sequel to "Don't Cry Joe" with "It's Easy For You to Say" vocalled nicely by Sandy Evans. Tune has a fair chance . . . Mildred Bailey has a new Columbia long-playing disk featuring eight great standards by the swingstress and some topflight instrumental accomps by various combos . . . Some solid pianistics are turned in by Dick Hyman (Relax) on four show tunes by Jerome Kern and Richard Rodgers. "Gentleman Is a Dope" is standout . . . John Paree has the name and accent to do a good workover of "C'est Si Bon" (Coral) in the authentic French manner . . . Jack Owens, with an assist from Three Beaus and a Peep, does a pleasant waxing job on the Jimmy McHugh-Harold Adamson tune, "You're a Sweetheart" (Decca) with Sy Oliver backing . . . Ray Anthony solidly bounces "Spaghetti Rag" for Capitol.

Standout western, race, hillbilly, jazz, polka, etc.: Red Kirk "It's Raining in My Heart" (Mercury) . . . Jimmy Work, "Who's Been Here Since I've Been Gone" (Decca) . . . Red Allen, "Ride 'Red' Ride" (Brunswick) . . . John Wolohan, "Wolohan's Boogie" (Cavalier) . . . Hank and Frank, "I'm Kickin' the Bucket Over You" (Columbia) . . . Jerry Byrd, "Steel Guitar Rag" (Mercury).

the platter project as a partially artificial stimulant that may or may not end in a hangover. The more permanent symptoms of revival are being looked for in the dance palaces, theatres and college spots. How big and how long the upbeat will last is being measured by that reaction.

The trend, however, is definitely upwards at the present time. Customer tastes are taking a marked swing from the "recital" form of jazz, such as bop, back to the standard dance beats which was foreshadowed early last year by the Dixieland revival. That two-beat rhythm turned out to be the harbinger of the current dance tempo.

Granz to Europe To Set 'Jazz' Unit Tour

Norman Granz, whose "Jazz at the Philharmonic" unit never played the continent before, planes to Europe Sunday (12) to set up a late spring tour for the group. Current personnel includes Ella Fitzgerald, Flip Phillips, Lester Young, Coleman Hawkins, Buddy Rich and others.

Granz, who recently became director of Mercury Records' rhythm, blues and jazz operations, cleaned up several waxing sessions in New York last week.

Band Reviews

COUNT BASIE SEXTET
Brass Rail, Chicago

Count Basie is playing jazz with a small unit for the first time since his early Kansas City days. Without the inhibitions that a big band necessarily places on a musician, the Count is in a much freer element. And it shows in his playing.

The sextet is simply a jazz group, and while most of ensemble work is semi-arranged, solos are improvised. On an especially hot number, the group will forget about its ensemble arrangements and take off together.

As a result, the Count retains his light, almost airy style, and is able to build around it to a much greater extent than before. And in the faster numbers, he displays a driving style that was somewhat submerged in the large group.

He is working with a talented bunch of young musicians. Only two—tenor saxophonist Bob Gay and drummer Gus Johnson—are from his former big band. The others, Buddy De Franco on clarinet, Clark Terry, trumpet, and Jimmy Lewis, bass, play together as if they had been with the Count for years.

Unit relies mainly on jazz classics. Hot numbers include "Honeysuckle Rose," "Liza," "Lady Be Good" and a jump version of "Idaho." Slow and lowdown are "I Surrender Dear" and an assortment of blues. Group uses a riff-filled "One O'Clock Jump" for theme, with Basie featured on piano. Chan.

FREDDY MARTIN ORCH
With Merve Griffin, Murray Arnold and Rex Dennis
St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco

The Freddy Martin impact showed up strong here in the Mural Room for a preem night that filled the 550-seat room to the seams. Fifty-five minutes of floor show by the Martin crew scores heavily on both entertainment and business, a considerable compliment considering the low ebb of competish in town's other saloons.

High points are warblings of Merve Griffin, localite, who scores heavily, and Murray Arnold, who turns in a neat piano chore, followed by a firstrate song item jointly with Griffin. Also turning in a socko performance for mucho kudos is vocalist Rex Dennis. Floor compote includes "Cavalcade of Bands," with local flavoring, which is strong applause-getter.

Dance stanzas magnet dancers to pack floor, with standard Martin musical appeal showing nifty choice of tunes, well mixed to appeal to all comers from 16 to 60. Music is rich and sparkly, the 18-man outfit using its instrumentation, for plenty of effective doubling. Martin's batoning and saxophoning, are firstrate and garners accordingly. Ted.

JIMMY TUCKER ORCH (7)
Southern Mansion, Kansas City

An established eatery, the Southern Mansion for more than eight years had a policy of a resident band—the Dee Peterson orchestra. Last fall, spot began changing periodically, and the Jimmy Tucker crew is the second set under the new policy.

While Tucker is a home town lad, he hasn't been seen here in about four years; he has been playing hotels and dining rooms in the midwest, East and South. Crew he brouht here specializes in tunes on the soft-sweet side, with a generous sprinkling of Latin and novelty work.

Instrumentation is trumpet, reed, accordian, electric guitar, piano, string bass and guitar, with plenty of doubling making it a thoroughly versatile outfit. Tucker himself warbles on ballads, with Fred Muro, drummer, vocalling in both Spanish and English.

Mansion pretty much wants its music straight and smooth, and the Tucker combo is just what was ordered for this dinner spot. Quin.

Disk Jockey Review

THE BIG EVENING WITH BARBARA LEE
With Ruth Anderson
Producer: Bruce-Eldridge
60 Mins., Mon.-thru-Sat., 10:30 p.m.
EMPORIUM DEPT. STORE
KNBC, San Francisco

The quality of being unobtrusive though entertaining, with a strong layer of charm and authenticity blanketing her femme disk-jockey chore, shows up through the hour-long spinning of platter and chatter as offered by Miss Anderson. Program is remarkably without the rank-and-file nerve-jarring gab which punctuates most such marathons, and a smart sense of musical choice further frames the essentially pleasing content matter.

Music provided is of general popular level, with emphasis on sweet side. General effect is a good radio show with sponsored interludes interesting as well as informative: five commercials are usual nightly stint, with 16 platters or more interlarding. Guests are rare.

Miss Anderson's voice and diction are definitely upper-bracket. Timing, pacing and projection are excellent. Ted.

MIKE MEARIAN SHOW
90 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Sat.
Sponsored-Participating
WKBW, Buffalo

This engaging d. j. has been on the local early morning scene only a few months and he is already grabbing off a nice chunk of the a.m. listening audience. Coming here from Elmira's WELM, he's made friends with his easy manner and platter choices.

The many-voice routine is nothing new but Mearian has an interesting twist. He culls the papers for bits he can handle effectively and then dramatizes them ad lib style. Added to this, he has a gimmick with a couple of pigeons—more of his voices—who are going to get married soon.

The early morning slot can get pretty dreary in any town but Mearian manages to liven it in entertaining style. Commercials are handled well. By keeping his news dramatizations well spaced to avoid being tiresome plus plenty of time announcements he makes a welcome addition to Buffalo's ayem radio. Morce.

Airborne Muzak

Muzak has soared into the wild blue yonder to add another outlet for its canned music, already heard on land and on sea. Outfit has tape-recorded special dinner music programs for airing during the serving of meals aboard National Airlines' New York - Miami flights.

Southbound trips feature "Moon Over Miami" melodies, while the northbound trek offers tunes currently being piped by Muzak into Gotham situations.

Hollywood, March 7.

Louis Armstrong exited Portland, Ore., concert Friday (3) with over $2,400 from $1,750 guarantee against 50%.

JUKERS WANT RECOGNITION

Most Jukebox Operators Don't Fear Tele Is Threat to Their Industry

Chicago, March 7.

Most jukebox operators feel that television is not a threat to their industry, but are split on the question of whether it can be harnessed as a money-maker for them. Top operators, here for the first annual convention of the Music Operators of America, feel that television in taverns has reached its peak without the jukebox industry suffering.

First, they say, the tavern-owner favors the jukebox over television because the latter is not a source of income while the former is. Further, customers drink more slowly while watching TV, but listening to music does not affect their rate of consumption. They do not anticipate that taverns will go on installing TV sets, but are hopeful that more and newer jukeboxes will go into taverns.

There is serious disagreement on whether TV can make money for them. Hirsh De La Viez, executive committee member from Washington, D. C., feels that coin-operated TV is a distinct possibility. He favors the idea of a live screen with sound controlled by coin mechanism. While the customer would see the picture, he would have to drop coins in to hear the dialog.

George A. Miller, national chairman and trustee, disagrees. He feels that the public has reached the point where they are so accustomed to free TV in the tavern that they will refuse to pay for it.

Sidney H. Levin, national counsel, says he has conferred with TV manufacturers in New York but despite intensive discussion was unable to reach any practical scheme of operation. Levin agrees also that the trend toward free video in taverns has gone beyond the point where it can be stopped.

While the question is being discussed, there is little indication that any definite stand on it will be taken. Operators feel that even if it is feasible, it is still in the stage where nothing immediate can be done. Certainly, if they can be shown that it will work and is a potential source of income, they will not object, they add.

HILLBILLY, POPS BUILT AROUND MOONEY BAND

Philadelphia, March 7.

A combination of hillbilly and pop fare is being packaged around Art Mooney's band by the Jolly Joyce Agency here for spring and summer dates at theatres, parks and fairs. Mooney, whose contract with Joe Glaser is finished, will be available for the packaging after he winds up his run at the Capitol theatre, N. Y., which starts March 16. With names in the band and dance field narrowing, Mooney is taking advantage of the hillbilly and western demand, which is wide open.

Joyce intends to use the east-meets-west theme in the packaging, as agency has a lot of top western singers under its wing. Mooney will carry full band, with the hillbilly acts as added features. Joyce has already lined up list of tentative dates throughout east and in Canada, where western fare is very strong.

Goday Sets Wald

Hollywood, March 7.

Happy Goday, who recently set up his own music pubbery after splitting with Lou Levy, flew back to N. Y. Monday (6) after opening local outpost.

He put George Wald in charge of latter.

MODERNAIRES TAPE SHOWS

Hollywood, March 7.

The Modernaires have been taping extra "Club 15" shows for CBS in anticipation of their Mark Hopkins, San Francisco, date, March 10.

Group is set for two weeks at the hotel.

Sammy Kaye Seeks To Augment Singers

Sammy Kaye, back in New York this week after several months of theatres and one-niters, is auditioning male and female vocalists to augment his present singing staff. Bandleader is seeking a replacement for Don Cornell, now doing a single, and also a girl singer, who will look good on television.

Laura Leslie and Tony Alamo continue with the band as regular featured vocalists.

Godfrey Raps Music Men; MPCE Mulling Action to Be Taken

Tin Pan Alley is doing a burn over the slugging Arthur Godfrey gave the songplugging contingent on his Monday (6) morning airer.

His rapping of the tune-touts was along the lines that their tactics were annoying and their over-zealousness in selling numbers was partially responsible for the songs doing a fast fade.

The Music Publishers Contact Employees' executive council has obtained a platter of the show, which will be listened to either today (Wed.) or tomorrow (Thurs.). A course of action will then be taken.

Buddy Morris

years. Damages of $360,000 are asked from the defendants for monopolizing motion pictures as an exploitation medium for their own exclusive benefit.

Sync Rights Loss

Morris requests $180,000 as damages to reimburse it for revenue lost by the defendants' allegedly unlawful practice of using their monopoly to depress synchronization prices paid independent publishers. In its third cause of action the plaintiff seeks $540,000 damages growing out of the defendants' asserted acts of restraining fair competition. This was accomplished, according to the complaint, by forcing authors and composers to turn over entire publishing rights in their songs to the film firms by "compelling most songwriters to become employees for hire." Thus, it's claimed, the independent is prevented from publishing "many of the best and most popular compositions."

Warners came in for a separate $450,000 rap on the contention that it deprived Morris of the right to publish numbers written by Jule Styne and Sammy Cahn. Plaintiff claims the songsmiths were bound to it under a five-year agreement inked in 1945. However, it's asserted that Warners coerced the duo to come over to its own publishing affiliates. In a final request, suit wants $180,000 damages from Loew's, 20th and Universal for "monopolizing" the use of music in films by illegal pooling and cross-licensing to the detriment of Morris.

In describing the "vertical integration" of the publishing firms and the parent film companies, the complaint states that Loew's owns at least 51% of the stock of Harry Warren Music; Warners owns 100% of the stock of Witmark, Remick, Harms, New World and Atlas Music, as well as 50% of the shares of Shubert Music and Advanced Music. Paramount Pictures is said to own 100% of Paramount and Famous, while 20th owns Movietone Music outright. In addition, it's charged that Loew's owns 51% of Robbins, Feist and Miller, respectively, while 20th-Fox holds a 28% slice of each firm. Universal allegedly has a "contract combination" which obligates it to deal exclusively with one or all of the three pubs.

CHI MEET WOULD EDUCATE PUBLIC

By ROBERT CHANDLER

Chicago, March 7.

Principal underlying purpose of the first annual Music Operators of America convention, which opened here yesterday (6), is the desire of the operators to segregate themselves from other coin-machine operators.

The operators feel that they are legitimate businessmen and have been for a number of years. They realize, however, that the public doesn't think so. And so, while they declare that they will cooperate with other coinmen, they are withdrawing into a separate and distinct organization.

Thus this convention will take on the aspect of a seminar in public relations. Toppers wish to set up a body which will have as its task informing the public that the music operators are a group apart from other coin-machine operators and that they are a respectable outfit.

One of the first tangible steps in that direction is an executive committee resolution, passed before the convention, backing the bill in Congress which would outlaw use of obscene records. Aside from active support of the bill, MOA will use all forms of moral suasion possible on its individual members to keep the salacious records off their jukeboxes.

The Peculiar Problems

Desire to segregate themselves from other coinmen has other purposes and manifestations, too. Chief among them is feeling that the jukebox industry has its own peculiar problems, and that a national organization is necessary to cope with them. For one thing, they feel that the value of the jukebox is underestimated by artists and publishers as a means of making hits and stars. Prevalent feeling among artists is that they are of benefit to the jukebox industry, not the industry to them, operators feel.

Also falling under problems of national scope is Congressional legislation. Operators have their sights set on two pieces of pending legislation. One, which has not actually been introduced but keeps threatening, is a bill to place jukeboxes under copyright laws. This the operators vehemently oppose. Sidney H. Levin, national counsel, delivered a report on this yesterday (6), warning operators to be on the alert against such legislation.

The other piece of legislation is a bill pending which would provide for minting of 7½c coins. Operators favor this bill, claiming that the nickel in the slot doesn't go far enough. Ed Mehren, president of Squirt Beverages and of Intermediate Coinage, who has been lobbying for the 7½c coin, addressed the body on the progress that has thus far been made.

500 Delegates

Spirit of the convention, which 500 delegates are attending and 25 exhibitors showing their wares, is one of independence. Heretofore, conventions had been held by manufacturers, with operators invited. Now the operators have invited the manufacturers. Operators feel that they are taking the offensive in attempt to put themselves on an independent footing.

Two days of sessions were completed today, and tomorrow's sessions will be for the most part devoted to cleaning the whole thing up. Morning sessions will be devoted to tradepaper relations. Then will come financial reports, election of officers, unfinished business, and "good and welfare" discussion.

Convention closes tomorrow night with a banquet, with Jimmy Durante chief entertainment attraction.

Sherwood in Merc Deal

Hollywood, March 7.

Bobby Sherwood is forming an all-Dixieland band and has signed with Mercury.

He last lacquered for Capitol.

MGM's Steamship Tie-In on 'Nancy'

M-G-M Records has made a unique tie-in with the Moore-McCormack steamship lines on a promotional campaign for the score of Metro's filmusical, "Nancy Goes to Rio."

Diskery has arranged for free showing of the pic on all Rio-bound steamers and is stocking shipboard jukeboxes with singles from its soundtrack album. Long-playing copies of the set will be used for the concerts over the ships' loudspeaker systems.

Jane Powell and Carmen Miranda are featured in the album.

Tower (Chi) Speeds Operations Despite Partnership Splitup

Chicago, March 7.

All operations at Tower Records are being speeded, though the projected partnership arrangement between president Dick Bradley and trio of Morrie Cowen, Barney Perel and Hy Brown has been called off at Bradley's request.

Tower has begun an advertising and promotion campaign for its four disks already released, and Bradley is cutting four more sides this week. Re-orders for "Bewitched," the Bill Snyder side, are flooding in.

Proposed partnership, which was to provide promotional and legal talent plus money, was called off on disagreement over two points. Trio wanted 66-2/3% of stock, which would give them absolute control. Projected agreement was to give them 60%, not enough for absolute control. Secondly, and more basic to the split, was trio's demand that, aside from "Bewitched," Bradley press only from his backlog of masters. They wanted him to cut no more sides. Bradley felt he could not work with them under those conditions, and asked for return of options, which were to expire in April.

In informing Bradley that he could have the options back, Brown, a local attorney, admitted that he could not blame Bradley for wanting out under the circumstances. Cowen and Perel own a thriving pharmaceutical firm.

News Photog Sets Up 4-Piece Unit in Pitt

Pittsburgh, March 7.

Longtime musical hobby of Jack Mahony, veteran mag and newspaper photographer, is finally paying off. For years he's been playing around with sax and clarinet as an amateur while shooting pix first for Bulletin-Index, weekly newsmag which folded year ago, and then morning Post-Gazette. When that sheet dropped its Sunday edition in November and cut down the staff, Mahony was among those to get the axe.

So he decided to try and cash in on his groaning efficiency on the wind instruments, and organized a small (four-piece) dance combo. Mahony opened three weeks ago at small Northside spot called the Red Raven, has already built quite a following and looks set there for an indefinite run. He features Chuck Melhorn, Pittsburgh boy, on the vocals. Melhorn's divided his last name for professional purposes and calls himself Mel Horne.

Huddles on BMI

Hollywood, March 7.

Julie Stearns, general manager of BMI, flew in from N. Y. Monday (6) for week's pow wow with Sid Lorraine and Eddie Janis, firm's Coast pluggers.

Irving Tanz, ex-BMI, has formed his own Irving Tanz Music publishing firm, in N. Y.

Disk Jocks Think They're Experts, Making Life Tough for Pluggers

New York contactmen are becoming increasingly annoyed at what they feel is the current high-handed manner being taken toward them and their tunes by disk jockeys in this era of turntable-created hits. Two of the major plugger gripes revolve around the increasing difficulty of getting to jocks with plug tunes and the growing inclination of the platter-spinners to think of themselves as music experts, with an attendant airing of adverse critical opinion on their shows regarding this or that song or disk interpretation of it.

Pluggers for major publishers are finding it more and more difficult to contact jocks, both in New York and in other metropolitan centers. The d.j. trend now is to have the contact boys leave their tunes with assistants or secretaries, with the pluggers getting no opportunities for a personal word with the particular jock. In many instances the publisher reps have subsequently learned that material thus left was never even brought to the attention of the disk-twirlers.

Whereas formerly pluggers hopped out of town to contact barnstorming bands with the knowledge that they would be reasonably successful in snagging a plug, today it's a matter of trying to see scores of jocks on a number of hinterland stations with little assurance of even getting past the studio reception room. It wouldn't be quite as bad, feel the contactmen, if in the towns they hit they could find some live music attractions that would be worth contacting which would save the junkets from being more or less a complete waste of time and money. But the paucity of name or even semi-name orchs playing out-of-town spots currently, makes even that possibility remote.

Equally galling to the music boys is the habit some jockeys have adopted of passing unfavorable remarks on the air about songs they don't happen to like—or because of personal reasons involving the plugger or publisher. In several recent instances jocks have bluntly told their listeners that they won't play such-and-such a number because it's no good, and one prominent d.j. went so far as to comment that the revival of an oldie (which subsequently turned into a repeat hit) "set the music business back 20 years." The pluggers feel that any jock is entitled to his opinion of a number but that blasting it publicly in addition to not playing it is definitely adding insult to injury.

Probably the principal reason for the jocks' cold-shoulder attitude toward regular plug tunes is their desire to discover and create a hit entirely by themselves, according to the contact boys. Every d.j., they claim, wants to turn the national music spotlight on himself through his unaided development of a click tune. Less charitable music men hold to the belief that, whatever the individual reason, disk jockeys in general have let their current preeminent position as hit-makers go to their heads.

Map Philly Tieup Of Orch, Industry Show

Philadelphia, March 7.

A plan to tie in the Philadelphia Orchestra's free city concerts with the Union Industry Show here in May has been broached to the city council by Harl McDonald, the orch's manager.

The concerts would be given May 10-13 in Convention Hall, while the Industry Show is slated for May 6-13. Free tickets will be printed to be distributed in any way city council wishes. Council appropriated $50,000 for the symphony this year, and the free concerts are being given by the orch in return for the grant.

McDonald asked for a quick reply from the solons because the orch wants to arrange for the appearance of top soloists

Weekly chart of the records on disk jockeys' programs, as "most requested" by listeners. This compilation is based on information gathered from disk-spinners across the nation and is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of 10 points for a No. 1 mention, 9 for a No. 2 and so on down to one point. Cities and jockeys will vary week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country.

Senate Finance Committee

in effect, reverse the Supreme Court.

Hears Appeal

The Senate committee also heard an appeal from Bomze regarding another section of the bill—which would provide that if an employee of a restaurant, hotel, nightclub, etc., should report his tips to the management, these tips must be regarded as remuneration paid by the management. Thus, the management would be required to collect Social Security taxes and pay them, and keep all records for the Government on these tips.

Barron, who made his pitch particularly regarding the name bands which play onstage at showcases of the film companies, said in part:

"The Supreme Court held that the Form B contract was purely fictitious, that in fact the operators had no control over the band, that the leader was the true employer, and that the burden was, therefore, upon the leader to pay the tax and make the reports with respect to the members of his band which were required by the Social Security Act."

Under the provisions of the bill, he pointed out, dance committee of high schools and colleges would become the employers of each member of bands hired for proms and would have to maintain Social Security records for a single night's playing.

Osherman raised the point that musicians would actually lose Social Security rating since some of the organizations which hire band for a night are civic, charitable and educational groups which, by law, are not required to collect and pay Social Security benefits. A dancehall which changes bands three or four nights a week, he continued, would have to keep records of as many as 2,000 to 3,000 musicians in the course of a year. Furthermore, sometimes the musicians listed on a contract do not all appear, and others fill in for the absentees, which would cause confusion and Social Security credit to the wrong sidemen.

Further Confusion

A traveling band, he emphasized, could have its Social Security records scattered through books of establishments in 30 or 35 states each year—which would further cause confusion. This would greatly complicate the work of the Social Security board.

Most emphatically, Osherman argued, that since the bandleaders are the actual employers, do the hiring and firing and set the pay scales, they should be required to handle the task instead of unloading it on other establishments.

Arguing the questions of the tips, in addition to that of the bands, Bomze said:

"This section creates the anomalous situation where the employee can select a tax base upon which the employer is taxed.

"One of the enforcement problems of the Bureau of Internal Revenue has been the securing of accurate reporting of tips as income. Under the present situation it cannot be said that an employer can benefit by faulty reporting by an employee. However, if this section becomes law . . . it is only logical that the next step in enforcement would be to place the employer in a position of responsibility for such reporting. To force us, as employers, to become enforcement agents for the bureau is an unreasonable imposition on our business."

Tax Drive

movie patronage would pick up with the lower admission prices that would come if the tax were cut or repealed." Similar editorials have been featured in dozens of other papers since the drive began.

In New York, the city council passed a resolution this week advocating repeal of the excise tax. Exhibs in the metropolitan area, meantime, have withdrawn the "nuisance tax" trailers from the screen in light of solid Congressional support. Another trailer reporting progress of the drive is being prepared for New York theatres while theatres in the other parts of the country will continue with the old trailer for the time being.

Snyder Confirms Stance

Washington, March 7.

John Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury, officially confirmed last week that the Administration will not raise any real objection if Congress slashes the 20% admissions tax. Asked at his press conference about the statements of his views given out by Carter Barron, member of the COMPO taxation and legislation committee, Snyder admitted they were correct.

Barron said Snyder had taken a "sympathetic view" of the problems of the exhibitors and had explained that the viewpoint of the Treasury Department was not "frozen." In other words, if the exhibitors were suffering business hardship as a result of the 20% bite, the Treasury was willing to shift its position and not be against a reduction.

'RH' Logging System

Richard Himber's new development in logging broadcast performances lists tunes in the survey, based on four major network schedules. They are compiled on the basis of 1 point for sustaining instrumental, 2 points for sustaining vocals, 3 for commercial instrumental, 4 for commercial vocal, respectively, in each of the 3 major territories, New York, Chicago and Coast. For example, a commercial vocal in all three territories counts 12. Added to these totals is the listener ratings of commercial shows. The first group consists of the top 30 songs.

Metro's stand is an admirable one, they don't hold much hope it can break a policy that has prevailed in New York for years. Metro could win, it's said, if other companies would adopt the same tough attitude, but some other distribs are claimed to be exploiting to their own advantage Metro's absence from the three circuits.

Goodman admitted that Metro's strategy of breaking the embargo by slotting as many pix of its own as possible into its own circuit in New York has made the situation tougher for the indie chains. He said, however, that he has been able to pick up enough product to get along.

The subsequent chains depend on product coming off the Loew's circuit for half of each week's bill, in accordance with the exhibition system in the New York territory. If no other product but Metro's is coming off the Loew's chain, Century, Skouras and Brandt obviously find themselves without pictures.

War films were more realistic, or, according to one critic, "completely awful." "Air Force," "Action" and "North Atlantic" headed the list, with the latter good enough to be shown to Merchant Marine trainees as a picture of what they might expect. Best of all, however, was generally conceded to be "Watch on the Rhine."

It was this year that Warner Bros. filmed "This Is the Army," and donated all profits, plus a quarter million for screen rights, to Army Relief Fund. Sol Lesser made "Stage Door Canteen" with a large cast of free-talent stars and turned most of the profits over to the American Theatre Wing.

Best of the peaceful theme films were "The More the Merrier," "Madame Curie," "Best Foot Forward" and "Coney Island."

The cost of the war staggered the imagination of Americans. World War I, which lasted less than two years, cost about $35,000,000,000. By midyear of '43, World War II was costing $8,000,000,000 per month.

Top theatre hits were Sidney Kingsley's "The Patriots," and "Oklahoma!" The latter was not only a historic money-maker, but was a powerful force in giving new impetus and direction to musical comedies, which had been falling into a monotonous, all-too-familiar pattern. John van Druten's comedy. "The Voice of the Turtle," with only three characters, was a deft and delightful production. (It is notable that none of the most successful shows of the season concerned the war.)

A skinny, thin-voiced crooner, Frank Sinatra, so captivated bobbysoxers of both sexes that Bing Crosby was his only rival; 30,000 of his fans reacted so violently during his appearance at the Paramount theatre in N. Y. that a riot call was sent out, and 421 policemen, 20 policewomen and 20 patrol cars responded.

The Allies invaded Normandy, and after a terrific battle which lasted exactly one month, liberated Paris. This winter, one of the most severe in years, took a fearful toll of German troops; close to half a million men, including 200,000 prisoners.

Sophie Tucker made a smash comeback.

The worse circus fire in history occurred at Hartford, Conn., when the Barnum & Bailey big top caught fire during a performance. The fire and panic claimed 158 lives.

Academy Oscars for the year were: Best Film, "Going My Way," Paramount; Best Actress, Ingrid Bergman in "Gaslight"; Best Actor, Bing Crosby in "Going My Way"; Best Supporting Actress, Ethel Barrymore in "None But the Lonely Heart"; Best Supporting Actor, Barry Fitzgerald in "Going My Way."

Films were in a lighter, more mellow mood, and Betty Grable was the boxoffice champ. Most popular films of the year were "Going My Way," "Song of Bernadette," "Hail the Conquering Hero," "Miracle of Morgan's Creek," "National Velvet," "Meet Me in St. Louis," "Home in Indiana," "Cover Girl," "See Here, Private Hargrove," and "Laura," all notably "escape" fare. "Going My Way," with Bing Crosby, Barry Fitzgerald and Leo McCarey won all the Oscars in '45.

1944-45 was a fruitful one in the theatre, with 95 openings—two more than the previous year, and 18 more than the year before that. (It was the most vacant season for war plays since Pearl Harbor. Of the lot, John Hersey's "A Bell for Adano" was outstanding.

More Am Songsmiths' Rebuttals To Coots; Accent on Disk Jocks

Columbus, O.

Editor, VARIETY:

After reading the recently published letter of songwriter J. Fred Coots I should first like to state that this letter is written entirely without malice, and that I am not a so-called "disgruntled amateur" with an axe to grind.

For the past 12 years I have been engaged in songwriting and have produced the lyrics and music to 140 songs. Some of these are high quality songs and, of course, some are not of the best. During those years I have endeavored to get these songs published and have succeeded in a small way. A ballad of mine was recently accepted for publication by Broadcast Music, Inc., and this was not the result of a recording and/or promotion campaign, but as the publisher stated, because of the "high quality of the song."

For some years I have been told by reputable publishers "get someone to perform it and we might be interested," and by bandleaders and singers, "get it in print and I might use it, I can't perform unpublished material."

My point is this: Until recent years I had little chance of achieving success, but now through the medium of a small record firm I have had three songs recorded and they are assured of at least some performances on the air by disk jockeys. I have the knowledge that if disk jockeys and their listeners like these tunes, I have made at least one more step in the right direction.

Finally, be it remembered that without the existence of the small record firm and the disk jockey and some general expansion and decentralization in the music business, I might well have gone without this chance. Though some of these conditions may seem deplorable to Mr. Coots, they are giving to me and others like me the opportunities which are the right of every individual in a system of free enterprise.

I feel that it is the responsibility of every new writer who is able to find a market for his material to respond with the best that is in him.

Edward R. Graham.

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

I am very ungrateful in not thanking Mr. J. Fred Coots for having explained the music business and its frailties to me. As a beginner in the field, I should be very appreciative of the wisdom and experience that a man in his position has at his disposal.

He did a terrible disservice to the entire music business, to his own heritage of success and to any new writer of songs who may be luckless enough to have read his letter in VARIETY.

Coots says that songwriting has been taken out of the hands of the "selected group of talented men and women who took great pride in their lyrical and melodic creations." The public "selected" this group in his time. He doesn't appear to care for its "selection" today Is it possible that this complaint is voiced because many of the top songs in the past years are the product of writers who are either young at their trade or young in their spirit, and who caught the pulse of the times. The public doesn't buy any memories or Mr. Coots' either for that matter.

To quote Mr. Coots, he says, today "all you need to become a songwriter is a cheap combination of words and music on a piece of manuscript paper." Does being commercial require that an intelligent person call something "cheap?" The J. Fred Coots', the Sam Lewises, the Gus Kahns, the Fred Fishers, etc., were happy enough to put that "cheap" combination on manuscript paper, and sell lots of sheet music and make lots of money—if that's what being commercial means.

Tastes change. Who should be blamed? J. Fred Coots or the American public?

He expresses unhappiness that too much air time is devoted to hillbilly music in areas outside of the big cities. As far as I know, there is no type of music being hummed or strummed that is more native to the American scene than hillbilly music. If the people like it, it's good enough; not so with Mr. Coots.

Suppose there were a revival of Gregorian chants or of English madrigals. Would Mr. Coots be unhappy and yearn for the "good old days?" As a songwriter I'd try and write good madrigals, or if I couldn't, I'd sit around and sing someone else's, with a smile on my face. There would still be room for other songs if they could stand on their own feet. There are dozens more like myself in the business who are writing with us much imagination as possible and promoting our own material through doors that have to be blasted open.

Mr. Coots says that, "all you need to become a songwriter is a friendly recording director for one of the record manufacturing concerns." As I understand it, these recording directors work for a salary. If they don't produce successful sides they don't earn any salary. It hardly seems likely that every song recorded has been written by a friend. The social side alone would make these men too busy to do any work. In showing a song, who gets the big red carpet, or even a small fiber mat? Is it the established man in the field or is it the young fellow who has had to strangle three secretaries?

Mr. Coots further says, "all you need to become a songwriter is . . and important disk jockey pal." Any disk jockey by and large has to play what his audience wants to hear. It's a pretty bleak picture that Mr. Coots paints. There seems to be nothing but incompetence, favoritism, nepotism, intrigue and all sorts of assorted villany. This "selected group" of his should have the inside track on all of the above if this is so. They've been around longer and have made many more contacts.

There is nothing wrong with any business at which one is successful. Many of us who are not in the classification of successful know that we will be by hard work, and once we are, we'll stay there by hard work.

Steve Krantz.

Geller, Carlton Huddle

Hollywood, March 7.

Harry Geller, Mercury's new recording boss, flew to Gotham Monday (6) for parley with Joe Carlton, waxery's new eastern rep.

Inside Orchestras—Music

One of the major factors in the spread of the current Dixieland kick in the east has been the consistent plugging of the oldtime jazz beat by Ted Husing on his WMGM, N. Y., Saturday morning platter session. While other disk jockeys were chasing the latest styles in "progressive" music, bop and the "cool sounds," Husing was sticking in the main to the ragtime classics.

Husing's impact has been chiefly felt by the smaller hot jazz diskeries, such as the Commodore and Blue Note labels, which are currently reporting a marked upturn for their platters. On the basis of Husing's plugging for the cause, Commodore is now pushing new recordings by its stable of jazzmen, including "Wild Bill" Davidson, Art Hodes, George Brunis, Miff Mole and Pee Wee Russell. Blue Note has been stepping up its pressings of standards by Sidney Bechet and Max Kaminsky.

Shapiro-Bernstein is planning to add impetus to the revival of one of its old melodies, titled "Put On An Old Pair of Shoes," written by Mr. and Mrs. Billy Hill in 1935. Some weeks back, S-B began getting calls for sheet copies of the song from retailers and distributors in the Buffalo area, and couldn't figure why. Investigation proved that an indie label—Command—had cut the song by a Mickey Dee & Skinner team and Buffalo disk jockeys were spinning. Circumstance led Decca Records to record the number by pianist Frank Froeba and a male chorus, and other disks are forthcoming.

Indie platter companies are finding that the formula for survival lies in specialization. Unable to buck the major companies in pop music, a flock of indie labels are sticking exclusively to the pressing of marginal fields in race, hillbilly, hot jazz. The market is small, except in the unusual case of a jackpot click, but the payoff is usually steady.

Only trouble with the formula, however, is that the majors tend to move into any field that promises to grow into anything substantial. Hillbilly disks used to be limited to a small number of minor diskeries but soon all the majors started to grind out the mountaineer tunes, some eventually utilizing top names for the folk stuff. Same went for the hot jazz labels which accented Dixieland until the current boom lured in the majors.

Some of smaller diskeries have come up with a new angle to beat the majors. They are making deals with jukebox operators who guarantee the manufacturer a minimum sale on novelty numbers featuring, in many cases, a barrel-house pianist. Paying at the basic union rates, these diskeries can make a good profit with a basic 10,000 sale. A combo of six or seven big juke ops can usually guarantee that number.

Feist will probably wind up the long prolonged litigation over "Rum and Coca-Cola" by retaining the copyright, on the theory it has value for the future, and settling the multi-claims of Rupert Grant, the Trinidad calypso singer, to whose words Lionel Belasco, West Indies bandleader, and Massi Paterson set the melody. There are several claims, including a folio of calypsos published by Maurice Baron, and a song, with the French title of "L'Annee Passe" by Belasco-Paterson, on which there is a melody infringement claim.

Comedian Morey Amsterdam, while on a USO-Camp Shows tour during the war, supposedly "absorbed" the melody. He is the accredited co-author, with singer Jeri Sullivan and bandleader Paul Baron. Julian T. Abeles, copyright attorney for Loew's, Inc., which controls Feist Music, is working out the settlement details.

James Cracks Record For L.A.'s Avodon

Hollywood, March 7.

Harry James broke all records for a one-nighter at the Avodon Ballroom, Los Angeles, Saturday (4), drawing 3,177 at $1.05 net admissions. He and crew were booked in on $850 guarantee against 60%. James exited with estimated $2,000.

Guy Lombardo orch makes its first Detroit appearance in years April 15, at St. Joseph's Commercial College Alumni Ball at Convention Hall.

HENDLER EXITS RCA TO JOIN FLANAGAN

Herb Hendler this week resigned from RCA Victor to join Bernie Woods in the management of the new Ralph Flanagan orchestra, currently being readied for a March 23 debut at Frank Dailey's Meadowbrook.

Hendler, who handled Victor Records promotion in New York under Dave Finn, will attend to promotion and advertising for Flanagan. Woods is personal manager for the band, with General Artists Corp. doing the booking.

Night Club Reviews

Copa City, Miami

Milton Berle, Sid Gary, Leonard Sues, Hazel Dawn, Jr., The Kanowaze Trio, The Mountaineers, Herb George and the Arden-Fletcher Girls (12), David Tyler Orch; beverage minimums $4, $6; Barry Gray in Flamingo Lounge; no minimum.

Milton Berle is back at this plush spot, and topping the heavy biz drawn by preceding Danny Thomas to point where even the second shows are practicaly sellout. Which, this season is no mean feat.

And though the frenetic video topper has brought in basically the same type of show he purveyed here last year, the yocks still come in rapid succession via his interweaving into the act's stints; his gaggery, though every line is a familiar one, yet reacted to by the hearers as though he had turned up a fresh gem in humor; his command of the audience from the walkon as potent and complete as ever. It might be a matter of his personality overpowering the tab payers. Whatever it is, he gets them, holds them and leaves them wanting more.

Choice of his supporting acts, is of course guided by the manner in which he can work in with them. There is Hazel Dawn, Jr., a nifty young songstress who exhibits potentialities both in voice and delivery. At the moment she needs the polish experience will bring. Turns in two numbers, "Love Is Sweeping the Country" and "I've Got You Under My Skin" for neat returns. Leonard Sues builds the pace with his showmanly trumpet work. Bit with the hand puppet wraps up for him. Berle, of course, joins the takeoff foolery, with the trumpetry involved.

The Mountaineers are standard with Berle, with his return in the proper costume and teeth after they score with their deadpanned deliveries, expected by the aud. Same with the Kanowaze trio and their balancing ,which wind into the Berle entry for the finishing biz.

Sid Gary stops proceedings with his baritonings. "Without a Song" gets them. Follows with "Lucky Old Sun," then the incisive impreshes of Downey, Jessel and Jolson, with Berle back again for the blackface finish.

The Arden-Fletcher production routines are well handled by the line, with Herb George on the song end. Again Berle gets into the act, in a schooldays idea, complete to fantastic getup.

Fireside Inn, N.Y.

G. Wood & Alice Ghostley, Murray Grand, Gladys Johnson; no minimum.

An established downtown eatery, the Fireside Inn is now making a pitch for the after dinner crowd. Current offering is the second in the Inn's new trend to offer entertainment other than just keyboard renditions. Idea is good, since room with a wood-burning fireplace and candles on tables has a nice intime quality. But, as it stands, show now being offered needs some polishing before it can rate as a potent lure.

Both Murray Grand and Gladys Johnson have previously played in uptown spots. Former is a straight 88er, while gal vocals and also plays piano. The team of G. Wood and Alice Ghostley are making their debut. All three are reviewed under New Acts. Room's Saturday night entertainment is confined to Grand.

Beachcomber, Miami

Miami Beach, March 3.

Sophie Tucker with Ted Shapiro, Billy Vine, The Szonys (2), Buster Burnell and June Taylor Girls (7), Frank Linale Orch; beverage minimums, $3, $5.

Now that Sophie Tucker is back, the season—for many cafegoers in this area—really hit its peak. Opening night La Tucker came up with an entirely new act, from the spangled gown and midnight-blue mink cape, to song routining; she held them throughout. Though ailing (she couldn't finish second show and did not work again until Saturday night) her packed house didn't realize anything was wrong. In current stint her long-time accompanist, Ted Shapiro, is worked into the act in a straight man's part, to add to the effect. Tees off with "Home of My Own," in which Shapiro works into asides and repartee, then "You Can't Deep Freeze a Red Hot Mamma." Follows with "How Do the Old Folks Do It," for additional howls. "Mr. Segal, Make It Legal." There are others, all new, and lyricized deftly.

Topper is another newie, "So Much to Do, In So Little Time," a serious piece that starts the palming early and winds into her "Some of These Days" for a resounding reception. She had to beg off.

Billy Vine, though confining himself to a shortened canto, found the tightness of his act a solidly building one that led him, too, into a begoff. The once-rotund guy, plenty slimmed, belts immediately with his idea on "My Gang" as compared in imaginary meeting with Harry Richman, on his. It allows for Vine's top series of impreshes on current crop of funmakers: Joe E. Lewis, Danny Thomas, Jackie Miles, Zero Mostel, as against the Jolsons, et al. Second half of stint had an unbilled stooge from the "men's room" on for the cross-dialogue and the howl-making courtroom bit.

The Szonys, holding over, are the finest dance duo to play this area in many seasons. The balletspins, easily achieved lifts and blending of the various rhythms, make for sock aud impact. In the tee off spot, they still manage to stop the show.

Buster Burnell and the June Taylor line are handsomely presented with imaginative routinings. Frank Linale and his unit are tops on the backgroundings. Lary.

Bimbo's 365 Club, S.F.

San Francisco, March 1.

Harris & Shore, Charlie Aaron, Roger Westley, Jean Devlyn Dancers (6), Derle Knox Orch (6); minimum $1.50.

This is a smartly routined package which does a punchy job of it three times nightly and leaving the patrons satisfied that they received their money's worth.

Show tees off with Devlyn dancers, niftily costumed, in a harem number, for class and flash.

Roger Westley in a standard puppet novelty garners good returns. Gimmick of using platters for music and vocal effects is amusing.

Charlie Aaron emcees neatly and gets over in his song and dance stanza. "Wild Goose," a smart closer.

The hoke ballroomology of Harris and Shore clicks. Team works smoothly in limited floor space and wins guffaws with mugging and satirical routines.

Devlyn dancers round out proceedings in a nifty production number. Derle Knox orch backs capably and provides danceable tunes. Ted.

Le Night Club, Paris

Paris, Feb. 23.

Nina Dova, Odette Cristal, Del Geiner, Maurice Matetelier, Mercez and Orch (5); no minimum.

Located on Rue Andre Houssaye, which contains a row of small niteries, this small 80-seater has the usual plush decor and lighting, serves meals from 9 to 12 p.m., and trots out the floorshow at 12:30. Club gets the pop-price after theatre crowd. Dance music is continuous and ably delivered by Mercez and his ensemble.

Headlining is Nina Dova, a Canadian chanteuse, in a multilingual repertoire. She is pleasing to look at and accompanies herself with a twangy guitar. She warbles in Russian, Portuguese, French, English, Spanish and Arabian. She gives a veritable folk song concert, but with a nitery know-how that pleases. Odette Cristal offers a few schmaltzy love songs.

Show also includes a Gallic Wild West takeoff with a quartet that gets off some good oldies in French and English. Pleasingly heard are "Tavern in the Town," "Santa Fe Trail," "Goldmine in the Sky" and "Mule Train." Del Geiner stands out with a pleasing voice and personality. The patrons like their western music. Ken Tinan, soothing baritone, gets over neatly on "Trees" and "Ol' Man River." Maurice Matetelier closes the show with some hilarious stories told in a good patter style. Mosk.

Flame Room, Mpls.

(HOTEL RADISSON)

Minneapolis, March 4.

Burl Ives, Bob Cross Orch. (8); $2.50 minimum.

For a secnod time in this smart room the entertainment artistry and wizardry and engaging personality of Burl Ives hold one spellbound and fascinated as he strums his guitar and sings his succession of intriguing folk songs and ballads in his incomparable fashion.

At the supper show on Saturday night a completely filled room listened in rapt attention to his recital, manifested its pleasure by enthusiastic applause and made evident at the conclusion it was loath to let him depart. He needed no floor show help to provide a delightful interlude for all those who enjoy this sort of vocalizing at its vert best.

On this occasion Ives devotes himself mainly to the amusing favorites which have been so popular on records and otherwise. In his relaxed, intimate, simple style, emphasizing the humor involved in his numbers, and with a minimum of verbal commentary, all the more effective because of its brevity as well as its wit, he leisurely takes his auditors on a delightful journey into songland.

After a takeoff "On the Rolling Sea," he told in song of "The Foggy, Foggy Dew," lampooned the "Danger of Sailing the Erie Canal," related the ballad of the Englishman who saw the dolls, explained why "it takes a wonderful man to sing a wonderful song," gave "an old man's advice to youngsters," revived the yarn about the "Big Rock Candy Mountain" and described the experience of "the man who goes to a gypsy fortune teller." There even was a fling at a torch song concerning a woman "trying to find love in a glass of wine," and the classics, "Blue Tail Fly" and "Pretty Little Blue-Eyed Susan" had their innings. At one time he had the orchestra join him in a vocal chorus; on other occasions, the audience.

The Bob Cross orchestra, held over, carries off its assignment without a flaw. Rees.

Bop City, N. Y.

The Ravens, Doc Sausage & Mad Lads, Amos Milburn & Chicken Shack Boogie Band; $1.50 minimum; 98c admission.

Current lineup here is a reflection of the Lenten and income tax bugaboos which annually affect Broadway nitery business. While the March 15 headache may not be a factor with the juve bleacher patronage at this spot, it's evident in the reduced minimum ($1.50, as against the usual $2.50) for the table arena, as well as in the lack of name power on the floor.

Following a succession of names like Billy Eckstine, Louis Armstrong, Frankie Laine and Mel Torme, plus stellar attractions of the calibre of George Shearing, Charlie Ventura and Herbie Fields for the jazzophiles, new show holds little allure for either the teenagers or the bop addicts. The Ravens, Negro recording quartet, currently headline with a potpourri of ballads and rhythm tunes. Foursome makes a smart appearance, and works smoothly with two mikes, but its arrangements are too subdued and run-of-the-mill to generate much enthusiasm even in this mecca of uninhibited customer response. Voices, solo and in blend, have un-

College Circuit May Prove New Gravy Train for Top Personalities

Colleges loom as an important outlet for talent. Universities are paying as high as $2,500 for single appearances of top personalities and list of schools using top talent is on the increase.

In fact, field looks so good at this point that Paul Gregory last week resigned from concert dept. of Music Corp. of America to start an agency to handle collegiate bookings. Homeoffice of Gregory's outfit will be in Hollywood. He's expected to arrive on the Coast next week to line up personalities.

Gregory says that he has already pacted Charles Laughton, Elsa Lanchester, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Eva Le Gallienne and others for tours in the fall.

For top names, the collegiate institutions will pay from $1,250 to $2,500. Eddie Cantor, for example, got $2,500 last season at the University of Indiana.

Most schools have sufficiently large auditoriums, but it's still possible to get bookings in spots without adequate auditoriums by pressing the school-gym into service. Sufficient bleacher seats can generally be erected in the gyms to make a big-money date pay off.

Personality presentation in the colleges is generally part of the school's cultural activity program. Cantor, for example discussed his career in the theatre. Others will talk on acting and production techniques with one-person dramatizations from plays or pictures.

Most schools admit outsiders to these performances. According to Gregory, these events are well publicized in the college towns in order to insure a large gate.

The schools lately have been including pro actors in their dramatic presentations paying as high as $1,000 for three performances.

VHCS Launching Drive To Raise $1,250,000 For Hospital Shows

Offices in the Roxy theatre, N. Y., will serve as headquarters for Veterans Hospital Camp Shows' drive for funds to continue entertainment units for hospitalized vets. Offer was made by A. J. Balaban, Roxy executive head, at a meeting of the VHCS board held last week.

Just what method will be used to raise the estimated $1,250,000 is still to be decided. VHCS board came up with several plans which are still in the discussion stage.

Abe Lastfogel, William Morris Agency general manager and VHCS president, is remaining in New York for several weeks in order to set the drive. He came in from the Coast last week to attend the VHCS meeting.

CALLOWAY TROUPE DUE FOR VAUDERS

Cab Calloway is forming a package show to tour vaudfilm houses. Bandleader, who for the past few years has been working with small combos, will use a musical aggregation of about 15 men. No dates yet set.

Accompanying talent is still being set. General Artists Corp. is booking.

New NVA Slate Inducted; Handin, Prez; Rose, Treas.

Newly elected officers and board of governors of National Variety Artists were inducted at a special shindig in their N. Y. clubhouse Sunday (5) night, with Dave Ferguson, exec secretary of the Jewish Theatrical Guild, chairmanning the proceedings. Elections had been held the previous week. Since most officers had been renominated without opposition to succeed themselves, only real contest was between Al Friedman, incumbent, and Lester Rose, for post of treasurer. Rose won out polling 358 votes against Friedman's 154.

Remainder of slate includes Louis Handin, prexy; Jack O'Brien, 1st veepee; Harry Jackson, 2d veepee; Dorothea Masters, secy. Successful board candidates were Herman Crystal, Jock Harris, Ruth Lyons, Harry Frank, Rose Lillian Sollisch, Joe Verdi and Ben Walker.

MCA to Send Out Miami's Clover Club Show as Unit

Music Corp. of America plans to package the current show at the Clover club, Miami, as a cafe unit. Comprising Jan Murray, Rose Marie and the Vagabonds, unit has been one of the most financially successful shows in the resort. Show case in when the spot had already sustained terrific operating losses and pulled it out of the red.

The layout operates on an ad-lib basis with performers horning in on each others' acts.

AGVA Organizers Making Another Try to Pact Ringling, B&B Circus

American Guild of Variety Artists is starting intensive organization of the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey circus. Vic Connors, head of the outdoor division in New York, and AGVA organizer Emil Loew are slated to leave for Ringling's winter quarters in Sarasota, Fla., tomorrow (Thurs.) to line up performers as they report for rehearsal.

AGVA's organization task is more difficult this year, because of the amount of foreign performers slated to work the circus this year. It's reported that there are 96 alien acts on their way to this country to fill Ringling contracts. Connors stated that it's difficult to line these acts up, inasmuch as many are in the U. S. for this specific engagement and do not speak English.

Connors said that it's probable that the union will have to picket the circus when it opens at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., April 5. Picketing is expected to continue in other cities of the tour unless an agreement is reached.

AGVA COAST BENEFITS MAY NET 10G FOR FUND

Hollywood, March 7.

American Guild of Variety Artists figures to earn around $10,000 on the benefit being staged at the Guild theatre, Hollywood, for its welfare and insurance fund. Estimate, based on the first five of the scheduled eight performances, is below hopes. First four performances netted $6,400 but fifth bill Sunday (5), billed as KTL night, was almost a sellout, indicating that the show is building.

The $6 top is hurting the overall draw, although lower-priced ducats were selling.

Theatre was donated by Spyros Skouras, 20th-Fox prexy, and International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees donated the backstage crews. Benefit will be continued March 13 at the Last Frontier hotel, Las Vegas, for three nights.

Durante Seen Hitting 250G On 5 Wk. Chi Cafe Run

Chicago, March 7.

Jimmy Durante continued to shatter all Chi cafe records with a mighty $57,000 for the third week of the Chez Paree engagement. For the five-week date which ends March 14, comedian looks to be a cinch to hit the $250,000 mark, an all-time high for five weeks.

Tony Martin comes in March 15 with the Ritz Bros. following a month later. Dave Halper, manager, is in New York trying to pact Bob Hope for a two-week date.

Lynch Exits Philly Cafe To Open Own Nitery

Jack Lynch, last week, dropped out of the operation of the Latin Casino, Philadelphia, to open his own cafe. He expects to open a new spot designed along the lines of the Blue Angel, N. Y., within a month. Lynch's exit leaves Harry Steinman in charge of the cafe.

Prior to his tieup with the Latin Casino, Lynch operated the Hotel Adelphi Roof and the Walton Roof, both in Philly.

N.Y. Palace Seen Upping Budget for Anni Show

The RKO Palace theatre, N. Y., is currently working on plans to mark the first anniversary of its vaude revival, which teed off May 19 of last year. Plans haven't been completed yet, but it's likely that house will go beyond its normal budget for the anni show.

Opening of the Palace last year sparked a national upbeat in vaudeville. RKO during the year booked eight-act vaude units for 12 week tours throughout the country.

Massman to Head Capitol's Sesqui

Washington, March 7.

Paul M. Massman has been named general manager of Washington's National Sesquicentennial Commission, which means he will be overall directing boss of the D. C. fair and exposition now expected to get into full swing in 1951.

Appointment of Massman, who was associated with the New York World Fair, Texas Centennial, Chicago Railroad Fair, Chicago's Century of Progress, etc., was made over the weekend by Carter T. Barron, executive vice-chairman of the commission. Barron is also Loew's rep here.

The D. C. fair was scheduled to get under way this year, the 150th anniversary of Washington as the national capital. However, through a series of bad breaks, there will be only limited observance in 1950. Instead, the real fair will run during the seasons of 1951-52.

Union Oil Co. Builds Stage Show to Mark 65th Anniversary

Hollywood, March 7.

Union Oil Co. here has made a public relations deal with the William Morris office to package a show which the company will book in 35 cities to celebrate its 65th anniversary. Cities are all in the west, in California, Arizona, Oregon, Nevada and Montana.

Show will play the Wilshire Ebell theatre here late this month for three days. Featured in the Morris-packaged stage offering are the Minevitch Harmonica Rascals, Gil Maison, Shaw and Lee, the Songbrokers, the Rudells, the Cover Girls, the Lucky Girls, Stuart Morgan Dancers and a 40-minute color film. Jack Aronson batons the orch.

Phillips Vice Deutsch In Glaser's Coast Branch

Hollywood, March 7.

Milt Deutsch is ankling post as western manager of Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp., April 15 to become general manager for the new Western Village on the Last Frontier grounds, Las Vegas.

Village will comprise playground, restaurant, entertainment room and gaming. Bob Phillips, who joined Glaser Agency three years ago in the Chicago branch, replaces Deutsch. Phillips checks in here March 15.

Hilton Chain Booker Nixes Doubling Of Acts on Video Programs

Chicago, March 7.

Merriel Abbott, entertainment director for Hilton Hotels and one of the largest talent buyers, ruled today that talent booked into Hilton spots cannot double on television. Giving as reason the large salary acts get, Miss Abbott said, "We are trying to get people into our entertainment rooms. Why offer them the same entertainment at home, especially when acts appear at disadvantage?" Majority of acts which have appeared at the Palmer House have doubled. However, several in guest appearances have been hampered by material and presentation.

Greatest effect will be in New York, rather than in Chicago and on the Coast, as Hilton Corp. owns the Waldorf-Astoria and the Plaza, which use only top names. Some talent may decide not to go into Hilton hotels if such restrictions continue. This seems somewhat unlikely, though, as close to $6,000,000 of talent is booked annually by Miss Abbott, with playing time from three to six months.

As for those who have regular tele shows, such as Sid Caesar and others, they have played the rooms in video off season. Miss Abbott said that "Problem of people who have regular shows will be taken care of when it arises. Quick check of other hotels finds no such ruling contemplated. But both Chi vaude houses, Oriental and Chicago, have clearance clauses in contracts as to tele appearances.

Jane Pickens Setting New Production Act

Jane Pickens will preem a new act similar to the Kay Thompson layout when she opens at the Wedgwood room of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., May 11. She'll be backed by a male sextet. Moe Gale, Miss Pickens' personal manager, will do the production. Bert Shevelove, who directed the legit musical "Small Wonder" will stage it.

Act will precede its Wedgwood room stand with engagements at the Providence Biltmore hotel, April 15, and the Copley Plaza hotel, Boston, April 26.

Hub's Bradford Hotel To Set Name Acts In Circus Room

Boston will get another major nitery next month with the opening of the Circus Room in the Bradford Hotel. Spot will open April 6 with a show headed by Johnny Howard. Lenny Kent will follow April 20 or 27. Negotiations are on for Jack E. Leonard and Artie Dann.

It's expected that Ralph Snyder, Bradford's operator, will move the nitery activities to the hotel's roof, which has a considerably larger seating capacity.

Bradford's opening will provide major competition to the Hub's Latin Quarter, which is now the major cafe in Boston. The Oval Room of the Copley Plaza isn't considered in the same field since the Copley draws a different type of clientele.

LAINES' NIFTY 10G ON % DEAL AT CLICK, PHILLY

Frankie Laine raked in a reported $10,000 for his engagement at the Click club, Philadelphia, last week. Spot grossed a little over $20,000 with Laine getting 50% for his end.

Singer was in on an old commitment calling for a $5,000 guarantee against half the receipts.

Laine follows with three one-nighters in Canada, starting tomorrow (Thurs.). Dates in Guelph, Toronto and Montreal call for a $3,000 guarantee against 50%. He follows at the Copley Plaza hotel, Boston, week of March 15.

Roller Derby, Watercade Pacted for Arena Tours

Arena Managers Assn. has set the Roller Derby for a tour of the arenas it controls. Derby, which has been built into big-business status, via video, will start at the Boston Arena, March 22 and will go on to the large-seaters in New Haven, Providence, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Washington and Cincinnati.

AMA has also set the Johnny Weismuller Watercade for a tour starting April 8 in Cincy. Other stands will include Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Chicago, Toledo and Providence. Tour will last until May 30.

'College Inn Story' Gets Extended Run

Chicago, March 7.

College Inn of Sherman hotel here, which was to shutter for revamped format on March 19, will not close before April 2 or 19.

Holdover of the "College Inn Story" is due to delayed plans in changing spot to the Ernie Byfield Room, in honor of the late host of the inn. It will become a steak house, sans show.

Talan Into MCA

Jack Talan joined the cafe dept. of Music Corp. of America last week. Talan was former personal manager of Leo De Lyon.

Prior to that Talan was with the Walter Batchelor office.

Spanish Vaude Date Pays Off for Romero With $7,417 Take

Cesar Romero took out $7,417 as his share for a week's date at Teatro Puerto Rico, Bronx, N. Y. House grossed $19,834 during his run and Romero's terms were $3,000 guarantee against percentages.

Romero's take was upped considerably on the last day of his stand when the Latin picture star Luis Sandrini made an appearance at several shows.

Carlos Montalban, house operator, has set Argentine picture players Letitia Palama and Antonio Badu for week starting Thursday (9).

Hildy Skips Plaza, N.Y.; Saucier Exits Waldorf

For the first time in many years, Hildegarde will not keep her usual spring date at the Persian Room of the Hotel Plaza, N. Y. Evelyn Knight is set for the chantoosey's spot starting April 6. Current show comprising Lisa Kirk, Nancy Donovan and Eric Victor holds over until then. It's probable that Hildegarde will play the hotel after the room is redecorated in the summer.

Meanwhile, Joseph P. Binns, executive veepee and general manager of the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., which the Hilton chain now operates along with the Plaza and other hostelries, announced yesterday (Tues.) that Ted Saucier, publicity director for the past 21 years at the Waldorf, has resigned to open his own office. He will retain the Waldorf on a consultant fee basis.

Chi Bistro Wants Morgan To Resume Upon Recovery

Chicago, March 7.

Al Morgan, singer-pianist who had been playing off a delayed date at Helsings here, cancelled out after the opening show and planed to Cincinnati where he entered a hospital for treatment for a nervous breakdown. Morgan, who also has a teevee stanza on DuMont Monday nights cancelled out of last week's show (27) with Art Lund subbing for him.

Helsing management stated they will expect Morgan to fulfill the nitery date upon recovery, claiming that if he is well enough to do his tele show and pass up the nitery chore, they'll file breach of contract proceedings against him with Chi local of the AFM.

The Troupers will hold their second annual benefit at the Latin Quarter, N. Y., May 5.

Bop City, N.Y.

deniable quality, but find it difficult to compete with the stereotyped scoring.

Doc Sausage and his Mad Lads strive mightily to live up to their billing, and succeed to a degree with the less exacting among the sparse opening night crowd. Drums (Sausage), piano, bass, guitar and sax underscore clowning rather than straight jump stuff, with too many of the gags overworked and familiar. In addition, one patter vocal is much too blue for the average Bop citizen. As musicians, the lads display enough ability in rare moments to indicate that they might be able to produce some worthwhile jazz, if they weren't so intent on banging over their frenetic comedy efforts.

Amos Milburn and his provocatively-titled Chicken Shack Boogie Band alternate eight-beat, blues and ballads in a commendable interpretation of each. Instrumental setup is three saxes (tenor, alto and baritone) and four rhythm, with Milburn and focal attraction on piano and numerous vocals. Leader would do better to minimize the singing and concentrate more on the ivories, which he handles well, particularly in regard to a strong left hand on boogie.

With the season, the lack of name strength, and the present Broadway brownout all militating against it, the chance for even fair business for this normally successful spot is dubious until Artie Shaw comes in for a repeat date in several weeks.

Empire Room, Chi
(PALMER HOUSE)

Chicago, March 2.

Victor Borge, Gracie Barrie, Alan & Blanche Lund, Merriel Abbott Dancers (8), Eddie O'Neal Orch (12); minimum $2.50, cover $1.

Any of the acts in the new bill at the Empire Room could rate top billing on any show. They combine with Victor Borge into one of the best all-round shows seen here in a long time.

Borge is at his best with his standard routines, his excellent piano playing, and his use of the paradox, wry irony, and non-sequitur. His dry type of humor, designed for chuckles rather than guffaws, nevertheless has the audience yocking in a short time. Borge uses his bit about how the old masters composed, cutting up bits of sheet music and combining them, for maximum results. His completed work, a combination of "The Blue Danube" and Schubert's "Serenade," is beautiful, a fact that adds to the audience's appreciation. The hardy phonetical punctuation bit goes over heftily, as does his use of a hokum radio, on which the announcer cannot spell "Benrus" in a commercial but man ges to spell Shostakovitch easily. Encore, a concert rendition of "Rhapsody in Blue," is brilliant.

Gracie Barrie delivers her parodies with a high, clear voice and a pleasing manner. Her "Sunday Kind of Love," with the complaint about the husband who does nothing but eat, sleep and read on Sunday, hits home hard. Hillbilly song, "Pappy Gave His Shotgun Away," is strong, and a plea to Margaret Truman to please let Miss Barrie be her understudy is a solid closer.

The Lunds are a graceful dance team, and flashes of imagination and humor enhance their work greatly. They do two excellent ballroom numbers to "Slowly" and "Serenade For Strings." Their "Country Style," a combination of square dance steps, is lively and imaginative. Closer, a Gay '90s satire, is humorously choreographed and excellently performed.

Merriel Abbott dancers are fast and colorful in a "Miss Liberty" opener, and appropriately suggestive in a production number called, "Do Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," which features the promenading and spins of Marilyn Marsh.

Eddie O'Neal orch provides fine musical backing and does a superb job with the difficult symphonic arrangement accompanying Borge's "Rhapsody in Blue." Dance sets keep floor filled. Chan.

Carousel, Pitt

Pittsburgh, March 1.

Lorraine Rognan, Lee Davis, Enrico & Novello, Herman Middleman orch; minimums $2.50, $3.

Long a clever dancing comedienne as half of a team, Lorraine Rognan has branched out as a No. 1 yock-getter on her own with this little package show which gal has put together. It packs a lot of entertainment and should be a cinch in any and all of the better spots.

In first place, there are a couple of good ideas behind the unit and they pay off in spades for Miss Rognan. That in itself is unusual for a nitery show. She's in and out of it at scattered intervals to establish her personality before coming on for the sock.

Lee Davis, a personable young fellow with some nice material he knows how to sell pleasantly, tees things off on his own, with Miss Lorraine interrupting him three or four times during the routine to run off some sure-fire bits, including the dog wrapped around her neck to look like a fur piece. After Davis has finally bowed off to a strong hand, he introduces dance team of Enrico and Novello, and they turn in three flashy numbers in top ballroom style. For an encore, instead of Enrico with Novello, however, it's Miss Rognan, with a blonde wig like Enrico and with the same gown, and while audience may suspect the switch, it isn't sure for a while because Novello and the comic femme do it straight for a brief period before they crash into the knockabout stuff Miss Rognan has long been identified with. Minute the customers catch on, the laughs pile up and the surprise panics them.

Gal pulls off her wig for the bow, and then Davis comes back on and Miss Rognan consumes another solid five minutes or more with some funny singing, shadow-boxing and other eccentric by-play that asserts itself heavily. Everything she does has a fine comic flourish, and crowd can't get enough of her. For a finish, Enrico and Novello return and the three of them do the "Clarinet Polka," mostly straight but with Miss Rognan getting in enough of her individual licks to make this a high spot, too.

Rognan unit looks like real pay dirt. Cohen.

Latin Quarter, Boston

Boston, March 4.

Jackie Miles, Dior Dancers (3), Jayne Manners, Pat Terry, Arden-Fletcher Line (8), Dave Lester Orch (9), Don Rico Quartet; minimum $3.

The "noble experiment" which teed-off solidly with Max Liebman's original revue "Cross Country" several months ago, but slipped with each new production, has finally been shelved by the L. Q. operators with the bistro back to standard nitery format. Opening night biz was encouraging with room packed for supper show, a rarity in past few weeks. Current policy will apparently be continued for rest of season.

Bringing in Jackie Miles for the preem was smart move for the guy has a solid following in these parts, and supper show ringsiders kept him on so long on opening night he had to beg off to avoid running into curfew complications. Zany line of chatter and nonchalant delivery drew hefty guffaws with his bit about moviegoer being conned into guarding neighbor's seat, and the familiar racetrack skit top laugh-getters.

Rest of lineup includes the Dior Dancers, two husky males who toss diminutive femme partner around in a fast adagio routine, and Jayne Manners, a stately torch singer, whose indigo material was kept under wraps and consequently failed to impress. The Arden-Fletcher Lovelies, aided by okay baritoning of Pat Terry go through the usual production routines in nifty costumes with plenty of eye-appeal.

As usual, Dave Lester's bandsmen provide solid backgrounding for turns and Don Rico's quartet fill in the lulls. Biz holding up nicely. Elie.

Mayfair Room, Chi
(BLACKSTONE HOTEL)

Chicago, March 3.

Dunninger, Dick LaSalle Orch (10); minimum $3.50, cover $1.

While this form of entertainment may seem off the beaten path for this chichi room, it still goes over solid with upper set patrons. It's amusing to see the seatholders almost jumping out of their chairs, eager to have questions answered.

Dunninger makes no attempt to build to the mystification of his act by elaborate props or lights, but works in the open without plants.

Mentalist does a warm-up with two male payees in which he does some card selections. During act he jokingly badgers the audience, asking them to spot any possible gimmicks. While he works with slips and envelopes, none are collected until the finish, when he grabs about 30 or 40 slips in a box and answers the questioneer. There's no past, future or fortune telling, but straight reports as to names, addresses and such. However, showmanship is top level and usually wrapped around a gag. High spot of the 55-minute performance is the working, through a young gal, who gets her vibrations through him, and who repeats the address of one of the audience, first touching his forehead and then moving about 15 feet away.

For final stint Dunninger selects four people who pick a four-digit number, the total of which he writes on a slate before the four agree that this is the number series they had, and the total is checked by three or four other payees. Dick La Salle's orch, which leaves the stand during the act, returns to jam the dance floor with not only the usual hit parade tunes, but has unusual Latin rhythms, which has the rhumba devotees working overtime. Zabe.

Ciro's, London

London, March 1.

Raymond Arambol & Bentyber, Bobby Damase, Valy Vernet, Don Carlos & His Rhumba Band, Frank King & his orch; no cover.

The lush surroundings of Ciro's demands something better in the way of attraction than the Bentyber Ballet. This Parisian outfit lacks the charm and talent to be a lure at this ritzy nitery and is not in a class to be a name draw either on the strength of performance or by word of mouth. This nitery needs a top ranking act with strong name power to lift it from the present lean position and to attract customers.

The dancers of the Bentyber Ballet have neither talent nor vivacity and their charm is mainly restricted to the phosphorescent costumes which come out strikingly in subdued lighting. Solo spots come off nicely in the oldtime routines of Raymond Arambol & Bentyber, and Valy Vernet is a comedienne of ability. Bobby Damase emcees in an easy manner.

This engagement marks the London debut of the Bentyber Ballet and proves conclusively that second rate continental acts are not good enough as top attractions for the London night spots. The $800 weekly which this show costs could be far better expended on a solo artists with strong drawing power. Myro.

Helsing's, Chi

Chicago, March 1.

Al Morgan returns to the spot where he got his first break and is accorded a solid welcome. The singer-pianist completely dominates an otherwise fair show, and when he is through has audience clamoring for more.

Morgan starts off with a brace of old-timers, "Sunshine Follows You," "All By Myself," and "Rose of Washington Square." His voice, sharper than it is on recordings, and his flaying hands keep the audience at complete attention. He then swings into some of his current hits, going through "Sorry," "You're the Only One I Care For," etc. He closes with "Jealous Heart" to hefty applause.

Margo Good is an effective vocalist on the swingier type of tune, but not too forte on ballads. On "Too Soon to Know," she attempts phrasings that are a bit too subtle and difficult for her. She would do well to sing her ballads straight. But she is rhythmic and lusty on "September in the Rain" and "I Can't Believe That You're in Love With Me."

Emcee Marvin Boone chatters, dances and sings. However, his dancing is best. Does a few fast tap routines, some Bill Robinson steps, and a softshoe number.

Billy Chandler orch backs well, especially on rhythms for Miss Good and Morgan. Don Bradfield is entertaining as between-shows pianist-singer. Chan.

Crystal Terrace, St. Loo

St. Louis, March 1.

Harry Fende., Paul Haakon & Stephanie Antle, Anne Gallina, Joy Conley, Michaline Stinson, Harry Weber, Keith Carver, Art Gibbs, John Peters, Joe Polinski; Robert Moonan Orch (13); cover, $1-$1.50.

Harry Fender, who deserted the stage for almost two decades to be a local cop and who only recently returned to show biz, is headlining the current revue, tagged "Just For Fun," at this swank spot. Except for Fender, Paul Haakon and Stephanie Antle, the cast is composed entirely of Dream Show Salutes Eddie Davis As Leon & Eddie's Comes of Age—21 Yrs.

By JOE COHEN

Eddie Davis, longest holdover in the history of N. Y. niteries with a record of 21 years at the same stand, proved he's still one of the focal points in Gotham's cafe biz. Operator of this 52d street cafe was welcomed back Sunday (5) after an auto accident that incapacitated him for several months at a party at that nitery at which a Broadway-Hollywood who's who attended.

Gatherings constituted one of the most extraordinary evenings in the business with the room at capacity. An equal number couldn't get by the velvet rope.

A dream bill of entertainment appeared, including Robert Young, Charles Winninger, Pat O'Brien, George Raft, Jack La Rue, Phil Foster, Slate Bros., Roger Price, Mel Torme, Nancy Donovan, Al Schacht, Jack Waldron, George DeWitt, Archie Robbins, Fran Warren, Peter Donald, Tony Canzoneri and others who mounted the rostrum to pay their respects to Davis.

Joey Adams, who gained his greatest impetus in showbusiness with a protracted stand at this spot, emceed the shindig.

There was only one disappointment. Bob Hope, who was to have been the guest-of-honor along with Davis, had to stay out on medico's orders. The strain of doing six shows at the Paramount kayoed any extra-curricular activity.

Co-Bonifaces' Turnout

There was also a turnout of other bonifaces including Toots Shor, Ray Dillman (El Morocco), Harry Steinman (Latin Casino, Philadelphia), Robert K. Christenberry, president of the Hotel Astor, N. Y.; Jack Lynch, who last week severed his ties with Philly's Latin Casino; Billy Reed (Little Club) who demonstrated that he's still a competent soft-shoe terper; Abe Attell, the former pug who also operates a Broadway eatery, and Johnny Broderick, who also runs a club—but of a political nature.

Davis, together with Leon Enken started this club across the street at 18 W. 52 street before moving to the current site. Davis entertained, while Enken bonifaced and together this pair built up a business that grossed nearly $1,000,000 annually. This combo clicked from the start. During the Prohibition era, when Davis entertained with piano accompaniment only, the spot was jammed so deep that no other type of entertainment could be staged. Meanwhile the pair became probably the most proficient gladhanders in the business and the spot became a well-to-do tourist trap. Leon and Eddie split several years ago. Leon was with Jack Goldman at the Clover Club, Miami, and Davis is doing a single in the operation of the spot with assistance by manager John Gruber and maitre d'hotel Lou Katz.

Sunday's turnout was climaxed by Davis' appearance at 4:30 a.m. After an ovation, he sang a parody on "Thanks for the Memory" and afterwards the band played "Auld Lang Syne." The tumult that followed was deafening.

The affair was engineered by columnists Earl Wilson and Lee Mortimer, of the N. Y. Post and Mirror respectively, and restaurateur Toots Shor who chairman of the entertainment committee.

Night Club Reviews

young and talented natives, and the revue, also written by a localite, is produced by Harold Koplar, son of the owner of this nitery.

Ditties and dances of the nostalgic Gay 20s are featured throughout the revue, with the cast socking over its stuff, individually and collectively. Among the highlights are Fender's interp of "Just a Bowl of Cherries" and "Don't Bring Lulu," a torrid Apache dance, and later some nifty ballroomology by Haakon and Miss Antle, a swell tap routine by one of the gals and a lad and, for good measure, Robert Moonan on the ivories scoring heavily with a medley of Gershwin tunes. Harry Weber, a personable baritone, is another standout with his solo on "When I'm Looking At You."

The best of almost a score of old-time ditties is "All Alone," with Joy Conley gal, a looker, and Keith Garver on opposite side of the small stage, warbling.

The sophisticated mob that patronizes this place rewards Haakon and Miss Antle with a well merited mitt for their swell interp of the Black Bottom and Charleston dances in costumes of the era when these dances were tops. One traveling salesman skit, bordering pretty close to the blue, is injected in the fast tempo revue.

Towards the windup of the 90-minute session Fender leads the diners in audience songfest for "I'm Looking For a Four-Leaf Clover," "Margie," "Bye-Bye Blackbird," "Always," "Ain't She Sweet" and "My Blue Heaven." The old reliable, "St. Louis Blues," is not overlooked and its rendition by the entire cast cops heavy palm-pounding.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, N.Y., March 7.

Amazing Mr. Ballantine, back from Europe, shot in for a limited vacation with his old pals at the Variety Clubs hospital, and received and all-clear on his check-up.

Among those flashing a good clinic that gives them all privileges are Helen Pelechowicz, John Rosenberg, Joe (U.A.) Phillips, Ted Hooper and Robert Pasquale.

Mose LaFountain, owner of Durgan's nitery passing out cigars, his son Jimmy LaFountain knocked off first prizes in the Midget Speed Ice Skating Races.

Mark Wilson suffered a cardiac attack which beds him for an indefinite period.

Liselotte Jackel, former circus performer who is wintering here in the downtown colony, was tendered a birthday party.

Tuffy LaTour, who manages Tuffy's Tavern in the downtown colony, aided by Leo Martin won the two-man Bobsled Adirondack Open Championship at Lake Placid, Tuffy also holds records in the world's Olympic bobsled championship.

Adrian Coldiron, former owner of Swiss-Chalet nitery, dropped in to chat with George (Elephants) Powers. After mitting the gang he planed to Miami for balance of winter.

Sam LaBalbo, back from a much enjoyed 10-day furlough in Oneida, N. Y.

Helen Grupp (Republic Pictures), Lee Klimick (Loews), and Forrest "Slim" Glenn of the old Charlie Ahearn troupe, all graduated from here with top honors. They are now connected with the hospital staff, holding responsible positions.

Write to those who are ill.

New Acts

CONDOS & BRANDOW
Dancing
10 Mins.
Paramount, N. Y.

Act of Steve Condos and Jerry Brandow is a merger of the remnants of what were two doubles. Steve Condos was formerly teamed with his brother Nick, now personal manager and husband of Martha Raye, while Brandow did a hoofing act with his sister Jane. Condos, sometime ago, also doubled with comic Buddy Lester.

Current act looms as strong a tap duo as there is. Both these chaps keep the interest at peak-points with dissimilar styles. Brandow works vigorously while Condos has an easier gait, but together they work into a good blend. They operate singly and in unison, with Brandow doing a miniature stair routine that gets the customers.

Both display further versatility by doing instrumental spots. Both play trumpet and accompany each other on the ivories. Duo are ready for any vaude and cafe situation, and would show up nicely on vaudeo. Jose.

LOUISE TERRY Magic 12 Mins.; One
Colonial, Albany

The rareness of femme magicians gives act a novelty appeal, and the selection of two "cooperators" from the audience assure it laughs. But professional polish is still to be developed. Miss Terry is a tall, attractive, well-dressed Philadelphian with a fair sense of comedy and an adequate equipment of comic props. She would sell them better if she learned to talk up and to project sharper. Eight rows from back of house, her slinky delivery is rather hard to catch. Better adjustment of mike might help.

Early portion, when she comes off the stage to pick a pair of men, is slow and uncertain. After Miss Terry gets them up in the spotlight, turn gains tempo. First stunt, in which a man is left "holding the bag," produces guffaws, although at his expense. Second, where an egg is apparently cracked in the other man's breast pocket and a quarter (his) is switched from a red handkerchief to the pocket, is more legitimately funny and baffling.

Miss Terry's best straight trick—she does several knots and pass-throughs—is cutting and reassembling a rope, while the two customers hold it. Finale lets down. Rerouting and accelerating would bring an improvement. Miss Terry took several bows in second slot. Jaco.

THE FLASHBACKS (2)
Dance
10 Mins.
The Bowery, Detroit

This boy and girl duo—Ethel Howe and Bob St. Charles—combine well in tap routines that have two unusual twists — continuity and quick, smooth costume changes onstage. Combo got big hand from very difficult audience on night caught (2).

For opener, pair do a hick-deadpan number that gets attention fast and holds it. They wind up near table at back of stage where they change into costumes of the Cay '90s era. Tricky, precision movements — well executed — feature this dance.

Another change and the two emerge as circa 1920 characters. This is their best number and one in which Miss Howe's superior dancing becomes most noticeable. She's a veteran with plenty of experience, while her partner is her pupil in his first turn on the major league circuit. He works smoothly, however, and has plenty of natural poise.

Act would be helped if the 1920 number could some last, with the cake walk, the present closing number, moving into third spot. Costume-change difficulties, however, are a stumbling block to switch.

As supporting act, pair should do well in any club. Fred.

MELLO-LARKS (4)
Songs
8 Mins.; Two
Palace, N. Y.

The Mello-Larks make a good initial impression with their youthful and clean-cut mien. Three boys and attractive girl, however, need an overhauling of their vocal arrangements. Harmonics are dull.

It isn't until the quartet goes into some dance interpolations, such as their square-dance number, that there's any vitality. Their Irish jig punctuation to a Gaelic tune also provides audience interest. Jose.

STANLEY RAWLS
Mimic
10 Mins.
Alhambra, N. Y.

Stanley Rawls is a youthful Negro mimic who obviously has some talent. Unfortunately he doesn't use much showmanship in getting it across. His intro, which leads him into impersonations of sundry Hollywood characters, is too stiff and formal—as though he were doing a school recitation. Use of a couple gags or a song would make for a breezier leadoff.

Rawls tackles Boyer, Hepburn, Colman, Lionel Barrymore with so-so results, but does about the best with Edward G. Robinson. His aping of Gabriel Heatter's news reporting represents a high point. Carbon of "Inner Sanctum" and Peter Lorre is dragged out too long for genuine effectiveness. Dropping some of the poorer mimeing along with an improved intro would put more punch into this turn. Gilb.

BASEL LANDIA
Songs
9 Mins.; One
Colonial, Albany

Soprano possesses fine voice. If she could match it with a warmer stage presence, the turn would hold greater punch for vaudeville.

Small and dark, Miss Landia offers a quarter of numbers one an encore, in fourth spot at final show when caught. She opened with "Granada," skillfully projected. "The Man I Love" followed; her interpretation had more of the legitimate singing and less of the dramatic style than many chirpers employ. A couple of others also clicked big.

She is formally dressed in black; rare smile is winning. Curtain quip about her by well-mannered emcee Myles Bell was not in the best taste. Jaco.

G. WOOD and ALICE GHOSTLEY
Songs
30 Mins.
Fireside Inn, N. Y.

G. Wood, who has written the words and music for a number of off-Broadway shows, is making his nitery bow with vocalist Alice Ghostley, also from the off-Broadway ranks. Team, with Wood at the keyboard, hinges most of the act on material turned out by him.

Initial fault of the material now being offered is that it's too loud for this small room, besides not being too strong in the entertainment division. Miss Ghostley does a personable job with the vocals, giving capable handling to those in the comedy vein. Except for a rendition of "Careless Love," duo stays away from tunes in the romantic idiom.

JUNE & MARTIN BARRETT
Dancing
7 Mins.; Three
Palace, N. Y.

June and Martin Barrett are a youthful and well-groomed tap turn with a freshness in style and a good assortment of cleat work. The duo's routines are well-designed so that there are some midterm outbreaks of applause, with the femme's spins providing the spark that sets off the pallycakes.

The pair show dance ability that can be utilized in most vauders and cafes. They still must acquire the showmanship of the more veteran turns and can edit their turn for sharper projection. Jose.

JAMES QUINTET
Songs-Instrumental
10 Mins.
Alhambra, N. Y.

This Negro harmony group shows possibilities, but at present it lacks sufficient styling and polish. Unit opens rather weakly with "Sunny Side of the Street," crooned by four lads who are accomped by their remaining mate on string bass.

Quintet shifts to another pop, with warbling this time backed by two guitars, then handles a blues number for fair results. Best tune in the group's stint is "I'm Just a Fool," which they wisely use as a closer. Combo needs more experience before it's ready for the more lucrative vaude and nitery dates. Gilb.

CHRIS SCOTT
Songs
15 Mins.
Embassy Club, Philly

Former Gene Williams' vocalist is making her nitery debut as a single and is a very likely vocal prospect, as well as a possible recording bet. Singer handles a ballad or show tune conventionally enough to win the interest of the wining-and-dining crowd at Embassy, and employs enough modern intonation to catch attention of those who know the score.

Tall brunet with okay appearance and nicely garbed, singer's forte is her voice. She is obviously unused to competing with the soup and lacks necessary sales and floor mannerisms. Her handling of the mike, however, shows band training and her choice of numbers and delivery are fine.

Gal opens with "Who Cares" and follows with "Skylark." For novelty she offers "Lost in His Arms," almost forgotten lilt from "Annie Get Your Gun." Encores are "Sometimes I'm Happy" and "Over the Rainbow," this last very well done. Once customers realized the oldies were being dressed in bright new raiment, singer won them. Miss Scott's husband, Jimmy Lyons, rates credit for her smart selections and style of presentation. Gagh.

THE APPLETONS (3)
Dancing
5 Mins.; Full, Special
Palace, N. Y.

The Appletons are experienced Apache dancers with a good assortment of mayhem and a commercial set of tricks that make them eligible for all vaude and cafe situations where they have sufficient space.

Their Apache terps are standard with a special set and various props providing a Parisian atmosphere. There's some assault and counter-assault, with further interest provided by battle between two sexy-looking femmes for the attention of the male. There's a solid closer with a bit of knife-throwing and some fast acro work. Jose.

DANNY SHAW
Comedy
7 Mins.; Two
Palace, N. Y.

Danny Shaw is a hard-working comic, but unfortunately has faulty routining and bad material. He attempts a display of prattfalls which should draw results but his preceding gab deadens the effect.

At this Palace showing date, he has a difficult time in getting to the pewholders and only before his exit, when he gives an impression of a bus rider, does he get any appreciable results. His ability at taking falls can be made to pay off, but he needs a wholesale rewrite to give purpose to his act. Jose.

AMANDA THIGPEN
Songs
12 Mins.
St. Michel, Montreal

Amanda Thigpen, with plenty of physical allure, scores in the current St. Michel layout with her bop offerings that range from the platter hit, "Rag Mop," to a melodious vocal around "September Song." Her approach to the jump arrangement is at times too strident but chirping is a click with payees when she torches.

Demure manner with intros is okay but act, though well-groomed, could stand better routining. Otherwise fine for cafes or vaude. Newt.

GLADYS JOHNSON
Songs—Piano
30 Mins.
Fireside Inn, N. Y.

Gladys Johnson, shapely Negro gal, does a routine job with her blues vocaling and pianistics. Miss Johnson could use a little more stylization in both departments. When caught, gal's offering impressed as being void of any feeling.

Among numbers rendered are "I'm Going Home to Joe," "I Want A Big Fat Poppa" and "Hong Kong Blues."

MURRAY GRAND Pianist
30 Mins.
Fireside Inn, N. Y.

Murray Grand displays a neat repertoire of show tunes, standards and pops that's strictly grooved for small rooms using ivory-ticklers to enhance the decor.

His fingering of the keys is authorative and relaxed, with tunes played creating a pleasant effect especially during the dinner hours. The 88-er also offers some interesting arrangements.

Juanita Hall's Repeat

Shelburne Lounge, N. Y., has set Juanita Hall for a repeat engagement starting April 13. She'll double out of "South Pacific." Kaye Ballard has been booked on the same bill.

Other bookings at that spot include Monica Boyar, April 13, and the Golden Gate Quartet May 8.

Steve Yates has resigned General Artists Corp. to join Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. where he'll work in the theatre dept. headed by his father, Charlie Yates.

Paramount, N. Y.

Bob Hope, Jane Russell, Condos & Brandow, Les Brown Orch (18); "Captain China" (Par), reviewed in VARIETY Nov. 2, '49.

The Bob Hope session at the Paramount is expected to be a two-week exercise in testing the house capacity. He is putting on a great show in the process. Personal appearances are old stories to Hope. For years the comedian has been letting the customers gander him in Army camps, ballparks, etc., wherever there was a quorum present. And it's been paying off.

The Paramount hasn't seen business such as this in years. And, what's more, the flow of business is something a showman dreams about. It's almost a perfect setup. There are no lockouts, but a constant stream of traffic in and out of the house. The breaks after both the picture and the stageshow are terrific.

As far as billings are concerned, a prospective customer has to look intensively at the marquee to learn that "Captain China" is also available. Hope and Jane Russell get equal billing on the marquee, and the rest of the stagebill comprises the Les Brown orch and Condos and Brandow. The show is costing the house $50,000, plus overages. Hope gets all that coin and pays off the others.

Hope's personal gets the maximum measure of the house. There's a relaxed mien within his rapid-fire delivery. The highpoint of his turn is a nostalgic reminiscence of his lean days of the theatre. It's done with charm and good humor, with the musical backing of "Thanks For the Memory," and creates a mood that's somewhat different than the rest of his act. There are, of course, the inevitable references to his recent accident and Bing Crosby. He adds up to grade A entertainment.

Miss Russell, in a low-cut gown, gives out with "Great Day" and "Lady Is a Tramp," and combines with Hope in a rendition of "I Wanna Go Home." She provides visual and vocal interest.

The Les Brown crew, with an instrumentation of eight brass, five reeds and four rhythm, gets little time to show its wares. The major effort is a solo by saxist Butch Stone, who gets a healthy palm for vocal delivery of "A Good Man Is Hard to Find." Condos and Brandow are reviewed under New Acts. Jose.

Olympia, Miami

Miami, March 4.

Bert Wheeler, Hal LeRoy, Karen Tedder, Jimmy Troy, Armand Guerre Seals, Les Rhode House Orch; "Montana" (WB).

Bill on tap is refreshing and plays well.

Bert Wheeler is back, with the inevitable sandwich, the amiable emceeing and the ingratiating patter standard with him. Highlights of his stint are the session with Hal LeRoy straighting, and the Karen Tedder bit. Per usual, his timing is expert.

LeRoy is another standard here, and sparks the heavy palming via his hoofery and takeoffs on late Bill Robinson, Ray Bolger and Gene Kelly to wrap up okay.

Miss Tedder looks better here than in cafe spot she was in last week. The pops come over with more zing and the topping hillbilly version of "Temptation" sets the applause meter rocketing.

Teeoff spot sets a fast pace via comedy trapeze work of Jimmy Troy. Stunts garner gasps and laughs throughout. Armand Guerre and his seals bounce the usual balls, make harmonica music and indulge in other amusing tricks. Les Rohde and house orch are okay on the backgroundings. Lary.

Alhambra, N. Y.

Andy Kirk Orch (12), Rose Murphy, Helene & Howard, Russ, Mack & Owen, Carl & Harriet, Freddy & Flo, Willie Bryant, Stanley Rawls, James Quintet; "Bagdad" (U).

RKO Alhambra's new vaude policy is finding it tough going this week, what with the strong competition offered by Louis Prima around the corner at the Apollo. At early show caught Friday night (3) house was less than half filled despite a lower admission scale. Layout, however, is an entertaining one principally due to the snappy work of Rose Murphy and Helene & Howard.

Miss Murphy, in next-to-closing spot, chee-chees her way through a batch of her familiar numbers to win strong returns. Pianist-songstress embellishes such faves as "Cecilia," "Sweet Georgia Brown" and "Dark Eyes" with trills and squeaky chirps, perennially her stock in trade.

With three rhythm, four brass and five reed, Andy Kirk's combo gets the session off to a brisk start to bring on emcee Willie Bryant. An Apollo alumnus, now a disk jockey, he ribs his alma mater without mentioning it by name, discusses his sponsors and indulges in general banter for fair results. Carl and Harriet, boy and girl terp team, follow with some so-so hoofing.

Ofay turn of Russ, Mack and Owen registers handily with slapstick acro stuff. Freddy and Flo hold down the comedy slot with standard songs and patter that are still effective despite their age. In the finale groove are Helene and Howard, only other white act on the bill. Couple win a solid reception for their satirical terp routines and especially click in bow-off jitterbug sequence. Overlong show might well end here instead of bringing back Bryant, and Freddy and Flo, for some banal situation humor. Kirk's outfit backs the program neatly.

James Quintet, vocal and instrumental group, and mimic Stanley Rawls are reviewed under New Acts. Gilb.

Fox, St. Louis

St. Louis, March 4.

Vivian Blaine, Massive Twins, Vivyan & Lillian Andrews, Don Henry Trio, Dave Barry, Joe Schirmer, Frank Panus Orch; "The Great Rupert" (EL).

Customers are getting their money's worth from the current layout, spearheaded by Vivian Blaine, a platinum blonde looker. There's a wealth of entertainment in the bill and only second to the Blaine gal is Dave Barry, who played the role of "Mr. Ripple" on Jimmy Durante's radio show. In addition to emceeing, Barry kicks in with "Blowing Bubbles" in his rippling style, satires on Humphrey Bogart, Sam Spade and Arthur Godfrey for heavy mitting. He also tosses in some nifty chatter.

Miss Blaine, in a fetching gray gown splattered with sequins and with plenty of showmanship, socks over "I Feel a Song Coming On," "I Said My Pajamas," "What Is This Thing Called Love," "Strangers" and "I Don't Care," ala Eva Tanguay.

After Frank Panus maestros the orch through a swell medley of pop tunes to start proceedings, the Andrews gals, eye-filling and shapely blondes, attired in fetching, abbreviated purple costumes, warm the customers up with a nifty tap routine. Then the Massive Twins, a pair of muscular young 'uns, score with a neat exhibition of balancing. The Don Henry Trio, another youthful aggregation, and playing different sizes of harmonicas, wham over the Morpheus Overture, "Happy Feet Polka," a medley that includes "Wonderful Guy" and "Sue" and after a burlesk on Spike Jones' "Merry Oldsmobile" using a bunch of zany music makers wind with a sock interp of "Sabre Dance" that wins the mob. Joe Schirmer from the orch, now a feature act weekly, closes session with a red hot "Nola" for a neat hand. Biz good. Sahu.

Circle, Indpls.

Indianapolis, March 5.

Tommy Dorsey Orch, with Buddy Rich, Jack Duffy, Frances Irvin, Johnny Amorosco; Guy Raymond, Church & Hale; "Backfire" (WB).

Circle audiences are finding Tommy Dorsey orch in a nostalgic mood this week. Maybe it's because Gov. Henry F. Schricker presented maestro with a trophy at first matinee celebrating "15 years as nation's foremost band leader," in return for Dorsey's promise to play for Young Democrats' $25-per-plate Jefferson-Jackson Day shindig Sat. night. He sticks to old bandshow format, highlighting his standby tunes—and customers love it.

Newcomers to outfit have a lot to do with the click, however. The wolves go for statuesque redheaded chanteuse, Frances Irvin, in big way. The difference she gives "All of Me," "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend" and "Just a Little Girl From Little Rock" also make a big hit. Johnny Amorosco looks to be Dorsey's best male bet since Sinatra. His handling of "Marie" and "Some Enchanted Evening" vocals is smooth. Buddy Rich is solid with his tom-tom solo in "Song of India." Dorsey, on his trusty trombone, and Jack Duffy, on the sax, deliver plenty of good licks in "The Continental," "Dry Bones," "Pinetop's Boogie" and other numbers that display band to advantage.

Acts get less prominence than usual in recent bandshows, but hold up their end of the bill neatly. Church and Hale get good response for smart tap routines and Gene Raymond is well received in his comedy and eccentric dancing turn. Corb.

Roxy, N. Y.

Beatrice Kraft Dancers, Bill Norvas & the Upstarts (5), Dunhills (3), Buck & Bubbles, Beatrice Kay; "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th), reviewed in VARIETY Feb. 1, '50.

The current Roxy bill has the benefit of two veteran acts to back strongly what is generally an entertaining layout as a whole. The standards are Beatrice Kay, in the closing spot, and Buck and Bubbles with their comedy and hoofing. Plus which there is the added lure of a colorfully staged production under the watchful eye of Arthur Knorr and Sammy Rauch, not to mention A. J. Balaban himself. It's shows like this that makes a reviewer delighted to let everyone get into the act for a credit or two. Any names missed?

Miss Kay, with her Gay '90s type of songalog — coupled with that fine showmanship—can never fail to entertain no matter what she does. There's hardly anything different from her act here since her last date at the Roxy—but when those final curtains close in front of her, the reception is unquestionable. She can still play anywhere.

Buck and Bubbles have also hardly changed an item in their standard routine which they've been doing since they were two-a-day headliners. Yet, there's no lack of entertainment in their turn today. And the audience response is still there. Buck with his taps and Bubbles at the piano have the knack for entertaining, and there isn't a dull moment, even in their expertly concealed "breathers." Yes, the pair are taking more breathers these days, but with their kind of showmanship and ability to entertain, there is hardly anyone who can discern it.

The Dunhills are three lads who have been around with their fast precision and challenge terping, and they're effective as usual in a few brief moments. There's a little clash with the Buck and Bubbles act, but that's not too obvious.

Bill Norvas and the Upstarts, three boys and two girls, go through what is a musicomedy type of song presentation, somewhat akin to the Kay Thompson idea, only not as extensive. They're an improvement over their recent N. Y. Copacabana engagement, impressing with their freshness and verve.

The Beatrice Kraft Dancers are the openers with their East Indian interpretative terping, and they go over, as usual. 'Kahn.

Chicago, Chi

Chicago, March 3.

Cabot & Dresden, Rex Ramer, Mimi Benzell, Billy De Wolfe, Louis Basil Orch; "The Heiress" (Par).

Short bill is the warmest received by Chicago theatre audience in several months. While the majority of applause is garnered by Billy De Wolfe, rest of the acts also get a hefty hand. Show moves at a rapid pace.

Cabot and Dresden, youthful dance team, make a strong impression with their terrific whirls. Especially socko is "Perpetual Motion" number, a seemingly endless series of lifts and spins. Rex Ramer, English importee, sells in fine fashion his musical instrument impressions, sans everything but the amazing nodule work. He starts off with a trumpet bit, but gets away from the usual trite imitations, switching first to guitar, violin, organ grinder, xylophone, before going into rapid vocal session on the banjo. However, it's his closer, "Cocktails For Two" ala Spike Jones, complete with all the band and other noises, which registers solid.

Mimi Benzell, coloratura from the Metropolitan Opera Co., is surely a startling novelty in her operatic selections. However, she sticks to the tried and true, and gets her best response from high trills. Her mid selection, "Over the Rainbow," while effective, might be replaced by something stronger, preferably from a musical comedy. Comely singer's swing version, complete with bit of jive walk and a slight bump, of "Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark" for a closer seems a bit incongruous, but audience of youngsters loves it.

Billy De Wolfe gets chuckles as he walks on and recounts his misery with his film roles. His East Indian hoke dance, which leads to his laugh-provoking hairdo and girdle quickies, is a fine piece of acro work. Boris Karloff, "Frankenstein" number, in green spot, with comedian jumping into first few rows has the juves in screams.

His cast of characters of the shabby bistro, off the beaten road, complete with emcee, line and parade girls, is letter sharp and rib-tickling. It's still Mrs. Murgatroyd that the seatholders are waiting for, however. Character of the work-burdened house-frau off on a little toot is almost a classic. De Wolfe also gets added laughs with some topical throwaways in his sketch, all of which adds up to boff mitt.

Louis Basil band does excellently on the backing, seeming livelier than the past few weeks. Zabe.

Orpheum, L. A.

Los Angeles, March 1.

Anne May & Henry Balabanow, Betty Black, Pat & Willa Levollo, Joan Brandon, Mage & Karr, Peiro Bros. (2), Buster Shaver with Olive, George & Richard, Eddie Peabody, Al Lyons Orpheum Orch (9); "Blue Grass of Kentucky" (Mono).

Orpheum regulars are getting a plus show this week, what with two natural headline acts and a number of dividends sprinkled among the other six turns. Bill kicks off slowly but by the time the fourth act is on the pace is all that could be asked.

Eddie Peabody, the perennial, could hardly get off, even after doing 11 numbers, at show caught. The zest he gets into his banjo-twanging generates an enthusiastic audience. He's also the first repeat for the Orpheum's current vaude policy, not yet a year old.

Second natural headline turn is Buster Shaver and the three little people, Olive, George and Richard. Act has appeared at this house at regular intervals for nearly 20 years and still finds a solid welcome sign out. There's been little variation of the turn's setup over the years and followers probably wouldn't like any changes. Shaver does the piano accompaniment for hot vocaling and terping of the trio and act then climaxes with the ballroom stint by Shaver and Olive.

The Peiro Bros., two boys from the Argentine, display unusual skill in juggling and spinning hats, sticks, cigarettes and Indian clubs. Dexterity and showmanship earn them a big hand. Mage & Karr please with precision taps and terpology, making a showy team for the five-spot on the bill.

Joan Brandon supplies a femme touch to magic tricks, selling easily in the four-spot. Cocktails from an empty shaker, magic cigarettes, a mysterious cane and a nifty egg trick keeps the customers mystified and satisfied. Anne May & Henry Balabanow perform on accordions and toss in some acrobatic dancing, coming off in okay fashion. Betty Black is a cute-looking blonde singer who fills the two-spot with four tunes. The old standard slack wire turn of Pat & Willa Levollo rounds out the bill. Brog.

Apollo, N.Y.

Louis Prima Band (12) with Keely Smith, Jimmy Vincent; Will Mastin Trio, with Sammy Davis, Jr.; Johnny Moore's 3 Blazers, Holmes & Jean; "Undertow" (U-I).

Louis Prima's annual stand at this sepia vauder usually hypoes the take plenty, and this time out is no exception. His is one of the few ofay outfits that can lure them into this house, which has been traditionally a field day spot for top Negro bands. However, Prima with his solid trumpeting, comedics and vocals is rocking 'em again and winning major share of audience appreciation. Flanked by the solid Will Mastin Trio, comedy and hoofing team, and Johnny Moore's Three Blazers, current session is solid all the way.

Prima crew, comprising three rhythm, five reeds and four brasses (including the maestro), sets the pace with a racy rendition of "There'll Be Some Changes Made," with Prima clowning through the vocal and getting in some torrid turmpeting. Follows with an equally torrid session of "Black Magic" to set things for Holmes and Jean, mixed team, who garner neat applause for their slick rhythm, tap and acro dances. Keely Smith, attractive brunet band vocalist, steps out for sultry versions of "Charley My Boy" and "Ebraceable You," with Prima weaving in some clown antics for additional lift.

Johnny Moore and the Three Blazers keep show rolling at high with vocals and instrumentation. They carry self-accomp on two amplified guitars, bass and piano on "Keep Rockin'," "So Long" "Rhumba Ching" and "Drifting" for solid returns. Mastin Trio follows and mops up, due mainly to the hep hoofing and comedy carbons of Sammy Davis, Jr.

Prima band takes over for a satirical Indian number plenty potent on comedy and giving the sidemen a field day in the gleeclub setup. Jimmy Vincent, band drummer, is spotlighted on "Dark Eyes" and gang pulls all the stops on "Caledonia" for a sizzling finale which brings down the house. Edba.

Palace, N. Y.

June & Martin Barrett, Fayne & Foster, Danny Shaw, Mello-Larks (4), Wilbur Hall & Rene, Appletons (3), Chris Cross, Bobby Whaling & Yvette; "Dakota Lil" (20th), reviewed in VARIETY Feb. 1, '50.

The Palace bill, while generally maintaining quality in the individual turns, doesn't add up as effectively as it should. Probably the chief reason is the conflict caused by two musical novelties, Fayne and Foster, and Wilbur Hall and Rene. Use of these acts on the same bill does a great deal in destroying the variety angle.

Former ekes out tunes on glasses, bells, horns, while Hall and Rene get a multitude of notes from such diverse instruments as trumpets, trombone, tire-pumps, coins, etc. Hall has the added advantage of getting laughs out of elongated shoes which enables him to virtually fly over the stage. Each of them could have been used to better advantage on different installments.

There are some youthful items on the show such as June and Martin Barrett, Mello-Larks (4) and Danny Shaw (all New Acts) plus a sprinkling of vet turns. The Appletons are also under New Acts.

Chris Cross, a repeater here, does well in the next-to-closing slot with an assortment of dummies. He works with a life-sized femme doll, and puts across some sly cracks that are laugh-productive. He gets good results with his ventriloquy while working a hand puppet and a regulation-sized dummy.

Bobby Whaling and Yvette close the bill with a cycle turn. There's some okay comedy in this effort plus a good assortment of tricks to give the show a solid curtain.

Don Albert's house orch showbacks with usual efficiency. Jose.

Capitol, D. C

Washington, March 3.

Mario & Floria, Clifford Guest, Stagg McMann Trio, Wyman & White; "Nancy Goes to Rio" (M-G).

Standout of current Capitol bill is Clifford Guest, ventro import from Australia. Guest's different style of voice throwing is suffciently sock to line him up for White House Correspondents' show for President Truman over weekend, an honor the Aussie's talents rate. Capitol payees, who went for the act first time around last season, registered just as much enthusiasm for virtually the same routine this time. Guest shows unusual voice variations and control, giving lifelike quality to such stunts as having dummy talk in muffled tones from his suit case, drinking while his wooden partner sings "How Dry I Am" and talking while latter sneezes. High spot of act is the take-off on a British fox hunt, complete with galloping of the horses' hoofs, calls of the huntsmen and braying of the hounds. This one really brings down the house. With no comic on the bill, Guest's rather muted humor, as well as his ventro technique, fills the empty slot.

Mario & Floria headline show with their routine of trul eye-filling ballroom terping. Couple stick to the conventional in the numbers they choose, a fast opening, a Latin American medley of stepping, and a final waltz type turn along soft, romantic lines. Fine teamwork and individual grace, plus a novel flashy display of whirls and addagio, lend act unusual dazzle. Best bet is return number, a novel version of the 1912 turkey trot. Audience very enthusiastic.

Stagg McMann Trio keep things moving with their vari-sized harmonicas. They make lively curtain raisers and display variety and skill in their playing. Though they strive for novelty, best bets are the tuneful and familiar "Dance of the Hours" and "My Devotion."

Wyman & White accent the musical side of the bill with a medley of top tunes, including "You Are My Song of Love," "I Still Get Jealous When I Look at You," and a solo from distaff member, "You're Breaking My Heart." They blend voices well and to good effect, ending with a solid version of "Side By Side." Lowe.

German, Jap Acts Banned By British Variety Union

London, March 7.

Variety Artistes Federation last week voted to continue the ban on permitting German and Japanese performers to work in Britain. Around 5,000 members voted three to one on the extension.

This is the second extension on the ban which was imposed at the beginning of World War II. Shortly after the war plan to permit German and Jap entertainers entry in Britain was defeated, but promise was made for reconsideration in 1950.

B'way-Opera Gap Closing Fast; Coin Lack Deters U.S. Composers: Johnson

By ARTHUR BRONSON

The gap between Broadway and opera is closing fast, says Edward Johnson, who is retiring this season after 15 years as general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Assn. Broadway gets operas regularly now under the guise of "music-dramas" or "musicals," the works running from "Street Scene" and "The Medium" to "Regina" and "The Consul"—and all of them being opera, American-style. Johnson says the Met takes some credit for having developed such an audience for Broadway, because audiences for these works are merely an enlargement of a public the Met created.

Gian-Carlo Menotti, composer of "The Medium" and "The Consul" (latter show bows on Broadway next week), is an "alumnus" of the Met, says Johnson, with three of Menotti's works having been staged there before his Broadway success with "The Medium."

Johnson also revealed that after the launching of their "Carousel" on Broadway, he talked with composers Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II about writing an opera for the Met. Rodgers said he was interested, Johnson recalled, but then the duo got sidetracked with "Allegro" and later "South Pacific."

Success of the last-named, says Johnson, points up a problem at the Met. "How can you get American composers to write for opera," Johnson asks, "when they can't make any money at it, what with the few performances available and lack of royalties?" With so much money to be made on Broadway, opera holds less lure for composers. Deems Taylor, Johnson disclosed, wanted to do an operatic version of "Street Scene" for the Met long before Kurt Weill attempted it, but author Elmer Rice said no.

Exclusivity Problem

As to films, the Met has been mentioned several times as being source for a pic. Johnson revealed that negotiations had even gone so far as a script—"a regular boy and girl story"—having been approved. But exclusivity on the Met name has proved the bar to any pact, as Texaco now has right to the Met tag for its radio broadcasts. Texaco pact runs out this spring, and Johnson believes that the new Met management will then discuss the problem of name exclusivity in regard to future pacts.

Johnson is quitting the Met in June after 28 years' service, 13 as a leading tenor and the last 15 as general manager. The biggest achievement of his regime, he feels, is the development of the American singer as an opera artist and strengthening of the American people's love for great music. "We broke down the prejudice of the public against American artists," Johnson says, "and we created an intelligent American audience."

His biggest disappointment is the fact that the Met wasn't able to popularize an opera composed by an American.

Johnson was honored for his Met service with a testimonial pageant last Tuesday night (28), after the performance of "Tosca." Pageant ran an hour, with the Met stage thronged by singers, instrumentalists, backstage staffs and front, stagehands, chorus, etc. Solo artists were in costumes of various operas done under Johnson's tenure, for an eye-filling colorful sight. Ticket sale, gifts, etc., brought in $46,190, which has been earmarked to start an Edward Johnson Testimonial Fund, to aid the Met.

Tom Paine Revue Biog To Get N.Y. Tryout

"These Are the Times," new revue by Jay Gorney, based on the life of Tom Paine, will be preemed by the Dramatic Workshop at the President theatre, N. Y., May 4-21. The Workshop has three other shows scheduled for initial production at the President. These are Milton Ehrlich's "King of the Hill," to be offered May 7-8; Marvin Gregory's "The Other Cheek," slated for presentation May 6-9, and "The Scapegoat," based on Franz Kafka's novel, "The Trial," scheduled to bow from April 13-30.

Group is celebrating 10 years of operation today (Wed.).

New Management For Marblehead Theatre

Marblehead, Mass., March 7.

A new management, consisting of Richard M. Rockett, William Cowen, John Foley and Curt Winters, will take over operation of the Marblehead summer theatre this season. Group was granted use of the theatre, situated in the high-school auditorium, at a special meeting of the school committee last week.

However, Blake Johnson and John L. Washburn, who have managed the summer operation for over 10 years, protested the decision in a paid advertisement in the Marblehead Messenger last week. Duo felt the leasing of the theatre should rest with the townspeople and not the school committee, and asked the local citizenry to hold another town meeting. If nothing develops, it's expected Johnson and Washburn will operate a strawhatter in the nearby town of Beverly.

R. E. Perry's Hayloft

Andover, N. J., March 7.

Robert E. Perry will offer a summer stock season at the Grist Mill Playhouse, Andover, N. J. Theatre, a 700-seater, will employ a resident Equity company and operate under the star system.

Perry directed the St. Louis Municipal Opera Co. offerings during the last four years.

Menotti 'Consul' Excites Philly

Philadelphia, March 7.

Philly legit crix gave Menotti's "The Consul" best notices any show has received here since "Death of a Salesman" last season. The Evening Bulletin had its drama critic, Robert Sensenderfer, cover the show from a dramatic standpoint, and its music critic, Max de Schauensee, caught it from the musical end.

All the crix raved about Patricia Neway, young singer, and most of them called Menotti's score superior to that of his "The Medium." All of them commented on the ovation that followed the performance and which finally brought the author-composer, Menotti, to the stage. As a matter of fact even more remarkable than that were the vociferous cheers (and bravos) that broke in on the Act II action following Miss Neway's dramatic aria.

The management took out big ads the next day but they weren't necessary to spur biz. Word-of-mouth and the rave notices would have done that. Show is reaching the sellout stage rapidly. This is its final week here.

Alf. Hitchcock Judges Royal Acad. Auditions

Auditions for American applicants to London's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art were held at the Guild theatre, N. Y., yesterday (Tues.) with about 40 actors performing a scene from Warners' "Stage Fright." Alfred Hitchcock, who directed the pic, which centers around an RADA student, was present to evaluate the various portrayals.

The American auditions for Academy applicants are held under the supervision of the American National Theatre and Academy. Warner's has contributed a special "Stage Fright" scholarship to be awarded the winner of the final auditions to be held in April.

King, Steininger Split

Gene King and Franz Steininger have split up, King bowing out as co-producer of the musical "Lady From Paris." Latter, as "Music in My Heart," played Broadway a couple of seasons ago.

Show is now scheduled to bow in New Haven April 20, followed by a Boston engagement, then Broadway.

CONTRACT COMMITTEE NAMED BY EQUITY

Committee to consider suggestions from the membership regarding possible changes in the union's basic contract with the League of N. Y. Theatres and make recommendations to the Equity council was named by the latter body yesterday (Tues.). It includes Todd Duncan, John Effrat, Muriel Hutchinson, Maida Reade, Helen Ray and Eugene Francis, with Jane Hoffman as alternate.

The council also appointed Edwin Clay as council replacement for Anne Burr, who resigned because of illness. Clay will serve until the annual election in June.

DUMKE IN 'SOLDIER'

Los Angeles, March 7.

Ralph Dumke will play the role of Col. Popoff in "The Chocolate Soldier," which Edwin Lester produces for the Los Angeles Civic Light Opera Assn. April 24.

Cast also includes Salvadore Baccaloni, Marion Bell and Wilbur Evans.

Nicola Moscona's 300th performance at the N. Y. Met Opera will be his first Mephistopheles in Gounod's "Faust" Saturday (11).

Inside Stuff—Legit

For the road to prosper it's necessary to take original casts, or ones just as good, in the opinion of Katharine Cornell. Appearing at the Lyceum, Minneapolis, in "That Lady," she told the Minneapolis Star that the theatre has survived some "fantastic crises" and she's certain it'll always endure.

Miss Cornell said that stars and leading actors generally make a mistake in refusing to tour. "Road experience is always valuable, even if not immediately," she told her interviewer. "It gives people a chance to like you and believe in you. And in the end it pays off."

Incidentally, George Grim, Minneapolis Morning Tribune columnist, last Thursday (2) devoted his entire column to an open "apology" to Miss Cornell for what he considered an inadequate "insulting" turnout for her opening performance in "That Lady" at the Lyceum and for the poor business the attraction did in St. Paul. Headlined "Katharine Cornell gets apology for cities' 'insult'," and addressed to Miss Cornell personally, Grim's article declared the city's "apathy" to high class stage far is inexplicable, reviewed the local entertainment situation and tastes, and paid a tribute to the "That Lady" performance. Professional basketball and wrestling seem to be the city's meat, Grim pointed out.

"Judy O'Connor," which director-producer Frank Ross is considering as an independent film production, was originally written by him four years ago as a legit play, in collaboration with scenarist Andrew Solt. Ross was the producer and principal backer of the show, a four-character comedy-drama in which Don DeFore, William Prince and Anne Sargent played the leading parts, under the direction of John Berry. Production was done as quietly as possible, so Ross and Solt would not lose prestige in Hollywood, in case (as happened) it was a flop.

Only mention of the show in the New York papers was a single announcement of the start of rehearsals, plus VARIETY's review of the New Haven tryout and the gross reports from there and Boston. When it was decided to close the show in the latter town, Lee Shubert offered to buy the production and bring it to Broadway, but Ross refused to consider it, regardless of price. After the Boston closing, Ross, Solt and the others who had come from the Coast to do the play, returned to town and took a plane back to Hollywood the same day.

While film theatres have been catering to their arch enemy, TV, by giving away television sets to hypo business, legit houses, heretofore, have had no traffic with such measures. However, with the tie-in with RCA-Victor on records by Spike Jones, orch leader is giving away an RCA tele set each Thursday on the Great Northern stage, Chi., where his show, "Musical Depreciation Revue," is having a run.

Viola Roache, vet legiter, left for Coast for first film stint, in Columbia's "Craig's Wife," starring Joan Crawford. It's a one-pic deal for her. Miss Roache is playing the housekeeper, the role she did in the Broadway version three seasons ago. Shooting starts March 15.

This Will Probably Lead To a Horses' Equity!

White horse ridden on stage by Arthur Vinton, as Gen. Washington, in the final scene of "Arms and the Girl," at the 46th Street, N. Y., has been the center of various complications since the show opened. Principal difficulty has been the cost involved, recently cut from $400 to about $250 a week. But a new wrinkle arose last week when police ordered attendants to stop bucking 46th street traffic in bringing the horse to the theatre.

Previously, there was a hassle between the Theatre Guild and Local 1, finally resulting in dropping one of the two stagehands required to handle the nag. Management wanted to write the animal out of the show altogether, but director and co-author Rouben Mamoulian insisted it be retained, and there was finally a compromise on director-author billing, by which a proportionate amount was saved in lineage in newspaper ads for the show.

BROADWAY'S SEASONAL DROP

Folding 'Rat Race' in Red for $70,000, 'Heart' Quits in Boston, Drops 110G

Two closings last week, one on Broadway and the other out of town, involved a combined loss of about $80,000. Former was "Rat Race," Leland Hayward production which folded at the Ethel Barrymore, N. Y., after 84 performances. Latter was "Heart of the Matter," Rodgers & Hammerstein production which was taken off in Boston after 11 tryout performances.

"Rat Race," Garson Kanin comedy-drama starring Betty Field, represented a loss of approximately $70,000. Production was financed at $100,000 and cost about that to bring in. It drew negative reviews, but had heavy theatre party bookings through last week, so it earned back about $30,000 of its investment.

There may be additional revenue for the show, as negotiations are reportedly in progress for a film sale. In case such a deal is set, Kanin is understood arranging to include his services as adaptor of the screen treatment. He would get a nominal fee for the latter assignment, allotting most of the proceeds to the rights to the play. In that way the production would share in the larger portion of the coin. Thus, the loss to the backers would be reduced.

Contract dispute with Daniel Mann, who was replaced as director by Kanin during the play's tryout, has not been settled. Mann has refused to accept a settlement of the deal, so the 1½% director royalties stipulated in his contract have been placed in escrow.

Meanwhile, Hayward's production of "Mister Roberts" has thus far earned a profit of $950,000 on its original $100,000 investment. In addition, Hayward is associated with Rodgers & Hammerstein in the presentation of the musical smash, "South Pacific," and is partnered with Joshua Logan in the production of the latter's highly regarded "Wisteria Trees," currently being tried out on the road.

"Heart of the Matter," Graham Greene-Basil Dean dramatization of the former's novel, involves an investment of around $110,000 at present. Although producers Rodgers & Hammerstein are storing the scenery with the idea of putting on the drama next season, if the collaborators come up with a satisfactory rewrite, the venture must be rated as a total loss, as of the moment. It would probably require $30,000 or more additional to do the show again. "Heart" was financed at $100,000, subject to a 20% overcall.

The two other Rodgers-Hammerstein productions continue to amass large earnings. "South Pacific," financed at $225,000 and brought in for $163,000, has earned approximately $475,000. It has repaid the original investment, plus a 50% profit. In addition, about $150,000 earnings have been set aside to pay for the forthcoming road company, and there is a sizable cash reserve, plus assets in bonds.

"Happy Time," produced by Rodgers & Hammerstein at a cost of about $60,000, has already repaid the backers half of the investment, and is due to get out of the red this week or next. It is earning a steady profit of around $8,000-$9,000 a week.

'STREETCAR' TO RETURN TO N.Y. FOR 2 WEEKS

"Streetcar Named Desire" will play a return Broadway engagement this spring at the N. Y. City Center. As both touring companies of the Tennessee Williams drama will have disbanded by then, the troupe for this date will be an amalgam of the two, with Uta Hagen and Anthony Quinn in the leading roles. Irene M. Selznick production will play two weeks, starting May 23, at $3 top.

Also slated for the Center's spring drama season are the touring "Brigadoon," Monty Woolley in "Man Who Came to Dinner" and possibly Tallulah Bankhead in "Private Lives."

Delfont in N. Y. For Abbott, O-J Deals

Bernard Delfont planed into New York from London Monday (6) to finalize two legit deals which he started some months ago. First is to close final arrangements with George Abbott to import his revue, "Touch and Go," to London, and try to get some of the leads. Show will be presented at the Prince of Wales in May in conjunction with Val Parnell and George and Alfred Black, after the run of Jack Hylton's "Take It From Here" vaudeville show.

Second objective of trip is to settle an Olsen and Johnson deal promoted by Harry Foster to stage "Folies Bergere Revue" on Broadway sometime in May or June, with O & J starred.

Conservatives In Equity Sweep

Conservative element in Actors Equity won a clean sweep last week in the election of members to serve on the nominating committee. Added to the three conservatives named by the union's council, the selection of six conservatives by the membership gives that faction complete control of nominations for the annual election to take place in June.

Possibility is thus seen that an independent ticket may be entered by the union's progressive elements, and that there may be unusually intense campaigning by the opposing forces preliminary to the balloting at the annual membership meeting. Although such electioneering is forbidden under the union rules, it is obviously widespread—as indicated by the results of the balloting last week and in previous years.

Those elected last week as membership representatives on the nominating committee are, in order of votes received, Walter Hampden, Gene Lockhart, Lee Tracy, Conrad Nagel, Edith King and William Tabbert. All were supported by the conservatives. The losing progressive ticket, in the order of votes received, consisted of Victor Jory, Meg Mundy, Beatrice Straight, Julie Harris, Sam Wanamaker and John Randolph. They will serve as alternates, in that order. In addition, Ben Lackland and John O'Shaughnessy each received two write-in votes, while John Becker and Eugene Stuckman got one each.

The council representatives on the committee, all regarded as conservatives, are Dennis King, chairman, and Barbara Robbins and Loring Smith, with Bill Ross as alternate.

About 600 members attended last week's quarterly meeting. A total of 315 ballots were cast, 309 of which ware valid and six void. The nine-member nominating committee will hold its first session tomorrow afternoon (Thur.). It is to name the regular slate of candidates for 10 council seats for a term of five years, one replacement to serve two years and one to serve one year.

Victory of the conservative forces in the nominating committee election is a reverse of last season, when the progressives named all six membership representatives. Although the conservatives did not enter an independent ticket in the annual election, they carried on an active campaign and polled a substantial number of write-in votes. In fact, the "secret" nature of the electioneering by the conservatives became an issue in the union and drew the official condemnation of the council. Latter action was subsequently rebuked in a resolution passed at the annual meeting.

SLUMP REPEATS PAST 2 YEARS

By HOBE MORRISON

Sharp drop in business on Broadway last week was a repeat of the last two seasons. The coal shortage, involving a brownout and train cancellations, apparently was not a major factor, despite wholesale complaints of managers, brokers and others, since attendance followed much the same course the corresponding week last year, when similar conditions did not exist. As a study of the figures indicates, the boxoffice pattern varies little from year to year, and temporary or local factors have little effect.

Last year, while the number of current shows slipped from 30 to 29 over the previous week, the total gross fell from $743,300 to $629,800. The previous season (1947-48), with the number of shows current jumping from 29 to 32, the aggregate gross sagged from $728,000 to $651,000.

In contrast, business on the road is notably worse than at this period last season. Total grosses for all out-of-town shows last week skidded $452,200 from the previous week's $515,900. For the corresponding week last season, total road grosses rose a bit to $551,800 from the previous week's $526,600. No total figures are available for road business in the 1947-48 season.

With only seven more productions due on Broadway before May 31, the number of shows will probably reach only 54, including City Center presentations, a Gilbert & Sullivan repertory and such borderline legits as "Night in Spain" and Ken Murray's "Blackouts." That's a sharp drop from the previous season's total of 73 productions, which was a new low for Broadway. The scheduled arrivals include "The Consul," "Great to be Alive," "Wisteria Trees," "Cry of the Peacock," "Peter Pan," "The Liar" and "Tickets, Please."

If, as past season records indicate, day-to-day conditions are not the determining factor in boxoffice volume, there is little prospect for better grosses this week or next. On that basis, managerial hopes that Monday's (6) lifting of the brownout would stimulate business may be disappointed. According to records of the last two seasons, no sharp upturn is due before Easter Week (starting April 10), and attendance will taper off steadily thereafter until the season ends May 31.

Producers Group May Operate Co-op Tix Office For Organization Biz

Cooperative ticket office to solicit convention and group business for Broadway legit may be jointly operated by the Committee of Theatrical Producers and the League of N. Y. Theatres. Project, suggested recently by the CTP, has been made available to the League, which will consider the bid at its regular meeting tomorrow (Thur.). It's expected that the plan will be adopted.

At the start, the office would contact organizations planning conventions in New York or groups buying tickets in blocks, with the idea of getting advance orders for Broadway shows. Subsequently, it would handle mail orders for all productions. At the moment, there's no intention of having the outfit serve as a central office for the handling of regular ticket sales. Latter idea has been suggested frequently by various people, however.

Fletcher's Stock Try

Chicago, March 7.

Bramwell Fletcher is huddling with local moneymen trying to raise enough money for a local company to present "Berkeley Square" here.

Actor will probably form stock group if first play, due to light up in April, succeeds.

Shaw's 'Brassbound' Fails to Click in Pitt

Pittsburgh, March 7.

Spectacular success of George Bernard Shaw on Broadway this season ("Caesar and Cleopatra" and "The Devil's Disciple") hasn't rubbed off on the Pittsburgh Playhouse. That community theatre, currently doing "Captain Brassbound's Conversion," which was included by Shaw with those other two in his volume, "Three Plays for Puritans," is having its biggest flop in a number of seasons.

In fact, "Brassbound" comes off Saturday (11) week ahead of schedule, first time Pitt Playhouse has ever pulled a production before the end of the regular run. It's only the second Shaw work group has ever done. First was "Candida" in 1943. Pitt critics were unanimous in their opinion that Playhouse had bit off more than it could chew in "Brassbound."

Houston to Get Musical Stock

Musical stock setup will be set up in Houston this summer, similar to that operating in recent seasons in Dallas. Local group, headed by Robert Altfeld, is readying the venture, having already posted a $20,000 bond with Actors Equity to cover company salaries. Highschool stadium will be used for the outdoor presentations.

Plans apparently stem from a local operation there last season. That group gave shows in the Music Hall with a semi-pro company, including semi-name leads, but without Equity sanction. New venture will not be associated with last season's activities, although some of the same people may participate.

Another musical stock setup, though on a smaller scale, is planned for this summer in Vancouver. W. H. Buckingham, who has previously run a non-Equity outfit there, has notified the union that he intends expanding the project and operating under Equity conditions. Another such venture is reportedly planned for Montreal this summer.

A dramatic stock company, operating under Equity rules, opened this week at Berwyn, Pa., near Philadelphia. It has a tieup with a local TV station for televising of its shows one night a week, when the house is dark.

$90,000 ADVANCE FOR 'ROBERTS' IN BOSTON

Boston, March 7.

"Mister Roberts," in for an indefinite run, had a spectacular opening last night (Mon.) at the Colonial here. Although tickets for only four weeks are on sale, the advance was reportedly over $90,000 before the first-night curtain. That's believed to be a record for the house for a non-musical show.

Company, headed by John Forsyth, James Rennie, Robert Burton and Jackie Cooper, is figured a cinch to stay here at least through May, and producer Leland Hayward hopes it may stick into July. At a $4.20 top, the Thomas Heggen-Joshua Logan play can gross $27,500 in the 1,500-seat house.

LEONARDI BATONS TUNER

Hollywood, March 7.

Leon Leonardi, composer-conductor, will be musical director for "Of All Things," Leighton Brill-William Trinz musical show, which opens at the Century theatre March 22.

See National, D.C., Back to Legit; Still Seek Strand, Drop Belasco

Legit situation in Washington, already sizzling, became even more active this week. Coincident with the opening Monday night (6) at the Gayety of "Barretts of Wimpole Street" as the first touring show to play the town since the summer of 1948, it was reported that the National might abandon its racial-discrimination policy and reconvert to legit. Meanwhile, the American National Theatre & Academy, in cooperation with members of the Committee of Theatrical Producers, is continuing efforts to lease the Strand there. However, negotiations by ANTA to rent the Belasco from the Government have been dropped.

According to insiders, the National, long the sole legiter in the Capitol, may soon decide to conform to Actors Equity's rule outlawing racial discrimination there. It's noted that the theatre management has based its previous refusal to do so on the claim that local custom required the Jim Crow setup. Now, with the apparent public acceptance of non-discrimination at the Gayety, the way appears to be open for the National to adopt a similar policy.

It's reported that the operators of the Gayety recently approached Marcus Heiman, president of the United Booking Office, to see if that agency would book the theatre. Heiman, who is also manager of the National, is said to have shown a "friendly" attitude, but to have advised them to seek bookings independently. They subsequently contracted with producers Harald Bromley and Eunice Healey to present shows at the house.

Although the CTP, as an organization, has decided not to underwrite the lease of the National individual members will probably do so. It's figured that even if the National, in addition to the Gayety, becomes available for legit, there is a large enough theatregoing public in Washington to support a third house, particularly one with a large capacity suitable for heavy-budget musicals.

'Streetcar' for Gayety

First show definitely set to play the Gayety, Washington, after Harald Bromley and Eunice Healey take over booking of the house, effective March 20, will be "Streetcar Named Desire." Company, headed by Judith Evelyn and Ralph Meeker, will play a three-week engagement starting April 3. Also definitely set for the house is Mae West in "Diamond Lil" the week of May 22. Possibility is Katharine Cornell in "That Lady" for the week of April 24.

Opening bill under the Bromley-Healey management isn't set, but it may be Melvyn Douglas in Samuel Spewack's comedy about Governmental redtape, "Two Blind Mice." That may depend on the continuation on Broadway of "Bird Cage," in which Douglas is currently starred.

'Barretts' Opens D. C.

Washington, March 7.

An enthusiastic audience, largely in evening clothes, welcomed back the legitimate theatre to Washington last night (6) as Susan Peters, in a touring company of "Barretts of Wimpole Street,"

The qualities that make "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep" a successful novel defeat it as a play, Elaine Ryan's dramatization captures the lush, satirical, incident-stuff quality of the Ludwig Bemelmans original to an extraordinary degree, but Bemelmans seems too amorphous for the confines of the stage. So despite sympathetic, expert performances by Fredric March and Florence Eldridge, and a generally fine production, "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep" remains a disappointing show. Because of its stiff production and operating cost, therefore, it's a doubtful boxoffice prospect.

The play follows the original story closely, picking up the fabulous Gen. Leonidas Erosa at his Riviera menage, following his fantastic course aboard ship to South America (omitting the sequence in New York) and finally taking him to his death following an earthquake at his ancestral villa in Ecuador. The three acts and 13 scenes cover eight different locales, with enough scenery and actors for a large musical. In fact, the succession of scenes and the endless procession of actors back and forth across the stage suggest a musical comedy. Perhaps songs and dances would help.

Despite its many assets, "Sleep" never quite registers theatrically. It is reasonably interesting and diverting, and seems always about to come to the point and achieve emotional impact, but the story remains diffuse and inconclusive. And after so many situations, characters and events, the ultimate effect is unsatisfying.

As the self-indulgent Ecuadorian general, Fredric March gives an admirable performance, expressing the eccentricities of the character without lapsing into caricature, and retaining the selfishness without losing the inherent honesty and sympathy of the part. As the disapproving but adoring governess, Miss Eldridge achieves a skillfull blend of prudishness, warmth and dignity.

Effective in principal supporting roles are Milton Parsons as a refugee-valet, Jacqueline Dalya as one of the General's numerous amours, Henry Lascoe as a temperamental chef, Stefan Schnabel as a painter and later as an Ecuadorian majordomo. Notable in lesser parts are Lili Valenty, Rick Jason, Booth Colman, Philip Gordon and Irene Moors.

Hume Cronyn's staging lightens the heavy production with innumerable entrances, exits and between-scene passages of actors across the fore-stage, and his overall pacing is flexible. The Wolfgang Roth scenery, in the manner of Bemelmans illustrations, is expansive without ponderousness, and it adds valuable atmosphere, while John Derro's costumes are decorative and dramatically suggestive. The elaborate sound effects, including music, seabird calls, a crying infant and an earthquake, are uneven.

Although "Sleep" is a slim bet for Broadway, the yarn's colorful characters, story expanse and wealth of incident suggest film possibilities, if properly revised.

Tobacco Road

Jack Kirkland production of comedy-drama in three acts, adapted by himself, from Erskine Caldwell's novel of the same name. Staged by Evelyn Ellis. At 48th Street, N. Y., March 6, '50; $3 top.

Dude Lester	Jimmy Wright
Ada Lester	Evelyn Ellis
Jeeter Lester	Powell Lindsay
Ellie May	Baby Joyce
Grandma Lester	Estelle Hemsley
Lov Bensey	John Tate
Henry Peabody	Cherokee Thornton
Sister Bessie	Mercedes Gilbert
Pearl	Dolores Mack
Captain Tim	John Mark
George Payne	John Bouie

When "Tobacco Road" opened on Broadway in December, 1933, it was given a critical shellacking, but ran 3,182 performances. That was in the days when production and operating costs allowed sufficient margin for a manager to keep a show running long enough to find its public, if it had one, despite the critics.

Even with an old setting from the warehouse and expenses trimmed to the minimum, no such slim-budget operation is possible in this day of sky-high costs. So Jack Kirkland's latest presentation of his grimy comedy-drama appears to be an outside bet to pay off, even at the come-on b.o. scale of a $3 top.

The play appears to have been revised slightly here and there, particularly with the insertion of some dialog about the injustices of share-cropping economics and a rather cryptic reference to miscegenation. But it remains a study of southern degradation and demoralization, with moments of genuine compassion shining through the tasteless slapstick.

Originally presented with white actors (Henry Hull, James and John Barton, and Taylor Holmes, were among those starred as the disreputable Jeeter Lester at various times), the show is now played by members of the Negro Actors Group, mostly in terms of hokum clowning. Only John Tate as the morose Lov Bensley and Evelyn Ellis as the pathetic but essentially dignified Ada give sincere, direct performances, although Mercedes Gilbert is passable as the charlatan Sister Bessie, and John Mark and John Bouie are adequate in bit parts.

As director, Miss Ellis has failed to control the low-comedy antics of her fellow-actors.

N.Y. City Ballet Co.

The fledgling N. Y. City Ballet Co. continues to surprise, pouring out a stream of new ballets, while its ensemble grows more and more expert and bigtime. Last week the company preemed two more works. One, "Illuminations," choreographed by Frederick Ashton—who came over from London and his Sadler's Wells chores expressly to stage the new work for the N. Y. troupe—is a stunner. Ballet has a libretto that isn't too easy to follow, but it has color, imagination and excitement, and all in all is a pretty fine show. It's a major addition to an already imposing repertory this amazing young troupe is assembling.

"Illuminations," based on an Arthur Rimbaud poem, is a scattered series of dance sketches, more the phantasmagoria or wild vagaries of a disordered mind than anything else. But these fancies give Ashton opportunity for some striking, highly imaginative dance effects, which together with Cecil Beaton's lavish costumes and especially Benjamin Britten's vivid score, making an exciting ballet abstraction. The work is somewhat erotic in tone and frank in its sex passages, all of which add up to boxoffice.

Nicholas Magallenes dances the central figure with brilliance, evoking much poetry while executing some astonishing terp work. Melissa Hayden practically steals the show in a vivid dance creation as Profane Love, and Tanaquil LeClerq is effective in the Sacred Love role. Supporting ensemble is choice.

Week's other preem was a Pas de Deux Romantique, choreographed by George Balanchine. To one who likes his pas de deux straight, this slightly burlesqued version doesn't fully come off, being lightly amusing but not funny enough. It's a colorful addition to the troupe's program, however, especially when so well danced by Janet Reed and Herbert Bliss.

BUS BREAKDOWN BALKS TOLEDO OPERA DATE

Toledo, March 7.

Scheduled performance of the Charles A. Wagner company in "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" at the State theatre here March 2 was not held, though the almost-capacity audience, many of them in formal dress, waited until 10 p.m.

Company's musicians could not appear in time because of a bus breakdown at Butler, Pa. A second bus was chartered but did not arrive until 11:30 p.m. Mrs. Flora Ward Hineline, who had booked the operas, said many patrons decided not to seek refunds on their tickets in order not to discourage her plans for future opera in Toledo.

Ballet Theatre Back To Center for 10th Anni

Ballet Theatre will celebrate its 10th anniversary with a three-week spring season at the Center theatre, New York, opening Sunday, April 23.

It was at the Center theatre that, on Jan. 11, '40, Ballet Theatre gave its first performance anywhere.

'Light Up the Sky' Cast Set for L.A.

Hollywood, March 7.

Benay Venuta, Florence Bates, Tom Powers and Hayden Rorke will top the cast of "Light Up the Sky," which Michael and Marcella Cisney will produce, in association with James Doolittle, on April 12 at the Las Palmas.

Moss Hart play follows "Strange Bedfellows," which new producing group opens March 21.

L'ville's July 10 Teeoff

Louisville, March 7.

opened at the old Gayety theatre. Town had been without legit since the close of the National theatre in August, 1948.

The Gayety, for 44 years a burlesque, was brightened with fresh paint and toned down in color and decor. The reserved-seat orchestra and first balcony were sold out and there were a handful of standees. In addition, there was a considerable sale in the non-reserved second balcony.

Pitt Burley May Go Legit

Pittsburgh, March 7.

Izzy Hirst and Jay Hornick, who operate the Casino, 1,500-seat burley theatre in Pittsburgh, may convert it to a legiter next season, if no other house is available there for touring shows. However, if the 1,750-seat Senator here is switched to legit operation, as announced, Hirst and Hornick have no intention of trying to compete for Pittsburgh stage bookings.

As operators of the Gayety, Washington, which became Washington's only legit house this week with the touring "Barretts of Wimpole Street," Hirst and Hornick are watching situation closely in Washington. They're convinced that a legit policy offers much greater revenue than burley or films, provided attractive bookings are available. But they figure that lack of sufficient bookings would make legit operation prohibitive.

With the Nixon due to be demolished May 1 to make room for an office building, it had been feared that Pittsburgh would be without a legit house next season. But it was announced last week that the Harris Amus. Co. intends to convert the Senator, which it owns, into a legiter to get the road bookings for Pittsburgh.

Plays Out of Town

The Consul

Philadelphia, March 1.

Chandler Cowles and Efrem Zimbalist, Jr., production of musical drama in three acts by Gian-Carlo Menotti (both score and book); orchestra under direction of Lehman Engel; settings, Horace Armistead; musical coordination, Thomas Schippers; lighting, Jean Rosenthal; costumes, Grace Houston; choreography, John Butler; entire production staged by Menotti. Features Marie Powers and Patricia Neway. At Shubert theatre, Philadelphia, March 1, '50 ($4.55 top).

John Corel	Cornell MacNeil
Magda Sorel	Patricia Neway
The Mother	Marie Powers
Chief Police Agent	Leon Lishner
First Police Agent	Chester Watson
Second Police Agent	Donald Blackey
The Secretary	Gloria Lane
Mr. Kofner	George Jongeyans
The Foreign Woman	Maria Marlo
Anna Gomez	Maria Andreassi
Vera Boronell	Lydia Summers
Nika Magadoff	Andrew McKinley
Assan	Francis Monachino

Any doubt (and there was considerable) that Gian-Carlo Menotti would not be able to duplicate the success of "The Medium" and "The Telephone," or that he would be able to spread his own particular musical mood over a full evening's entertainment, was completely dissipated by premiere performance of "The Consul." Latter marks a distinct advance in the composer's form of musical art, is stronger dramatically and should have wider audience appeal.

There are some rough spots, some very apparent needs for tightening and editing, but they are all relatively unimportant and can easily be made during the play's 10-day stay here. After that it seems aimed for success, popular as well as artistic.

The scene of "The Consul" is a nameless European country, presumably one of the liberated ones, writhing under a constant surveillance, its citizens hounded by the secret police, its borders heavily guarded, its liberty in fact, being in name only. One of the persecuted patriots is John Sorel, who, wounded by the police, has to flee the country, leaving behind his mother, wife and baby. His last injunction to his wife is that she go immediately to the consul and procure for herself and his other loved ones the proper passport and visa so that they can join him in exile. She complies with his request and is confronted with the endless and boundless red-tape which the author believes prevalent in consular circles of these countries. In fact, she (and the audience) never see the consul, only a super-efficient (and also slightly bewildered) secretary. Day after day, it's the same old story of filling out blanks, getting credentials, being finally rebuffed. The people who, like Mrs. Sorel, come here are those "whose name is a number, whose story is a case, whose hopes are on file." Mrs. Sorel's baby dies and her mother-in-law is at death's door. The young wife, after a scene of bitter accusation, seems about to be able to get to see the consul, possibly get some action, when she is frustrated by the police. Her frantic husband, hearing nothing, comes home and is arrested and, in the end, his anguished wife commits suicide.

As in the case of "The Medium," there is a little dialog but Menotti uses it sparingly and it is generally in the nature of recitative. For the most part this is grand opera but opera told with such freshness and with the dramatic tempo at so fast a pace that it seems like an entirely new form of art. There are only a few arias, and even these are not of the stereotyped variety common in the old Italian or French operas. The lullaby song by the aged grandmother at the cradle of the dying baby is outstanding; so is Mrs. Sorel's final, bitter, hysterical outburst in the Consul's outer office, but these are only parts of a score that is moving, exciting and impressive. If it has a weakness, then that weakness is to be found in Act III, and there is a similar letdown in the dramatic substance here. This was almost inevitable in view of the terrific pace and emotional fervor of Act II. The author-composer is working on changes in this final act, but not many are needed.

"The Consul" is going to bring prominence to Patricia Neway, who both plays and sings the role of Mrs. Sorel magnificently. Hers is an arduous task, and she comes through neatly. In addition to her gifts she is possessed of a magnetic personality. Marie Powers, who starred in "The Medium," has the role of Sorel's mother here. It is subordinated to that of the wife's but Miss Powers scores unmistakably. Then there are outstanding performances by Gloria Lane, as the consul's coldly efficient secretary who, at the end, shows she really has feelings and a heart after all; by Leon Lischner, as a malevolent police agent; by George Jongeyans, as a lugubrious suppliant at the Consul's desk; by Cornell MacNeil, as the hunted husband, and by Andrew McKinley, a magician who can produce rabbits and flags from hats but cannot get a visa.

Menotti has directed his own play with feeling; the settings are impressive and especially well lighted.

"The Consul" is a play of many moods; it is alternately sardonic, rueful, melodramatic, poetic and even (in the case of the magician) comic, but, in its larger aspects, it is a grim and relentless tragedy so excitingly done, however, that it should have general audience appeal.

Congressional Baby

Abigail Wentworth	Katherine Emmett
Margaret MacDuffie	Mary Farrell
Jefferson Clark	Mark Roberts
Carol Wentworth	Nina Foch
Johnny Addison (Portsmouth Herald)	Rowland Vance
Belle Wheelock (Manchester Union-Leader)	Eleanor Collier, Jr.
Jean De Passe (Laconia Citizen)	Ralph Clifford
Simon Webster (Nashua Telegraph)	William Whitehead
Bob Sullivan (Dover Democrat)	Edward Hunt
Judge Samuel Wentworth	Neil Fitzgerald
Michael Francis O'Donnell	Judson Pratt
Mrs. Pomeroy	Patricia Ferris
Miss Endicott	Barbara Barton
Mrs. Hollister	Ellen Hardies
Rosemary Brown	Priscilla Conover
Charles Brown	Malcolm Atterbury

"Congressional Baby" was prematurely delivered, at the first Broadway tryout here in 20 years. It will require herculean rewriting by Eileen Tighe and the skilled, patient ministrations of Eddie Dowling to make this infant lusty enough for New York. A filming might be more promising. Malcolm Atterbury's local Playhouse troupe is making the presentation here.

Described as a comedy, "Baby" also incorporates drama and melodrama. Funny lines (chiefly about politics or sex) and a few amusing situations which should expand as timing is improved) are balanced by stretches of excessive talk and confused action. Miss Tighe may have intended to draw a satirical parallel between a woman's private and public life, but her plot is obscurely involved and her stage technique unsure.

Story tells of a young lady nominated as Democratic congresswoman in New Hampshire, whose past—in the form of a baby born after her Republican father-judge had the marriage annulled in New Mexico—is exploited by political enemies and reporters in an attempt to cause her withdrawal from the race. Numerous complications ensue before the Congressional candidate ends up in the arms of a newsman.

Fattest part is that of a sapient, friendly and frank grandmother, nicely played by Katherine Emmett. But it could be built. Judson Pratt's role, of a dynamic profane, sometime bewildered Democratic boss, who thinks more of his party than of a wife, might also be developed. Pratt played the first two acts quite well; he encountered two rocky moments in last act. Personality is ingratiating, but diction could be clearer. Nina Foch gives a solid performance in the confused, not-too-sympathetic part of the candidate. Husky-voiced blond shows fine presence, wears clothes stunningly and acts authoritatively, although she looks a trifle young for the role. Mark Roberts creates a likeable, nonchalant, helpful newsman. Neil Fitzgerald's characterization of the stolid father carries conviction.

One of best supporting bits is that of Ellen Hardies' WCTU leader. Barbara Barton makes a good-looking, unmarried temperance gal. Edward Hunt is a promising comedian. Single set is well done.

Chi Way Off; 'Kate' Slumps to $29,000, Spike Jones $18,600, Blackstone 10G

Chicago, March 7.

Chi legit attractions had everything in the book hurled at them last week, with attendance off at both "Kiss Me, Kate" and Spike Jones' "Musical Depreciation Revue." In addition to Lent, Chicago began its dimout and added two days of zero weather, including the Wednesday matinee. Convention trade is also slow. Blackstone, the magician, picked up a little over last week's slight gross. Ballets de Paris opened very strong at the Blackstone last night (6).

The Erlanger will house "Madwoman of Chaillot" next week. "Private Lives" returns to the Harris for four weeks March 20. "Lend An Ear" comes into the Great Northern March 23.

Estimates for Last Week

Ballets de Paris, Blackstone (1,358; $4.40). Very hefty opening last night (6).

Blackstone, Erlanger (2nd week) (1,334; $2.50). Upped a little with $10,000.

"Kiss Me, Kate," Shubert (24th week) (2,100; $6.18). Slumped to $29,000.

"Musical Depreciation Revue, Great Northern (4th week) (1,500; $3.71). Not too bad with $18,600.

PARIS BALLET NIFTY $24,100 IN TORONTO

Toronto, March 7.

With local publicity ballyhoo on the Catholic Church's ban on Les Ballets de Paris in Quebec, the attraction did a very good week at the Royal Alexandra here, for a $24,100 gross, with 1,525-seater scaled at $4.20 top.

Snow storms hurt earlier week's business.

Lillie-'U.S.A.' Droops To $27,500 in Split Wk.

Rochester, N. Y., March 7.

Caught by storms and the general slump, Bea Lillie in "Inside U. S. A." grossed a moderate $27,500 in two stands last week. Revue played the Erlanger, Buffalo, Monday-Wednesday (27-1) and the Auditorium here Thursday-Saturday (2-4).

Show will call it quits when it finishes current split week at the Bushnell Aud., Hartford, Saturday (11).

Cornell-'Lady' Good 16G Mpls., NG $2,900 in St. P.

Minneapolis, March 7.

Katharine Cornell in "That Lady" finished to good $16,000 for four nights and two matinees at $4.20 top in 1,900-seat Lyceum. Matinees were especially heavy. The acting drew raves and the play, too, was generally liked here. In St. Paul, same attraction pulled a poor $2,900 for two nights, giving it, however, nearly $19,000 for the week, thanks to the Minneapolis take.

"Streetcar Named Desire" is current here for seven days and its exclusive Twin City visit—a return engagement—at $3.60 top. Spike Jones follows for two weeks.

'Okla.!' $42,800 in Split

Kansas City, March 7.

"Oklahoma!" took in a big $42,800 between the Music Hall here and the Shrine Mosque, Springfield, Mo., last week. Musical played latter Monday and Tuesday (27-28), coming here Wednesday (1) and playing through Saturday (4).

Show is currently doing a split week of five engagements.

'Brigadoon' Mediocre $21,000 in New Haven

New Haven, March 7.

"Brigadoon," in for a full week (27-4), tried a cut-scale for Mon.-Tues. at $3 top, then shifted to $4.20 for Wed.-Sat. Midweek sagged noticeably, with overall Shubert turnstiles registering only a fair estimated $21,000 on eight performances.

This week is solid with "Wisteria Trees" (6-11), and advance indicates a possible complete sellout. Pix follow, then "Cry of the Peacock" preems March 23-25. Also on the breakin list are the Hartmans in "Tickets, Please" (March 30-April 1) and the Alfred Drake - Edward Eager musical, "The Liar" (April 13-15).

CHURCHILL-'STORY' GOOD 18½G IN L.A.

Los Angeles, March 7.

Although the critical notices for Sarah Churchill were lukewarm. "Philadelphia Story" wound up its first week at the Biltmore with a fairish draw. "The Banker's Daughter," at the Globe, and Kitty Doone," at the Circle Playhouse, did okay for the smaller houses.

Estimates for Last Week

"Banker's Daughter," Globe (285; $2.40). Near capacity at $4,200.

"Kitty Doone," Circle (150; $2.40). Maintaining healthy average at $1,200.

"Philadelphia Story," Biltmore (1,636; $3.60) (1st week) .Good $18,500.

Mitchell-'Salesman' Hefty $23,200, Cincy

Cincinnati, March 7.

"Death of a Salesman," with Thomas Mitchell, bagged a hefty $23,200 last week in the 1,300-seat Cox theatre at $4.31 top. Rave reviews and audience reaction helped biz in face of severe winter weather, Friday and Saturday performances being sellouts.

Mae West in "Diamond Lil" tenants the 2,500-seat Taft theatre the last half of this week for four performances at $4.31 top.

Nolan-'Whistle' Slim $9,700 in Baltimore

Baltimore, March 7.

"The Silver Whistle," with Lloyd Nolan, grossed a tepid $9,700 in eight performances at Ford's here.

The Theatre Guild production is at the Walnut, Philadelphia, this week.

Malden Barn Set

Albany, March 7.

The first area announcement on the 1950 strawhat season is that the Malden Bridge Playhouse, at Malden Bridge in Columbia county, will open a 10-week season July 1.

Barn theatre, leased last season by a Cleveland group operating under the name of Valley Players, has been remodeled by owner-producer Walter Wood.

'Consul' Gets Raves But Only $13,700 In Philly; 'Day' 21½G

Philadelphia, March 7.

Legit interest is pretty pallid here right now. Good evidence is "The Consul," which opened last Wednesday (1) at the Shuberth and received one of the greatest collections of rave notices turned out here in many a moon. But it showed disappointingly little strength thereafter, with only $13,700 grossed in five performances at a $4.55 top ($5.20 Saturday).

Last week's other opening, "What a Day," at the Forrest, isn't faring too well either, although in this case notices as well as first-night word-of-mouth were divided.

"The Consul" and "What a Day" (will be called "Great to Be Alive" in N. Y.) both figure to pick up this week, with the latter possibly getting the edge despite the raving about the Menotti musical drama.

Estimates for Last Week

"The Consul," Shubert (1st week) (1,877; $4.55). World-preemed Wednesday night with extraordinary ovation, rave notices and enthusiastic word-of-mouth. Yet, only $13,700 in five performances.

"What a Day," Forrest (1st week) (1,766; $4.55). Musical opened Tuesday (28) to mixed notices, with praise outweighing criticism. New Freedley musical got $21,500 in seven performances.

"Tobacco Road," Locust (2d week) (1,580; $2.60). Revival of this perennial with all-Negro cast got very mild $5,600 in second and last session. "Private Lives" (return) current.

'Ear' Neat 25G, 'Trees' 23G, Hub; 'Heart' Folds, 4G

Boston, March 7.

"Lend an Ear" was only entry in town last week and, with helpful notices for the road company, stepped into good if not sock biz. "Wisteria Trees" on its finale remained smash for the femme trade, with "Streetcar" still doing plenty of biz. "Heart of the Matter" failed to contend and was washed out here on Sat. (4), company disbanding.

"Mr. Roberts" opened last night (6) at the Colonial. Not much ahead.

Estimates for Last Week

"A Streetcar Named Desire," Plymouth (3d week) (1,200; $3.60). B.o. is still brisk on this one, and another frame is current, with one or two more after that possible. Remained above the $20,000 bracket and no sign of a serious drop so far. Nothing is booked here immediately ahead so it can stretch.

"Lend an Ear," Shubert (1st week) (1,750; $4.80). Road company of this revue was well received and the show stepped into good biz despite the high top price to take about $25,000, well below scale but not bad.

"The Heart of the Matter," Wilbur (2d week) (1,200; $3.60). No go. Producers folded it as of Sat. (4) and disbanded the company. Graham Greene and Basil Dean are rewriting and a fall retake is a possibility, but it didn't prove potent enough at the b.o. to prove encouraging. Did about 4G on eight.

"The Wisteria Trees," Colonial (3d week) (1,500; $3.60). Remained a staunch biz-getter to the end, doing a big 23G on third. Moved out Sat. (4) for an additional three-week tryout, opening in New Haven last night (6).

Woolley-'Dinner' Okay $19,000, Frisco

San Francisco, March 7.

"The Man Who came to Dinner," with Monte Woolley, is the town's sole legit.

Show hit a fair $19,000 for its second stanza at the 1,550-seat Curran, with house scaled to $3.60.

'Diamond Lil' Mild $18,000 in Cleveland

Cleveland, March 7.

Mae West in "Diamond Lil" drew a mediocre $18,000 in eight performances at the Hanna here last week.

Show is splitting current week between the Hartman, Columbus, O., and the Taft Aud., Cincy.

B'way Biz Takes Brutal Beating; But Marches-'Sleep' $13,200 in 4, 'Pacific,' 'Blondes,' 'Party' Sell Out

Legit attendance on Broadway, as in the rest of the country, nosedived last week. Combination of factors, including Lent, the brownout, cancellation of trains, unseasonably cold weather and the imminent deadline for income tax returns, knocked business for a spinner. The aggregate gross for all 29 shows was 69.12% of capacity, a drop of $7.23% from the previous week.

"Rat Race" folded Saturday night (4). There are no scheduled closing and only one opening this week.

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), M (Musical), O (Operetta).

Other parenthetic figures refer, respectively, to top price, number of seats and capacity gross. Price includes 20% amusement tax, but grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of tax.

"All You Need Is One Good Break," Mansfield (3d wk) (D-$4.80; 1,041; $26,000). New backers are making an uphill fight to keep the show going; under $5,000 again.

"Arms and the Girl," 46th St. (5th wk) (M-$6; 1,319; $39,000). Theatre parties helped the Nanette Fabray show buck the trend; up to $37,600.

"As You Like It," Cort (6th wk) (C-$4.80-$6; 1,064; $27,000). Katharine Hepburn starrer got nearly $25,000.

"Bird Cage," Coronet (2d wk) (D-$4.80; 1,027; $27,000). First full week for the Arthur Laurents meller grossed almost $11,000.

"Caesar and Cleopatra," National (11th wk) (CD-$4.80-$6; 1,172; $30,000). Reacted to the trend; nearly $20,500.

"Clutterbuck," Biltmore (13th wk) (CD-$4.80; 920; $22,600). Also felt the downbeat, but Sunday performances may help; $10,200.

"Cocktail Party," Miller (7th wk) (C-$4.80; 940; $21,600). One of the three smashes that sold out at all performances; $21,600.

"Come Back, Little Sheba," Booth (3d wk) (D-$4.80; 712; $20,000). New Theatre Guild offering hasn't picked up as anticipated; $12,800.

"Death of a Salesman," Morosco (56th wk) (D-$4.80; 914; $23,800). Prize-winner also felt the rough b.o. conditions; $18,500.

"Detective Story," Hudson (50th wk) (D-$4.80; 1,016; $23,700). Likewise dipped; over $15,000.

"Devil's Disciple," Royale (2d wk) (C-$4.80-$6; 1,035; $27,500). Return of Maurice Evans was a factor in the lively trade for first full week; $20,800.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," Ziegfeld (13th wk) (M-$6; 1,628; $48,200). Another of the three shows that hit the gross limit; $48,200.

"Happy Time," Plymouth (6th wk) (C-$4.80; 1,603; $29,000). Another smash that had empty pews, but standees at some performances lifted the gross to nearly $27,600.

"Howdy, Mr. Ice of 1950," Center (41st wk) (R-$3-$2.88; 2,964; $58,000). Hit the skids with the field; about $21,000.

"I Know My Love," Shubert (18th wk) (CD-$4.80; 1,391; $33,000). Also reacted with the field; $23,000.

"Kiss Me, Kate," Century (61st wk) (M-$6; 1,645; $46,700). Holdover smash dipped to $43,500.

"Lost in the Stars," Music Box (18th wk) (M-$5.40; 1,012; $26,600). Again felt the general slide; $24,000.

"Member of the Wedding," Empire (9th wk) (D-$4.80; 1,082; $24,000). Didn't go clean all performances, but standees bolstered the gross; almost $24,000.

"Miss Liberty," Imperial (34th wk) (M-$6.60; 1,400; $44,500). With the out-of-town closing of "Heart of the Matter," this Berlin-Sherwood musical is now slated to continue indefinitely; starts Sunday performances next week, with the top reduced to $4.80; sagged under $20,000.

"Mister Roberts," Alvin (107th wk) (CD-$4.80; 1,360; $34,300). Even the Leland Hayward powerhouse felt the slow pace; $27,100.

"Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep," Broadhurst (1st wk) (D-$4.80-$6; 1,160; $29,500). Fredric March-Florence Eldridge show opened Thursday night (2) to one favorable notice, six pans and one on-the-fence; first four performances grossed $13,200 (plus $9,700 for three previews).

"Rat Race," Barrymore (11th wk) (CD-$4.80-$6; 1,066; $30,000). Garson Kanin play closed Saturday night (4) after 84 performances; final registered $16,000.

"South Pacific," Majestic (48th wk) (M-$6; 1,659; $50,200). Grossed the maximum as usual; $50,600.

"Texas, L'il Darlin," Hellinger (15th wk) (M-$6; 1,543; $42,000). Slipped with the field; $25,500.

"The Innocents," Playhouse (4th wk) (D-$4.80; 819; $18,700). Also felt the heavy going; $13,000.

"The Man," Fulton (7th wk) (D-$4.80; 966; $23,000). Chiller also eased a trifle; $7,700.

"Touch and Go," Broadway (21st wk) (R-$4.80; 1,900; $46,300). Move to this larger house at a reduced b.o. scale didn't register the first week, but may begin to hypo biz this week; about $22,000.

"Velvet Glove," Golden (11th wk) (CD-$4.80; 1,160; $18,100). Hit by the general off-beat; $7,900.

"Where's Charley?" St. James (72d wk) (1,509; $37,800). Also reacted downward; $29,300.

Opening

"Tobacco Road," 48th Street (CD-$3; 917; $15,000). Negro-cast edition of Jack Kirkland drama, adapted from Erskine Caldwell novel, presented by Kirkland; production cost $15,000 and can break even at about $8,500; opened Monday night (6).

Future Dates

"The Consul," March 15, at Barrymore; "Great To Be Alive," March 23, at Winter Garden; "Wisteria Trees," March 29, at Martin Beck; "Cry of the Peacock," April 6, at Mansfield; "Peter Pan," at unspecified theatre.

TALLULAH-'LIVES' $18,500 IN 4 STANDS

Wilmington, March 7.

Tallulah Bankhead in "Private Lives" wound up four engagements last week with a fair $18,500. Show took in $3,100 at the Strand, Elmira, Monday (27); $3,300 at Kalurah Temple, Binghamton, Tuesday (28); $5,000 at the Lyric, Allentown, Wednesday and Thursday (1-2), and $7,100 at the Playhouse here Friday and Saturday (3-4).

Show is at the Locust, Philadelphia, this week.

'Roberts' Nifty $34,900 In Week at Hartford

Hartford, March 7.

Considering generally murderous conditions everywhere, "Mr. Roberts," with John Forsythe and James Rennie in the lead roles, rang up an excellent gross of $34,900 in eight performances at the Bushnell Aud. here last week. Show took in a sensational $8,200 Saturday (4) night.

Play is current at the Colonial, Boston.

No. 2 'Streetcar' Weak $10,000 in Milwaukee

Milwaukee, March 7.

Factory shutdowns and a severe cut in communication facilities left the No. 2 company of "Streetcar Named Desire" with a weak $10,000 for eight performances at the Davidson here last week. Business was slow all week, but picked up Saturday with news that the coal strike was near an end.

Show, with Judith Evelyn and Ralph Meeker, is current at the Lyceum, Minneapolis.

'Chaillot' $19,100, Det.

Detroit, March 7.

"Carmen Jones," Civic Light Opera's 10th and last production of the season, did a good $50,000 last week.

Reopening after a month's hiatus, the Cass took in $19,100 for the first week of "Madwoman of Chaillot," starring Martita Hunt. Play remains another week.

Shubert turns on light next Sunday (19) for first time in two months to present Blackstone, the magico.

BARRETTS $5,300, RICHMOND

Richmond, March 7.

Susan Peters, playing "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," drew a $5,300 gross for four performances (27-29) in the 1,282-seat WRVA theatre here last week.

Show played at a $3.15 top.

Veteran producer Henri Varna, who also has the Casino de Paris, and is in many show ventures, has again turned out one of his typical mogador good-for-over-a-year extravaganzas. It has all that's necessary—very colorful sets and costumes, good though reminiscent music, a large and well-costumed cast, a good comedy team, and above all a new appealing star. She's Marta Labarr, who in private life is Mrs. Guy des Cars, wife of the scripter, and who has more than just looks and a voice. She has a pleasing, refined personality, and at a time when Paris is short of leading ladies for musicals and revues, is a find.

The story shows the life of a ballerina of the Paris Opera who, shortly before the 1870 Franco Prussian war, has an affair with a young lieutenant of Hussars. The war snatches him away just as they are to be married, and when he does not turn up after the war and a girl has been born to her, she takes herself off to the U. S. for a ballet tour of several years. He turns up finally, for a happy ending.

This gives producer Varna a chance to introduce costumes of several periods, starting with Napoleon III and switching to the French Republic. Dresses a la Winterhalter also switch to the 1880 period. Title comes from the fact that, at the start, Princess Mathilde, one of Napoleon's relatives, after a ballet at the Opera, presents the ballerina with a diamond star at the beginning of the show.

Acting and singing of Miss Labar is well supported by Jean Chesnel, a matinee idol type who has a voice. Varna has given them some of the colorful sets for which his Casino de Paris experience stood him well.

Isabelle Fusier, as a ladies' maid, and Fernand Gilbert, as an ex-Opera doorman who becomes a coachman, form an excellent pair of comedians. Other main parts are Ana Beresi, as the menace, a former Opera dancer jealous of the star; Robert Allard, as the faithful ballet master, and Rene Bechet, as an old roue. Special mention goes to Christiane Cheikh, as a colored soubrette.

Dansipation is important in the show and has been well staged by Maud Mansfield. Odette Desforges, Rose May and Jacqueline Debriel give a performance better than the excuse for ballet given in most shows. The lines of boys and girls have been well picked, and the costumes are colorful enough to make them look their best.

Show is slightly too long and will have to be pared down. Vincent Scotto's music is too reminiscent of his former numerous scores. It is well batoned by Paul Florendas. But all told it is a good buy for the public, and they react very favorably. It is sure to catch the tourists who don't have to savvy French to enjoy it. Maxi.

Annie Du Far West
(Annie Get Your Gun)

Paris, March 2.

Maurice Lehmann presentation of operetta in two acts (20 scenes), with music by Irving Berlin; adapted by Andre Mouezy-Eon from the libretto by Herbert and Dorothy Fields; lyrics by Albert Willemetz. Directed by Lehmann. Costumes and scenery by Deuking. Choreography by Victor Gsevsky. At the Theatre du Chatelet, Paris.

Annie	Lily Fayel
Frank Butler	Marcel Merkes
Cossard	Pierjac
Dolly	Jane Montange
Winnie	Jacqueline Lejeune
Tommy	Jack Claret
Buffalo Bill	Bernard Dumaine
Pawnee Bill	Sam-Max
Sitting Bull	Florencie
Freddy	Marcel Ballin
President Fallieres	Vilder

Christiane Hubert, Beatrice Hosena and Witaly Osins, principal dancers

Annie and her gun have settled into the Chatelet for what looks like an indefinite stay in this house of notable long runs, and it's safe to bet that Irving Berlin's music will be heard everywhere in a matter of weeks. Andre Mouezy-Eon has done a fine job of adapting the original book, and most of its humor comes over fine in French. What changes there are, are on the whole concessions to the Chatelet tradition, which has always gone in for spectacle with a capital S. Hence the finale of the first act represents the Paris World's Fair of 1900, with the Eiffel Tower and the Ferris Wheel in the background, with then President Fallieres welcoming the Buffalo Bill shows to Paris, with their horses, clowns and, strangely enough, elephants. It's a rousing and colorful finale, however, and suits the audience to a T.

It would be hard to find anyone in France who could outdo Lily Fayel as Annie. She has looks, humor, dances well, and has undoubtedly studied records of Ethel Merman in order to put her songs over —which she does in no uncertain manner. Florencie is a great favorite with the audience as Sitting Bull (Taureau Assis in French), and Marcel Merkes as Frank Butler displays a good voice if somewhat wooden acting. An outstanding success is made by Pierjac as Cossard, particularly in his extremely funny scene as the "inside of the tiger," and Jack Claret as the elephant trainer and Jacqueline Lejeune as his girl score too, although their dancing leaves much to be desired.

The scenery and costumes, especially the latter, are stunning, particularly in the Brevoort Hotel Ballroom scene, in which the corps de ballet does the outstanding dancing of the evening. Maurice Lehmann's direction of the production keeps it moving at a rapid pace, and the orchestra, directed by Felix Nuvolone, gives full value to Berlin's score. All in all, it's a fine evening's entertainment. Fred.

Glass Menagerie

Dublin, March 1.

Stanley Illsley-Leo McCabe presentation of drama by Tennessee Williams. Setting designed by Jo Mielziner. Directed by Terance Noble. At Gaiety, Dublin, Feb. 27, '50.

The Mother	Bessie Love
Her Son	Stanley Illsley
Her Daughter	Josephine Griffin
Gentleman Caller	Leo McCabe

Bessie Love scored the success of the evening at the first Irish presentation of "Glass Menagerie," and got big welcome from a slightly-puzzled audience which seemed to find itself in some difficulty about what Tennessee Williams was getting at. Critics all were in praise of play.

Accents are indeterminate, and players—apart from Bessie Love—sometimes let their diction slip. Stanley Illsley gives a good performance, but is a prime offender on diction in commentaries; Josephine Griffin, a newcomer to Dublin, reaches her strength in the second act after a weak and shaky start. Leo McCabe's Gentleman Caller is a restrained piece of work, toned to the piece. Mack.

The Purple Fig Tree

London, Feb. 25.

Emile Littler presentation of drama in two acts by George Ralli. Directed by Joel O'Brien. At Piccadilly, London, Feb. 25, '50.

Tony Lambert	Valerie White
Dr. Costa	Ferdy Mayne
Stephan Nicolaou	Andrea Malandrinos
Spiros	Nino Pastellides
Simon Lambert	Arthur Hill
Droshka	Paul Demel
Countess	Margaret Rawlings
Jacques Breval	Jack Hawkins
Prof. Carmichael	Gibb McLaughlin
Paul Nicolaou	Michael Yannis
Col. Coumbaras	Antony Holles

Despite a number of excellent artists and conscientious support from director and colorful surroundings, this drama of modern Greece has the effect of a damp squib. Its dramatic theme, which could be seen to much better advantage as a scenario, seems pallid in its execution and neither story nor interpretation are wholly convincing. Its chances are negligible and not improved by the unsettled state of the capital following the election.

Jack Hawkins wrestles manfully with the complex character of a French sea-captain who hunts up old buddies in a small Greek seaport. He is eager to participate in smuggling out of the country a newly unearthed priceless statue. He gets involved in a blood feud that ends in murder by his young accomplice, who liquidates a collaborator who had betrayed his two brothers to the enemy during the occupation.

There's a femme fatale who slinks in and out and flits from the arms of a young American business man into the more robust embraces of the sailor. Even Margaret Rawlings' skill scarcely brings her to life, and when she confesses to the murder to save her lover it all seems very unreal. The real culprit owns up to the crime but, as the victim had been false to his country, officialdom decides to turn a blind eye.

The wife of the American, knowing of his infidelity, decides their ways must part—he to return home, she to become a nurse and remain. Parts are nicely played by Valerie White and Arthur Hill, and it isn't their fault that their roles are so innocuous.

The supporting parts are more colorful and register more emphatically, notably Michael Yannis as the young hothead. Andrea Malandrinos, Antony Holles and Paul Demel are good, with Gibb McLaughlin turning in a neat characterization as an imperturbable Scottish professor. Clem.

Primrose and the Peanuts

London, Feb. 28.

Pat Nye & John Penrose presentation of comedy in three acts by Peter Wildeblood, in collaboration with Oriel Ross. Directed by Gordon Crier. At Bedford, Camden Town, London, Feb. 27, '50.

Mabel Pitchforth	Ambrosine Pillpotts
Norman Pitchforth	John Penrose
Guy Harding	Bill Shine
Sister Holmes	Pat Nye
Melanie Boulton-Grey	Joan Lang
Primrose Mallet	Annabel Maule
Chomba	Glyn Lawson
Shinyanga	Orlando Martins

Contrary to expectations, this is not a political satire on the government's over-publicized groundnut undertaking, but is a farcical comedy with a Northern Rhodesian setting. It's mainly an unsophisticated romp and is not sufficiently mature to measure up to present-day West End standards. The setting provides the opportunity for caricaturing officers in the colonial service, and the slender plot of confused identities a simple vehicle for developing the farcical situation. Dialog has rare flashes of real humor, but generally speaking is pedestrian and colorless.

The plot doesn't demand any subtleties in acting and the capable cast has no difficulties with its roles. Bill Shine stands out as a British groundnut planter, and John Penrose and Ambrosine Phillpotts are the husband and wife who are mistakenly led to believe that income tax would be cheaper if they were to divorce and live in sin. Annabel Maule is too obvious as the colonial office inspector who hides a natural glamor under a pair of sunglasses. Myro.

Ballet Theatre, of N. Y., will give eight performances during the first week of the Edinburg International Festival of Music and Drama. Stint is set from Aug. 30 to Sept. 9.

Weitman's Ideas

phasis now to why they should go to our theatres.

"Sitting around worrying about television isn't going to get us any place. We've got to use the resources we have at hand—and we've got plenty of them—to recreate enthusiasm for pictures and picture people. We can give them crowds and thrills and excitement. How excited can you get sitting in front of your TV set?

"Let's take our best resources—star names—and use them to light up that old fire. We did it for charity during the war. The time has come for some charity at home. Let's get groups of top name people and tour them through the country. We know what an attraction they are in person from the experience we had during the war and the excitement we can cause with a single star in person now. Let's make the biggest noise and tumult any town's ever seen. Let's show them what we have that television hasn't."

Star Caravans

Weitman's idea is for each studio to sponsor a tour made up principally of its own players or for all the studios to join together to set up touring units. A number of them would be needed so that all the major cities could be covered and it wouldn't necessitate any single player being away from Hollywood too long.

"The Clark Gables, the Spencer Tracys, Gary Coopers, and Jimmy Stewarts will all have to go along, whether they like it or not," Weitman declared. "They're fighting for their lives even more than we are. They'd better join the rescue expedition."

Star tour was one of the suggestions put before the Council of Motion Picture Organizations as a b.o. booster. With Theatre Owners of America and other exhib groups now aiming to keep the new industry public relations setup a minor, volunteer-type organization, it appears unlikely that it would be in position to finance a series of Hollywood caravans. Other auspices will probably have to be found if they are to become a reality.

Aside from the star tours, Weitman feels that his own action in booking Bob Hope and Jane Russell into the Broadway Paramount currently is a contribution to the kind of showmanship now vitally needed.

"Bringing in Hope and giving him 50% of the gross receipts was a gamble," Weitman declared. "But even if we take a loss on it, I feel it is worthwhile. It's re-firing interest in Broadway. What we need is more excitement on the street and this is one way of giving it to them. Figure what it means to Broadway when we get 250,000 people into the Paramount in two weeks.

"This isn't the last of these big shows for us and I hope that the Roxy and the Capitol and the Strand follow up quick with some equally big ones. That will do us all a lot of good. We've got to be showmen and stop concentrating on how to save a dollar. One concentration has to be on how to spend an extra buck to bring in a lot of extra ones."

Confession Open In Canada

The term "confession" cannot be registered as a trademark in Canada and the whole confession magazine market in that country is wide open, according to an Exchequer Court judgment, which dismissed a Fawcett Publications suit in Toronto against Alexander Valentine which sought to prevent latter's publishing of magazines similar to True Confessions. Fawcett Publications was also ordered to pay court costs.

The Canadian judgment refused the Fawcett plea that the use of the term "confession" by the Toronto publisher was an infringement on the title of True Confessions magazine and that the Valentine books be kept off Canadian news racks. The judgment also found that the title, True Confessions, is a "purely descriptive title which had not acquired a secondary meaning and should never have been registered as a trademark in Canada." The court also refused the Fawcett application for a renewal of the True Confessions title registration and said that "confessions" is not a registerable word. Valentine is now permitted to put out Torrid Confessions, Intimate Confessions or any other magazine title incorporating the I-did-it angle.

'Next Week—East Lynne!'

"Next Week—'East Lynne!'" by Gladys Hurlbut (Dutton; $3) is a book that was written with greasepaint for a typewriter ribbon! Here is a story about a stock company leading lady that tells all, and I mean all. It's always nice to read a book about show biz by someone who is qualified to write it. Here is a leading lady of stock, the schoolhouse of the legit, who knows what it is all about and writing it in a way that proves it.

The gal is hep, and anybody who has enjoyed the old stock companies, students of the theatre, and especially actors, will enjoy this book because it is honest and sincere.

She writes about her career in stock in a way that is more intimate than an X-ray picture. She writes it with humor and understanding.

Miss Hurlbut is no stranger to Broadway and Hollywood, both as a playwright, scenarist and actress although this is her first book. She wrote five plays, her first, "By Your Leave," starring Howard Lindsay who, with his wife, Dorothy Stickney, years later was to insist on bringing her back to Broadway for the original company of "Life With Father." She also wrote "Lovers' Meeting," "Ring 2," "Higher and Higher" (in collaboration with Joshua Logan) and "Yankee Point," besides many screen plays. Incidentally, she is house-guesting with the Lindsays while east. Tallulah Bankhead is reviewing the book for the N. Y. Times next Sunday and Patricia Collinge ditto for the Herald Tribune.

It is the best history of stock company theatricals that I have ever read. It would make a great picture. Joe Laurie, Jr.

Pitt's Parry Retires

Florence Fisher Parry, actress, drama critic and columnist, has retired from the Pittsburgh Press, Scripps-Howard daily, after 21 years of turning out her daily pillar, "I Dare Say." She's going to make her home in Hollywood with a son, David Parry, former Samuel Goldwyn p.a. and now in the advertising agency business on the Coast.

Mrs. Parry, onetime leading lady for Otis Skinner and Walker Whiteside, first entered the newspaper field in 1927 turning out theatre pieces for the old Pittsburgh Sun, switching to the Press two years later. At first she covered shows for a while, later dropping that stint to concentrate on "I Dare Say," although continuing to write an amusement page article for the Press every Sunday. Her regular column, however, covered a wide variety of fields and was liberally spiked with estimates of entertainments and theatrical personalities.

Public Opinion Suspends

Public Opinion, weekly magazine published in Canton, O., for the past three and a half years, has suspended publication (3), because of lack of reader interest, said Felix Hinkle, publisher. He said a majority of people wasn't interested today in the trend of events or the repercussions of governmental control.

Magazine reached a peak circulation of 3,000. Hinkle said he did not suspend the weekly because of financial pressure, but because of a feeling of futility.

Hardboiled Literature?

Book trade derides the idea of television cutting into reading habits of the American public but does sees one possible manifestation, as result of the growing TV vogue.

That is a new school of hardboiled fiction, as antidote to the prissy stuff on the video. In a measure, that goes also for the denatured treatment of virile stories under Hollywood restrictions in film productions.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Bedside Manor, March 3.

One of the things which distinguishes big time from the second-runs of journalism is how they follow up a story. The same goes for reporters.

For eight years I've wanted to know what happened to a play which was to open on Broadway on the night of Dec. 8, 1941. It was called "The Sailor Takes a Wife." It was to star Jose Ferrer. I thought I had tracked it down a few weeks ago. Warners released a pic called "The Sailor and the Lady." But that wasn't it.

The day before the play was to open M. Lincoln Schuster beat me for once to a story. He told me that Pearl Harbor had just been bombed by the Japs.

A lot of things went on as usual the day after that catastrophe, but apparently the opening of "The Sailor Takes a Wife" was not among them. So when eight years later Jose Ferrer dropped in to Bedside Manor for a spot of tea, the first thing I wanted to know was what had happened to that play. "Did it ever open anywhere?"

He said it never opened, not that night nor any other night, because the blowing up of Pearl Harbor took his whole cast away.

"The play," he explained, "involved a lot of frivolity among naval officers at Pearl Harbor, and the country club character of our defenses there had become painful instead of amusing by Dec. 8, 1941."

"Couldn't you get it ready just before the next catastrophe, change the name to 'The Sailor Takes An H-bomb' or something?"

"With such a title I doubt if I would be able to line up any investors," he said.

He smiled a tired smile through a flock of whiskers, a plaid shirt, a tie only I could love and a sports jacket which looked as if it had been blown from Mickey Cohen's wardrobe by a prewar bomb. His clothes were loud, but his voice was quiet. "And beautiful," the girls around Bedside Manor like to add.

That's what I guess a good actor likes about Hollywood. Once he gets over the problem of how to dress for the rat race, he can calm down and be himself between parts to which he is expected to contribute more than the writer did.

Who's Who On the Bill of Ferrer

This Jose Ferrer is no relation to Mel Ferrer, though Mel Ferrer has a brother named Jose Ferrer. To add a little more to the confusion, all of them went to Princeton. But Mel Ferrer's brother Jose is a heart specialist, whereas Hollywood's Jose Ferrer is a painter between picture parts.

In time Hollywood's Jose may leave show business entirely to Mel Ferrer, because he wants to do two things: be an opera singer and a painter. He is more likely to become a painter first, because he is already working at that.

Most critical opinion (with no intent to break up the old Front Populaire any more than life has already) has referred to Actor Jose as the guy whose performance of Iago in "Othello" stole the show from Paul Robeson's Othello. Asked about this, Actor Jose answers in a quiet voice, which is hard to reconcile to those loud shirts, "I never heard of Iago not stealing the show? Did you? Othello is a much harder part to play. But Iago is a much more interesting character."

Actor Jose isn't the sort who would remind you that this particular production of "Othello" broke a record with 158 performances and it was at Paul Robeson's insistence that Ferrer was raised to co-stardom.

For such a quiet guy you can scratch him anywhere and get an unusual response. Everyone told him that "Cyrano de Bergerac" would be even a bigger failure than "The Ladder," but he played it and it turned in a great success. He will now star in it as a Stanley Kramer picture.

Bull Session Among Bullfighters

Knowing he was born in Puerto Rico, I asked him how he would like to play a bullfighter. There is ample evidence around that on occasion he has proved braver than any bull.

He said he'd like to very much. I suggested "Montes the Matador," which Metro has as a property. I had always thought this was the best story ever written about a bullfight, but it came out a few years after "Carmen" and for the next 50 years had to play second fiddle to that classic. Frank Harris wrote it.

Henry Rogers, who looks like an autograph hound's idea of what a movie actor looks like (as opposed to Jose Ferrer, who doesn't look like an actor even to me), was sitting in on the bull session. He asked if that wasn't the guy who wrote "The Octopus."

"Frank Harris?" I asked. "Don't you mean Frank Norris?"

Rogers put his hand to his head and staggered from the room. This foot-fault eliminated Rogers and put the master and the mugg into the finals, where they had been from the beginning.

Though not one to rush to the defense of bullfighting on all fronts, Ferrer is Latin enough to know it calls for a lot of personal courage. Americans don't talk about the "manly art of bull-dogging and branding" and if the British would stop being disgusted about bullfighting the Latins would lay off being disgusted about fox-hunting, he said.

I told him that in the south of France I had seen bullfighting that involved no daggers but took a lot of courage and a lot of skill, even so. The fighter had a long pole and used it much as our polevaulters do. In fact I thought it was lots more exciting than either the traditional Spanish or Mexican bullfight, and certainly left a good deal less gore around the arena for those Americans among the spectators who don't like the sight of blood (it says here). So if you read one day that Jose Ferrer played the part of "Montes the Matador" magnificently, remember you read it here first.

Meanwhile, he is going to keep on painting between pictures. "The next one I make," he said, "whether good, bad or indifferent, is for you."

Lest this be brought out by some future congressional committee (between building up its own swindle sheet) as proof of a predated bribe for an unspecified good notice, I want you to remember that you read that here first, too!

How Much If Printed With Iodine?

In Ferrer's defense I'm sure it could be easily proved that when it comes to paintings, his own or anybody else's, he is as bereft of guile as St. Francis of Assisi. He told me about an auction he had attended recently in Beverly Hills. All the culture chumps in the picture biz were there.

"I bought four paintings that I liked," said Ferrer. "They came to $1,000. I don't have $1,000 to throw away on fakes so I called up an art dealer the next night. I told him I'd bought the paintings because I liked them, not because of the signatures at the bottom. 'All I'm asking you,' I said, 'is how much can I get for these things if I have to unload?' He said probably not more than $15 or $20. 'For all four?' I asked. He said for all four. 'What about the frames?' 'Including the frames,' he said. I called up the auctioneer. I quoted the art dealer. I asked if I might return the paintings. He said, "Sure, any time'."

By then Rogers had returned to the seminar. "I bought one for $110," he said.

"It seems in the art world it doesn't matter whether paintings are genuine or not," explained Ferrer. "If Knoedler, Wildenstein or Rosenwald authenticates them for you, that settles it. Even if the paintings are fakes, in fact, they will sell as authentic masterpieces on resale from now till doomsday."

Well, that's one kind of picture business. But Hollywood would never go for it. In fact right new they're trying to get Picasso to play the role of a Left Bank painter, even if he looks the part. At least that's a switch from "The Jolson Story" days.

OBITUARIES

SID GRAUMAN

Sid Grauman, 71, Hollywood theatre impressario, died of a heart ailment in the Cedars of Lebanon hospital there, March 5.

Details on page 26.

LEW LEHR

Lew Lehr, 54, film comedian and newsreel exec, died in Brookline, Mass., at the Christian Science Benevolent Assn. sanatorium March 6. Lehr, who was well-known for his comedy newsreel commentary and his line, "monkeys is the cwaziest people," retired several years ago. He was short subjects editor for Fox Movietone News until his retirement.

Lehr started in show business as member of a comedy act before World War I and appeared with J. C. Mack's "Mother Goose." In 1920, he married Anna Leonhardt, professionally known as Nancy Belle, who toured with the troupe.

Lehr later left the stage and became a gag writer, supplying material to Texas Guinan, Bert Lahr, Bea Lillie and others. In partnership with silent film player Johnny Walker, he produced two comedy pictures with scenes from old films. A few years later, he made "Tintype" and "Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman." In 1932, he joined Fox Movietone as editor.

Lehr latched on to his Pennsylvania Dutch accent after injecting it into an account of the training of Berlin streetcar conductors. From that time on, he became associated with a zany dialect comedy and his list of accents included all brands of English from Cockney to Mayfair.

He also appeared on radio in the program, "Stop Me If You've Heard This One" and wrote mag articles.

His wife and daughter survive.

WILLIAM J. McKENNA

William J. McKenna, 69, songwriter who composed "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" "Down In the Old Neighborhood" and nearly 100 other songs, died in Medical Center, Jersey City, March 4.

Shortly after the turn of the century he collaborated with Tom Walters in writing the music for "The Mayor of Laughland." Then, with John T. Hall, he wrote "Half Way to Paris." Other musical shows he wrote were "The Mazuma Man" with George Sidney and three with B. A. Rolfe, "The Bride Show," "The Leading Lady" and "The Purple Lady." Later he wrote "Joyland" with Clarabelle Jerome and a light opera, "The Road to Mandalay," with Creste Vessella.

In 1937 McKenna wrote two songs for the student body of Villanova College, "Let's Go Villanova" and "The Fight Song." He was connected with the National Broadcasting Co. for seven years.

Survived by wife, daughter and two sons.

PETER F. SHANLEY

Peter F. Shanley, 72, last of the seven Shanley brothers, well-known N. Y. restaurateurs of pre-prohibition days, died in New York, March 1.

Thomas, the eldest brother, in the '90s established the first Shanley's at 23d Street and Sixth Avenue, then one of the crossroads of the amusement world.

When the center of night life of the city moved uptown, the Shanley brothers moved their restaurant to Broadway and 30th Street, later to Broadway and 43d Street, where the Paramount Building now stands.

Prohibition killed Shanley's as it killed many famous restaurants of pre-prohibition glamour.

After leaving the Broadway site, Peter Shanley ran Shanley's Yonkers, and then the Pell Tree Inn on Pelham Parkway. For the last 15 years he had been manager of the Commodore hotel bar.

Surviving are his wife, a son and three daughters.

MILTON SCHWARZWALD

Milton Schwarzwald, 58, motion picture pioneer and head of Universal-International's music department for the last four years, died March 2 in Hollywood after a heart attack while sitting at his desk on the lot.

A concert violinist at the age of nine, Schwarzwald opened a store front nickelodeon in Chicago in 1907. Later, as an arranger for Leo Feist, he made special arrangements for Al Jolson and other singers. He arranged and conducted music for such shows as "Molly Darling," "Be Yourself," "Tip Toes" and "The Desert Song."

On the screen he produced more than 100 musical shorts and for a time functioned as executive producer at Universal. He became the studio's music chief when Universal merged with International in 1946.

WILLIAM C. HERMAN

William C. Herman, 68, who had been affiliated with the motion picture industry for 32 years, died in Paterson, N. J., March 3.

Herman, who owned and operated the Hawthorne theatre, Hawthorne, N. J., for the past 20 years, entered the motion picture field in 1918, when he joined Universal Pictures. Shortly after leaving that company, he became general manager of the New York City Exchange, a position he held until 1926.

Surviving are a son, and a sister.

HAROLD WARD

Harold Ward, 71, editor, author and one-time pressagent, died at Sterling, Ill., March 1. He had been in ill health for several years.

Ward teamed with the late Arthur Gillespie in writing songs, sketches and plays. He later did advance work for the Shuberts and William A. Brady.

CARL J. TATZ

Carl J. Tatz, 55, former musical director of radio station WEAN, died March 1 at Edgewood, R. I. He was associated with the Yankee Network affiliate from 1937 to 1944. He spent nine months overseas with the USO, and before joining WEAN had worked with Earl Carroll's "Sketch Book" from 1931 to 1935.

Survived by wife, parents, a son, two sisters and a brother.

TOM DUDLEY

Tom Dudley, 40, assistant director at 20th-Fox, died in his sleep March 2 at his home in Hollywood. His family name was Tom Tinling but he changed to avoid confusion with his brother, James Tinling, a director. He returned last week from a location chore in New Mexico for 20th-Fox.

Survivors are wife, and four brothers.

CHAS. (ZAZA) LUDWIG

Charles (Zaza) Ludwig, 51, one of northern New England's best known dance band leaders, was found hanging from a rafter in the the barn at his home in Manchester, N. H., Feb. 28. A medical official gave a verdict of suicide. The musician had been in ill health.

Survived by wife, mother, two brothers and a sister.

'Gimmick Pix'

cycle of this type and the rush has been less than the wild one that may have been expected in light of the fine grosses being turned in by the two films.

Comedies

Comedies as a whole are fairly well represented on the roster of moneymakers—but are found in equally impressive number on the list of pix which have failed to register with the strength expected. On the solid side are "Francis" (which has the added "gimmick" factor in that it's about a talking mule), "Great Lover" and Adam's Rib." Less fortunate comedies at the b.o. have been "Key to the City," "Dear Wife," "Inspector General" and "Always Leave Them Laughing."

Going down the complete list of those pix which have been playing around the country during the past three months illustrates how diffuse in type the b.o. winners have been. They include "Samson and Delilah,' a super-spectacle; "Cinderella," a Disney cartoon feature; "The Outlaw," a western being sold on years of publicity on its sex angles; "On the Town" and "Jolson," musicals; "Battleground" and "Iwo Jima," war pix; "All the King's Men," political drama; "Pinky," Negro problem, and "Francis," "Great Lover" and "Adam's Rib," comedies.

Doing moderately well, but not so strong comparatively as the other two, is a third war picture, "12 O'Clock High."

Incidentally, differentiations made here in strength or weakness of films should not be construed as indicating whether or not they'll be profitable—which, naturally, hinges on their cost. Analysis, rather, is a reflection of trade opinion on how well the films did compared with expectations for them based on their star and production values.

Aside from their comparative success over the past few months—when the b.o. has been at its stickiest since the war—the "gimmick pictures," as they've come to be known in the trade, have proved profitable for the past few years. This is a further incentive for producers to hunt for scripts on unusual themes. Needless to say, they are both difficult to find and difficult to make properly. Stanley Kramer succeeded with "Home of the Brave," on the Negro problem, and industryites are watching carefully to see if he can repeat with another, "The Men," a story of paraplegic war vets which he just finished filming. Other successful "gimmick pictures" have been "Lost Boundaries" (Negro problem); "Gentleman's Agreement" (anti-Semitism); "Snake Pit" (insane asylum), and "Lost Weekend" (alcoholism).

"Intruder in the Dust," another Negro problem film, and "Hasty Heart," about ill soldiers, also qualify in the "gimmick" class, but failed to score well at the b.o.—indicating once again the well-known difficulty facing production execs of picking future winners on the basis of past experience.

TV Trek West

would grab off the programming honors quickly, once TV got rolling. But, the comparative slowness in stretching the coaxial cable westward and the dissatisfaction on the part of many advertisers with kinescope recordings has retarded the process—that is, until the Fairbanks film system was developed, tested and proved successful.

Fairbanks plan supposedly incorporates the best techniques of both film and video production. System utilizes three cameras, each equipped with a half-hour film magazine and able to shoot simultaneously. Thus, a producer or director can have the long takes and sweeping action of the video lenses but also be able to edit and shoot retakes, as in film. Initial "Silver" program lensed via the system was brought in for about the same budget as previous live shows in the series, but required far less rehearsal time.

Move westward, with its accompanying dependence on film programming, is expected to be battled bitterly by the networks. If the major dramatic shows switch to film, then it naturally follows there will be less work for the network employees, studios, etc., and a consequent drop in their billings. With the possibility of getting more film stars for their video shows, however, the agencies are expected to bypass the networks' objections. Such programs as video, of course, are expected to continue live.

One side-angle to the Fairbanks system is the intensified interest being shown in it by the Hollywood film studios. Because it is far less costly than current production techniques, Coast producers are eyeing it as a possible answer to bringing in their low-budget B's at a cost that would make them pay off in the current market.

show, with Hope taking out $20,000 for one day's work.

Last season, when Hope worked some of the AMA spots, deal was on a straight percentage basis. Arena organization is willing to give Benny the same arrangement. Group believes that since it's willing to take a chance, headliners also should be willing to gamble.

Benny is being submitted elsewhere by Music Corp. of America, and deals are reported in the process of being finalized. Number of dates Benny will do hasn't been determined.

Hope originally started his one-nighter tours at $3,000 guarantee. Last season ante was upped to $5,000 and this season calls for $10,000 guarantee.

Fla. Cafe Merger

Bel Geddes conception of a night club.

What adds to the confusion is reported settlement of litigation in bankruptcy proceedings instigated by creditors last year, wherein Weinger, several weeks ago, assumed responsibility for payment in installments through a three-year period of $175,000 settlement of all claims at an annual arrangement. New corporation heads disclaim any responsibility for same. Thus, picture resolves itself into another hassle, in which Weinger insists he will remain as a key figure. And again, as in negotiations last year (February, 1949,) the conflict of personalities looks to hold off for a time, an actual merger.

Heightening the situation is this factor: That Danny Thomas brought Copa City into the profit-making class, and currently is being topped in receipts by the Milton Berle show. Whereas, across the street, the Beachcomber, which held up with Tony Martin, though not in record-breaking proportion, had figured to sustain its in-the-black take with Sophie Tucker, but was hurt when she succumbed to virus bug and couldn't make shows through Friday night. Word of mouth led to offish biz, though the Copa was jampacked. However, with her return Saturday (4) the Beachcomber filled again. But, the Weinger idea seems to be that, given the right attractions, he can fill his spot to top returns. Next two weeks will tell the story.

Beachcomber supposedly shutters after the Tucker engagement (15). Joe E. Lewis follows Berle into the Copa on the same night. However, Schuyler is reported seeking a top act to follow her until April.

The clampdown on gambling, actually led to shuttering of one spot before its skedded seasonal shutdown — the Boheme — with Golden Shores (Dean Murphy and Lois Lee) continuing (though the casino shut down) until the acts contracts played out on the 7th. And, despite all the newspaper headlines and internescene arguments anent control among state and local politicos, after a week of quiet, sneak—and in many cases—open, bookmaking in the plush hotels is on; one can find a "hidden" location to play the tables; the Hialeah meet closed with record-breaking mutuel takes and attendance, as did Gulfstream on its opening Saturday (4).

Seems the season really started late, and with the cold weather hitting up north lately, clubs, hotels, bars and the books are finding plenty of money type coming down. More so, than at any time during the supposed height (mid-Feb.) of season.

Another prediction being made is this: That even if the merger between the two big Dade Blvd. clubs goes through, another big spot will be around next year, to again hypo the payoffs for "names." And the big talent booking offices are keeping their fingers crossed that this will happen. Right now they're making their pitch on the "one spot" basis, but from the manner in which the acts are reacting, they don't like the idea of going back to a norm in salary.

Brownout Blues

looked like a deserted waterfront area, were burned at the New York State Fuel Administration for its bad timing in imposing and lifting the brownout order. Firstly, the brownout ws slapped on over a weekend when normally peak biz was leveled off. Secondly, the lift order was sent down on a Monday afternoon while Broadway managers felt that the lights could have been switched on over the weekend after news of the coal strike settlement was definitely in.

Nitery biz and restaurants, which were particularly sloughed by the absence of people on the street during the last two weeks, also immediately began to perk even though the first two days of the week are normally slow. It was felt that the only aspect of show business which benefited from the dimout was television, whose in-the-parlor shows garnered heavier viewing.

'SO. PACIFIC' 1-YEAR B'WAY CHAMP

2d Consent Decree (Since '41) Further Curtails ASCAP's Scope and Structure

The power, scope and structure of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers were clipped under terms of the consent decrees filed in N. Y. federal district court yesterday (Tues.). Consent judgments, entered mutually by the Department of Justice and ASCAP, affect virtually every facet of show business in their curtailment of the Society's licensing authority.

One of the decrees covers ASCAP's domestic operations, and the other covers its foreign hookups.

Definitively settling ASCAP's hassle with the television industry, the Society is ordered by the decree to issue, upon request, performing licenses for any composition in its repertory. Also covering radio and wired music services, such as Muzak, the consent decree orders ASCAP to give video licenses on a network scale without requiring separate licenses for each station.

In the film industry the consent decree upholds the decision won by theatre exhibitors over a year ago when ASCAP was enjoined from collecting performance royalties in the form of a seat tax. Under the decree ASCAP's film revenue will derive only from motion picture producers under a single license covering performance and synchronization rights. Licenses with producers can be made either

BENNY 25G 3-DAY OFFER FOR LAS VEGAS NITERY

Las Vegas, March 14.

Jack Benny may play his first nitery date at the highest salary ever given a performer in a cafe. Deal is on for Benny to preem the Desert Inn, Las Vegas, April 24, for three days at $25,000. Sum would cover the rest of comic's airshow personalities including Rochester and Phil Harris. Deal is still to be finalized by Frank Sennes, Cleveland booker, who is setting the talent for the spot.

Negotiations have been in progress for a week with some uncertainty on both sides. Benny has been reported as being wary of playing a cafe, while Sennes admits it would be difficult to book a headliner of equal potency to follow Benny.

Sennes' offer to Benny is believed to be a record for a nitery stand. Proportionately it's higher than what he got on his Roxy theatre, N. Y., date two years ago when he worked for $40,000 plus overages. Salaries of similar magnitude were paid out in Miami Beach this year. Danny Kaye got $25,000 weekly at the Beachcomber and Milton Berle got $4,000 nightly for a stand at Copa City. While latter salaries were for individual performers, it's believed that Benny, in proportion, would still net more on $25,000 for three days even though he has to shell out for support talent.

Charleston's Comeback, And It Ain't the City

The Charleston is not only coming back as a popular terp step among the college and highschool set—it's back. Though the dance, which reached its peak during the '20s, has not developed a noticeable New York following, Coast reports indicate it's in full swing there.

Fred Astaire dance studio reports the Charleston has become a hot request item in the 50 Astaire schools throughout the country. Arthur Murray chain reports that though step isn't in particular demand in its schools, cross-country reports to the New York office indicate it's developing a youthful following.

Bendix's Unique New Hughes Deal OKs TV Plus Pix

Hollywood, March 14.

In a precedent-shattering deal Howard Hughes today (Tuesday) placed William Bendix under a seven-year contract to RKO which permits the actor to appear in television as well as motion pictures. This is the first such contract signed with an actor by a major studio, and Bendix becomes the first star permitted freedom to multiply his earnings through video.

Conjecture is rife as to what effect the RKO-Bendix contract will have on Hollywood talent, since majors have doggedly refused permission to their contractees to ap-

Miami Beach Niteries Convinced There's No Profitable Top Name

Miami Beach, March 14.

Miami Beach cafe operators are now convinced that there's no such thing as a surefire attraction, following the biz debacles of Milton Berle and Danny Kaye. Berle wound up his stand at Copa City with what is estimated to be a $20,000 loss for the management, while the Beachcomber hit a similar deficit with the recent engagement of Kaye.

Trade opinion holds that the saturation point has been reached not only in what operators can shell out for names, but also in tariffs that can be tacked onto the menu. During Kaye's date at $25,000 per week, a $5 beverage minimum was charged, while a $6 liq-

$2,635,000 GROSS TOPS 'SHOW BOAT'

"South Pacific," which completes a year's run April 7, at the Majestic, N. Y., will have grossed a total of over $2,635,000 by then. That's a one-year-run record, even topping the amount piled up by the original production of "Show Boat" during its first year on Broadway.

From present indications, "South Pacific" will have played to the standee limit at every performance for the first year. With a capacity of just under $50,200, the Rodgers-Hammerstein musical has grossed more than $50,600 every week, hitting a total $54,000 for the Christmas-New Year's week, including the New Year's Eve performance at increased scale.

In the case of Florenz Ziegfeld's original "Show Boat" production, which opened in February, 1927, at the Ziegfeld, N. Y., it grossed $52,000 for the first few months, but skidded to under $40,000 a week during the following summer, regained capacity tempo early in the fall, but dropped to under $40,000 again before completing a year on Broadway. Like "South Pacific," it had a $6 top.

Oscar Hammerstein, II, was lyricist and co-author of the books of both "Show Boat" and "South Pacific." Both musicals were

Urge Fed License Of Film People As Public Morals Aid

Washington, March 14.

Sen. Edwin C. Johnson lashed out at the film industry with a scathing attack on the Ingrid Bergman-Roberto Rossellini affair today (Tues.), proposing as an antidote against such attacks on "American morals" a revolutionary system of Federal-controlled licensing for actors, producers and distributors.

Motion Picture Assn. of America issued a formal statement on Johnson's proposed bill last night, declaring it would lead to formation of a virtual police state if adopted. Bill has in it, the statement said, all requisites for strict Government control of all mediums of expression. If it ever becomes law, all freedoms will vanish, according to MPAA.

Claiming that a "stupid film about a pregnant woman and a volcano has exploited America, with the usual finesse, to the mutual delight of RKO and the debased Rossellini." Sen. Johnson introduced his bill on the Senate floor as a method of "protecting the people in the future against that kind of a gyp." Bill will be turned over to the committee on interstate and

'Variety' Publisher Sid Silverman Dies At 51; Son, 18, Inherits Publications

Sid Silverman, publisher of VARIETY and DAILY VARIETY, died at his home in Harrison, N. Y., Friday morning (10) after a lingering illness at the age of 51. He is survived by an only son, Syd, 18, a senior at Manlius (N. Y.) Military School, and his mother, Mrs. Sime (Hattie) Silverman, widow of the founder of VARIETY. Mrs. Sid Silverman, mother of the Manlius undergraduate, died in New York Nov. 12, 1941. She was the former Marie Saxon, musical comedy star who had also had a brief career in Hollywood.

Like his son, Sid Silverman also attended Manlius, where he was an outstanding athlete. He started early as a VARIETY staffer. As Skigie, when he was only 7, he was assigned by Sime to "cover" shows. The prime accent was on vaudeville because,, as the founder of this paper felt, this was the then dominant "family entertainment." Skigie's reviews, while editorially footnoted as "not to be taken seriously," had a certain amount of juvenile sagacity in some of their observations. (A few samples are reprinted herewith. In one, Skigie quite remarkably sounded the keynote for "the movies" at a time when vaudeville was king and "the flickers" were utilized as "chasers," i.e., to insure a more rapid turnover).

Patterned after the Sime signature, almost all VARIETY staffers are limited to a four-letter signature on reviews. Thus Skigie was contracted to Skig, eventually Sid.

The Sime and Sid relationship

'Folies Bergere' On B'way By & With O&J

Olsen & Johnson will present the first American showing of "Folies Bergere" at the Winter Garden, N. Y., some time in November. Deal, still to be finalized, was negotiated last week by Bernard Delfont, British producer, who is to supply sets and several performers from the Paris display.

It's anticipated that some revisions will be made to permit O&J to amble through the proceedings in the role of "American tourists seeing Paris."

O&J have had their greatest success at the Winter Garden, having been continuous tenants there for more than five years with a succession of shows which included "Hellzapoppin,'" "Sons of Fun" and "Laughing Room Only."

Folsom Thinks TV Trailers A Natural for Pix

Frank M. Folsom, president of the Radio Corp. of America, just can't understand why Hollywood doesn't take advantage of television and utilize it for its own purpose—that is, benefit of boxoffice—by trailerizing the new film product over TV. "It's such a natural that I should think it would be the simplest thing for the picture business, resourceful as it is, to produce special video trailers."

"The very contrast of what good pix are in store for the movie fan,"

Demand Exceeds Supply, Bruno, N.Y., Blocks Out Ads on RCA's TV Sets

Bruno-New York, metropolitan area distributor for appliances of several major manufacturers, has temporarily stopped advertising RCA-Victor television sets. The order, which affects radio, video and newspaper ads, is cued in by the fact that consumer demand far exceeds supply and that set output has been hit by the recent coal strike.

The curb will be on for at least 30 days, and perhaps longer. However, where Bruno has advertising contracts (for example, with WNEW, N. Y., its sole AM outlet), copy is being switched to plug other products. Dealer-cooperative ads on RCA tele sets are also being cut. In the past, Bruno has occasionally stopped advertising the TV receivers to ballyhoo other items, but the current order is the most drastic yet issued.

'EQUITY HOTELS' TO AID NEGRO ACTORS ON TOUR

Under the leadership of Actors Equity, a committee is working to improve conditions for Negro actors on tour. The idea is that, besides the obvious injustice of discrimination, the difficulties of touring tend to limit employment. Those affected are mostly Negroes, it's believed, but the dearth of tours available in the south for mixed casts also hits white employment.

The committee, including representatives of various other organizations besides Equity, is first trying to make available better hotel accommodations for Negro players. Such spots would be designated "Equity hotels," and stars as well as regular cast members would be urged to stop at them while on tour. Equal train and eating facilities are also being sought.

Chairman of the committee is Bill Ross. Other members include Ralph Bellamy, Fred O'Neill, Edith Atwater, Cornelia Otis Skinner and James Gelb, of Equity; producers Lee Sabinson and George Brandt, and William Butler, editor of "Travelguide," which lists accommodations throughout the country on the basis of racial discrimination policies.

Sid Silverman Dies at 51

was extraordinary in the Broadway-Hollywood belt, traditionally known for its cynicism about sentimentality. Some of the offkey veneer was studiously hardboiled to cover up the underneath softness. That was the tie between father and son which, in a large measure, Sid passed on to his son. For example, Sime ceded 50% control of VARIETY via a unique news item. This was before the parent paper had established the Hollywood arm known as DAILY VARIETY. The statement was a two-line item under Literati reading: "With this, Sid Silverman will learn that he is now 50% owner of VARIETY." In 1931 Sid's name went on the masthead as president of VARIETY, Inc.

When Sime died on Sept. 22, 1933, he willed the rest of the dominant ownership to Sid, with the exception of a number of shares to certain VARIETY staffers. Among these are the business manager, Harold Erichs, and the present editor, Abel Green. They, along with Sid, comprised the management. Both Green and Erichs continue in the operation, along with Arthur Ungar, who edits DAILY VARIETY. Syd Silverman will attend college until ready to step into the management of VARIETY and DAILY VARIETY, whose majority stock he has inherited.

Manlius Tribute

Manlius, N. Y., March 14.

Manlius Military School here paid its respects to Sid Silverman, one of the top athletes in the academy's history, by dropping its flags at half-mast on Sunday, while funeral services were being held in White Plains, N. Y.

Chaplain William Judge spoke glowingly of the late publisher to the entire student body at chapel services Sunday morning.

When Sid married Marie Saxon, then a reigning Broadway musical comedy star (Clark & McCullough's "The Ramblers," Lyle D. Andrews' "Merry Merry,") Mayor James J. Walker sparked many of the social activities attendant to their romance. They were married by the Rev. John Haynes Holmes at the Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y., on May 31, 1924.

As an alumna of the Saxon Sisters—actually Polly Saxon was her mother; latter died in New York last fall—Miss Saxon continued professionally as a musicomedy ingenue. With the advent of sound she appeared in several Hollywood pioneer filmusicals. About a year before Syd was born on Jan. 23, 1931, Marie Saxon retired professionally.

World's Youngest Critic

As Skigie, Sid Silverman was "the world's youngest" — and ofttimes the "toughest"—theatrical critic. The paper put Skigie's stuff down just as he said it or wrote it, including the many obvious misspellings.

While at Manlius Sid was three-time captain of his football, baseball and basketball teams, and at the same time an honor student with an 85% average. He was a bug on speedboats and fast racing cars.

And he loved to play the trapdrums, sitting in with many a pioneer jazz band, including the Original Dixieland combination at Reisenweber's, with Ted Lewis, and Jimmy Durante's band when he was at Pabst's in Harlem.

When Sid came down from Manlius vacations to visit the family he continued covering the shows, such as the roadhouses or the summer vaudeville at Brighton Beach or Coney Island. In 1913 he made his first voyage to London, crossing on the same boat with Irving Berlin to see the then just discovered "America's ragtime king" wow the Britishers at the Palladium.

During the height of the 1919 White Rats strike, there were reports of "working on Sime through his boy." Sime sent Sid away, with a bodyguard. This was the year a disgruntled actor took a shot at Sime from the street, through the window of the VARIETY office, then situated on the Broadway and 45th street corner where Loew's State theatre now stands. The bullet hit Sime's rolltop desk; he continued editing copy unperturbed.

Weaned on vaudeville, Sid's close association with his father gave him an unusually keen insight on all forms of show business. He grew up with the sundry transitions from vaudeville to presentation houses; saw the pre-Volsteadian "lobster palaces" (Shanley's, Rector's, Reisenweber's) become the speaks of the Prohibition era and nightclubs of post-repeal; saw the silents go talker; the upcoming of radio and the broad horizons of video.

His Vision on Television

Television was a completely new excitement all over again to Sid. He had the same vision about video as did Sime when the latter long anticipated the decadence of vaudeville and the upsurge of films as a popular mass entertainment. To Sid, though, the show was always the thing. Video was just another manifestation—a new medium; a variation of the theme. But, he figured, the fundamentals were the same as in all other media. "You can't fool the customers with poor shows," he said, in television's earliest days, when the TV novelty appeal was dominant. He foresaw how quickly mere novelty must wear off.

Sid had his own ideas on what's right and wrong with video sportscasting. His analyses in VARIETY of sports, camera technique, know-how in projecting the action of the game made sharp impact on TV sportscasters and cameramen.

"Who cares about seeing the pigskin (or baseball) in flight against the sky; show 'em the field action, (the blockers or runners), etc.," he commented in one chairside appraisal.

His editorials were read widely and frequently commented upon. When illness precluded a regular office routine, he pounded out editorials from his Harrison home, and they hit hard. And often. His film reviews especially were studies in objectivity, and a review signed Sid always had the respect of the industry. His credo for reviewing was: "Be hard—but never hard to the point of destroying the people you are reviewing. Make them feel, when they're reading their pan notice, that you're still someone trying to help them out, that you're a friend with an arm around their shoulder giving some friendly advice."

Through the years, as he became more and more immersed in show business and became known as one of its foremost commentators on the passing scene, Sid still maintained a love for sports. Football was his first love, and he traveled far to see a game that caught his fancy. Though he never weighed more than 135 pounds, he was a scrappy quarterback when he was at Manlius and the captain of the team though its lightest member.

He had a terrific sense of humor; he had to in order to organize a baseball team on VARIETY. He dropped the team when a film reporter mistook a winging sparrow for a fly ball. It was the final bird in a losing season.

It was Sid who started a minor sports department on VARIETY, and it he was who wrote a column "picking the football winners" which subsequently was widely copied by syndicated sports prognosticators. "Gosh, I'm really lousy," he laughingly commented on his low average. The next season he fired himself and hired Benny Friedman, the former Michigan Univ. All-American, to make the selections. At one time he so impressed the N.Y. Herald Tribune with his football lore, that he was asked to cover some of the games, which he did as an accredited byliner.

Manlius was originally St. John's-Manlius. Chapel was compulsory. Just as Sid years ago phoned Sime, wanting to know about religous distinctions, so in later years did he tell Syd, "All religion is good; absorb what you want from chapel, reject what you don't believe in."

A simple funeral service was held at McMahon Funeral Home, White Plains, N. Y., on Sunday afternoon (12). Rabbi Lawrence W. Schwartz conducted. There were no eulogies, no pallbearers. Advertised as "private," services were limited only to the immediate family, the VARIETY staffers and intimate friends. General R. W. Barker, head of Manlius, who was on Gen. Eisenhower's staff, came in especially for the services. So did Capt. Leibert D. Sedgwick, faculty officer of Company C, Syd's company, as did Dr. Harry Kallet, a trustee of Manlius and the deceased's football coach at the academy. Cremation followed at Ferncliff, N. Y., where his wife's ashes also repose.

Cantor's Busy Schedule, Both UJA and Concerts

Eddie Cantor leaves Hollywood tomorrow (Thurs.) for a series of concert and speaking dates. He tees off in Pittsburgh March 19 at a dinner for the United Jewish Appeal. Two days later (21), he'll do his one-man Carnegie Hall (N. Y. concert—"My 40 Years in Show Business"—with proceeds going to the children's camp which he helps maintain.

Comedian follows with a Cincinnati speaking date for UJA, March 26; another "40 Years" at the Music Hall, Cleveland, March 26; Detroit for UJA, the following night, and on March 28 lectures at the Masonic Auditorium, Rochester. Cantor is also slated for a talk under UJA auspices in Norfolk, April 2, and winds up his talk-tour by mounting the rostrum at William & Mary College, Williamsburg, Va.

Cantor will tape his "Take It or Leave It" airer for Eversharp in New York March 30 and 31.

Skigie's Reviews at the Age of 10

The following reviews are by Sid Silverman, written in 1909, when he was 10 years old and signed his VARIETY notices under the name of "Skigie." He was then known as "the world's youngest professional critic."

The reviews were printed just as they were written, misspellings and all.

'Skigie' at the Colonial

Thinks Melville Ellis the Best Act in Town, Likes the Animals, and Is Sore on His Mother

("SKIGIE" is 10 years of age. His comment is not printed to be accepted seriously, but rather as the juvenile impression.)

The Colonial was packed this afternoon (Monday matinee). Van Camp came on first and he does some good tricks, and I liked the little pig best and it drank milk from milk bottle just like a baby, and I didn't care so much for the Majestic Four. The funny man wore a suit turned around and they played that same piece ("William Tell") and I'm getting sick hearing it so much.

The program had four people for Felix and Barry and there were only two.

Elfie Fay was mad about something. We could hear her talking about it where we sat and I didn't care for her.

Virginia Harned has a funny nose and I didn't care for her sketch and we had to wait a long time for the curtain to go up for her act and I wonder what was the matter.

Melville Ellis is the best act in town and he played and played until a fresh guy in the gallery said something.

I liked William Gould and I caught onto his stuttering story after a little while and Valeska Suratt looked all right but she can't sing.

The Four Fords used to dance better and I liked the "Lazy Moon" song the girls used to sing better than the one they sing now, and the boys looked fine in the blue suits, and Raffayette's Dogs were good, but not so good as the act with the drunken dog and the man stood on his head on the dog's back and I thought that a good stunt.

I'm sore on my mother because I didn't see the moving, picture and my mother made me skiddoo then. I'd rather see the pictures than a show and when I'm 13 years old I'm going to do what I want to.

Cold at 125th Street Nearly Freezes 'Skigie'

Thinks the 'Green Veil Woman' Would Look Better Were Her Face Fully Covered, and Says the Moving Picture Is Bad

The 125th Street was so cold I almost froze. Howard's Ponies had the greatest finish for an animal act I ever saw. They played the bells all right, but one pony the man had to touch or he wouldn't play. Al Carlton was a tall, thin fellow who sang some songs and told some jokes that were funny.

Emmett Devoe in an act ("In Dreamland") is good. They use fire or something like that in the act, and "The Woman With the Green Veil" only covers half her face, and why don't she cover the whole face. She would look much better, and I didn't like the song she sang.

Ryan and Richfield were next, but I don't think it was Miss Richfield; another lady took her place. Mr. Ryan did a funny little dance. The hit of the show was Alice Lloyd. She sang two new songs and looked nicer than ever. Next was Annette Kellerman. She is the greatest woman diver I ever saw. The "Australian Splash" that she does I can do. She goes in sideways from the springboard. The plays "Diabolo" before she goes in swimming.

"The Angel Child" was the picture and it was rotten.

I almost forgot Ruth Allen (and "Her Johnnies"). They were no better than the pictures. I used to do that drill five years ago with Henriette and Josh.

'Skigie' Claims He Knows a Chorus Girl

Goes to 125th Street; Growls Because It Is Still Cold, and Says Eva Tanguay Had a 'Grouch On'

The first act was Doelsch and Zillbauer (125th Street, Wednesday evening). They play accordeons. They were very bad. A man does tricks with his teeth next (The Kyasyas), and the woman with her hair. I'd like it better if they would quit that shooting.

Barry and Wolford sing songs and talk about themselves. They'd be singing yet but they made the audience shut up, and they were fair. Grace Scott has a very nice act ("Divorcons"). I like the man in the act. The act is funny.

Bobby North went good and he was a riot. That's what Charlie says. There was one girl in our row and she went crazy over Bobby North, and he is very good. Everybody near her was laughing at her and not at Bobby North. Monroe and Mack have a bad act ("Taking the Third Degree"), and I don't think it is funny, but I have seen badder acts than that.

Eva Tanguay is very good, and she has some new songs. She had such a grouch on she wouldn't take a bow and the theatre was packed, and it was as cold as it was the other week before. She sang "I Don't Care," and the leader got mixed up and she said "She's mad again," and she went very well.

"The Naked Truth" is a funny act, and I know one of the chorus girls (Mary Manson), and she's prettier now than when I used to know her, and they have too much singing in it. The sailor that sings is rotten.

'Skigie' Shakes the Hand Of James J. Jeffries

Says He Wouldn't Fight Jeffries, or Jeffries' Son; Wants to Know What 'Falling for the Ladies' Means

The Goyt Trio is fair (Lincoln Square, Monday evening). I like the dogs. One dog did a good trick. Mills and Morris are two girls who make up as minstrel girls and tell jokes and each sings. I didn't care so much for the singing.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lucas did some "Scenes From Dickens," and the only one I knew was "Poor Joe," but I'd rather read football stories than Dickens, and the Musical Spillers are four colored men and one woman and they play different instruments and I liked them because they didn't play noisy ones.

Maude Odell has a new act since I saw her before and behind and the first one was bad and this one is worse and she had six girls with her and when she stood with an American flag and an English flag the gallery yelled. Charles Sweet plays the piano and maybe he can't play. He gave imitations on the piano of a banjo, a harp, a fife and drum corps going up the street, and it was fine.

The big boy was next—James J. Jeffries. He must be more than six feet tall. First he comes on and jumps rope. I liked him. Next he wrestled, then they play ball and he did a good stunt with the chair leaning waybackwards and coming up again.

I met Mr. Jeffries before he came on and I must have looked like a shrimp next to him. He asked me if I would fight him and I said "No," and then he asked me if he had a little boy would I fight him and I said "No" again, and I guess I'm wise. Now I know two fighters, Mr. Jeffries and Kid McCoy.

This was the first time I ever saw Lucy Weston in vaudeville. I saw her before in "The Follies."

QUICK CLEARANCE BOOMERANGS

Ex-Employee Elects Himself to U Bd. In Surprise Move; To Rename Fox

Matty Fox, who failed of re-election to the Universal board last week as the result of the surprise appearance of a stockholder with enough proxies to get himself elected, will be renamed to the directorate within a few weeks.

Shareholder who supplanted Fox on the board in a dramatic coup that had the management momentarily non-plussed is John G. Eidell, a former U statistician, who is now associated with a California stock brokerage firm.

Eidell's success in electing himself to the board at the annual stockholders meeting in Wilmington. Del., last Wednesday (8) is said to represent no criticism of the management. Eidell explained afterward to several of the directors that his action was entirely a personal one and was in no sense an effort to unseat the present executive setup.

It was for that reason that the action was particularly surprising in the election of directors of a major corporation. Proxy fights, in which a group of shareholders attempt to get representation on a board, are not unusual. But, to have an unknown stockholder acting virtually on his own suddenly appear on the scene was particularly disconcerting. U got a brief hint of what would happen in a phone call Eidell made to prexy Nate J. Blumberg in New York the night before the meeting. He said as a courtesy he wanted to

KORDA'S U.S. TRIP TO TESTIFY VS. SELZNICK

Sir Alexander Korda is due in New York from London within the next two weeks. He's coming to testify before special master Robert P. Patterson in his battle with David O. Selznick over "Gone to Earth," which Korda and Selznick produced in England.

Judge Patterson last week viewed a rough black-and-white version of the film in New York in order to see whether or not it adhered to the screenplay. Points at issue are Selznick's charge that Korda made unauthorized charges and his demand that switches be made in the pic. He claims, among other things, that his wife, Jennifer Jones, who stars, will be damaged professionally by the film as it stands.

First hearings in the case will probably be held this week, but they will merely be with the lawyers to set procedural points and future dates.

Michael Powell, who actually produced the film, will also likely come to New York to give testimony. His partner, Ermeric Pressburger, will not make the trip.

Sears Reported OK Now, Due Back in N.Y. Next Wk.

United Artists prexy Grad Sears expects to be back in New York by next week, following a slight heart attack suffered in Palm Beach last Friday (10). Sears has been in a hospital since the attack and his wife flew south to join him. His condition, however, was said not to be serious.

The UA topper has been in communication with his office by phone since the attack. He has been having ticker trouble for the past several years and has been under doctor's orders to take it easy.

'Get-'Em-Out-Fast' Is Current Idea In H'wood Studios

Hollywood, March 14.

Gone are the days when it was not uncommon for a picture to be shelved for a year, two or even three years. System which came into being soon after the outbreak of World War II has been discarded in favor of the fast-order procedure of prep 'em, shoot 'em and release 'em. While an approximate average of 10 months elasped between windup of lensing and date of release for a film during the war years, time difference between canning and release is now down to a little under five months.

With plenty of money to play around with during the plus war years, studios were able to afford to throw a picture into a delayed backlog and wait for just the opportune moment for its release. Policy was especially predominant at Warners, where such films as "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Saratoga Trunk," "The Horn Blows At Midnight," "Cinderella Jones" and "Devotion" were held back from

H'wood Stars in Italy Angled for Cuffo Roles In Tourism Bally Shorts

Washington, March 14.

Enit, the official Italian tourist agency, is planning to make 10 two-reel entertainment shorts with Economic Cooperation Administration's assistance and exhibit them in this country to promote tourist trade to Italy. Project has been quietly under way for several months, it was learned today.

The proposed films would feature American name stars who would be approached to give their services gratis while they are in Italy. Production would be under the supervision of an employee of the ECA Rome office who has produced documentaries in the past on the European recovery program for ECA.

In addition, the films would be shipped to other countries, in each instance to make a profit which could be used by Enit to promote tourism.

The plan includes making a sample two-reeler which would be sent to the United States to show American distributors what the series would be like. Then a contract would be made with one distributor for the entire series. Under the program, the Italian tourist agency would receive 200,000,000 lira from the special technical assistance lira fund, with the shorts averaging 20,000,000 lira apiece in cost. At the present rate of exchange, the lira is 625 to the dollar.

FAST PLAYOFF KILLS BUILDUP

Reduction of clearances by the major film companies, designed for a faster playoff of feature product in order to gain back the negative costs as rapidly as possible, may boomerang on them. According to some exhibitors, too many films clear their territories so fast that often there is no time for the necessary word-of-mouth to build. As a result, these exhibs say, the majors may find they lose more money by reducing clearances than they make up through a faster playoff.

Other exhibs, however, favor the system of clearances presently set up, but only providing the majors do the necessary pre-selling job on them. That theory was put forth at the 20th-Fox showmanship meeting in Chicago last week by indie circuit operator Harry Brandt. He declared he could not go along with the idea of pictures clearing a city too fast, as propounded by United Paramount Theatres prez Leonard Goldenson. But, he said, the majors must concentrate on pushing each film to the hilt prior to its release. In that way, he pointed out, word-of-mouth starts building even before a picture

No Rockefeller $ Now for U.S. Prod.

Financing of any indie production in this country by his outfit was indicated as highly unlikely at the moment by Mord Bogie, prexy of Schroder-Rockefeller, Wall street investment house, yesterday (Tuesday). It was disclosed on the Coast Monday (13) by producer Jack Wrather that he had tied up with the firm for production of a series of films abroad.

Bogie said in New York that the Schroder-Rockefeller group was primarily interested in providing dollar financing for pix to be shot in England and on the Continent. It won't even consider, he declared, the possibility of Hollywood production until it is assured that filmmaking abroad is not satisfactory.

Financier said that his firm

Skouras' Flying Visit Before Rank Sails for America

Spyros Skouras jumped the gun on his colleagues by flying to London Sunday (12) for huddles with J. Arthur Rank. The British pic tycoon leaves London for New York today (Wednesday) and the 20th-Fox topper reportedly wants to confab with him before Rank talks with other company chieftains in the U. S.

Skouras may also be on hand in London to greet Eric Johnston and Ellis Arnall when they arrive for their exploratory talks with Harold Wilson, prez on the British Board of Trade, on renegotiation of the Anglo-U. S. films pact. It is expected they may arrive in London next week.

National Boxoffice Survey

Seasonal Slump Hits Biz; 'Cinderella' Again Champ, 'Francis' Strong Second; 'Rio,' 'Samson' Next

Influence of Lent, Federal income tax deadline and stormy weather all are being felt at the boxoffice this week. In some key cities covered by VARIETY, slow economic conditions also are being reflected in dwindling biz.

"Cinderella" (RKO), which was national champ last week, again is finishing first with every spot big to smash. Despite adverse conditions, the Walt Disney opus will roll up better than $120,000 in keys covered currently by VARIETY. Ability of color cartoon feature to hold up on extended-runs and do remarkably fine night trade marks its dates this week.

"Francis" (U) is a strong second with excellent to great biz in a majority of some 13 spots where current. Strength of this comedy is all the more unusual because not having benefit of major circuit outlets. "Nancy Goes to Rio" (M-G) is pushing up to third position while "Samson and Delilah" (Par) is winding up fourth. Latter is being hurt by lack of many new playdates this round.

Fifth money goes to "Young Man With Horn" (WB), same as last week. "12 O'Clock High" (20th) is down to sixth while "Key to City" is showing sustained stability to take over seventh slot. "Outlaw" (RKO) is eighth, with "Willie Comes Marching Home" (20th) rounding out Big Nine list.

Because biz is so evenly split up among a record number of first-runs this session, there are more than usual number of runner-up pictures. In order of strength these are: "Heiress" (Par), "Red Shoes" (EL), "Love Happy" (UA), "East Side" (M-G), "Malaya" (M-G), "Ambush" (M-G), "Dakota Lil" (20th) and "Montana" (WB).

"Buccaneer's Girl" (U) and "Singing Guns" (Rep) shape as brightest newcomers on basis of showings this frame. "Girl" shapes fast in Chi, fine in Detroit and good in Minneapolis. "Guns" preem in St. Louis gave the Fox its greatest week in months. "Perfect Strangers" (WB), "Outriders" (M-G) and "Black Hand" (M-G) were hurt by desultory biz conditions in N. Y., where teed off this round.

"Sundowners" (EL) is nice in Buffalo. "Foolish Heart" (RKO), neat in Boston, looks sturdy in Montreal. "Paid in Full" (Par) shapes fair in Philly and Frisco.

"Iwo Jima" (Rep), nice in Detroit, looms great in Montreal.

Aug. 31 Divorcement Seen Set by WB; Brothers to Stick to Prod.-Distrib

Warner Bros. has reportedly set next Aug. 31 as the target date for divorcement of its theatres, despite the recent New York court decision allowing it three years to unload its circuit. Company is understood pushing ahead with talks leading to a consent decree, which it hopes to have signed within 60 days.

The three Warner brothers—Harry, Jack and Albert—are said definitely to have agreed that they will remain on the same side of the fence, all sticking to production-distributing. That removes a major potential for long delays in the decree talks with the Dept. of Justice.

Plan which the Warners envisage is similar to that of the RKO decree. Shares will be split two for one. Each stockholder will get one share in the picture company and one in the new theatre company. Other stockholders will be able to hold both shares, but the Warners will have to sell their theatre holdings. That's similar to what Howard Hughes is forced to do in the RKO situation.

Freres had considered having the company sell off the circuit and then issue a cash dividend to the stockholders out of the proceeds. This, it was feared, however, might open them to a minority stock-

WALLIS-HAZEN SELL 'PAID' 100% TO PAR

Wallis-Hazen, Inc., in an unusual deal recently consummated, transferred ownership to Paramount of their independently-made "Paid in Full." Pic, which goes into release this month, stars Robert Cummings and Lizabeth Scott.

Film was "made for Paramount's account" by producer Hal Wallis in lieu of a picture which was to have been made abroad for the distrib. Wallis-Hazen was to have made two overseas and only did one.

'Curley' to High Court This Week To Speed Test on Freedom of Screen

In the hope of getting the quickest possible decision outlawing state and municipal censorship, film industry will go to the U. S. Supreme Court today (Wednesday) or tomorrow with a petition asking it to review the "Curley" case. Petition will attack bluenosing on the four broadest grounds available in a plea that the tribunal edict a blanket nix on pre-release censorship.

Meantime, attorneys for Louis de Rochemont and Film Classics are also moving toward the Supreme Court in their fight, which has "Lost Boundaries" as its focal point, for outlawing state and local scissors-wielders.

The "Lost Boundaries" case is figured by attorneys to be in a stronger position than "Curley" for getting a broad decision by the High Court that films fall into the same category as the press and therefore are free from censorship under the First Amendment to the Constitution.

"Curley" case was brought by producer Hal Roach and distributor United Artists in Memphis and joined by the Motion Picture Assn. of America. The Tennessee supreme court refused to lift the ban imposed by Memphis censor Lloyd T. Binford on the basis that no evidence was presented that UA was entitled to do business in the state.

Lawyers foresee a possibility that the Supreme Court will uphold the Tennessee court on that technical point rather than issuing a decision which would settle the basic point of films' rights to the same Constitutional privileges as the press. "Lost Boundaries" suit, on the other hand, is clearly on the Constitutional issue and can't be sidestepped, the legalites figure.

Paradoxical Battle

Paradoxically, while the industry is embroiled on one side in challenging the right of films to freedom of censorship, it is embattled on the other in defense of its own self-censorship regulations. Two foreign film men, Joseph Burstyn and Paul Graetz, within the past few weeks have challenged the MPAA's Production Code Administration as a result of its refusal to give seals to "Bicycle Thief" and "Devil in the Flesh."

Petition to the Supreme Court asking it to take jurisdiction in the "Curley" suit must be filed before Friday (17). It has been prepared by Edward C. Raftery, counsel for UA and Roach in New York, and Hamilton Little, of Memphis. MPAA is footing the bill on the test, although it is expected that UA and Roach will contribute to the cost when all the expenses have finally been tallied.

Censorship is challenged in the petition as illegal on its own. Additionally, industry plea claims that the Memphis ban was in restraint of trade; that it violated the constitutional injunction on freedom of the press; and that both the Memphis city and Shelby county boards acted without due process.

In a direct crack at the Tennessee supreme court, the petition contends that this appeals bench deliberately sidestepped the censorship issue by injecting into the case a question whether UA was doing business in the state. Court said UA was so acting without first filing a certificate and could not therefore sue in the state.

Memphis ban on "Curley" was handed down in 1947. Objection to the pic was based on a sequence showing white children playing with Negroes. When an appeal was pressed to the Tennessee supreme court, decision denied lifting of the ban, although the court criticized the action of the Memphis board.

Par Sues Writer For $160,000 on Story

Hollywood, March 14.

Milton Holmes is being sued here for $160,000 by Paramount, with studio also asking injunction against the writer for selling story he allegedly wrote on Paramount time.

Yarn is "Sure Thing," which studio says he developed while employed for five months as a producer-writer. Holmes claims he wrote story on his own time.

Einfeld's First European Trip; Fuller Returning

The Charlie (Mae) Einfelds are making their first European trip March 23 aboard the Queen Mary. It's also on business, contacting 20th-Fox distribution points in London, Paris and Rome. They may fly back, in order to extend the Continental o.o.

Also aboard the QM will be A. Ben Fuller, son of Sir Benjamin Fuller, the Australian impresario, and associated with his father in Down Under operations. This was the younger Fuller's first visit to the States since 1926. He is returning to Sydney via London.

Foreign Filmers Form Own Trade Assn.; 50 Indies

Pledging cooperation with the Motion Picture Assn. of America despite that organization's refusal to grant distribution seals to the Italian-made "Bicycle Thief" and the French-made "Devil in the Flesh," some 50 independent distributors and reps of foreign film producers unanimously agreed to form a mutual trade association at a meeting held Monday (13) at the Hotel Astor, N. Y.

New body, which as yet hasn't decided upon a name, was said to represent a logical step for indies in the foreign film field since their business reportedly has grown to a point where an exchange of collective experiences and information would be helpful. Two-hour conclave saw the participants elect Morris Helprin of London Films (Korda), temporary chairman, while Lillian Gerard, of Pathe Cinema, was named acting executive secretary.

Formation of the organization, assertedly stems from rising number of films imported since the war, coupled wtih expanding audiences and development of the art house circuit. Aims of the association, as stated at the initial meet, call for improvement of trade practices; setting up a clearing house of information available to distributors, exhibitors and producers; closer relations with foreign filmmakers, inception of a public relations program to bally

Magnani in U.S. Trip For 'Volcano' Dubbing

Italian star Anna Magnani is reportedly planing out of Rome for New York and Hollywood Friday (17). She's coming to the U. S. to do the dubbing on "Volcano," William Dieterle production in which she starred in Italy last summer.

Dieterle had planned using the voice of an American actress, but has retreated in deference to Miss Magnani's plea that any voice but her own wouldn't do the job justice. She has had some difficulty in making arrangements to come to Hollywood, however, since she has a seven-year-old child who is a polio victim.

Film will be distribbed in U. S. by Motion Picture Sales Corp.

Bishop Modifies Ban

Minneapolis, March 14.

Responding to another North Central Allied plea, Archbishop J. G. Murray, of the Twin City Catholic Archdiocese, has modified his directive against theatres playing the Legion of Decency condemned pictures:

"No implications were contained in any of my pronouncements that a theatre that had ever shown undesirable pictures could never again be entered by a Catholic," he wrote the body. However, he again declined to go full way, as requested by the organization, which asked that the ban apply only to condemned pictures and not theatres playing them. Catholics still are forbidden to attend showhouses that continue henceforth to run even Legion "B" pictures.

Sues Morris Agency For 80G in Client Loss

Los Angeles, March 14.

Damage suit for $80,000 was filed against the William Morris agency by Leon Lance, agent, who charges the Morris office with snatching one of his clients, Terry Moore.

Lance declares he lost $30,000 through the severance of the actress' contract with him. He demands $50,000 more as punitive damages.

Brandt Wants to Extend 'Cinderella' Into Summer, Creating RKO Hassle

"Cinderella," which, with a possible $5,000,000 domestic gross in sight, appears certain to be Walt Disney's biggest earner since "Snow White," was the source of a hassle last week between RKO and Harry Brandt. Distrib is pulling the pic from Brandt's Mayfair on Broadway Easter Sunday (April 9), so it can open in 90 to 100 New York metropolitan keys the following day.

Brandt had a four-week deal for the pic, but wanted to keep running it into the summer on the basis of its strong b.o. Its Easter Sunday exit will give it six and a half weeks at the Mayfair.

RKO and Disney were unwilling for it to stay indef since they wanted to take advantage of the school holiday Easter week to get it into as many engagements as possible. They also preferred to avoid having to play off the pic in New York during the warm weather.

The Easter Monday plan is for bookings similar to those given "Stromboli" by RKO recently. It will include the RKO metropolitan circuit, plus the houses of most of the indie chains in the area.

Pic has proved a surprising grosser in that, contrary to experience with most Disney product, it is doing big night biz, getting large adult audiences. The $5,000,000 gross now being looked for would make the pic second only to "Snow White" in Disney grosses. Latter garnered $6,000,000 when released in 1937.

Graetz Appeals vs. 'Devil' Nix in Wire to Johnston

Paul Graetz, whose "Devil in the Flesh" has been refused a distribution seal by the Motion Picture Assn. of America, charged in New York this week that it's "utterly impossible to produce pictures in Europe within the regulations put in force 20 years ago for the makers of Hollywood films." Solution to the difficulty, he pointed out in a wire to MPAA prez Eric Johnston, is an amendment to the Production Code which would exempt foreign producers from the code's provisions.

In appealing to Johnston for special dispensation for foreign product, Graetz urged that such films produced by friendly nations and made within the requirements of the laws of their country and "recognized as an achievement of art, shall be free to be screened in theatres belonging or affiliated with your organization within the judgment of the theatre management alone."

Graetz noted that the French film industry, aside from its home market, is now forced to turn to the U. S. playing time, now that central European countries have been cut off as a distribution outlet. In prewar times, he said, central Europe was a main source of income for French producers. Latter's financial return from America, he added, is severely restricted inasmuch as lack of an MPAA seal prevents nationwide distribution.

In an effort to adjust the situation, Graetz disclosed that the French government has taken up matter with the U. S. State Dept. through Ambassador Henri Bonnet. Envoy reportedly demanded "freedom of the screen and all assistance of the MPAA" in behalf of "Devil in the Flesh." The producer, who planed to Paris over the weekend, pointed out that when U. S. film companies want maximum playing time in France for their own product they should at least reciprocate in their own territory for French pix.

Under $1,000,000 Gross Seen by RKO For 'Stromboli' Domestically, Big Loss

"Stromboli," which winds up its first month of release today (Wed.), is now figured by RKO sales toppers to do under $1,000,000 in domestic gross. Ingrid Bergman-Roberto Rossellini film, on that basis, will wind up as a severe loss to RKO.

Meantime, another RKO release, "The Outlaw," continues to show surprising power, with domestic rentals figured to run as high as $3,000,000. That will be in addition to about the same sum rung up by United Artists on the Jane Russell-starrer's original release three years ago.

"Stromboli" has picked up a little strength since its preem and appears to be holding up slightly better in most of its playdates. During the early runs it was opening very big with a curiosity audience and then sliding way off. B.o. now is on a more even keel.

Major difficulty is getting bookings for it, since the combo of weak biz and the heavy artillery leveled against it on moral grounds has combined to make exhibs shy away. RKO execs for that reason are reticent about estimating its eventual take. It all depends on how many dates they are able to sew up. In any event, they figure they'll be unable to get anything beyond enough to provide $1,000,000 in rentals.

How big a loss that will represent is also indeterminate, since the production cost is a hazy figure. Pic was made in Italy, largely with frozen lire, and the budget depends on at what price RKO wants to write off the unthawed funds. Conversion of lire into dollars is always at a considerable discount from the established rate.

It is estimated, however, that the cost to RKO, even at the discounted rate, but adding a considerable expenditure in dollars, must have been between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000. That means the pic would have to gross between $1,700,000 and $2,500,000 to break even.

Aside from "The Outlaw," RKO has another big grosser in Walt Disney's "Cinderella," which looks now like it might exceed $5,000,000 domestically. Unfortunately for the company, both "Outlaw" and "Cindy" are indie product in which it merely serves as distrib. It owns no piece of the pix. Its fee on the pair, however, will amount to about $2,000,000 and should help considerably to relieve the losses the company has been suffering during the past year.

"Outlaw" is owned by Howard Hughes, who is principal stockholder of RKO. He is thus benefiting dually from the film's success.

Kramer-Glass Back West After N.Y. Publicity Binge

Stanley Kramer and George Glass, who have been in New York for the past three weeks confabbing with United Artists on release of "The Men," train out for the Coast Friday (17). Kramer, who produced the film, and Glass, associate producer, have also been doing interviews and other publicity. Pic will be released in August.

Teresa Wright, who co-stars with Marlon Brando, arrived in New York from the Coast yesterday (Tuesday) for further publicity on the pic. She was accompanied by her husband, Niven Busch. He's east to confab with RKO h.o. execs on campaign for his new film, "The Capture," in which Miss Wright co-stars with Lew Ayres.

Stung by B's On Costs, Eye New Camera

Hollywood, March 14.

Low-budget B film producers, finding it increasingly difficult to turn a profit on their product under current market conditions, have been looking into Jerry Fairbanks' new multi-camera process as a possible means of cutting costs. Fairbanks has already huddled with top representatives of Universal, Monogram and Republic, and other companies are also eyeing the process, which may result in the film industry's first actual takeover of a system developed originally for television.

Chief savings for the B producers if they grab onto the multi-cam process will be in reduced shooting time. System comprises a three-camera chain, each camera being equipped with enough raw stock to shoot simultaneously from three different angles. Producer using the system thus saves the tremendous time and money usually consumed in retakes. Cameras can also be equipped with electronic view-finders, which will permit a producer or director to see what each camera is lensing at the

Chaplin Denies Asking Citizenship

Hollywood, March 14.

Charles Chaplin denied a report that he had applied for American citizenship. Denial was made in response to an announcement that Hollywood American Legion Post 43 had started a drive to deport him. Chaplin declared:

"I am a believer in 'One World.' I wish to state that my position is unaltered and that I have not made any request, officially or unofficially for citizenship. These rumors and lies are part of a conspiracy instigated by my enemies to try and embarrass me."

EXHIBS SLAM HOLIDAY DATING

Cowdin's RKO Bid Said to Exceed Theatres; Yens Prod.-Distrib Co. Too

J. Cheever Cowdin's intentions regarding RKO go beyond original reports that he is endeavoring to buy control of the theatre circuit, it was learned this week. The Wall streeter and former Universal board chairman and his associates are trying to acquire Howard Hughes' interest in the entire production-distribution-exhibition setup.

Cowdin is attempting to take the same fiscal position that Hughes holds now. He hopes to acquire majority control and then sell off the theatres (as required under RKO's consent decree) at a price that would leave him with the production-distribution end of the business at little or no cost.

Former U exec reportedly is telling Wall Streeters whom he is endeavoring to get into a syndicate he's setting up to swing the deal that he has indications from Hughes that he's willing to sell. It is reliably reported from other sources, however, that the Texas millionaire has no intention of parting with the production-distribution end of RKO.

Cowdin would necessarily have to offer Hughes well in excess of the $9 a share which the latter gave Atlas Corp. for its 24% interest in the company. Hughes holds 1,000,000 shares for which he paid approximately $9,000,000.

The theatres are highly profitable, while production-distribution has been losing money, so the cir-

Hughes' Exec Committee

Executive committee set up by RKO's board last week for operation of the company further tightened Howard Hughes' control. Hughes, as principal stockholder, had earlier taken clear control of the board by election of a majority of his nominees to that body.

Now exec committee consists of Hughes, Noah Dietrich, his chief aide in all of his enterprises, and RKO prexy Ned E. Depinet. That gives the ownership faction a two-to-one plurality over Depinet as a rep of the original management group.

Depinet, following the series of board meetings last week, left the Coast for Phoenix for a two-week vacation.

Coast Guard-Executed Contract Not Binding, Sid Caesar's Defense

Federal Judge John W. Clancy in N.Y. federal court on Monday (13) paved the way for trial of Capitol Productions' $250,000 breach-of-contract against comedian Sid Caesar when he denied the film unit's motion to dismiss the comic's defenses and counterclaims.

Court upheld Caesar's contentions that the pact wasn't binding since it was executed when both the comedian and Capitol's head, Milton Bren, were members of the U. S. Coast Guard. Defense also claimed that Capitol kept Caesar under "peonage" since it farmed him out to other producers instead of starring him in Capitol films.

SAG BLAMES VIDEO FOR UNEMPLOYMENT

Hollywood, March 14.

Television was blamed for the current lack of work among film thesps, but heralded as a lucrative field of employment in time to come—a threat and a promise—in a report mailed by the Screen Actors Guild's board of directors to its membership. Eventually, the report said, TV will provide plenty of jobs for actors.

Another cause of unemployment in Hollywood, the report pointed out, is the lensing of pictures in foreign lands by American producers. Still another is the flood of reissues. Guild has joined with the Hollywood AFL Film Council in the fight on reissues, and is making an effort to curb "runaway" foreign production.

Sachson Adds Busch Pic

Arthur Sachson, former general salesmanager for Samuel Goldwyn Productions, will serve as sales rep for Niven Busch on the indie producer's "The Capture." The Teresa Wright-Lew Ayres starrer goes into release via RKO next month.

Sachson, who recently set up as an indie sales rep, will also handle Al Rogell's "The Admiral Was a Lady" and "The Gun." They'll be distributed by United Artists. "Admiral" is completed and will be released in July. "Gun" starts production next month.

30% Brit. Quota Seen 'Unrealistic' As 45% Was in '48

New British 30% film quota, submitted to Parliament by Board of Trade prexy Harold Wilson last week, is viewed by American trade leaders as "as unrealistic as the 45% quota was two years ago." Yank distribs see in the 30% figure a facesaver for the Labor government and are not prone to question it.

Americans object to the quota figure in principle, but observe that they can probably get along with it, since the government will have to grant the usual number of exemptions. Necessity for the latter is why the 30% is viewed as unrealistic. There just aren't enough British-made pix in prospect to fill theatre needs.

Since the 30% represents a 10% reduction from the current figure and 15% from last year's, Yank film men think that Wilson has gone just about as far as he can go politically on the issue. Despite the unrealistic nature of the 30%, Americans understand that the B. of T. topper would be losing face to cut beyond that, since he was so insistent in pushing it higher rather than lower just a few years ago.

ATLAS (ODLUM) BACK IN RKO; 100,000 SHARES

Atlas Corp. is apparently again putting its foot in the RKO door. Investment firm's annual report, issued recently, discloses that it has acquired 100,000 shares of stock of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., the new picture company, on a "when, as and if issued" basis.

Atlas already has a considerable profit in the "when issued" shares. Floyd Odlum outfit contracted to buy them at $365,188. As of the Dec. 31, 1949, date of the report they were worth $375,000 and currently are quoted at about $425,000.

Atlas had been major stockholder in RKO until it sold its shares to Howard Hughes in mid-1948. Since then, Hughes has negotiated a consent decree with the Dept. of Justice. It calls for divorcement of theatres from production-distribution. Holders of present RKO shares get one share in each of the two new resulting companies. These will not be issued until the breakup becomes official, but are traded "over-the-counter" on the "when issued" basis in the interim.

Atlas also owned a large number of option warrants for RKO shares, but they were permitted to expire Jan. 31, as they called for purchase of stock at a price higher than the market.

MUST SPREAD TOP PIX THRU YEAR

Distributors are making a big mistake in holding up release of their top product for the various holiday seasons. That's the opinion of many indie exhibitors, who found out that theatres are open 52 weeks each year. With the current emphasis on reviving the film-going habit among the general public, the theatres must have a steady run of good product if that habit is to take hold.

Because of current boxoffice conditions, the major companies recently instituted a policy of bunching their most expensive pictures for the periods of the year which traditionally mean the biggest grosses. These, of course, are usually the holidays, with the rest of the year getting the lower-quality product. Majors claim that the highs and lows in the boxoffice business curve were more marked in 1949 than in any year previously and that present indications point to an even wider spread this year. As a result, they aver, they cannot take a chance on releasing an expensive film during a period they know in advance will be dull at the boxoffice.

This system, according to disagreeing exhibs, will only perpetuate the current boxoffice ills. Part of the public that still has the film-going habit will continue attending but the vast potential audience, which either has lost the habit or never attended filmeries,

Still Pro & Con On Phonevision

Commander Eugene F. MacDonald's quest for top feature films for use in the upcoming Phonevision tests in Chicago is apparently turning into a "button, button — who's got the button" routine.

MacDonald, prez of Zenith Radio, asserted at a Chi press conference Monday (13) that he has "more than enough" features from Hollywood for his 90-day test but declined to reveal the source of the films or their ages. Cecil B. DeMille, guesting at the meet, said the film industry eventually must join forces with Phonevision. MacDonald turned the ball over to Gael Sullivan, exec director of Theatre Owners of America, claiming again that Sullivan has been assigned to learn who is cooperating with Phonevision among the Hollywood producers.

Sullivan, queried in New York, said he had never been requested by TOA to move in on Phonevision and that he hasn't heard anything

Blumenthal in N.Y. Seeking to Float 500G Issue for New Prod. Outfit

In a unique indie financing move, A. Pam Blumenthal is attempting to arrange in New York currently the flotation of a $500,000 note issue to provide funds for television film production and other auxiliary activities of the new feature unit he has set up on the Coast with Howard Welsch and Chester Erskine.

Recently organized outfit, which continues to carry the Fidelity tag of Welsch's old unit, plans to turn out five pix between April and September, Blumenthal declared this week. First two will be distributed by Universal, with no release set as yet on the others.

Blumenthal claims that financing of the films is all set through Bank of America and private sources. Coin raised by the note issue will not be used for that purpose, but to make 40-minute and 53-minute TV films, to buy story properties for the feature unit and to sign talent for the latter.

Fidelity, Blumenthal asserted, will make tele product for 45-minute and one-hour shows and will sell the films outright to advertisers. He said the outfit can make a profit on them at $50,000 to $75,000 for the 40-minute pix and $100,000 for the hour-lengths.

The notes will be privately issued to a syndicate which Blumenthal is endeavoring to set up, he said. As an inducement, buyers of the notes will get shares of stock in Fidelity. Paper will comprise a first lien against the unit after bank loans.

2 Merged Outfits

Fidelity is an amalgam of Welsch's Fidelity unit and Chester Erskine Productions. Blumenthal became a partner in the latter last October. New company took over

Use of Video for Benefit of the Film B.O. Openly Discussed by Exhibs

Television, for the first time at any open conference in the film business, occupied a focal point of discussion at 20th-Fox's showmanship meeting in Chicago Wednesday (8) and Thursday. Instead of shrugging it off as being of no immediate danger to the film boxoffice, or whispering about it furtively behind closed doors, 20th's top brass and the majority of exhibs taking the floor in Chi candidly admitted the threat of TV competition and unanimously agreed that some method must be found of adapting video to promote better film grosses.

Consensus was voiced by Louis W. Schine, co-owner of the Schine circuit, who declared that "if we take the attitude that television will put us out of business, then we're licked before we start." Majority of the indie exhibs familiar with TV labeled it "the greatest medium for advertising films that has ever been devised," and cited TV trailers as the best means of luring the public away from its video sets. Twentieth ad-publicity veepee Charles Einfeld promised 20th would start immediately to produce such trailers, and it's expected the other companies will follow suit. Considerable emphasis was also placed on theatre TV as an answer to the problem, while Zenith Radio's proposed Phonevision was generally derided, at least from the floor, as being of little potential help to the industry.

Television's import to films was stressed by National Theatres prez Charles P. Skouras, who said his grosses reflect the fact that biz is only off 12% in areas where there is no TV, but in areas where the

Loew's Seconds It

Entire Loew's circuit, including theatres which don't book 20th-Fox product, have picked up the 20th-inspired "Movies Are Better Than Ever" campaign. Loew's theatres veepee Joseph R. Vogel wired all division managers and theatre staffs yesterday (Tues.) to cooperate fully in the drive.

Last Friday (10), Loew's publicity heads Ernie Emerling and E. C. Dowden called a special meet of the homeoffice publicity staff at which circuit exec Oscar A. Doob, who had attended 20th's Chicago meet, detailed results of the conclave and urged them to follow through.

Decentralized Selling Ups M-G To 7 Divisions

Metro sales veepee William F. Rodgers, preparing for the breakup of large affiliated circuits via divestiture and divorcement, has realigned his top sales administrators in the field. Move is designed both for decentralization of authority from the homeoffice to the field execs and also to capsule the areas under each division manager's supervision. Latter, it is hoped, will provide for greater concentration of sales activities and more direct contact between the division and branch managers.

Rodgers' action is believed to underscore the ramifications that divorcement and divestiture will bring about in all phases of the film industry. Metro itself is still fighting in the courts to retain its theatre holdings but the Paramount split, already effected, has reportedly resulted in new sales problems calling for new techniques and policies. With 20th-Fox and Warners also expected to di-

STIEFEL, ROONEY END PARTNERSHIP

Hollywood, March 14.

Partnership deal between Mickey Rooney and Sam Stiefel was officially ended after an association of several years, during which they made two pictures starring Rooney.

William Morris Agency will continue to represent Rooney in all fields.

Metro in Savings Abroad, Releasing Black-White Pix Originally Done for Color

Metro, in a new move to cut cost corners and gain bigger returns for its product in foreign markets, has launched a new policy of releasing via black-and-white prints, several features turned out originally for U. S. theatres in color. With Technicolor prints costing on an average about $400 more than black-and-whites, the company can save up to $120,000 on the usual 300 prints.

Pictures getting the b-w treatment are those which the company's foreign department believes will not be aided enough by color to make the added expense worthwhile. Theory was tested originally on "Easy to Wed," Van Johnson starrer, and has been used most recently for "Challenge to Lassie," latest in the dog series to be shipped abroad. Use of black-and-white prints holds for all overseas areas, including England and the Continent.

Savings effected under the plan represent frozen currency for the most part. As most of the major companies, Metro does the majority of its printing for the foreign market in England, utilizing iced British profits for the process. Thus, in addition to saving the frozen money in print costs, most of the extra distribution profits are also only partially remittable, so that they add to the pile held overseas.

KELLY'S TALKS ON CHAPLIN REISSUES

Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists exec v.p., returned to New York from the Coast yesterday (Tuesday) after two days of huddles with Charles Chaplin. Kelly flew west over the weekend.

Talks were reportedly on plans for reissue of Chaplin's "City Lights." It is understood there is also a possibility of further Chaplin reissues through UA, of which Chaplin is half owner. Company previously reissued his "The Gold Rush" in 1942.

Don't Expect End of 20% Admish And Nitery Tax Before End of May

Washington, March 14.

There'll be no quickie bill merely slashing the 20% admissions tax and other wartime excises. Instead, there'll be be a more complicated "put and take" revenue bill which will reduce the excises—probably including admissions—and at the same time will provide for new taxes to make up the loss.

It will probably not become law until late in May, according to present indications.

Meantime, Abram F. Meyers, Allied States' general counsel and chairman of the COMPO taxation and legislation committee, lost no time today (Tuesday) in thumping for an admission tax reduction, following Congressman Herman P. Eberharter's (D.-Pa.) declaration calling for repeal of excise taxes which he said are "regressive or discriminatory."

In a statement issued by COMPO, Myers asserted that "regressive refers to taxes, the burden of which is relatively greater upon those with small incomes than upon those in the upper brackets." That the tax on movie tickets is regressive is one of the strongest points made in the Myers-Sullivan joint statement filed with the House Ways & Means Committee.

Efforts for a quickie bill were quashed yesterday (13) by the Democratic majority of the Ways & Means Committe. By a vote of 15-10, the Democrats killed a motion of the Republicans for a measure merely cutting excises. Then the Democrats voted for work toward a comprehensive "put and take" revenue measure. It is expected that the excises will be cut by about $1,000,000,000, and that the same amount will be made up in new taxes and in closing tax loopholes.

Figuring here is that the measure will be reported out about the first week in April and will come to a vote about the middle of the month. Then it must go to the Senate, where the finance committee will conduct hearings and make such changes as it desires. Then the full Senate will debate and vote, and the new bill will go to a House-Senate Conference committee to work out a compromise.

If and when the compromise is reached and approved by Congress, the measure will be sent to President Truman. All these steps take time. Hence, the estimate of late May for any law to reduce the 20% tax and probably also the 20% bite on night club checks.

Statement over the weekend by Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., of New York, added additional support to prior pledges that the nation's exhibitors will give the public the benefits of any tax reduction in lower admissions. Among those whom Roosevelt said had assured him of this were Gael Sullivan, TOA; Abraham F. Myers, of Allied, chairman of the COMPO taxation and legislation committee; Charles P. Skouras of National Theatres; Harry Brandt, Joe Vogel, of Loew's, and Leonard H. Goldenson, of United Paramount Theatres. Yesterday the Washington area exhibitors announced they also would join the procession and return any savings to the public.

How to Save 1 Ulcer

Bert Schwartz has resigned as chief copywriter for the Monroe Greenthal ad agency to return to th Spector agency, where he was copy chief before joining Greenthal.

He calls film accounts (in which Greenthal specializes) "two-ulcer advertising" as against general accounts in which Spector specializes and which are known as "one-ulcer advertising." Aim of the switch, Schwartz explains, was thus to "save one ulcer."

O'Connell Vice Frieder Is the Only Change On Republic Pic's Board

Only one change in Republic's board of directors is slated for the annual stockholders' meeting to be held in New York April 4. Alex Frieder, who owns theatres in the Philippines and has other foreign picture interests, is being replaced by John J. O'Connell. O'Connell since 1942 has headed Rep's wholly-owned subsid, Consolidated Molded Products Corp., and previously served on the board from 1942 to 1947.

Frieder recently asked to resign because he will not be in the U. S. very much during the coming year. Rep's proxy statement, which discloses the contemplated changes in the directorate, notes that the company has entered into contracts with several firms which Frieder heads for distribution rights to pictures in certain foreign countries.

Scheduled for reelection to three-year terms, the proxy reveals, are Arthur J. Miller and Walter L. Titus, Jr., veepees of Rep; Harry C. Mills, J. C. Penny Co. exec, who has served on the board since 1946, and Leon A. Swirbul, prexy of Gruman Aircraft, who's been on the board since 1945.

Prexy Herbert J. Yates took $20,000 less salary and expenses from Rep during the fiscal year ended last Oct. 29 than he did during the preceding 12 months, report shows. He got $153,640, of which $100,000 is deferred pursuant to Yates contract of March 1, 1946.

V.p. Edward L. Walton took a cut of $5,500, his total remuneration having been $28,855. Exec v.p. and sales chief James R. Grainger received approximately the same as the previous year, $78,180. All directors and officers together got a total of $372,758.

There are 1,817,860 shares of stock eligible to vote at the annual meeting.

Rep's $1,000,000 Bldg. Program

Hollywood, March 14.

Regardless of the general wail about receding film grosses, Republic is embarking on a $1,000,000 building program, starting late this month.

First under construction is an editorial building which will house 16 offices and eight new cutting rooms. Second on the list is a new sound stage.

High Ct. Nixes Majors Plea In Ball Anti-Trust Suit

Washington, March 14.

Supreme Court yesterday (Mon.) turned thumbs down on an appeal from a third circuit court decision in favor of Harry Norman Ball in the Pennware theatre anti-trust case. High court thus in effect upheld the court ruling giving Ball an injunction against RKO, Loew's, Par and 20th, requiring them to provide his theatre with half their product. Circuit court has also ordered that the amount of damages suffered by Ball be ascertained. Appealing from the ruling were RKO, Loew's, Par, 20th and A. N. Notopoulos, Ambridge, Pa., exhibitor.

Ball purchased the Penn theatre in Ambridge which was leased to Pennware Corp., owned half by Notopoulos and half by Paramount. At the expiration of his lease, Notopoulos refused to renew at an increased rent, but began to build another house, the State. Ball sued to protect for his theatre the share of product which the majors had been selling to it in Ambridge.

8 Majors, B-K, WB Circuit Prep Rebuttals

Chicago, March 14.

Eight major distributors, plus the Balaban & Katz and Warner theatre circuits are prepping rebuttal briefs on their motion to strike out and get leave to amend complaint against them by Essaness circuit in latter's $32,455,500 anti-trust suit, largest in history of film industry in complaint filed last August.

Essaness and 10 associated groups charged conspiracy by eight majors with B&K and Warners to force them out of business during period from March 1, 1935, to Dec. 1, 1947. Case is before Chi federal district court judge William Campbell.

Essaness attorney Edward Blackman filed his answering brief to motion yesterday (13), and Charles Stewart, attorney for majors, will have his rebuttal to Essaness' answer completed by end of the month.

Video Use

medium has taken hold biz is off 40%. "If we're smart," he said, "we'll work with television." Circuit operator Si H. Fabian backed up Skouras, declaring that "where TV is strongest, business is off most." TV's impact today is nothing to what it will be, he said, explaining that 10,000,000 video sets are expected to be in operation by the end of this year, with 40,000,000 estimated in a "very short time." Where advertisers spent $25,000,000 on TV in 1949, that figure should exceed $500,000,000 when those 40,000,000 sets are in the hands of the public. With the better quality video programs resulting, Fabian said, "that will be real competition."

To combat this threat, Fabian suggested exhibs "must put their plants in apple-pie order," adding that "when my competitor's theatre is run badly, it hurts me." He emphasized that, TV notwithstanding, the audience is there today waiting for good pictures. "The only salvation," he said, "lies in great pictures playing in fine theatres." Sam Pinanski, head of American Theatres and prez of Theatre Owners of America, said he would go back to his Boston headquarters to buy all the television time available. "I want to tell people, through television," he said, "that they're wasting their time watching their TV sets, and should come on over to our theatres. Television is a good medium of advertising, but it's not here to take over our business."

Sell 'Em Through Tele

United Paramount Theatres prez Leonard Goldenson cited the need for special intimate-type video trailers. He noted that in the survey among Stamford, Conn., highschoolers reported last week, the kids voiced their preference for feature pix as the best category of TV entertainment. "If they want to see features," he said, "why not sell them the best in features through television?"

Indie circuit operator Harry Brandt admitted his original mistake in objecting to the use of film stars on radio, pointing up how much film biz has benefited from radio plugs. He suggested the same type of plugging should now be done on TV. In his pitch for the use of video trailers, he suggested they would look so good compared to the old features now playing on TV that people will rush to the theatres.

Phonevision Derided

Fred Schwartz, veepee of Century circuit, N. Y., said Phonevision will "fall of its own weight." He noted the most radio sets ever tuned into one program was 16,000,000. If people were forced to pay $1 for that entertainment, as the Phonevision plan suggests, that audience would be cut by at least 75%. In addition, he said, Phonevision presents a completely uncontrolled audience. "What's to prevent a large group or an entire community getting together for a show for that single $1 charge?" he asked. "Phonevision and theatres cannot exist together," he emphasized. "If theatres are forced out of business, then the studios will be able to deal only with two or three people in the U. S. to sell their product."

Main pitch for large-screen theatre TV was made by 20th prez Spyros P. Skouras, who predicted the grosses to be derived from the medium would dwarf the peak war years in the business. He cited the importance of stageshows to such theatres as Radio City Music Hall and the Roxy, N. Y., declaring the stage bills accounted for more than 75% of their business. If thousands of theatres simultaneously could present stageshows that would far surpass in name value and entertainment quality the best Music Hall show, he said, today's film grosses would be as insignificant by comparison as those of pre-World War I days are with today's business.

GAB ON FAR EAST

Washington, March 14.

Irving Maas, v.p. and general manager of Motion Picture Export Assn., and Charles Mayer, MPEA rep in Japan, were in Washington last Friday (10) for discussions on the Far East situation with Eric Johnston, prexy of Motion Picture Assn. of America.

Mayer is recently back in the U. S. from Nippon.

20th Bally Confab Cost $100,000

Twentieth-Fox, through its exhibitor showmanship meeting in Chicago last week, struck a major blow at the prevailing public attitude that the film industry is on the ropes. That was the consensus among the exhibs and top industry officials attending the conclave. They appeared particularly impressed with the fact that not only did the 20th ad-publicity department offer plans for rebuilding faltering boxoffices, but also by the company's emphasis on launching the campaign on an all-industry basis, rather than one to benefit 20th alone.

Plan reportedly was offered originally to the Theatre Owners of America by 20th ad-pub veepee Charles Einfeld with the hope that TOA would promote the "Movies Are Better Than Ever" campaign on an industry-wide level. When the exhib organization was slow in acting on the offer, however, Einfeld decided to go it alone with the hope that other companies would pick up the idea later. Chi meet, for which the company paid all expenses of the delegates, numbering over 350 from all parts of the country, cost 20th over $100,000. Regional meetings to be held in all exchange centers March 21-23 are expected to add another $50,000 to the total.

20th Sets Regional Meets to Pitch Showmanship to All U.S. Exhibs

Twentieth-Fox will take its "Movies Are Better Than Ever" campaign to exhibitors throughout the country this month. With its exhibitors showmanship meeting in Chicago last week judged an outstanding success by those attending, 20th plans to follow up its drive for more filmery attendance and more ballyhoo by holding regional meetings March 21 to 23 in each of the company's 36 exchange centers. In line with its avowed policy of promoting its showmanship plan as an industry service, rather than one to benefit 20th exclusively, all exhibs in each territory will be invited, whether or not they are 20th customers.

Regional meets are to be conducted by 20th's division and branch managers, who attended the Chi conference. In addition, members of the homeoffice ad-publicity department will each visit one or two of the exchanges to punch up the sessions with the h.o. viewpoint. They'll detail 20th's basic showmanship plan, incorporated in the "Showman's Guide to Better Business" brochure handed out last week. Plan involves basic suggestions to exhibs on how to lure more customers to their boxoffices, attract the so-called lost audiences and generally revive the filmgoing habit via an all-out ad-pub campaign on the thesis that films still give the public more for its entertainment dollar than any other show biz medium.

The Convincer

National Theatres prez Charles P. Skouras, detailing the history of his family in connection with the film industry's history at 20th-Fox's showmanship meeting in Chicago last week, explained how he had convinced his brother, Spyros P., to come to the U. S. from their native Greece. Charles, as the oldest of the three brothers (other is George), immigrated first and, after seeing the opportunities offered in this country, wrote Spyros to follow.

Spyros at the time was studying to become a priest at a theological seminary and was reluctant to leave. So, Charles said, he wrote another letter telling Spyros he could become president if he came to the U. S. "And," the NT topper said, turning to his brother on the dais, "you can see I was right. He has become president—president of 20th Century-Fox."

Indicating exhib enthusiasm for the plan, over 1,000 New York exhibs have accepted invitations to attend the N. Y. exchange meet March 23 at the Astor hotel. Division manager Martin Moskowitz and branch manager Sam Diamond have lined up Mayor William O'Dwyer as chief guest speaker.

50-50 Co-op Ads

Twentieth prez Spyros P. Skouras and the other company execs leading the Chi discussions emphasized repeatedly that the company has no "gimmick" up its sleeve in generating the campaign. As proof, the company offered as one of the prime factors in its plan the offer to split the costs of an institutional advertising drive on a straight 50-50 basis to sock home to the public the "movies are better than ever" slogan, which is to be the backbone of the plan. Twentieth ad chief Jonas Rosenfield cited two ads already prepared but said any exhib in the U. S. or Canada can make up his own ad. Only stipulation is that the ads must plug the slogan and upcoming 20th product. Majority of exhibs present indicated their acceptance of the offer, signifying it will get general approval by exhibs throughout the country.

First to take advantage of the co-op ad offer was Harold Fitzgerald, prez of Fox-Wisconsin theatres. Within 24 hours of the close of the Chi meet, he inserted one of th 20th-prepared ads in the Milwaukee Sentinel. Addressed to the public from the circuit, the ad led off with the notation, "Your Pleasure Is All Ours."

Theme of the Chi meet was set by veepee Al Lichtman, who moderated most of the two-day meet. He pointed up the fact that boxoffice returns today are too low and operating costs of all factors in the business are too high. Other execs then suggested methods of solving that problem. Sales veepee Andy W. Smith, Jr., and general counsel Otto E. Koegel cited the need for industry respect by the public as one phase of showmanship, emphasizing the necessity for some arbitration or conciliation plan to save the time and money involved in the many court suits, which they said, could better be spent on promoting showmanship. Ad-publicity veepee Charles Einfeld stressed the need for a return to basic exploitation fundamentals. He pointed out that the film business developed the ballyhoo techniques adopted by all other industries, but said the film industry no longer uses them.

Aggressive Technique

Homeoffice ad-publicity staffers detailing the plan suggested exhibs punch the slogan across in any way possible. Special ad slugs have been made up for use on letterheads, as stickers and for merchandise tie-ins. Pitch was also made for exhibs to try ringing doorbells to discover exactly why audiences are not attending filmeries. Among other 20th ideas and accessories offered were special institutional trailers for use in theatres, where it is possible to hit a "capitive, receptive audience"; planned speeches for exhibs to make from their stages or to representative civic groups; recordings to be played over local radio stations or through the theatres' loud-speaker systems, etc.

Overall theme of the Chi conclave was voiced by 20th exec veepee W. C. Michel and Motion Picture Assn. of America prez Eric Johnston. Both emphasized that there is too much pessimism in the industry today—that "we can't solve our problems by singing the blues." Both pleaded for other companies to follow the 20th lead and hold similar showmanship meets to "put this business over."

Malta Pix Hassle

London, March 14.

David E. Griffiths, Frank Hill and Gordon Rayner planed to Malta today (Tues.) to negotiate on behalf of British and American distributors regarding a new films bill now pending.

Draft of bill, if adopted, would make film trading in Malta impossible.

L.A. Still Slow Albeit 'Love' Happy $26,000; 'Ambush' 30G, 'Francis' Brisk $24,000 in 3d, 'Palomino' Slight 22G

Los Angeles, March 14.

First-run pace here continues to drag and new entries are adding little to bolster the overall total. "Ambush" is shaping up fairly okay $30,000 in two theatres, and stays over two extra days. "Love Happy" is pointing for $26,000 in five sites, which is good.

Combo of "Palomino" and "Father Is Bachelor" looks slim $22,000 in two houses. Dick Contino stage unit is helping "Spring in Park Lane" to good $24,000 at Orpheum. "Vicious Years," despite special preem, is not likely to top $3,000 at Four Star.

"Francis" is providing one of few bright features, still being fancy at $24,000 in five locations, third week. Second session of "Man With Horn" is fair $25,000 in three spots.

Estimates for This Week

Beverly Hills, Downtown, Hawaii, Hollywood, Forum Music Halls (Prin-Cor) (834; 902; 1,106; 512; 2,100; 55-$1)—"Love Happy" (UA) and "Tyrant of Sea" (Col). Good $26,000. Last week, "Indian Scout" (UA) and "Cry Murder" (FC), $23,000.

Chinese, Los Angeles, Loyola, Uptown, Wilshire (FWC) (2,048; 2,097; 1,248; 1,719; 2,296; 60-$1)—"Willie Comes Home" (20th) and "Girl San Lorenzo" (UA) (2d wk). Thin $18,500 in 5 days. Last week, $36,000.

Downtown, Hollywood, Wiltern, (WB) (1,757; 2,756; 2,344; 60-$1)—"Man With Horn" (WB) (2d wk). Fair $25,000. Last week, big $39,000.

Loew's State, Egyptian (UA) (2,404; 1,538; 60-$1) — "Ambush" (M-G). Okay $30,000. Last week, "East Side" (M-G) and "Challenge Lassie" (M-G) (2d wk), $25,000.

Pantages, Hillstreet (RKO) (2,812; 2,890; 50-$1) — "Palomino" (Col) and "Father Is Bachelor" (Col). Light $22,000. Last week, "Stromboli" (RKO) and "Tattooed Stranger" (RKO) (2d wk), $20,000.

Los Angeles, Hollywood Paramounts (F&M) (3,398; 1,451; 50-$1) —"Dear Wife" (Par) and "Unmasked" (Rep) (L. A. only) (2d wk). Down to $15,000. Last week, oke $19,000.

United Artists, Ritz, Studio City, Vogue, Culver (UA-FWC) (2,100; 1,370; 880; 885; 1,145; 60-$1) — "Francis" (U) and "Girl In Heart" (Mono) (3d wk). Fancy $24,000. Last week, great $30,000.

Orpheum (D'town) (2,210; 50-95) —"Spring In Park Lane" (EL) with Dick Contino unit. Good $24,000. Last week, "Blue Grass Kentucky (Mono) (2d run) with Eddie Peabody heading vaude, $17,000.

Four Star (UA) (900; 60-$1) — "Vicious Years" (FC). Small $3,000 or under. Last week, "Song Remember" (Col) (reissue) (3d wk-3 days), $900.

Fine Arts (FWC) (679; 60-$1) — "Letter, Three Wives" (20th) and "Come To Stable" (20th). Okay $3,500. Last week, "12 O'Clock High" (20th) and "Pinky" (20th), $2,500.

Ellington Boosts 'Lil' To Okay $23,000 in Frisco; 'Key' Smash at $30,000

San Francisco, March 14.

Biz here this session is very sluggish with few exceptions. Going against the trend is "Key to City," which got a strong bally and is cashing in on Clark Gable name to land sock week at Warfield. Duke Ellington band is pushing "Dakota Lil" to okay round at Fox but not up to hopes for size of house. "Paid in Full" looks only fair at Paramount but "Francis" still is strong in third frame at Orpheum. Second week of "Red Shoes" is big at United Artists.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,844; 60-85)—"Pirates of Capri" (FC) and "Flying Saucer" (FC). Light $11,000. Last week, "Intruder in Dust" (M-G) and "Appointment Crime" (Indie), okay $13,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; 60-95) — "Dakota Lil" (20th) plus stageshow headed by Duke Ellington orch. Okay $23,000 or near. Last week, "Mother Didn't Tell Me" and "Call of Forest" (Lip), thin $15,000.

Warfield (Loew's) (2,656; 60-85)—"Key to City" (M-G). Sock $30,000. Last week, "Malaya" (M-G) (2d wk), $13,500.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 60-85)—"Paid in Full" (Par) and "Grass Always Greener" (WB). Fair $13,-

'Guns' Preem Wow $22,000, St. Louis

St. Louis, March 14.

Biz slowed down to walk over weekend because of worst rain, sleet and snow storm of season. Despite this "Singing Guns" with vaude is soaring to big total at the vast Fox, biggest there in many moons. Personals by Vaughn Monroe helped. "Nancy Goes To Rio," only other new film, also is okay. "12 O'Clock High" still is fine in second week at St. Louis.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (F&M) (3,000; 50-75) —"Pinky" (20th) (2d wk) and "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) (m.o.). Down to $9,000 after fast $15,000 first stanza.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 50-75)—"Singing Guns" (Rep) and vaude. Big $22,000, best here in months. Last week, "Great Rupert" (EL) and vaude, $14,000.

Loew's (Loew) (3,172; 50-75) — "Nancy Goes To Rio" (M-G) and "Alias Champ" (Rep). Solid $18,000. Last week, "Key To City" (M-G) (2d wk), fine $11,500.

Missouri (F&M) (3,500; 50-75)—"Dear Wife" (Par) (2d wk) and "Great Rupert" (EL) (m.o.). Down to mild $9,500 after fancy $14,000 initial session.

GM Feature

Hollywood, March 14.

General Motors is going into the film production business through a deal with Hal Roach to make a 70-minute feature on his lot in Culver City.

Picture, to be released for general public viewing, will be produced by John K. Ford, GM executive in charge of films, with Arthur Pierson as writer and director, and a number of Hollywood names in the cast.

Bliz Bops Mpls. Albeit 'Malaya' 14G; 'Montana' Mild 9G, 'Buccaneer' 7G

Minneapolis, March 14.

Major newcomers are action pix what with "Malaya," "Montana," "Buccaneer's Girl" and "Davy Crockett' on leading screens. More blizzards, sub-zero temperatures and icy streets have been ruinous to the box-office and the only hope for healthy takings lies in a return of more bearable weather. "Sands of Iwo Jima" remains for a third loop week. None of newcomers is measuring up to hopes.

Estimates for This Week

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 50-70)—"Sands Iwo Jima" (Rep) (m.o.). Third week downtown. Here after two big State weeks. Nice $5,500. Last week, "Congorilla" (Indie) and "Borneo" (Indie), $4,500.

'Horn' Lusty $13,500 In Buff; 'Rio' Sweet 14G

Buffalo, March 14.

"Young Man With Horn" shapes as standout here this week at Center with big session. "Nancy Goes To Rio" is nice at the Buffalo. "Sundowners" looks very nice at Century.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew's) (3,500; 40-70)—"Nancy Goes to Rio" (M-G). Nice $14,000 or bit better. Last week, "Key To City" (M-G), $18,000 in 10 days.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 40-70)—"Barricade" (WB) and "Unmasked" (Rep). Doing surprisingly well at $15,000. Last week, "Paid in Full" (Par) and "Pirates of Capri" (FC), $17,000.

Center (Par) (2,100; 40-70)—"Young Man With Horn" (WB). Big $13,500. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB), only $12,000. in 10 days.

Lafayette (Basil's) (3,000; 40-70)—"Father Is Bachelor" (Col) and "The Palomino" (Col). Modest $10,000. Last week, "Francis" (U) and "Rugged O'Riordans" (U) (2d wk), fancy $10,500.

Century (20th Cent) (3,000; 40-70)—"Sundowners" (EL) and "Port New York" (EL). Very nice $12,000 looms or better. Last week, "Blue Grass Kentucky" (Mono) and "Girl In Heart" (Mono), fair $12,500 in 10 days.

'Francis' Rousing 13G in Mild Pitt

Pittsburgh, March 14.

Lent and after-effects of long coal strike are putting a blanket on almost everything this week. "Francis" at Fulton is the lone new entry to make much impression, being great and holding. "Sundowners" looks fair at the Barry. Major disappointment is inability of strong marquee line-up to pull them into Penn for "Malaya."

Estimates for This Week

Barry (Skirball) (1,100; 45-80) — "Sundowners" (EL). Heavy campaign plugging debut of John Barrymore, Jr., should bring fair $7,000. Probably be enough to hold. Last week, "Guilty of Treason" (EL) out of money at a little over $6,000 in 10 days.

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 45-80) — "Francis" (U). Talking mule has caught on and pepping biz to best level in some time. Great $13,000 or near. Holds. Last week, "Woman In Hiding" (U), about $7,000.

Harris (Harris) (2,200; 45-80) — "Mother Didn't Tell" (20th). Not much over $8,500, light. Last week, "Borderline" (U), $7,000 in 6 days.

Penn (Loew's) (3,300; 45-80) — "Malaya" (M-G). Not even names of Spencer Tracy and James Stewart can get them in for this one, under $13,000, sluggish. Last week, "Key to City" (M-G) (2d wk), nice $12,000.

Stanley (WB) (3,800; 45-80) — "Man With Horn" (WB) (2d wk). Staying over 5 days, abbreviated stanza doing modest $6,500. Last week, fair $14,500.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 70-$1.20)—"Samson, Delilah" (Par) (3d wk). DeMille epic holding well, hefty $18,000. Last week, fancy $23,000.

Storm Slaps Omaha But Kassel-M. Hutton Boost 'Book' 14G, 'Malaya' 6G

Omaha, March 14.

Heavy winds, sleet and snowstorm tied up traffic and spoiled weekend openings here. Even the Orpheum, with Art Kassel band and Marion Hutton and "Black Book" is only fair. The Brandeis with "Tell It to Judge" and "Bodyhold" dipped sharply. "The Heiress" at Paramount also suffered from storm. "Malaya" at State will do sock session.

Estimates for This Week

Orpheum (Tristates) (3,000; 16-65)—"Black Book" (EL) and Art Kassel orch on stage. Mild $14,000 or near. Last week, "Sundowners" (EL) and "Song Surrender" (Par), slender $9,500.

Paramount (Tristates) (2,800; 16-65)—"The Heiress" (Par). Oke $10,000. Last week, "12 O'Clock High" (20th), fine $13,500.

Brandeis (RKO) (1,500; 16-65)—"Tell to Judge" (Col) and "Bodyhold" (Col). Fair $6,500. Last week "Chain Lightning" (WB) and "Mule Train" (Col), good $7,500.

State (Goldberg) (865; 16-65)—"Malaya" (M-G). Sock $6,000. Last week, "Bagdad" (U) and "The Guilty" (Mono), $4,300.

Hope-Russell-'China' Wow 126G, N.Y. 2d Wk., 'Hand'-Stageshow Slow 45G, 'Strangers' Weak 28G, 'Outriders' 17G

Overall business picture at Broadway first-run theatres remains very sluggish this session, but Bob Hope, Jane Russell, et al., continue to pack the Paramount on second week. Unfortunately the prosperity enjoyed by the Par flagship currently extends to few other deluxe houses, and then on a limited scale. Lent, U. S. income tax deadline, rain and offish economic conditions in the N. Y. area all are being blamed for the present slow boxoffice.

Hope, with "Capt. China," is soaring to $126,000 in second round, greatest second week in history of Par house. Upped scale all along line, with $1.80 top Saturday-Sunday and $1.60 high on Friday, plus extra shows, is making such a figure possible. The Hope stage package was booked for only two weeks, with "Francis" opening today (Wed.).

Principal exceptions to the slow Broadway pace are "Cinderella" and "Third Man." Walt Disney opus still is socko $35,000 in fourth stanza at the Mayfair while "Man" continues its great pace with around $20,000 for sixth Victoria frame.

Three new bills, launched during the week, are not cutting much of a figure. Best is "Black Hand," with Art Mooney band, Pied Pipers, Harvey Stone onstage at Capitol. Despite a strong Saturday-Sunday, combo doesn't look likely to go over mild $45,000 in its first week ending Friday.

"Perfect Strangers," with stageshow topped by Tito Guizar and George Shearing Quintet, looms very sluggish $28,000 at Strand. "The Outriders" also is taking it on the chin with $17,000 for first State week, fine opening being washed out by dull trade subsequently.

Elsewhere, first-runs are very lightweight, some houses being firmly embedded in the red.

The Music Hall brings in "Woman of Distinction" tomorrow (Thurs.) after "Stage Fright" fell down in second and third weeks.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 60-$1.50)—"Three Came Home" (20th) (4th wk). Third week ended last Monday (13) night was down to $18,000 after nice $25,000 for second round. Stays on, although has fallen back more rapidly than expected.

Bijou (City Inv.) (589; $1.20-$2.40)—"Red Shoes" (EL) (73d wk). Holding okay around $7,500 after $8,000 for last stanza. Continues.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 55-$1.50) "Black Hand" (M-G) plus Art Mooney orch, Pied Pipers, Harvey Stone on stage. Despite strong opening, doesn't look to go over $45,000, mild, in first week ending Friday (17). Holds. Last week, "Malaya" (M-G) with Blue Barron orch, Benny Fields, Gene Sheldon heading stage bill (2d wk-10 days), $35,000

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 50-$1.75)—"Outside the Wall" (U). Opened yesterday (Tues.). In ahead, "Borderline" (U) (10 days), mild $15,000.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 50-$1.20)—"Outlaw" (RKO) (4th wk). Down to $16,000 this week but still very profitable, with extra newspaper ads helping. Last week, big $20,000.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 50-$1.20)—"Cinderella" (RKO) (4th wk). Still doing big business at $35,000 after sock $44,000 for third session. Stays on.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 55-$1.20)—"Mr. Lucky" (RKO) (reissue) and vaude. Playing oldie with vaude because of product shortage, and doing better than recently at $16,500. Last week, "Dakota Lil" (20th) and vaude, dull $15,000.

Paramount (Par) (3,664; 55-$1.50)—"Francis" (U) with King Cole Trio, Larry Storch, Johnny Coy, Ray McKinley orch. Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Capt. China" (Par) and Bob Hope, Jane Russell, Les Brown orch onstage (2d wk), held up in remarkable fashion with terrific $126,000, biggest second session ever for Par flagship. First week was greatest opening week in 23-year history of house, mammoth $141,000.

Park Avenue (U) (583; 90-$1.50)—"Astonished Heart" (U) (5th wk). Fourth stanza ended Monday (13) was down to $4,500 but still showing profit. Stays on. Third frame was $6,000.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 80-$2.40) — "Stage Fright" (WB) and stageshow (3d-final wk). Off to mild $96,000 or near in final round after light $103,500 for second. "Woman of Distinction" (Col) opens tomorrow (Thurs.).

Rialto (Mage) (594; 44-98) — "Without Pity" (Indie). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Mafia" (Indie) (2d wk), held comparatively well at $8,000 after big $11,000 opener.

Rivoli (UAT-Par) (2,092; 90-$1.80)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (12th wk). Snapped out of declining tendencies, with solid weekend, and looks okay $15,000 for current round; 11th week was $16,500. Continues.

Roxy (20th) (5,886; 80-$1.75) — "Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th) and Beatrice Kay, Buck & Bubbles, Beatrice Kraft and Dancers onstage (2d-final wk). Looks to wind up at very slow $40,000 after highly disappointing $48,000 opener. "Under My Skin" (20th) and China Doll Revue onstage open Friday (17).

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-$1.50)—"The Outriders" (M-G) (2d wk). Initial week ended last night (Tues.) is not getting far, with $17,000 likely, light. In ahead, "Key to City" (M-G) (5th wk), $7,500.

Strand (WB) (2,756; 55-$2)—"Perfect Strangers" (WB) with George Shearing Quintet, Tito Guizar, others onstage. Very sluggish $28,000 or close, one of slowest opening weeks here in months. Holds. In ahead, "Chain Lightning" (WB) and Latin Quarter Revue onstage (3d wk), $21,000.

Sutton (R&B) (561; 90-$1.50)—"Fallen Idol" (SRO) (18th wk). The 17th frame ended Monday (13) was solid at $6,400 after fine $6,900 in 16th week. Stays.

Trans-Lux (60th St.) (453; 74-$1.50)—"Tight Little Island" (U) (12th wk). Eleventh week ended last Saturday (11) held very well at $5,500 after okay $6,000 last round. Continues.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 95-$1.50)—"Third Man" (SRO) (6th wk). Showing marked strength in face of conditions, with fancy $20,000 likely after $23,000 for fifth round. Continues indef.

'Treason' Tasty $15,500, Philly

Philadelphia, March 14.

Rain storms Saturday and Sunday nights washed out the boxoffice here, with first-runs having one of quietest weekends of year. "Guilty of Treason" looked good at the Aldine. "Man on Eiffel Tower," at Stanley shapes nice. "Mother Didn't Tell Me," at Fox, is only fair.

Estimates for This Week

Aldine (WB) (1,303; 50-99)—"Guilty of Treason" (EL). Nice $15,500. Last week, "Outside Wall" (U) (3d wk), neat $9,000.

Boyd (WB) (2,360; 50-99)—"Francis" (U) (3d wk). Good $11,500. Last week, $15,000.

Earle (WB) (2,700; 70-$1.25)—"Samson and Delilah" (Par) (6th wk). Holding to nice $15,500. Last week, $18,000.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 50-99)—"Mother Didn't Tell Me" (20th). Not as good as expected at $17,000. Last week, "Willie Comes Home" (20th) (2d wk), $16,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,200; 50-99)—"Paid in Full" (Par) (2d wk). Fair $14,000 after $18,000 opener.

Karlton (Goldman) (1,000; 50-99)—"Love Happy" (UA) (2d wk). Okay $12,500 after boff $16,000 initial round.

Mastbaum (WB) (4,360; 50-99)—"Man With Horn" (WB) (2d wk). Down to $16,000 after light $22,500 opener.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,500; 50-99)—"Key to City" (M-G) (4th wk). Down to $10,000. Last week, neat $11,500.

Stanley (WB) (2,950; 50-99)—"Eiffel Tower" (RKO) Franchot Tone's p.a. helped opening day. Nice $18,000 likely. Last week, "Capt. China" (Par), $12,500.

Stanton (WB) (1,475; 50-99)—"The Outlaw" (RKO) (2d wk). Not holding to boff start, but still plenty strong at $14,000. Last week, smash $22,500.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 50-99)—"Passage Pimlico" (EL). Neat $6,000. Last week, "Tight Little Island" (EL) (4th wk), fine $5,700.

The Big Hangover

Metro release of Norman Krasna production. Directed and written by Krasna. Stars Elizabeth Taylor, Van Johnson; features Percy Waram, Fay Holden, Leon Ames, Edgar Buchanan, Gene Lockhart, Selena Royle, Rosemary DeCamp. Camera, George Folsey; editor, Fredrick Y. Smith; musical score, Adolph Deutsch. Tradeshown in N. Y. March 9, '50. Running time, 82 MINS.

David Maldon	Van Johnson
Mary Belney	Elizabeth Taylor
John Belney	Percy Waram
Martha Belney	Fay Holden
Carl Bellcap	Leon Ames
Uncle Fred Mahoney	Edgar Buchanan
Kate Mahoney	Selena Royle
Charles Parkford	Gene Lockhart
Claire Bellcap	Rosemary DeCamp
Dr. Lee	Phillip Ahn
Williams	Gordon Richards
Mr. Rumlie	Matt Moore
Samuel C. Lang	Pierre Watkin
Steve Hughes	Russell Hicks

This is a light, beguiling comedy with a great deal of charm. Story idea and thread aren't too strong, but treatment is smart. Theme is appealing, and pic has marquee names of Van Johnson and Elizabeth Taylor to give it ample returns on its apparently modest budget.

Norman Krasna, as writer-director-producer, has done a good job on his one-man show. Granted it's a slight story, he's decked it out in some amusing and tender situations, with sprightly, adult dialog and an expert cast of farceurs in support of the two romantic leads. Film gets a little too cute at times, and has a few dull stretches, but neither happens often enough to be serious.

Story is that of a young idealist, graduating from law school as an honor student and about to enter a rich, socialite law firm because of his marks. He's a poor boy, from the wrong side of the tracks, who's been able to go to law school via the GI Bill of Rights. He has a peculiar allergy—to liquor—the result of his war experience. He was trapped in a wine cellar during a bombing, and almost drowned in a flood of brandy. A whiff of spirits is enough now to send him into a headspin.

Situation allows for some amusing comedy moments, which Krasna properly exploits. But it also permits him to weave in some excellent commentary on man's selfishness and his lack of social consciousness. The message comes through sugarcoated, told in light vein, but it's effective nevertheless, as the law grad takes the side of the common people and quits his new job with the swank law firm to join the city solicitor's office and fight discrimination.

Meantime, the daughter of the law firm's senior partner, who fancies herself an amateur psychiatrist, has taken the law grad in hand to cure him of his drink allergy, with the inevitable romantic complications.

There are fine moments in the film, as when the law student eloquently defends the practice of law in rehearsal of his valedictory speech; or when the city solicitor explains how his loyal wife helped him through law school, or when they welcome a Chinaman, dispossessed from a swank apartment house, to their fold.

Miss Taylor is warm and appealing as the amateur psychiatrist, in a role more mature and adult than usual for her. Johnson, too, is rather subdued and serious here, to just as warming effect. Film, though slight, adds cubits to both their statures. Supporting cast is unusually smooth, with Percy Waram as the law firm's senior partner; Fay Holden, as his understanding wife; Leon Ames, as the crusading city solicitor; Rosemary DeCamp, as his loyal helpmate; Gene Lockhart, as a practical joker of a lawyer; Edgar Buchanan and Selena Royle, as the law student's uncle and aunt, and Phillip Ahn, as the victim of social discrimination. Bron.

Under My Skin
(SONGS)

20th-Fox release of Casey Robinson production. Stars John Garfield, Micheline Prelle; features Luther Adler, Orley Lindgren. Directed by Jean Negulesco. Screenplay, Casey Robinson; based on story by Ernest Hemingway; songs, Alfred Newman, Mack Gordon and Jacques Surmagne; music, Daniele Amfitheatrof; camera, Joseph La Shelle; special effects, Fred Sersen; editor, Dorothy Spencer. Tradeshown N. Y., March 6, '50. Running time, 86 MINS.

"The Champ," which served as the springboard for a typical series of father-son cinematic relationships, remains apparently inexhaustible as a story source for films. What "The Champ" did for Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper is probably the hope of John Garfield and young Orley Lindgren—let alone 20th-Fox—in this yarn of an erratic turf jockey, his escapades and hardships that he shares with his adolescent son. However, "Under My Skin" misses. Occasionally it gives promise of getting away into the stretch, but then peters out into a slough of absurd sentiment and romance.

Miniature Reviews

"The Big Hangover" (Metro). Engaging romantic comedy, with Van Johnson, Elizabeth Taylor. Good b.o.

"Under My Skin" (Songs) (20th). Mild Garfield-Micheline Prelle starrer.

"Please Believe Me" (M-G). Mildly diverting comedy of a romantic chase. Fair b.o. prospects.

"Shadow on the Wall" (M-G). Entertaining meller with psychiatric theme; good nabe fare.

"Singing Guns" (Rep). Vaughn Monroe in his first oatuner; good b.o.

"The Happiest Days of Your Life" (BL). Amusing British classroom farce.

Garfield plays an American jockey working the Continental tracks; and "working" is right. He'd throw a race faster than you could pick a loser at Chantilly, and he's always getting into trouble with the wrong people. Like Luther Adler, for instance, a guy he's double-crossed on a track in Italy and who is ultimately responsible, in a rather obscure ending, for Garfield's death in a final race in which he gives it that big Rutger's try, "for the kid."

Micheline Prelle (nee Presle), as a nightclub operator and singer, is the romantic pivot with Garfield, and she gets a lot of the photographic breaks. An import from France, where she was a film star ("Devil in the Flesh"), Miss Prelle is slicked up a little too much, camera-wise, in her American debut with some obvious camera-angles. Her face, however, comes off better on the camera shots than that chassis. She's an actress who underplays, and suggests more ability than the direction would indicate.

Garfield manages to survive some of that dialog, while the youngster, Lindgren, is a good-looking acting prospect. Adler is always a believable menace. Otherwise, the cast is huge and consists practically of just bits.

The script, from an original story by Ernest Hemingway, has little action, though there are some exciting moments in the final race. The direction has failed to motivate the story effectively.

Miss Prelle sings two songs in nightclub scenes, both effectively done. Kahn.

Please Believe Me

Hollywood, March 6.

Metro release of Val Lewton production. Stars Deborah Kerr, Robert Walker, Mark Stevens, Peter Lawford; features James Whitmore, J. Carrol Naish. Directed by Norman Taurog. Story and screenplay, Nathaniel Curtis; camera, Robert Planck; musical score, Hans Selter; editor, Ferris Webster. Tradeshown March 3, '50. Running time, 86 MINS.

Alison Kirbe	Deborah Kerr
Terence Keath	Robert Walker
Matthew Kinston	Mark Stevens
Jeremy Tayler	Peter Lawford
Vincent Maran	James Whitmore
Lucky Reilly	J. Carrol Naish
Mrs. Milwright	Spring Byington
Sylvia Rumley	Carol Savage
Beryl Robinson	Drue Mallory
Mr. Cooper	George Cleveland
Edward Warrender	Ian Wolfe
Lily Millwright	Bridget Carr
Jacques Carnet	Henri Letondal
Mme. Carnet	Gaby Andre
The Croupier	Leon Belasco

"Please Believe Me" is a wacky, mildly diverting comedy. Pacing is good and the story antics broad enough to account for a good round of chuckles. Male names bracketed in star positions are calculated to attract some attention from the younger ticket-buyers, so b.o. payoff should be generally satisfactory, although returns will never reach fancy proportions.

Norman Taurog's direction manages considerable smoothness in unravelling the erratic story twists. Plot of Nathaniel Curtis' story presents the romantic chase of Deborah Kerr by three males. She is an English gal who has inherited a 50,000-acre Texas ranch from a man she befriended during the war. Enroute to take possession Robert Walker moves in to marry her and pay his gambling debts. Peter Lawford is a millionaire playboy who figures what fun he might have is worth a breach-of-promise payoff. Mark Stevens is Lawford's attorney, out to protect him from gold-diggers.

The male trio pour on the romance but Stevens is the one who collects the gal in the end. Curtis has peppered his script with dialog and situations that provoke a number of topnotch laughs. But he needed to be smoother in putting the good factors together.

Four leads are uniformly good. Miss Kerr's character seems a bit out of place for her, but she gives it a good, light touch. Three male stars are expert, with Lawford's character accounting for the most chuckles. James Whitmore, bodyguard assigned to Walker by gambler J. Carrol Naish so the latter's investment will be protected, is good, as is Naish.

Val Lewton's production has given the film a nifty physical flash. Robert Planck's lensing displays it well and helping the comedy mood is the Hans Salter music score. Brog.

Shadow On the Wall

Metro release of Robert Sisk production. Stars Ann Sothern, Zachary Scott, Gigi Perreau. Directed by Patrick Jackson. Screenplay, William Ludwig; based on story by Hannah Lees, Lawrence P. Bachmann; camera, Ray June; editor, Irvine Warburton; score, Andre Previn. Tradeshown N. Y., March 2, '50. Running time, 84 MINS.

Dell Faring	Ann Sothern
David I. Starrling	Zachary Scott
Susan Starrling	Gigi Perreau
Dr. Caroline Canford	Nancy Davis
Celia Starrling	Kristine Miller
Pike Ludwell	John McIntire
Crane Weymouth	Tom Helmore
Miss Burke	Helen Brown
Olga	Barbara Billingsley
Secretary	Marcia Van Dyke
Bobby	Anthony Sydes
Boy	Jimmy Hunt

A variation on the psycho theme, "Shadow On the Wall" is an arresting meller that will make good program fare. Neatly dressed and well performed, pic spins an unusual murder story whose solution hinges on the successful psychiatric treatment of a young child. Lack of solid marquee values will limit its chances in the firstrun keys, but it will go over nicely at the nabes.

Gigi Perreau, a talented child actress, is thrust into the center of the yarn by witnessing the murder of her stepmother following a violent husband-wife scrap. Zachary Scott, the child's father, is charged with the slaying which even he believes he committed since he was knocked unconscious directly before the killing. The child, however, saw someone else enter the room and perpetuate the crime, but the resulting shock produces a form of amnesia in the kid.

With Scott convicted and slated to be electrocuted in a short time, story gathers tension as the kid slowly recovers consciousness and dimly puts the finger on her aunt, Ann Sothern, who killed her two-timing sister because the latter stole her fiance. Best portions of the pic are the detailed sequences showing a femme psychiatrist's techniques in gaining the child's confidence and probing her memory.

Plenty of melodrama is dished up as Miss Sothern makes a couple of efforts to get rid of the child before she makes a full identification of the culprit. Once Miss Sothern uses poison and another time drowning, but both times she's foiled in the nick. At the windup, the kid receives another shock, via her aunt's shadow on the wall, which stirs a vivid recollection of the original crime scene and permits her to reveal the guilty party.

Around eight years old, Gigi Perreau registers strongly in a difficult part which she carries off credibly with little of the precocious mannerisms of kid thespers. Miss Sothern, in the unusual role of a heavy, handles the assignment neatly while Scott effectively creates sympathy. Nancy Davis is convincing as the psychiatrist and Kristine Miller in the brief part of the murdered woman, scores with lots of sex appeal.

Production interiors, particularly in the children's hospital, are solid without being ornate. Good score and expert lensing add to the entertainment values. Herm.

Singing Guns
(SONGS)

Republic release of Abe Lyman (Melville Tucker) production. Stars Vaughn Monroe, Ella Raines, Walter Brennan, Ward Bond; features Jeff Corey, Barry Kelley. Directed by R. G. Springsteen. Screenplay, Dorrell and Stuart McGowan, based on Max Brand's novel; camera (Trucolor), Reggie Lanning; editor, Richard L. Van Enger; songs, Johnny Lange, Fred Glickman, Hy Heath, Wilton Moore, Al Vann, Sunny Skylar; music, Nathan Scott. Tradeshown N. Y., March 10, '50. Running time, 91 MINS.

Stage Guard	Jimmie Dodd

Bandleader Vaughn Monroe essays his first screen dramatic role in Republic's "Singing Guns." Manifestly, he's no thespic wonder, but in view of his rep in the radio, record and ballroom fields, this oatuner appears to have a guaranteed b.o. in supporting situations despite a routine story.

Lenin

"Lenin," which opened March 11, 1950, at the N. Y. Stanley, is a weak documentary-type story of the Russian hero's life. About 85% of the material is out-and-out pro-Soviet propaganda, narration referring to the U. S., British and other Allied nations in slurring terms.

Central Documentary Film Studios in Moscow produced; Artkino is releasing in U. S. No other credits are given. Film is suited only for Russo-language theatres, where it will need several shorts to pad out program since "Lenin" runs only 61 minutes.

Monroe's broad leap from stick-swishing to six-guns ties in with his association with "Mule Train," one of last year's hit novelty numbers. Tune is briefly reprised in the film, with the batoner-turned-thesp handling the vocal. He also croons "Singing My Way Back Home" and "Mexicali Trail." All three ditties blend well with the pic's outdoor theme.

Screenplayed by Dorrell and Stuart McGowan from the Max Brand novel, the yarn has Monroe portraying a Robin-Hoodish outlaw who steals gold from a mine which he believes to be rightfully his. Saloonkeeper Ella Raines, doctor-preacher Walter Brennan and Sheriff Ward Bond collaborate in ultimately bagging the culprit.

While the picture is helped with good production accoutrements supplied by exec-producer Abe Lyman and associate producer Melville Tucker, its action frequently drags due to the padded story. Running time of 91 minutes is overlong. About 15 minutes needs to be judiciously scissored.

Monroe does fairly well before the camera inasmuch as it's his maiden acting stint. He's helped by good performances from Brennan, and Bond. Although Miss Raines has ample physical assets for her role, she's inclined to overplay the part at times. Jeff Corey impresses as a menace, and Barry Kelley and Tom Fadden stand out among supporting players.

R. G. Springsteen creditably handles the direction. Particularly well done is Reggie Lanning's Trucolor lensing. Gilb.

The Happiest Days of Your Life
(BRITISH)

London, March 8.

British Lion release of London Films-Frank Launder-Sidney Gilliat production. Stars Alastair Sim, Margaret Rutherford; features Joyce Grenfel, Guy Middleton, Edward Rigby. Directed by Launder. Screenplay, Launder, John Dighton; camera, Stan Pavey; editor, Oswald Hafenrichter. At Carlton, London, March 8, '50. Running time, 81 MINS.

Wetherby Pond	Alastair Sim
Miss Whitchurch	Margaret Rutherford
Conrad Matthews	John Turnbull
Arnold Billings	Richard Wattis
Victory Hyde-Brown	Guy Middleton
Anthony Ramsden	Arthur Howard
Richard Tassell	John Bently
Rainbow	Edward Rigby
Miss Jezzard	Muriel Aked
Miss Gossage	Joyce Grenfell
Miss Curtis	Millicent Wolfe
Miss Chapel	Myrette Morven
Miss Harper	Bernadette O'Farrell

An outstanding success as a West End legit production, this boisterous farce will make the boxoffice click merrily when shown to British audiences. Its entertainment, however, is typically English, and it's dubious whether this type of rollicking humor will be appreciated by the average American theatregoer. It should have a chance in carefully selected spots.

Bright script and brisk direction conceal the stage origin. The story is given a wider canvas and isn't wanting in action. In fact, the pace never lets up and one hilarious farcical incident only ends to give place to another.

Setting of the film is a college for boys, to which, as a result of a slip at the Ministry of Education, a girl's school is evacuated. The story builds up through obvious situations to a boisterous climax in which the respective principals are trying to conceal the real situation from visitors to the college.

There is no shortage of laughs, particularly in the earlier part of the film, but the joke is a little too protracted and wears thin before the end. It's an ideal vehicle for Alastair Sim as the harassed headmaster, while Margaret Rutherford admirably suggests the overpowering headmistress. Joyce Grenfel never fails to raise a chuckle as the over-anxious sports mistress and there are fine contributions from John Turnbull, Guy Middleton and Edward Rigby, with a trivial touch of romance added by John Bentley and Bernadette O'Farrell. Myro.

E Primavera
(It's Springtime)
(ITALIAN)

Genoa, March 7.

ENIC release of Universalcine (Sandro Ghenzi) production. Features Mario Angelotti, Elena Varzi, Irene Gemma. Directed by Renato Castellani. Screenplay, Castellani, Cesare Zavattini, Silvio D'Amico; camera, Tino Santoni. Previewed in Genoa. Running time, 95 MINS.

"E Primavera" is a delightful comedy, ably scripted by Cesare Zavattini, Silvio D'Amico, and director Renato Castellani, whose fine pacing keeps pic moving at a fast clip. Film will keep 'em laughing here, but its heavily dialect brand of comedy, particularly attuned to Italian ears, may seriously hamper its chances abroad. A somewhat fragmentary continuity, bolstered by a spoken commentary, is a minor flaw.

The wild story deals with a young man who commits bigamy and the complications ensuing when his two wives (one a fiery Sicilian, the other a placid Milanese) meet. Tale isn't the type to be quibbled over, but the director has guided his non-pro players in such a delightfully natural and believable manner that audiences are kept from worrying about story discrepancies. As Beppe Agosti, the bigamist, Mario Angelotti is a find—a completely irresponsible, carefree youth with an irresistible Italian charm that allows him to get away with murder. Elena Varzi and Irene Gemma are completely believable as his wives.

Castellani's careful attention to detail and his good sense of timing emerge throughout, with many background touches adding that certain something to many scenes, as well as maintaining a steady flow of laughs. Shot almost entirely on location (in Milan, Florence, and Sicily), pic is further aided by fine photography (Tino Santoni), plus a nicely-scored musical background. Hawk.

(Boys From the Streets)
(NORWEGIAN)

Oslo, Feb. 20.

Kommunenes Filmcentral release of Norsk Film production. Features Tom Tellefsen, Ivar Thorkildsen, Pal Bang-Hansen, Svein Bj. Byhring, Per Arne Knobelauch, Per Frisli, Ella Hval, Finn Bernhoft, Eva Steen, Carsten Winger, Ingrid Bothner, Jack Fjeldstad, Helge Essmar. Directed by Ulf Greber and Arne Skouen. Screenplay, Arne Skouen; camera, Ragnar Sorensen, Finn Bergan; music, Gunnar Sonstevold. Previewed in Oslo. Running time, 78 MINS.

Dealing with the Scandinavian counterpart of New York's "Dead End Kids," this film has appeal that should make it a good bet for worldwide distribution. Using local boys recruited from the streets of Oslo, pic studies the reasons responsible for some of these kids ending up as youthful criminals.

Direction, acting, camera-work and music are all firstrate. Wing.

(SWEDISH)

Stockholm, Feb. 28.

Svensk Filmindustri production and release. Stars Eva Henning, Birger Malmsten; features Birgit Tengroth, Mimi Nelson, Hasse Ekman, Bengt Eklund, Gaby Stenberg, Naima Wifstrand, Sven-Eric Gamble. Directed by Ingmar Bergman. Screenplay by Herbert Grevenius; camera, Gunnar Fischer; music, Erik Nordgren. At Spegeln, Stockholm. Running time, 78 MINS.

A Swedish dramatic film that is very well done, built around actress Birgit Tengroth's sensational novel. This film may be limited to Scandinavian markets, because of the way it deals with some erotic problems. Whole story takes place during a train journey from Zurich to Stockholm.

Performances, especially by Eva Henning and Birger Malmsten, are outstanding. Wing.

Paris, March 7.

David O. Selznick Continental release of Boris Morros production. Written, directed by and starring Sacha Guitry; features Lana Marconi, Pauline Carton, Jeanne-Fusier Gil, Robert Seller, Camera, Ranette; music, Louigny; editor, Rougier. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 100 MINS.

Baron	Sacha Guitry
Clerk	Lana Marconi
Centenarian	Marcel Simon
Maid	Pauline Carton
Mother	Jeanne-Fusier Gil

Boris Morros has pulled out a plum in his first European production. He has weaned Sacha Guitry away from his filmed theatre rut and the result is a pic strongly reminiscent of Guitry's best attempt. Guitry is once more in his metier as the raconteur, and his clever malicious dialog is admirably illustrated. Film is full of the sly, Gallic wit and satire, which has been missing from French pix for some time. It cross-sections a small French town in all its provincialism, bigotry, loyalties, loves and hates. On the Guitry name and subject, pic should place well

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Out-of-town geography appears to be enticing the Hollywood studios. Columbia last week became the 23d producer to register with the Motion Picture Assn. of America title bureau a label with a place name followed by the word "Story." Col's registration was "The Arizona Story."

Only two pix with such geographical titles have been made. They are Metro's "The Philadelphia Story" and Paramount's short, "The Lambertville Story." Registered within the past two years, however, and still claiming MPAA protection are the following:

"The Washington Story" (Allied Artists and Roy Del Ruth Productions), "The Texas Story" (Edward Alperson), "The Canada Story" (Cromien), "The New York Story" (Selznick, Goldwyn and Santana), "The Miami Beach Story" (Enterprise), "The Miami Story" (RKO and Warner Bros.), "The Pittsburgh Story" (Film Classics), "The Hollywood Story" (Film Group, Paramount, Pioneer and Wallis), "The Western Story" (International), "The Calcutta Story" (Oriental-International), "The Beverly Hills Story" (Seltzer), "The Los Angeles Story" (Small) and "The Australian Story" (20th).

Hollywood, during 1949, compiled its best record in a decade for producing "clean and wholesome" entertainment, according to ratings of the leading women's organizations which tag all pix through a national preview committee. Of 232 pix previewed by the committee last year, 177 or over 76%, were classified as suitable for the family. Figure was an 8% improvement over 1948 and 9% over the three previous years. Previewers' ratings are sent out in Joint Estimates of Current Motion Pictures, a semi-monthly mag which goes to schools, libraries, church and civic groups throughout the country.

Eagle Lion's "Red Ryder" oater series, though not tied in directly, is benefiting through a contest being held by the Boys Clubs of America. Some 300,000 moppet members of the organization are competing for a junior citizenship award for which first prize is two weeks at the "Red Ryder" ranch in Pagosa Springs, Colo. Winner will be guest of cartoonist Fred Harman, creator of the McNaught Syndicate strip. EL has released several of the westerns which are made by Jerry Thomas' Equity Pictures.

Sara Haden 16 years ago was discovered by George Cukor when she was working in a Broadway legit show, "Trigger." At Cukor's insistence she shifted to Hollywood in 1934 to become a celluloid thesp in a picture called "Spitfire." Now Miss Haden is thesping for the first time under Cukor's direction in Metro's "A Life of Her Own."

Phonevision Pros and Cons

about it. He reiterated, though, that TOA has not attempted to throw a blockade in the path of the "pay-as-you-see" video system and does not intend to do so, intimating it might be unwise to attempt to stop any method of progress even though it might complete with the theatres of TOA members.

Possibility that Zenith might be dealing with indie producers, who would have less to fear from the wrath of exhibitors than would the major companies, was also pointed up this week. Spokesman for United Artists declared the indies releasing through his company hadn't shown much interest in Phonevision but revealed that one producer has suggested turning over two reissues for the tests. Spokesman declined to identify the producer but emphasized that UA has not sold any product for Phonevision to which it controls rights.

British producers, too, are beginning to show signs of interest in Phonevision, touted by MacDonald as the best form of "boxoffice video" devised and thus the saviour for the film industry from regular TV's competition. Morris Helprin, veepee of Sir Alexander Korda's London Film Productions, declared this week that Phonevision has asked for films of producers he represents for use in the Chi tests. "I have refused," Helprin said, "on the grounds that if they use our films and the experiment is successful, then Hollywood will rush in with its product to claim Phonevision, television and every other vision as their own—and our pictures will get that Ol' Debbil label, 'British.' But I haven't turned down Phonevision because it's wrong. I think that it's the only way film makers can earn more money in the future than they ever dreamed of in the past."

MacDonald said Zenith will spend $500,000 on the tests. "If the public will spend money twice a week with Phonevision," he added, "the firm will gross $1,200,000,000 in five years, with only 50% of the sets equipped." He said Zenith will license Phonevision to other manufacturers wishing to install it in their sets at a cost of 5% per unit.

Zenith topper cited figures to show that the Chi boxoffice was off 52% during the last six months ending Jan. 1; off 19.29% during the last three months of 1949, and down 20.42% in January. DeMille, invited to the press meet by MacDonald, said: "If some way of turning the home into a boxoffice is found, the film industry must go along. Phonevision is home boxoffice. What I am urging this industry to do is not to turn its back on progress. Commander MacDonald has asked help from the industry. If the industry does not find a way to extend it to him, he will help himself."

DeMille refused to state whether he has turned over any of his pictures to MacDonald for the test run in September, but intimated strongly that he would.

M'w'kee's Towne Seen Asking Divorcement Of 3 Fox Theatres in Decree

Chicago, March 14.

Towne theatre, Milwaukee, will ask divestiture of the three downtown Fox houses in Milwaukee as part of its proposed equity decree in its anti-trust suit against the majors. Hearings on equity decree begin March 27 before Judge John P. Barnes in Chi Federal district court.

Decree will provide relief for Towne in "monopolistic" situation found to exist in Milwaukee by Judge Barnes on Feb. 7, when he awarded Towne $1,295,878 in triple damages under Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts. Towne attorney Thomas C. McConnell must submit his proposed decree to defense lawyers by Friday (17). He revealed last week that he would ask divestiture of the Palace, Wisconsin and the Strand, the three 20th-Fox downtown houses. He was undecided, however, about how he would deal with the two Warner showcases, the Warner and Alhambra.

Findings of fact by Judge Barnes are expected to play an important part in the decree as it finally emerges after hearings. In his award to the Towne, Judge Barnes found that majors had conspired to set up 41-day clearance system between first and second-runs, a zoning system for first runs, and higher admission prices, and had conspired to prevent the Towne from getting first-runs.

It is to be expected from these findings that Judge Barnes will set down a decree which will break down clearance, zoning and admission prices. Something like the Jackson Park decree is expected to emerge from the hearings. But whether he will force sale of the Fox houses will only be known when the decree is actually issued.

'JOLSON' AIDS COL. TO NET 945G FOR 6 MOS.

Reflecting the huge profits obtained from "Jolson Sings Again" in the final three months of 1949, Columbia Pictures came through with a net profit of $945,000 in the six-month period ended last Dec. 31 as against only $148,000 net in comparable period of 1948. "Jolson" turned in grosses in excess of $1,800,000 in October and November in the key cities covered by VARIETY with another substantial total in December.

The vast pickup in earnings enabled Columbia to show $1.22 earnings per common share as against nothing shown in the corresponding six months of 1948. The net profit in the half year ended Dec. 25, 1948, was so slim that the corporation showed only $2.08 per preferred share, or not quite enough to cover preferred divvy requirements of $2.12 for six months on the 4¼% preference issue.

Columbia's operating profit for the six months ended last December was $1,650,000, company setting aside $705,000 as estimated provision for Federal taxes. Columbia's fiscal year ends near July 1. With rental coin still coming in from "Jolson" and "All King's Men" a big moneymaker, corporation should be able to hold close to this earning rate in the first nine months of current fiscal year.

Gomersall Acquires 2 Houses From Publix

E. T. Gomersall, who resigned as assistant to Universal sales chief William A. Scully last December after 20 years with the company, became an exhibitor this week for the first time when he acquired two Illinois theatres from the Publix-Great States Corp., a United Paramount Theatres subsid.

Houses are the Grove in Elgin and Luna, Kankakee. Both first-run theatres, the duo are in two of six Illinois towns where Par has been ordered by a Federal court to divest part of its holdings to restore competitive conditions. Gomersall's acquisitions are said to be the nucleus of what will ultimately be a new independent circuit.

Because of Divorcement the MPAA Financing May Be Shifted About

Problem of financing the Motion Picture Assn. of America in light of divorcement will face the members of the Association at the annual meeting to be held shortly. Loss of their theatre subsidiaries will put a much greater burden on the member companies in making their annual contribution to the trade body.

Technically, the divorcement which has already taken place at Paramount and which is virtually certain to follow at other companies, will not affect the MPAA's income. Dues are based on a percentage of each distrib's film rentals. The take of affiliated theatres has never figured in.

With divorcement, however, each of the Big Five's contributions to MPAA will comprise a much higher ratio of its total earnings. In other words, if theatres accounted for 75% of Paramount's total income and distribution accounted for 25%, loss of the theatres means that the company's dues to MPAA will be proportionately four times larger than they were before.

Paramount, where divorcement became effective Jan. 1, is the only company to date hit on a large scale. Other companies, however, have been forced to divest themselves of moneymaking houses in their chains—and more of that is happening all the time—so that distribution income continually becomes larger in proportion to overall earnings.

Problem of the MPAA board is that the Association's activities can scarcely be cut. Survey has been made by member company reps and the conclusion has been reached that the operation is just about as tight as possible.

The organization is relatively small for a trade body serving a major industry. There is no waste manpower, so that the only saving could be in eliminating certain activities. The activities, however, such as the Production Code Administration, the Advertising Code Administration, the international division, the title registration bureau, the research bureau, the publicity department, etc., are all considered vital.

The only department that has been enlarged in recent years is international and the companies agree that that more than pays for itself. It has added reps in various parts of the world to watch out for American film interests. Feeling is that more rather than less foreign representation is needed, if anything.

That leaves the distribs with virtually no alternative but to shoulder a heavier burden. Method of assessing dues is to compute the total budget and then charge each company a pro rata share based on a formula. Latter is proportionate to the total domestic gross done by each company.

Smith Gets Till March 21 To File Briefs in Pic Suit

Tulsa, March 14.

Gerald L. K. Smith was given until March 21 to file briefs in a $800,000 suit against 20th-Fox in which he charged he was defamed, and his right of privacy invaded by the unauthorized use of his name in a recent 20th film.

Judge Royce overruled a motion for a new trial in a case brought by Martha Ivers, 18-year-old Westville, Okla., farmgirl, whose suit against Paramount, seeking $400,000, was dismissed in January. Miss Ivers had charged a film release, using her name in the title, had damaged her reputation.

Supreme Court Asked To Erase Technicality On Griffith Trust Action

Washington, March 14.

Supreme Court was asked Friday (10) to wipe out a technicality and hear an appeal in an anti-trust action against the big Griffith theatre circuit of Oklahoma.

The petition was filed by Mary Kathryn Castle Steinway, of New York City, against the Majestic Amus. Co., Hotel Last Frontier of Las Vegas, Griffith Consolidated Theatres and Griffith Metropolitan Theatres, Inc. Mrs. Steinway owns 3,750 of the 52,000 shares of Majestic Amus. Co., owner of two Tulsa Theatres, and is a minority stockholder in the Ritz theatre there. She charges the exhibition group was swallowed up by Griffith in violation of the anti-trust laws. She claims a legal technicality resulted in her suit being tossed out by the U. S. district court and by the circuit court.

Suit claimed Ralph Talbot, president and majority stockholder of Majestic, quietly switched control to Griffith and then demanded that Mrs. Steinway and her mother, who owned 15,000 shares between them, sell their stock to him. "Upon their refusal (Talbot) then threatened that he would so operate the Majestic Amus. Co. that they would realize so little from their investment that they would be forced to sell, and also threatened that if they did not sell, he would operate other motion picture theatres in the city of Tulsa in competition to the Majestic Amus. Co. and thus ruin its business." Mrs. Steinway alleges that in 1946, Talbot transferred the majority control of the Majestic and Ritz corporations to "the Griffith combination" for upwards of $1,100,000.

When Griffith was threatened with action, continues the petition to the High Court, Griffith transferred its stock to Frontier Hotel, a Nevada corporation. Frontier moved to quash the suit on the ground that it was not authorized to do business in Oklahoma and had not appointed a service agent. Griffith filed to dismiss because Frontier was "an indispensible party" but could not be served in Oklahoma.

Metro, 20th Buy Yarns From New Yorker Mag

Two major companies have bought five New Yorker mag stories of late; 20th-Fox has purchased three and has an option on a fourth, while Metro acquired two by John McNulty, which also appeared in the mag.

Quartet for 20th include another McNulty story, "Jackpot," a factual account of a Newport, R. I., family which copped first prize in a radio giveaway. In addition, 20th holds "Man On the Ledge," by Joel Sayre, as well as St. Clair McKelway's "Old 88." Latter appeared in the New Yorker last fall as one of the author's "Annals in Crime" series. Company also has a six-month option on John W. Hazard's "The Flying Teakettle."

Metro's two McNulty buys are "Count Me In" and "Overlooked Lady." In line with the trend toward buying short stories, Metro recently purchased "Star in the Window," a Satevepost tale by Norman Katkov.

Quick Clearance

plays the first-runs and continues to mount through the subsequents.

According to Goldenson, he averred that people "don't move fast enough" either to spread the good word about a picture or to take advantage of such free publicity when they hear it from their friends. He pointed out, as an example, that 20th-Fox's "Sitting Pretty" would have grossed far more than it did if it had been given the proper chance to build. Subsequent "Mr. Belvedere," which followed up on the character originated by Clifton Webb in "Pretty," grossed more, he said, since "Pretty" actually served as a trailer for it.

Slightly different note was sounded by indie circuit operator Si H. Fabian. He complained the majors were guilty of poor showmanship by releasing too many films of the same type, such as the number of big-budgeted westerns currently flooding the market. In addition, he charged the majors with failing to take account of their competitors' product when the same star is featured. For example, he pointed out, three different pictures starring John Wayne recently played Broadway theatres at the same time.

Paris Legiters Singing The Blues; A Few Exceptions to B .O. Slump

Paris, March 7.

Paris legiters are singing the blues. Political and economic upheaval isn't helping show business, despite the fact that at bad times in history the public usually tries to find relief in shows.

A good gauge of French showbiz are Sunday grosses, when most houses play matinee and evening, resulting in Sunday grosses amounting to 30% of the week. Saturday can be counted another 15%, which with one day a week compulsory closing amounts to 45% for Saturday and Sunday takings.

On Sunday, Jan. 8, always a big dip following the holidays, Paris legit grosses had sunk to $54,200. They recouped a bit Sunday, Jan. 22, with a $60,600 total. But Feb. 19 dipped again to $56,400.

For the full week ending Sunday, Feb. 26, total legit grosses amounted to $207,000 net, taxes deducted.

There are a few exceptions to the general slump. The most striking one is "Petite Hutte" at the Nouveautes, where the Andre Roussin play in its third year and with substitutes for the original cast is still ringing down a capacity $700 nightly.

Contrary to custom, the Folies Bergere, with an average $1,500 nightly take, or the Casino de Paris, with $1,000 nightly, aren't the top grossers by a long sight. At the Chatelet, Maurice Lehmann's excellent presentation of Irving Berlin's "Annie du Far West," starring a find, Lily Fayol, nets $2,400 per performance. At the Mogador, Henri Varna's new show, "Danseuse aux Etoiles," with another newcomer, Marta Labar, starring, takes $1,900. This is slightly topped at the Empire by the draw of Luis Mariano, who gets $2,000 for Francis Lopez's "Belle de Cadix" revival. At the Theatre de Paris, the Jan Kiepura-Marta Eggerth team's take with a controversial adaptation of "Princess Czardas" averages $1,500 per performance.

Straight plays doing well are the Antoine's revival of Yves Mirande's "Petit Cafe," with a nightly $800, and Colette's "Cheri" at the Madeleine with $850. At the Sarah Bernhardt, the draw of Edwige Feuillere in "Camille" gets $1,000, and Elvire Popesco in the new Andre Roussin play at the Bouffes Parisiens, "Nina," also draws $1,000. At the Marigny, where the show changes frequently, Feydau's revival of "Occupe toi d'Amelie" fetches $800, but the revival of the old meller "Le Bossu" ("The Hunchback") pulls a hefty $1,200.

Riviera Film Producers' Get-Together Is Little More Than Tourist Stunt

Paris, March 7.

The Riviera junket of European picture producers groups, which took place in Cannes so as to permit using the theatre built there for festivals, ended without achieving much more than the tourist stunt it was primarily intended to be, and deciding to meet again every year.

Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Egypt, France, Germany, Spain, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Portugal, Switzerland and Sweden were represented. U. S. was not actively represented, Gene Van Dee of Motion Picture Assn. of America acting merely as an observer and to assure the European members of U. S. goodwill in their efforts to solve their problems.

About 20 producers and 30 newspapermen were present, besides lawyer Jean Rapoport, who acted as adviser for drafting the motions. Also a few French starlets. The producers discussed the incidence of TV on pix. Also discussed was an attempt to promote international rather than national censorship.

Two French pix were previewed, Jean Cocteau's "Orphee," reportedly arty but non-commercial, and Marcel Carne's "Marie du Port," his first comeback in four years, reportedly fair for local consumption but not for U. S. outside of the sureseater circuit.

'Stromboli' Wins Rome Prize; 'Bicycle' Runnerup

Rome, March 14.

A "Prize of Rome" award totaling $1,500 was given to Roberto Rossellini Sunday (12) for his film "Stromboli." A new award of a foundation headed by Rome's mayor Salvatore Rebecchini, the Prize of Rome also meted out similar amounts to Giuseppe Ungaretti for poetry and Ugo Betti for drama.

Vittorio de Sica received honorable mention for his film, "The Bicycle Thief." Neither Rossellini nor pic's star, Ingrid Bergman, were on hand for the ceremonies.

Forced Mex Pix Exhib Gets Nix

Mexico City, March 7.

Forced exhibition of Mexican pix in Mexico, that has long been looming, seems to have been definitely killed. Members of the National Assn. of Exhibitors, after a long conference here with Jesus Castillo Lopez, director general of the Cinematographic Supervision Board, decided to abandon the idea.

Announcement gave no explanation of the decision. But trade talk is that with too many cinemas for a too small public, and only the strongest pix yielding in the black, this isn't the time to force Mexican pix's exhibition. There's been a a move for some time to force all cinemas in Mexico to devote at least 26 weeks a year to Mexican pix.

'HOME' HIT IN LONDON; 'GILLIE' PROMISING TOO

London, March 14.

"Home at Seven," new mystery play by R. C. Sherriff, presented by Reandco, Ltd., and H. M. Tennent, Ltd., at the Wyndham's theatre last Tuesday (7), is fine. Ralph Richardson is brilliant in the role of a quiet suburban bank official obsessed with the belief that he committed murder during a spell of amnesia. Marian Spencer heads an excellent supporting cast as the devoted wife, and director Murray Macdonal exploits to the full the talents of author and players. Enthusiastic reception by firstnighters and press makes show look a hit.

James Bridie's latest comedy, "Mr. Gillie," made its West End debut at the Garrick theatre Thursday (9), following a Glasgow tryout. Play is presented by Stanley French, Ltd., and directed by Alastair Sim, who scored in the leading role of an altruistic schoolmaster undismayed by a series of failures in work, prospects and sponsorship of budding genius. Megs Jenkins shares honors with him as his placid wife and George Cole clicks as an emancipated pitboy who takes the wrong turning to fame.

Story provides food for thought and should attract specialized audiences, but its universal appeal is problematical, being localized in theme and treatment. Drawing power of author and star's names are greatest assets for a profitable run.

British Seeking Law To Compel Foreign Pix Dub

London, March 7.

Introduction of legislation which would compel distributors to have foreign pix dubbed in Britain is being recommended to the Board of Trade. Similar legislation exists in a number of continental countries.

The scheme, which is being put forward by one of the major dubbing companies in Britain, carries with it a suggestion that such films should be neutral for quota in view of the money that would be expended on labor costs in Britain.

Aldo Fabrizi Only Pro In Rossellini 'Francis'

Rome, March 7.

Aldo Fabrizi's next film is "Una di Quelle" ("One of Those"). Universalia will produce, with D. Blasetti directing.

He will also play the part of Ferruccio, a farmer, in the Roberto Rossellini production of "St. Francis of Assisi." He will be the only actor in it. Others in the cast are priests of the Catholic church.

LILY FAYOL GETS HER GUN AND PARIS, TOO

By MAXIME DE BEIX

Paris, March 14.

An astronomical phenomenon has taken place in the French musical comedy sky. What astronomers call a nova, meaning a star of first magnitude, where there was nothing but darkness before, has suddenly been discovered.

The astronomer is producer Maurice Lehmann, of the Chatelet theatre, and the star is Lily Fayol, currently doing an Ethel Merman in the title role of "Annie Get Your Gun," retitled "Annie du Far-West" for French consumption.

She was born in the provincial city of Grenoble and started learning classical dancing when she was five years old. At 15, under her real name of Odette Fayol, she was considered a good dancer and five years later, with a partner, created a fancy adagio act which under the name of "Baby & Davis," toured Europe, including Poland, Czechoslovakia and Russia, to land finally in Henri Varna's Casino de Paris revue titled "Caresses de Femmes."

The act was going to play South America when the war caused it to be stuck for two years in African Senegal. There, to improve the act, Miss Fayol added a singing turn and for the first time, in 1943, in Tunis, appeared as a fullfledged chantoosey. However, she still felt a hankering for dancing and if she had not been encouraged by such stars as Maurice Chevalier and Damia, would have given up singing to return to terping. However, she came back to France and casting off the "Baby" moniker, played the Cintra at Nice under the name of Lily Fayol. She then sang in Paris and Belgium with such success that she was booked in the Etoile theatre, Paris, and the Casino de Paris, after which it was a cinch for her to play the ABC (with two return engagements) and make a tour in Portugal, Canada, Belgium, Switzerland and North Africa, finally landing as "Annie" at the Chatelet.

The strange thing is that Lehmann had first offered her the part which she had turned down because, not knowing the play, she was afraid of not making the grade. The Compagnons de la Chanson, who had seen the play in New York, told her about it, and what a part it would be for her, but "I just refused the offer," said she. "Don't be a sap," was the answer. "No, it's all over," she persisted. But the next day she got another call advising her that Lehmann had been specially to the Soustons Arenas where she was playing a gala to catch her show and insisted on getting her. She surrendered.

Power Lack Slowing Foreign Pix in India

Madras, March 7.

Due to poor rainfall in the south, electricity has been rationed in many areas. Theatres are allowed to have only two shows a day. Matinee shows on weekends have been tabooed.

Main sufferers are foreign films which normally play for morning and matinee shows on weekends in such stations. Loss, however, is compensated by the fact that the continued paucity of Indian products compels picture houses to show foreign films for regular shows even in the interior.

Arg. Pix Producers Cash in On Present Impasse; Seek Foreign Film Makers

Buenos Aires, March 14.

Film interests in Argentina, who have been hoping from month to month that some agreement would be reached between U. S. pix distributors and the Argentine government, to permit renewal of imports of U. S. material, seem to be no nearer realization of their hopes than they were in March last year, when all imports were suspended.

U. S. distributors themselves are still hopeful that, eventually, some agreement will be arrived at, although it is plain that everything hangs on what kind of an economic deal can be worked out in the talks due to start in Washington soon. Argentine Minister of the Treasuary Ramon A. Cereijo will be the representative in those talks—and when it comes down to the pix problem, he is well acquainted with it, as the U. S. distributors have been dickering with him for exactly a year.

Argentine producers will try and stall any arrangement, as they are cashing in heavily in the present impasse. What they would like to see is U. S. pix interests being induced to come and make films in Argentina. This would allow them to pick up some Yankee knowhow, and also focus the attention of other markets on Argentine pictures. A sample of what producers desire is contained in cabled news from Paris that Dr. Enrique Telemaco Susini, onetime legit impresario and musicologist, has inked a deal with the General Cinema Union of France, for co-production of "A" pix, in both Argentina and France, with Franco-Argentine talent intermingled. The first picture is to be rolled in Argentina and also in Peru.

Of course, permits for U. S. pix imports could be available immediately, if the U. S. Motion Picture Producers Assn. were willing to accept the Argentine government's yen to impose a quota. This is generally believed to have been fixed at 200 pix a year, less than half the average requirement of the last five years. U. S. producers have steadfastly resisted quotas on principle, insisting on free importation, or none at all.

Turks to Turn Out 15 Pix IN '50; U.S. Leads Imports

Washington, March 14.

Turkish producers are expected to turn out about 15 films this year, U. S. Dept. of Commerce reports. During the last four months of 1949, Istanbul, capital of the country, saw 98 new pix, of which 10 were homemade. Large bulk of the new features, 70, came from the U. S.

The Turkish group was in second place and the seven British films shown got that country third honors. Ten of the foreign films were dubbed in the Turkish language. Big question facing the Turkish studios is to obtain enough foreign exchange to pay for imported rawstock.

'Jealousy' Owners Seek Accounting

Copenhagen, March 7.

The three original copyright owners of the Danish tango, "Jealousy," Wilhelm Hansen Music Forlag, Warny's Forlag and the composer Jacob Gade, will in a short time bring a case against former German (now French) publisher Charles Brull, in the French courts, demanding an accounting for the sheet music license for all the world outside Scandinavia since 1930.

They charge that they have received neither statements nor money during the last 20 years. For the U. S. alone they believe the amount is over $50,000.

"Jealousy" was written in 1926. Jacob Gade was then leader of the orchestra at the big Paladsteatret cinema in Copenhagen. As a sort of theme song for the Doug Fairbanks silent pic, "The Mark of Zorro," he composed the tune. It was published by Gade and Warny, the latter another famous Danish bandleader at that time. After the tune was published and had become a big hit in Denmark, Wilhelm Hansen, through a non-expired contract between Hansen and Gade, became part owner of the copyright. Later, Gade sold his part of the Gade-Warny publishing firm, which continued under Warny's management.

In 1928 Charles Brull, who had heard the tango when he visited Copenhagen on a business trip from Berlin, got the right to sell the orchestra and sheet music rights on a percentage basis for all the world outside Scandinavia. But, Warny asserts, since 1930-31 the Danish copyright owners have received no accounts at all from Brull. The tune was an international hit at the start of the thirties, but became a real world hit during the war, both in U. S. and Great Britain.

AUSSIE-U.S. TIEUP IN 'KANGAROO KID' FILM

Sydney, March 7.

Dorothy Malone, Veda Borg, Jack O'Mahoney and Douglas Dumbrille planed in to play in "The Kangaroo Kid" for Embassy Productions. Director Lesley Selander and cameraman Russ Harlan came by an earlier plane to set the details.

"Kid" is being jointly produced by Tom McCreadie, head of Embassy, and Howard Brown, of Hollywood. Pic will be shot in the Bathurst zone, one of the richest ranchlands of Aussie.

Embassy has made two prior pix, "Always Another Dawn" and "Into the Straight," strictly for home payees. Anticipated that "Kid" will be made for U. S. dating via the Brown interests.

Eugene Van Dee, assistant to Gerald Mayer, Continental rep for Motion Picture Assn. of America, arrived in New York over the weekend on personal business. He'll be in the U. S. about a week before returning to his headquarters in Paris.

'Avivato,' Arg. Film, Sets Alltime Record; U.S. Pix Not Showing Up So Well

Buenos Aires, March 14.

The Argentine-made comedy pix "Avivato" (Interamericana), which broke all boxoffice records last year, at last wound up its firstrun, after six months between the Gran Rex and Gran Palace theatres, grossing $160,000 (U. S.) in 25 out of 26 weeks. The picture was immediately reissued in 54 nabe theatres, at an unusually high admission scale of around 40c (U. S.), and grossed over $13,000 in its first day. This is a higher record than achieved previously by any picture in Argentina, even including "Belinda."

"Almafuerte" (Arg-Sono-Film), voted the best Argentine picture of 1949, is now in its twelfth week at the Ambassador, and grossed $67,340 (U. S.) in nine weeks. "Danza de Fuego" (Emelco), runnerup for the "best picture" orchids, ran five weeks at the Gran Rex, but only two at the Broadway. The picture was reissued immediately at the Luxor.

"The Virginian" (Par) was released at the Gran Rex, following "Danza de Fuego," but lasted only two weeks, with a gross of $14,000 (U. S.). Another Argentine-made picture, "Nacha Regules" (Sono), followed at the Gran Rex, and is expected to set up another record for a locally-made film, as it teams Zully Moreno and Arturo de Cordova once again, and is a terrific tear-jerker.

"Filomena Marturano" (Lumiton) held on for five weeks at the Ocean, grossing $35,325 (U. S.), while "Los Perez Garcia" ran three weeks at the Normandie and grossed $12,140.

The few available North American pix have not shown up any too well. "Give My Regards to Broadway" (20th) lasted only one week at the Ocean, and has been followed by a British release, "The October Man" (EL). Another British picture, the "Adventures of Jeannie," has been released this week at the Broadway.

Germans Inching Further Towards Control & Ban of Foreign Films

Frankfurt, March 1.

The issue of German control and eventual ban of further foreign film imports reached a highly controversial climax last week when a Frankfurt newspaper announced in a brief news item, buried in the inside pages, that the Ministry of Economics controlling foreign trade has decided to stop further imports immediately. Ministry spokesman flatly denied that such action had taken place.

Immediately after, another report got around, claiming that the Allied High Commission will protest this action as a violation of Law 5 of the occupation statute. (Law 5 provides the securing of freedom of press, radio, motion pictures, etc.). However, Army officials similarly disclaimed knowledge of the ban, let alone the protest. So did Marion F. Jordan, Motion Picture Assn. of America representative in Germany.

If true, the major significance of such a ban would be the prohibition of import of independent American products. Time and again, U. S. independents have been accused of trying to flood the German market. There hasn't been indication yet of such a flood. Apart from the 15 pix each to be imported by the 10 majors under a voluntary quota system (approved recently by the federal government), only a handful of other U. S. products, those of Goldwyn and Selznick and a few Disney pix, have been sold so far for Germany.

Strongest supporters of such an import ban have been a group of parliamentary deputies in the Bonn assembly, all members of three rightist parties. One of them, Dr. Vogel, recently introduced a motion, which would curtail foreign film imports "in order to aid the ailing German film production."

There have also been plans to woo foreign producers to use their money in productions within Germany. This plan is directly aimed at the majors, who have some 25,000,000 marks (about $6,000,000) blocked here. It would call not only for making American pix here, but also to put this money into financing German films. So far only two pix have been made in Germany, "I Was a Male War Bride" and "Quartered City," both 20th Fox. Anatole Litvak, who was here a few weeks ago, is planning to do a third in Munich, the Reich's film metropolis.

Interestingly, local producers generally are against foreign import curbs. They speculate that more films—while meaning competition—serve a general interest by creating a "film-friendly" attitude among patrons. Thus, they say, the success of an American film might draw patrons to see German films and vice versa. Another truth is that postwar German pix hardly reach the standard of prewar products.

DUKE IN PARIS DATE; SET FOR ITALY TOUR

London, March 14.

Duke Ellington and band of 20 open in Paris in April for two weeks, after which they will tour Italy.

Gino Arbib, of the Jack Hylton office, is dickering with Ellington to do a week's concert at Claude Langdon's Empress Hall, London 8,500 seater, to be followed by one-night stands in English key cities.

Irish-British-French Three-Way Theatre Tie

Dublin, March 7.

Visiting London and Paris, Brendan Smith, prexy of Brendan Smith Productions, has made contacts designed to foster relations between the Irish, English and French theatres. In Paris he met top officials of the Comedie-Francaise, including Administrateur-Generale Pierre-Aime Touchard, and it has been arranged that there will be a regular exchange of views and ideas on theatre practice between Smith and the Comedie-Francaise.

In London, Smith met Sir Kenneth Barnes, principal of the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, and again a regular exchange of ideas was arranged between Smith and Barnes on the executive side, and between the two student councils.

Mex Pix Scripters Ease Week's Production Halt

Mexico City, March 7.

Pay hike demand of scripters and adapters union, that halted production of Mexican pix for a week, was settled with a pact made by Raul de Anda, prez of the National Producers Assn., and Rodolfo Landa, acting secretary general of the National Actors Union, acting for the writers.

Demand was that writers be paid extra for 16m use of their works. Pay, $1,160 per script and ditto per adaptations, making a total of $2,320 per script and adaptation, had only covered 35m pix. Writers allow producers to make as many 16m copies as they desire.

Gualino Planes to Coast For Huddles With Breen On Status of Foreign Pix

Dr. Renato Gualino, Italian film industry delegate to the Motion Picture Assn. of America's newly formed Foreign Films Advisory Unit, planed to the Coast Monday (13) to confer with Production Code Administrator Joseph Breen as well as o.o. the studios. Gualino, who is president of the Italian Film Producers Assn., met foreign managers of the majors in New York last Thursday (9) in connection with the Advisory Unit's plan to aid overseas filmmakers in improving American distribution of their product.

Gualino reportedly has become increasingly convinced of the MPAA's sincerity in establishing the Advisory Unit. He's the first emissary from some six film producing countries to arrive in the U. S. to meet American industry toppers in an effort to resolve a wider market for his fellow filmmakers' product. Meanwhile, reps of the Italian government who were to have accompanied Gualino have been bogged down at home with legislative problems. They're now expected later.

MPAA's consultative service, which is headed by B. Bernard Kreisler, is said to have been enthusiastically received by the film industries of the five other countries initially invited to participate in the program. These include France, Sweden, Argentina, Spain and Mexico. French producers are now in the process of selecting their delegates. Gualino, it's understood, will stop off in Paris on his way back to Rome to apprise Gallic film men of findings gleaned on his current junket.

Guarini to Mex City For Italo Pic Distrib Setup

Alfredo Guarini, veepee of ENIC, an Italian film organization which controls the Cinecitta Studios in Rome, cancelled his plans to return to Europe Sunday (12), and instead planed to Mexico City yesterday (Tues.) for a five-day stay. While in Mexico he'll confer with top government officials in regard to securing improved playing time for Italian product in that country.

Producer of the Franco-Italian film, "Au Dela Des Grilles," Guarini expects to be back in New York in time for the opening of the picture at the Paris theatre Monday (20). For its Gotham preem the pic has been retitled "The Walls of Malapaga," Isa Miranda and Jean Gabin have the leads. "Walls" won its director Rene Clement, a prize at the 1949 Cannes Film Festival. Guarini has been in the U. S. for several weeks attempting to arrange a joint production deal with American filmmakers.

'Pimpernel' in Retakes

London, March 14.

Retakes expected to last five weeks have commenced on Alexander Korda's "Elusive Pimpernel," release of which has been held up due to Sam Goldwyn, who has big a interest in pic, insisting on drastic alterations.

Retakes are expected to cost additional $150,000. David Niven arrived from U. S. to work in it.

More Portugal Pixers

Lisbon, March 7.

It is now quite definite that two new Lisbon 2,000-seater filmhouses, the Imperio and the Monumental, will not open until next fall as there would be no product to inaugurate them during the summer.

In the provinces, and especially in seaside resorts, however, 10 new cinemas will be opened between Easter and July to take advantage of the holiday business.

Aussie Exhibs Vs. Upped Music Fee

Sydney, March 7.

Top Aussie pix exhibs are huddling with Australian Performing Rights chiefs covering a new payment basis. Huddles have been going on for several weeks. Understood that exhibs object to paying any upped fees to APRA, and that for some time past coin due to APRA has been paid into a special fund pending the ironing out of current difficulties.

Charles Woodbridge, general manager of APRA, said he couldn't give out any information covering any alleged "battle" between exhibs and his organization. He was sanguine that a formula would be worked out satisfactorily to all parties.

Many Down Under exhibs have decided not to pay APRA any major rental rise covering city, suburban and country theatres. One exhibs' school of thought has it that all pix should be free from any APRA charge, pointing out that producers should see to it that music put into their pix can't be classed as falling under APRA jurisdiction. Exhibs also say they know the APRA charge is tacked onto film rentals by the distribs.

Lew Grade Pacting Shaw, Calloway in Europe Dates

London, March 14.

With the Mack Triplets launched at the Colony restaurant yesterday (13), where Lew Grade booked them for two weeks with option, Grade is taking off for a continental jaunt covering Paris, Milan and Switzerland to confirm his many bookings for his American importations.

Among his big names are Artie Shaw, set for a European tour opening in Scandinavia in August, and Cab Calloway, whose first stand is Teatro Lyrico, Milan, Aug. 18.

Others Grade has booked are Julie Wilson, opening at the Colony May 29 for four weeks, and the Debonaires to star in the George Abbott and Bernard Delfont's revue, "Touch and Go," due at the Prince of Wales the last week in April or first week in May.

Meanwhile, Lew & Leslie Grade are to open a special film department, and are dickering with a wellknown film personality to take charge.

Murray Silverstone, 20th-Fox foreign chief, and Albert Cornfield, company's continental manager, have left Paris for Rome and Tel Aviv.

Martin Sets Up Big Aussie Talent Splurge; Hopes to Tie Up U.S. Acts

'Quo Vadis' Set to Roll In Rome During April

Rome, March 7.

The long awaited $5,000,000 production of "Quo Vadis" will start shooting some time in April, and by May the Cine-Citta Studios will be humming, according to Henry Henigson, Metro unit production head.

Mervyn Leroy, the director, who has been in London for the past two weeks, has returned to Hollywood, but will be back in Rome April 8. William Horning, who designed the sets under the direction of Cedric Gibbons, Herschel McCoy, costume designer, and Courtney Haslam, wardrobe expert, will be the first of the technicians to arrive, with others following soon.

Russians Still Go Their Own Way in Control Of Austrian Radio Ravag

Vienna, March 7.

Soviet control of the Austrian radio system, Ravag, came into the news twice in the past few days. First the Allied Council, failing to agree on new allocation of frequencies for the country's AM stations, noted that the Russians vetoed the new wavebands Austrian engineers had put forward. Apparent reason for this was that the sked included allocations for the U. S.-sponsored but Austrian-operated Red-White-Red network, which just opened a new 10kw transmitter on a mountain outside Vienna with the avowed purpose of intensifying coverage in the Russion zone between Vienna and Linz. Soviets don't like to take any official act recognizing the permanent status of the R-W-R net.

Second hassle arose over the grab of a two-hour Ravag spot on the 32nd anniversary of the Soviet Army. Show was done from a concert hall where local and Kremlinite Reds joined in extolling Stalin and the army he sent to "liberate" Austria. Number of Austrian entertainers, including Marcel Benard, topflight Ravag producer; Herman Leopoldi, a U. S. citizen recently returned to his homeland, and actor Albin Skoda, participated. Beef to Parliament was that Austrian radio time and Austrian performers were used in a show which blasted the Austrian government and people as undemocratic and fascist.

Some of the performers told the press they had just appeared to do whatever material they were asked for. What they couldn't say is that while most Ravag people don't relish working on Russian-sponsored shows, they feel that turndowns would expose them to reprisals which can range from blacklisting to deportation to Siberia. That's pressure and it's felt by all in radio.

Annabella's Spanish Pic; Other Madrid Activity

Madrid, March 5.

Annabella has been signed by Chapalo Filmes as femme lead in "Don Juan," directed by Saenz de Heredia. Portuguese star Antonio Vilar plays The Don. Work has already started on location and at Ballestreros Studios, Madrid.

Mexican star Maria Felix is very busy these days. While completing a Spanish pic, she's been pacted for other stints. One is with Argentine director Luis Saslavsky, to be femme lead in "Maria Bonita" ("Beautiful Maria"), work to start in May in Buenos Aires. She will also work in Madrid on another pic based on "La Couronne Noire" ("The Black Crown"), by Cocteau, for which Spanish writer Abad Ojuel is preparing the script.

Dancers Rosario and Antonio will be choreographers and principal dancers in two pix, "Tempranillo" and "El Rey de Sierra Morena."

Ezra Mir, Indian indie pix producer, has signed up with United Artists for production of two pictures with Indian background. First feature would center round the visit of Laurel and Hardy to India.

Sydney, March 7.

David N. Martin, head of the Tivoli vaude loop, is on a big vaude-legit splurge the current season. Being shy of houses to spot his show upbeat, Martin recently made a deal with the Fullers for lease of the King's, Melbourne, to sked his "Command Performance" after completion of its Sydney replay. "C. P." has Maurice Colleano, Ganjou Bros., Krista and Kristel, and Ivor Moreton and Dave Kaye. Show has already played New Zealand for a lengthy run via the Kerridge loop.

Martin has made a tieup with J. C. Williamson for lease of His Majesty's, Melbourne, for later this year to spot his big U.S.-British-Continental ice show, making a similar deal with General Theatres for the Empire, Sydney, to house this one.

In Melbourne, Martin has Arthur Askey in "The Love Racket" doing turnaway biz, and is also running a troupe in Adelaide to sock trade. Martin is playing oncenightly with two matinees weekly, making the Aussie date a lush one for overseas talent. Several imported acts have been with Martin for over one year covering Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane and New Zealand, latter on a deal with the powerful Kerridge loop.

Martin still can't get a governmental okay to erect additional theatres in Sydney and Melbourne, but hopes to get a greenlight in the not too distant future. He explained that he's finding no difficulty in hooking overseas' talent for Down Under runs, with U. S. acts keen to play the territory. He hopes to hook some top Broadway attractions during the year, giving him vaude, legit and ice shows.

FRENCH EXHIBS CAN NOW SET OWN ADMISH SCALES

Paris, March 7.

Admission scales to picture theatres, strictly regulated by ukase in France for the last few years, are now left again to each exhib to decide for himself.

Though a trend upward is expected, it's considered that in Paris the admission prices won't be tilted much, since they already represent practically all the traffic can bear in normal cases. Against which in the provinces, where admissions are much lower, the raise is expected to bring the total average in France to a 20% increase of grosses.

Also, since no more ceiling exists, vauders are anticipating a chance to get acts on stage again with films. To date, this had only obtained in very few situations.

India Banning Pix To Pakistan Due to Axings

Madras, March 7.

The Central Indian Government has imposed a total ban on the export of Indian films to Pakistan. Pakistan treasury would thus lose annually $8,000,000 in entertainment tax and excise duty.

India government action is dictated by Pakistan's continued axing of Indian pictures on censorship grounds.

Kids Banned From Pix

Bombay, March 7.

The Madhyabharat state government has imposed a ban on children between ages of five and 16 from seeing any pictures "other than religious and educative."

Motion Picture Society of Bombay has lodged a protest with the government, saying this is carrying the crusade for morality too far.

Ceylon Wants Axe

Ceylon, March 7.

Mayor of Ceylon would henceforth censor all pictures that enter the island. Hitherto pictures censored at Bombay were passed without any hitch for exhibition in the island.

Most of the foreign products entered the island via Bombay.

Skigie's Reviews

but I like her best in vaudeville and she sang five songs but I didn't understand "The Doctor" song. I wanted to know what "falling for the ladies" meant but no one would tell me. The Fassio Trio had some good tricks. The girl is a peach and she stands on the man's head with one hand while he walks backwards up and down stairs. She never moved an inch.

I wasn't so glad we stayed for the pictures for they were punk.

'Skigie' Calls at The Grand, Syracuse, Again

Says the 'Orchestra Is Aces,' 'Tom Walker Was Sore as a Fool,' and Hopes He 'Won't Make a Bum' of Pat Rooney's Shoes

Syracuse, Feb. 22.

There were as many people coming out of the Grand to-day (Grand Opera House, Syracuse, N. Y.; Washington's Birthday matinee) as there were going in, and before I tell about the show, I'm going to say that the orchestra at the Grand is aces and as good as any I ever heard in New York.

Reynolds and Donegan are good skaters and the girl did a hard stunt on rollers. She played a banjo, spinning around like a top. They wear very nice clothes.

Juggling DeLisle looked very nice in a white suit and he did something new with Indian clubs. There were little mirrors and they reflected all over the house. His trick with the fire hats I've seen before.

I liked Dan Burke ("Dan Burke and His School Girls") better when he had six girls. He's been doing the act so long, I think he ought to get a new one. Paul Quinn and Joe Mitchell ("The Land Agent") were all right. They talked.

I was glad I ran into Tom Walker again ("The Devil and Tom Walker"). I liked it better this time than before (Alhambra last week). The "wireless" was broken and Tom Walker (John B. Hymer) was sore as a fool. Kelly and Rose are singing new songs.

The Brothers Byrne are pretty good. It's all rough house.

I could write more about the show, but I'm going to be in a minstrel show (amateur) tonight, and dance with Pat Rooney's wooden shoes. I hope I don't make a bum of it.

'Skigie' Says Ringlings' As Good as He Ever Saw

Camel Almost Bit Him; Thinks Mrs. Wulff Is 'Getting Fat'; Curzon Sisters Look Like 'Angels'

(This article is written by "SKIGIE" without a program, his usual aid.)

I am glad the circus is in town again. (Ringling Bros., Madison Square Garden.) I have never missed a year the circus has been in town, and I think this circus is as good as any circus I ever saw.

They had a very good band in the circus, and the clowns were the best I ever saw at any circus.

The girls who fly in the air (Curzon Sisters) were very good, and they do the same thing I saw them do at the Hippodrome. There were some people next to me last night, and when they went around a man said they looked like angels.

The horses that jumped through barrels (my pop won't tell me the names of the acts) were very good (Schumann Horses). There was another horse act I like, too. There were eight horses (James Dutton's "Eight-Horse Act"), and they did a peach stunt.

There was a lady I saw at the Hippodrome (Mrs. Maude Wulff). She is getting fat. They had a pig act I liked (Lil Kerslake), and they had the horse (Hippodrome) races, and they let the girl beat. The chariot races were very good, and the men that ride at first after the grand parade (finale of "Introductory Pageant") are very good, too.

Before the circus started I went down and saw the animals and the baby camel, and the elephants held their mouths open and I threw peanuts in.

The "loop-the-loop" ("double somersaulting automobile") is very good, and the girl (Mlle. La Belle Roche) is very good. The auto turns a double somersault. The acts in the air are fair. I liked the way they dropped in the net at the finish (The Jordans).

There was one man (clown) and his ears lit up all the time and there is an act where the elephants telephone each other and the elephants are very big.

The camels are very greedy. If you give one a peanut all the others want some, and I almost got my finger in a camel's mouth because I held the peanut out instead of having it on my hand.

They have some zebras hitched to a wagon in the parade and the boy who drives them has to throw stones at them to make them go, and one of the men said of all the animals to teach anything to the zebras were the worst.

Skouras' Visit

office expected it might be a week or 10 days. He has been closer to Rank than any other company chief and has won some concessions from him for 20th that have not been enjoyed by other distribs. Purpose of his hurried huddles with Rank has not been revealed, but it is believed they may have to do with theatre acquisitions by 20th abroad. 20th is partnered with Rank in his British theatre holdings and Skouras has at various times been reported interested in acquiring Rank houses in Canada, Australia and South Africa.

Rank sails on the Queen Mary today (Wed.) and will be in New York next Monday (20). His visit to the U. S. is said to be his routine annual affair. He'll meet in New York with Robert Benjamin, head of the Rank organization in the U. S.; will attend one, or perhaps two, Universal board meetings in New York, since he is a stockholder in the company; and will visit Chicago for talks with directors of Bell & Howell, with which he has an association.

He'll also go to Kansas City and Denver to meet exhibs and to Toronto briefly for a meeting of the board of the Rank organization there. He'll be accompanied by his wife and they'll then go to California to visit their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Packard. They'll be in the U. S. about five weeks.

John Davis, Rank's operating chief, will fly to New York next week to join him and accompany him on part of the U. S. tour.

20th to Rank Studio

London, March 14.

Spyros Skouras confirmed 20th-Fox quitting Sir Alexander Kordas Shepperton studio at expiration of the existing contract in June. Skouras is finalizing a deal with Rank to move into either Denham or Pinewood on a picture to picture basis.

20th prexy refused to negotiate a longterm lease as company might be forced to abandon production owing to increasing difficulties.

Exhibs Slam

will not be lured into the theatres. Such people, these exhibs say, have proved from their past actions that they usually have something else to do on the holidays. Thus, a concerted effort should be made to bring them into the theatres throughout the year. This can only be done, they say, if the top films are spread out over both the traditionally good and bad periods.

Bunching of top pix around the various holiday seasons has created particular booking difficulties for some smalltown exhibs who have a wide choice of product. While the system actually pays off, in that it necessarily means they get better product throughout the year, it also means considerable bickering with distributors. Exhib buying from two or three of the majors only has one date available for each holiday and thus the distribs gang up on him for that choice booking.

Metro's Episodic 'Big Country' To Include 9 Items

Hollywood, March 14.

Metro's projected episodic film, "It's a Big Country," will include nine different stories, instead of the six originally planned. Production veepee Dore Schary said this week that five of the short stories have been prepared and approved for filming, with the picture slated to roll this spring. Overall theme will depict contemporary life in the U. S.

Each story is being adapted by one of the studio's top writers, and each is to be reined by a different director. Film will spotlight a majority of Metro's stable of stars. Story lineup so far includes "My Song, Yankee Doodle" by Carl Glick, scripted by Allen Rivkin; "Load" by Dudley Schnabel, scripted by Luther Davis; "Rosika, the Rose" by Claudia Cranston, scripted by Isobel Lennart; "Count Me In" by John McNulty, adapted by Helen Deutsch, and "Four Eyes" by Joseph Petracca, scripted by George Wells.

All acting and directorial talent will be utilized for the film according to their availability between pictures. Set thus far for top roles are Walter Pidgeon, Van Johnson, Gene Kelly, Ethel Barrymore, John Hodiak, Keenan Wynn, Marshall Thompson, George Murphy, Ann Sothern and James Whitmore. Eight directors for seven episodes are George Cukor, Charles Vidor, Robert Z. Leonard, Gerald Mayer, Roy Rowland, Don Hartman and the Norman Panama-Melvin Frank team.

Film will be patterned somewhat after "Tales of Manhattan," turned out some years ago by indie producer Boris Morros, and J. Arthur Rank's more recent "Quartet." Metro film will have a narrator to bridge the various episodes.

center of a hassle between friends and critics of Hollywood pix. CCP, launched in 1948, was designed to smooth opposition against the flow of the dollars to the U. S. via promotion of Canada as a vacationland on the American screen.

Through some misunderstanding, however, belief has grown that the CCP had the aim of stimulating film production in Canada through influx of American coin and personnel. Gerald Pratley, a radio commentator, expressed this mistaken idea on a recent broadcast in which he called the CCP "a not too successful idea" to encourage American producers to make films in Canada.

Don Henshaw, project rep for the Motion Picture Assn. of America, slapped Pratley by stating: "You are either badly informed or you are sadly ignorant of the CCP." Henshaw cited reports showing that screening of Canadian scenes on U. S. screens had increased tourist travel up north.

Shifting his stand, Pratley replied to Henshaw, declaring: "Hollywood considers it has an undisputed right to flood our screens with American items and films, while, at the same time, Canadian film showing in America is looked upon as intrusive propaganda." Governmental officials, meantime, are still standing behind the CCP as a way of offsetting the drain of dollars caused by U. S. pix earnings.

cuit is obviously the much more valuable portion of the company. Hughes has figured on getting as much or nearly as much for his stock in the chain as he paid for his shares in the entire company. Cowdin's idea is to give Hughes a profit and then pull the same thing that Hughes has in mind.

Reportedly associated with Cowdin in the venture is Charles D. Prutzman, former v.p. and general counsel of U.

Film Reviews

Le Tresor de Cantenac

in stateside situations. Though not of art house stature, proper cueing, good exploitation and word of mouth should give it a boost.

Film has a slim plot, and the bulk is a series of sketches depicting the characters in an inbred, practically feudal town. A colorful group includes the woman living with her husband and lover, the village idiot, the town drunk, and the pair of twins serving as mayor and priest who despise each other. The priest gets no flock, and the mayor teaches history only as far as Robespierre and the French Revolution. The baron of the town (Guitry) comes back to his estate, and being financially ruined, decides to take one look at the town before suicide. A rambunctious centenarian shows him a royal treasure he has guarded for years. Here the film slips into gear. The town gets a face lifting, the baron rebuilds his ancestral home, the characters tell each other what they really think, and the twins make up, with the priest getting a flock and Napoleon being added to the school curriculum.

As most foreign pix, it is overlong for its theme and story. Many episodes, such as a gypsy passing through town, which add nothing to the characters, can be sheared to give the film a better pacing. Pic is pleasantly risque, and Guitry in a dual role is his impeccable, slick self. Outdoor lensing is good, and the whole flock of rustic characters give fine color to the proceedings, with Marcel Simon a standout as the 126-year-old who lives on just to spite his family. Film, purportedly done for $100,000, is a good investment. Mosk.

Der Bagnostraefling
(The Fugitive)
(GERMAN)

Frankfurt, Feb. 25.

Schorcht Film release of Rolf Meyer-Junge Film Union production. Directed and written by Gustav Froehlich. Stars Paul Dahlke, Richard Haeusler, Winnie Markus. Camera, Igor Oberberg; editor, Rolf Meyer. Tradeshown in Frankfurt. Running time, 100 MINS.

Robert	Paul Dahlke
Pierre	Richard Haeusler
Eugenie	Kaethe Dorsch
Cyprienne	Winnie Markus
Courbet	Walter Franck
Dr. Bianchon	Paul Hoerbiger
Nanette	Jaester Naefe
Levreuil	Albert Florath
Viktor	Adrian Hoven

A meller set in 19th-century Paris, this film is too long, but otherwise should do well.

Pic deals with the fate of two brothers, the first a blue-blood bandit and the latter later becoming the police prefect of Paris, and their legal and romantic tangles. The slow plot is considerably improved by very good photography, an appropriate musical score and realistic sets, as well as good acting by Paul Dahlke and Richard Haeusler.

Winnie Markus is weak, but Kaethe Dorsch, as the pair's mother, is excellent. So is Paul Hoerbiger, as an old doctor; Walter Franck, as a secret police chief, and Albert Florath, as president of the Banque de France. Two young newcomers, Jaester Naefe and Adrian Hoven, are good as the young lovers. Gaal.

Histoires Extraordinaires
(Extoraordinary Stories)
(FRENCH)

Paris, Feb. 18.

Fred Orain production and release. Directed and written by Jean Faurez. Adaptation and dialog, Guy Decomble, based on stories of Edgar Allan Poe and Thomas De Quincey. Stars Jules Berry, Fernand Ledoux; features Suzy Carrier, Guy Decomble, Roger-Blin, Maurice Schutz. Camera, Louis Page; editor, Suzanne De Troyes; music, George Van Parys. At Marbeuf, Paris. Running time, 85 MINS.

Manresor	Fernand Ledoux
Fortunato	Jules Berry
Guillame	Roger Blin
Leontine	Suzy Carrier
Young Man	Guy Decomble

This is a multiple-story pic using wellknown short stories of Poe and De Quincey, and packaging them as tales told by a group of gendarmes to a new recruit. The police telling the story have a comic operetta aura, and the famous stories are not well handled. The filmic knowhow to engender the stories with Poe's horror and nuance is completely absent, and the tales are a travesty of their original selves. Pic, on the curio appeal of Poe and De Quincey, could be slotted as a good filler in second-run situations.

The first tale concerns a psychopathic killer who gets into a girl's school and roams around with a wicked-looking knife until outsmarted by two young girls. The next is Poe's "The Tell-Tale Heart," which is completely misinterpreted. The murderer tells his story of the killing of the old man with the "evil eye," and the thumping of the heart that will never stop.

The next, and the best, is the story of how a jealous rival buries his enemy alive in his wine-cellar. Jules Berry and Fernand Ledoux manage to wring a little horror from this one. The last is a dragging portrayal of the disinherited nephew, and the murder of his rich uncle. All ends well as the ingenious butler exhorts a confession from the guilty culprit.

Pic doesn't have the necessary low key photography needed for the mood. Director Jean Faurez doesn't take advantage of his camera and editing to wring the suspense and psychological horror implicit in the goings-on. Music is properly eerie, and the acting outside of Berry and Ledoux doesn't have the proper stylization. Mosk.

Par Invites Bids On 'Samson' in Chi After Court Okay

Chicago, March 14.

Paramount has sent out invitations for bids on "Samson and Delilah" to all loop theatres, including two second-run houses, following extended run and three-week clearance granted last week by Chi Federal district court Judge Michael Igoe. Bids are expected back late this week, and Paramount will make its choice of houses known early next week.

Judge Igoe granted the extended run on the basis of the picture's cost and the acclaim accorded it by religious leaders. He declared in his ruling that ordinary marketing would not permit film to make up its costs.

While decision does not grant all of what Paramount had asked, it was considered by Par toppers here as a victory. Distrib had asked pre-release engagement of indefinite duration, "reasonable" clearance and then a normal first-run, subsequent-run setup. But Thomas C. McConnell, attorney for Jackson Park theatre, respondents to Paramount petition, had declared at hearings that any exception to decree would help "erode" the injunction. In view of fact that Judge Igoe delayed a decision to read McConnell's brief to circuit court of appeals challenging former's right to make exceptions to decree, this decision had been considered a critical one. Final ruling delighted Par heads.

McConnell is placed in position where he can only sit and wait. He has filed his brief with appeals court challenging Judge Igoe's right to grant extensions, basing case on jurist's extension for "Come to the Stable." The appeal is scheduled to be heard next month, and meanwhile attorney has to sit tight.

Question of whether the appeals court has jurisdiction over the case is a fine legal point itself. Judge Igoe laid down the decree in November, 1947, after years of litigation in the Jackson Park's successful anti-trust action against the majors. Igoe bases his right to make exceptions on the point that where a situation has materially changed after the decree was made, issuing judge can grant temporary relief.

Point at issue in appeal is whether a higher court can restrain district court judge from granting exceptions to his own decree. McConnell maintains it can, provided lower court judge is destroying the decree by doing so. And this point was hammered home by the lawyer in "Samson" hearings. He declared that the 12 exceptions granted by Judge Igoe were "destroying a decree which has proved itself of benefit to the community."

Harold Baumstone, long active in the 16m industry, formed Almanac Films, Inc., to distribute educational and informational films. Previously Baumstone had been with Pictorial Films, Post Pictures and Family Films. He resigned as general sales manager of latter firm in January.

Continuing its switch in policy from its own offices to franchise-holders for distribution of its product, Motion Picture Sales Corp. has named Charles Lindau and Max Roth in Chicago. Pair have been operating the Henri Elman Independent Exchange there. Roth was formerly midwest division manager for Film Classics and Lindau is a Chi exhibitor.

TOLEDO, O.

Plans for new $2,000,000 theatre here apparently shelved by Balaban & Katz, Chicago. Firm sold its site back to the original owners, the Toledo Service Parking Co., for a reported $120,000, same price paid for it by chain in 1947. At same time the B. & K. lease on the 3,400-seat Paramount was not renewed. The firm had hoped to complete a new house by June, 1948, when its Paramount lease expired. Latter house has been operated by Carl Schwyn circuit since then while B. & K. remodeled its Princess here into a first-run house.

J. W. Christopher, St. Marys, O., purchased the Indian Lake theatre, Russells Point, O., from E. V. Fofrich.

The Star, Delaware, O., purchased by Steve Polies and Ray Watts of that city.

Warner Bros. recently sold all its Springfield, O., interests to locally-owned Springfield Theatre Co., which acquired long-term leases on Regent, State, Majestic, Fairbanks and Ohio, plus sole ownership of some real estate there.

Hunt Theatres, Cincinnati, acquired the interests of Jackson-Murphy Theatres in the Uptown Columbus nabe, and the McCook, Dayton neighborhood house.

vest their theatres and the RKO split coming up, such problems are expected to be all the more intensified.

Chief factor in the Metro realignment is the upping in number of division managers from five to seven, so that each will now have less territory to supervise. That will give the managers also a chance to spend more time in their headquarters, instead of roaming far afield as they formerly were forced to do. Rodgers also assigned one man each to devote all his time to the New York and Los Angeles metropolitan areas, which have the most concentrated circuits.

Herman Ripps, formerly assistant to eastern sales chief John P. Byrne, drew the N. Y. assignment and will move his headquarters from Albany to the N. Y. exchange. Byrne continues headquartering at the homeoffice. Samuel J. Gardner, heretofore assistant to west coast sales chief George A. Hickey, moves his headquarters from San Francisco to L. A. to supervise selling in metropolitan L. A. only. Hickey will continue to operate from L. A. also and will supervise the L. A., San Francisco, Portland and Seattle offices.

Other changes include the upping of John S. Allen, formerly assistant to southern sales managers Rudy Berger, to the newly-created post of southwestern sales manager. He takes over the Dallas, Oklahoma City, Memphis and St. Louis offices, with Berger continuing to supervise Washington, Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans and Jacksonville. Frank C. Hensler, until now assistant to central sales manager John J. Maloney, has been promoted to manager of the newly-created intermountain division, supervising Kansas City, Denver and Salt Lake City. Maloney continues in charge of the Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Detroit offices.

In the midwest, Ralph Maw has been named district manager to concentrate exclusively on the wide territory serviced out of Minneapolis, in which city he will headquarter. Burtus Bishop, Jr., midwestern division manager, continues to supervise the Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Des Moines and Omaha exchanges.

'Ambush' $12,000 Leads L'ville; 'Borderline' 7G

Louisville, March 14.

With the weather unpleasant, and downtown pics shaping up of good quality, biz along main stem is currently fairly good. Pace at both State with "Ambush" and the Rialto with "Dear Wife" is passably good. Neat biz is being turned in at the Strand, where "Bluegrass of Kentucky" is having a strong local appeal. "Borderline" looms okay at Mary Anderson.

Estimates for This Week

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,200; 45-65)—"Borderline" (U). Getting nice play at $6,500. Last week, "Young Man With Horn" (WB), robust $8,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 45-65)—"Dear Wife" (Par) and "Tarnished" (Rep). Billed as sequel to "Dear Ruth," this one is making appeal with same cast, and femmes are responding. Satisfactory $11,000. Last week, "Mother Didn't Tell" (20th) and "Radar Secret Service" (Lip), neat $13,000.

State (Loew's) (3,000; 45-65)—"Ambush" (M-G) and "Challenge Lassie" (M-G). Neat $12,000. Last week, "All King's Men" (Col) and "Secret St. Ives" (Col), strong $15,500.

Strand (FA) (1,200; 45-65)—"Bluegrass Kentucky" (Mono) and "Bomba Panther Island" (Mono). Strong $6,000. Last week, "Live By Night" (RKO) and "Threat" (RKO), about same.

JRO's Nitery Dates For Anton ('3 Man') Karas

Selznick Releasing Organization has been forced into cafe booking as a sideline to publicity for its pix. It is arranging a unique cross-country combo exploitation and nitery appearance tour for Anton Karas, the Austrian zither player who jumped to fame via his background music for SRO's "Third Man."

Music Corp. of America was supposed to book Karas, but apparently couldn't get far on the one-and-two-day stopovers planned by SRO flack chief Robert Gillham as the zither-zinger crossed the country. As a result, Gillham has taken to doing his own booking.

Karas played a two-day Monday-Tuesday date at the Darbury Room, Boston, this week, and moves to Philly today (Wednesday). He continues to Washington, Chicago, Toronto, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City and San Francisco, will Gillham attempting to set nitery engagements in each. He'll wind up in Hollywood, where he may appear at either Ciro's or the Mocambo.

Mel Strauss, of SRO's flackery, is traveling with Karas and serving as interpreter in interviews. Strauss speaks German.

SDG Contract Near

Hollywood, March 14.

Formal signing of a new contract between the Screen Directors Guild and the major studios was assured by the Government's okay eliminating second assistant directors from Wages and Hours regulations. Following the Government action, junior members of the guild voted to accept the terms offered by the studios.

Under the new ticket, second assistant directors will be paid $150 a week, with $4 a day extra for location work.

'12 O'CLOCK' BEST BET IN INDPLS., FINE 13G

Indianapolis, March 14.

It looks like Lent is being felt at first-runs here, biz mostly being off. "12 O'Clock High" is leading town with nice figure at Indiana while "East Side" is oke at Loew's. "Thelma Jordon," at Circle, is disappointing. "Johnny Holiday" is holding up well in second Keith's week after sock opener.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Gamble-Dolle) (2,800; 44-65)—"Thelma Jordon" (Par) and "Blue Grass Kentucky" (Mono). Thin $7,500. Last week, "Backfire" (WB) with Tommy Dorsey orch onstage, stout $20,000 at 50-90c scale.

Indiana (G-D) (3,300; 44-65)—"12 O'Clock High" (20th). Fine $13,000. Last week, "Man With Horn" (WB) and "Cry Murder" (FC), modest $9,500.

Keith's (G-D) (1,300; 44-65)—"Johnny Holiday" (UA) and "Belle Old Mexico" (Rep) (2d wk). Solid $8,000. on top of smash $11,400 first stanza.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,427; 44-65)—"East Side" (M-G) and "Intruder in Dust" (M-G). Oke $11,000. Last week, "Malaya" (M-G) and "Tension" (M-G), $10,500.

Lyric (G-D) (1,600; 44-65)—"Dakota Lil" (20th) and "Bomba on Panther Isle" (Mono). Mild $5,500 in 6 days. Last week, "Purple Heart" (20th) and "Guadalcanal Diary" (20th) (reissues), sturdy $6,500.

DENVER

"Willie Comes Home" (20th) and "Pacific Agent" (Lip), also Denver. Nice $2,500. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB) and "Green Promise" (RKO), $2,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,600; 35-74)—"Malaya" (M-G) and "Man of Evil" (UA). Trim $15,000. Last week, "East Side" (M-G) and "Satan's Cradle" (UA), (2d wk), $10,000.

Paramount (Fox) (2,200; 35-74)—"Nevadan" (Col) and "Mary Ryan, Detective" (Col), day-date with Webber. Okay $8,000 or near. Last week, was on moveovers.

Vogue (Wolfberg) (600; 60-74)—"Carnival in Flanders" (Indie) and "Rubens" (Indie) (reissues). Modest $1,700. Last week, "Scoundrel" (Indie) and "Crime Without Passion" (Indie), same.

Webber (Fox) (750; 35-74)—"Nevadan" (Col) and "Mary Ryan, Detective" (Col), also Paramount. Good $2,200. Last week, "Chain Lightning" (WB) and "Green Promise" (RKO), fair $1,700.

U TO DISTRIBUTE 3 INDIE PICTURES

Universal has contracted to distribute three indie films, but this was said authoritatively this week to represent no permanent change in policy. Company has no other indie product in prospect and has no immediate intention of veering further from the dictum of about 18 months ago that it would handle exclusively its own pix.

First of the outside films is "Borderline," produced by Milton Bren. It went into release Feb. 9 and was taken on by U after it was in the can. Next two will be from Fidelity, the new Howard Welsch-Chester Erskine-A. Pam Blumenthal unit. Initialer will be "Man on the Run," starring Ann Sheridan and Dennis O'Keefe, which goes into production April 22. It will be followed by "Illegal Bride," starring Ginger Rogers, which goes before the cameras in June.

Universal has no interest beyond its distribution fee in the pix. It has made no guarantees on loans or otherwise participated in financing.

Blumenthal

as part of its assets "House by the River," with Louis Hayward, which had already been completed by Welsch.

Blumenthal, who for a time was associated with Enterprise, asserted he feels the time ripe at the moment for a multi-picture indie unit since the elements can be put together now at the best possible prices. Cost of talent and facilities have come down, he said, while market conditions appear likely to stay at least even. He added that he is also counting importantly on eventual income from TV rights on the features.

Bank of America loan, which is cross-collateralized on the five pix on the schedule, is for an amount in excess of $2,000,000, Blumenthal declared. Second money and guarantees are being put up by the three principal partners, he stated. They'll also take deferments on the pix, which will be budgeted at around $700,000. They'll be shot at Motion Picture Centre studios, but latter will get no participation in return for deferments for facilities, Blumenthal said.

First pic, which goes into production April 22, will be "Man on the Run," starring Ann Sheridan and Dennis O'Keefe. That will be followed June 1 by "Illegal Bride," starring Ginger Rogers; in July by "My Wife, the Celebrity"; in August by "Life of Helen Morgan," starring Paulette Goddard, and in September by "The Gentleman From Chicago."

Five additional pix are planned for next year, Blumenthal said.

same time and thus have his picture practically edited in advance.

Cost of the average B picture is now estimated at $200,000 and they are brought in on a seven or 14-day shooting schedule. Producers usually work on a five-day weekly rate, so that the extra two days at the end of the first or second week represent costly overtime. Fairbanks believes his multi-cam process can result in lopping that overtime work off the schedules, which can result in a 40% savings in the negative cost.

Producers also think they can adapt to their advantage some of the television acting techniques that will be made possible through use of the multi-cam system. Major studios, with sufficient money, top actors and experienced directors, can take the time, it is pointed out, to reshoot scenes from various angles, which require shifts in the lighting, etc. With less money and less experienced actors and directors, however, the B producers believe the best alternative may be to play full scenes in their entirety, as is done in TV. This system is made possible by multi-cam.

System received its initial video impetus last week when International Silver, sponsor of CBS-TV's "Silver Theatre," decided to shoot the final 13 shows of the current cycle via the Fairbanks system on the Coast. With sponsors and producers of other video dramatic shows now dickering with Fairbanks also, the system may result in a major move of TV production from New York to Hollywood.

WB Divorce

holders' suit by groups which preferred to remain in the lucrative theatre end of the biz.

Aug. 31 target date has been set as a result of the brothers' feeling that divorcement is now inevitable and the quicker they take the step and set their house in order under the new scheme of things the better. Also, since they have made the principal decisions on the method of divorcing and on the fact that they won't try to split themselves between production-distribution and the circuit, they might as well push full steam ahead on the more minor issues.

Although the three years the court allowed to complete divorcement is valuable in extending the time from which the company will be getting income from the theatres, other advantages are seen in arriving at a quick decree. D. of J. would undoubtedly be more liberal in the consent provisions of a rapidly-made agreement than it would in a long fight.

Major issue on which the company has to come to terms with the Government is which houses the chain must divest itself of, whether or not there's divorcement. If Justice shows liberality in this respect, the circuit will be of much greater value to a buyer and Warners will get a higher price for their shares.

Also, by coming to quick terms, the Government might be persuaded more easily to allow the production - distribution company to retain showcase theatres.

Decision to make a sale by Aug. 31 of the theatre assets is said to be behind the drastic retrenchment recently made in the Warner organization. Desire is to show maximum net during this period to enhance the value of the shares prior to sale. Current Warner prospects are said to be for a considerable reduction in gross earnings, but an upturn in net as a result of reduction in costs.

20th-Fox, which is legally in the same position as WB, is said to be awaiting further crystallization of the Warner decree before pushing for termination of its own case.

DE TOTH LINING UP NEW U.S.-BRIT. PIX VENTURE

London, March 7.

New Anglo-American production venture is being lined up in London by Andre de Toth, Veronica Lake's husband. Negotiations are proceeding on a basis of equal partnership with finance to come from both countries. According to present plans, it's hoped that production will be able to begin in the fall, and an initial program of three pix is scheduled.

Hollywood stars, producers and directors are to be imported and part, if not all the program, may be in Technicolor. Each production will be in the top budget class, probably in excess of $1,000,000.

During his London stay, de Toth has visited most of the studios, but will not make a decision on which outfit will be used until the deal is finalized.

Rockefeller

represented a "very private eastern syndicate" which was putting up the coin for the new venture and it itself would also be a principal. Avery Rockefeller, of the millionaire family, is the member of the firm represented in it title.

Bogie revealed a ceiling on its participation in the venture had been set, but refused to name it. He said the plans for foreign production were "very fluid" and more or less than the five pix announced by Wrather might be made.

Wrather will be exec head of the operation, Bogie explained, and will furnish screenplays, top stars and directors. Wrather and the Schroder-Rockefeller group will share in the financing the necessary dollars for production abroad, with local outfits overseas providing the currency of the country. American group will get western hemisphere rights and foreign financiers the eastern hemisphere.

Financing-distribution tieup in England might be with Associated-British-Pathe, with which negotiations are taking place currently. Operation, however, is not limited to production in Britain, Bogie said.

Fox Back to Universal Board

inform the U management of his intentions.

Nevertheless, U toppers had no idea how many proxies Eidell held and when during the voting in Wilmington it became clearly evident that he would be successful in electing himself, company reps present had to make a decision in a matter of minutes as to which of their own members they'd drop from the board.

Finger was put on Fox, since he appeared to be most deeply involved in other activities at the moment. He wasn't at the stockholders meeting, at which the management and directorate were repped by John J. O'Connor, who presided; Robert Benjamin, Leon Goldberg, Adolph Schimel and Eugene Walsh. Blumberg was ill and not able to attend.

No Criticism

Fox's colleagues insisted in New York this week that there was absolutely no criticism of him involved in the hasty decision to make him the low man in the casting of the proxies. There were assurances that he would be returned to the board as quickly as possible. That might be through the resignation because of severe illness of Paul G. Brown or by enlargement of the board from 15 members to 16.

Odd angle of Eidell's election was that the management group never before held proxies on so many of the 800,000 shares outstanding as it did for this meeting. Eidell voted a total of 63,000 shares, of which about 30,000 are said to be owned by his family. The rest he collected through a proxy solicitation. U management had heard some word of this, but apparently didn't believe Eidell would be successful in getting enough to elect a director.

That was made possible, however, by the system of cumulative voting the company uses. This is similar to proportional representation. It offered Eidell the opportunity to vote his entire block of proxies for a single director if he chose, rather than spreading the proxies among the 15 to be elected. By concentrating his proxies on one director they had the effect of being multiplied 15-fold and thus, in voting for this single board member, they had the power of approximately 900,000 shares.

U reps on the scene, not knowing of Eidell's friendly attitude or how many proxies he had, had to do some quick maneuvering to find out if he could elect more than one director. They discovered afterward that he had no desire to do so. They explained in New York this week that had they known of the number of shares Eidell controlled and his yen to be on the board, they undobtedly would have found a place for him on the management slate.

Incidentally, J. Arthur Rank, one of U's largest stockholders, handed his proxies to the management to vote. He has three directors—himself, Benjamin and G. I. Woodham-Smith. Other directors re-elected were Blumberg, Brown, Preston Davie, Albert A. Carthwaite, William J. German, Leon Goldberg, R. W. Lea, Franklin Nevius, O'Connor, Budd Rogers and Daniel M. Scheaffer.

ECA German Setup Nearer Realization

Washington, March 14.

The 1950 European Cooperation Administration media guarantees for the film companies sending films into the Allied zone of Germany moved a step nearer actuality last week with the signing of similar guarantees with 12 American book and magazine publishing firms.

The deals have been awaiting approval by the Western German government. The book-magazine proposition was lined up directly ahead of the picture program. With the publications approved and out of the way, the German government can now turn its attention to the pix. ECA spokesmen predicted that the film contracts were just around the corner.

TRADE WANTS TO KNOW: DID HOOPER PUT NIELSEN THROUGH $600,000 HOOP?

Despite the fact that Art (A. C.) Nielsen paid in excess of $600,000 to C. E. Hooper for his network AM and TV, plus Pacific Coast, rating services, and the initial conclusion that the competitive rating situation would be brought to an end, there's growing sentiment among the trade's top researchers that the picture is becoming more confused than ever.

The report is that Nielsen, having forked over the 600G for the Hooper business, is plenty burned over subsequent developments since signing on the dotted line. Not that Hooper isn't sticking to the letter of the law in carrying out his end of the deal with Nielsen to stay out of the network and regional picture, but apparently nowhere in the agreement is there a clause which says that Hooper cannot embark on a campaign which would reorient trade thinking and "reeducate" the radio and television industries in regard to national vs. city rating services. And Hooper, always one for getting maximum results from promotional hoopla (as witness his ability over the past five years to parlay his name into a household word) appears to be embarking on just such a campaign.

Going to Town

While Nielsen, a far more reticent operator, has settled for the distribution of a single pamphlet for industry distribution detailing his annexing of the Hooperating services, Hooper has been going to town with an almost daily barrage of "educational" literature calculated to shift the accent away from the national picture in favor of city ratings.

Having divested himself of the Pacific Coast service to Nielsen, for example, Hooper is now springing his own Coast service, offering at the same price three different reports monthly based on his "shift of accent" to major city studies and thus skirting any legal entanglements. Similarly, the "shift of accent" will be projected on a national scale, Hooper again playing it safe legally, via a five-city study.

Researchers concede that Hooper is within his rights in reorienting trade thinking, even at the expense of sniping away at the type of national service which Nielsen has inherited from him at a fat fee.

Instead of a peace treaty, researchers are of the opinion that coming weeks will witness a Hooper vs. Nielsen competitive race that will far outstrip anything that has gone before.

MPLS. 'FM ON WHEELS' TO FACE LEGAL TEST

Minneapolis, March 14.

City Attorney J. F. Bonner is investigating to determine the legality of radios in streetcars and buses to carry music and commercials. The plan has been announced by the traction company, which signed a contract with a group which will have its own FM station provide the programs.

The city attorney believes the streetcar company proposal may be governed by a 1938 ordinance regulating broadcasting vehicles. It provides an annual $50 license fee for each such vehicle, an amount in excess of which the company will receive, unless for the sole purpose of presenting a program of charitable, educational or religious nature.

Since the company's announcement of the plan the newspapers have published numerous letters from readers protesting against it.

KMHT's 52½G Sale

Marshall, Tex., March 14.

Request has been made to the FCC for transfer of control of KMHT, here, from the Marshall Broadcasting Co., to the Fort Worth Broadcasting Co. for a consideration of $52,500.

Principals in the new group includes Frank M. Skinner, with 98%; John R. Crouse, 33% (he's v.p. and chief engineer of KXOL, Fort Worth), and Russ N. Lamb, with 1.67%.

Shift of Accent

Here, in essence, is the new "Hooper Pitch" slanted toward his revamped operation, with its unwritten implication that "what I've got is more meaningful than Nielsen's":

"The most significant differences are no longer between networks or between programs. Today, on both radio and TV, the biggest differences are between cities."

Weiss Admits Offers, But Sez Don Lee Web Is Not Being Sold—Yet

Hollywood, March 14.

Reports that a deal for the sale of the Don Lee Network, regional unit and stockholder member of Mutual, were denied here yesterday (13) by Lewis Allen Weiss, chairman of the board. Weiss admitted, however, that he has been approached by a lot of prospective buyers, mostly promoters.

Weiss said that the public administrator of the estate of Thomas Lee, who leaped to his death three months ago, cannot even entertain a bid until the estate has been appraised, which will take another two months. He added that the web could not be sold until there is a division of the estate's assets, now tied up in litigation. Lee had willed the properties, which include automobile dealerships in California, several AM stations and a television station, to an uncle, but other relatives are contesting. All of Lee's enterprises might be sold as a package, Weiss indicated, but there would be no piecemeal disposal.

Would-be purchasers of the web are apparently reasoning that the heirs will want to sell in order to pay inheritance taxes.

ZENITH 9-MONTH NET HIGHEST IN HISTORY

Chicago, March 14.

Zenith Radio Corp. net profits for nine months ended Jan. 31 were highest for the period in the company's history, prez Eugene F. McDonald, Jr., reported last week. Net for the period hit $3,138,938, compared with $2,025,781 for the same period last year. Sales rose to $65,196,527, comparing with $56,951,492 a year ago.

Operations in all plants have been skedded for capacity production for the next several months, McDonald said. But despite full production, company will continue to allocate radio and video sets.

AFM Nixes Taped CBS Radio Series By Phila. Orch

National headquarters of the American Federation of Musicians has nixed the Philadelphia Orchestra's proposed series of transcribed Sunday afternoon radio concerts from New York, which were slated to start the end of April at the close of the New York Philharmonic broadcasts.

The Musicians Union action, it was understood, was taken after a protest by Local 802. Although the plan was agreeable to CBS symphony members, it was said a squawk was raised by a score of other musicians who were called in during the summer months to augment the web's orch, in performance of certain works.

Union execs minimized this factor and said the Philadelphia Orchestra tape programs were against the union policy, which never wants to supplant live shows with transcribed music. The action came as a surprise to the Philadel-

Government's Blast vs. Richards Recounted as L.A. Hearings Begin

Hollywood, March, 14.

Government charges that G. A. Richards fabricated news, used threats of dismissal against employees to force obedience to his instructions, that members of his staff resigned rather than carry out his orders to distort news were outlined Monday (13) here on opening day of FCC hearing against operator of KMPC.

Fred Ford, chief commission counsel, declared that Government will show Richards' license should not be renewed. "In the case of certain persons," Ford said, "Richards believed to have Communist leanings he ordered the items about them to be preceded with news about Communism. In some cases Richards tried to tie in the Communist news itself with the news of that person."

Hugh Fulton, chief counsel for defense, charged that hearing "was asked by James Roosevelt on stationery of the democratic party of California" and that complaints against Richards included assertions that "in recent years he was in favor of Republicans and opposed to election of Democrats, and was opposed to Communists and proponents of extreme left wing views." He added that charges came from "disgruntled former employees of KMPC." Clete Roberts, currently a newscaster on KFWB, will be Government's key witness. Roberts was head of KMPC news bureau two years ago. He was discharged, along with George Lewin and Maurie Starrels, Government alleges, because of their refusal to obey Richards instructions to color news prejudicial to certain minorities.

Hearing may take from three to six weeks.

Ferguson Attacks Inquiry

Washington, March 14.

FCC's inquiry into the G. A. Richards stations, now under way in Los Angeles, was indirectly attacked yesterday in Congress by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R.-Mich.), declaring that the commission has taken no action against an unnamed licensee who has been associated with "numerous Red-front organizations," Ferguson said: "On the other hand, I am informed that the commission has vigorously investigated another station owner who has expressed strong personal

'Gowns by P&G'

Now soap opera producers not only have to follow their Nielsens, they've got to watch hemlines go up and down. Procter & Gamble has set a big promotion with McKettrick-Williams, dress manufacturer, with the latter bringing out a line of 10 gowns named after and plugging P&G's washboard weepers. In case of the latter two airers, frocks will be tagged "Peggy Young" and "Anne Malone."

Plotkin to Head Up B'cast Bureau Of FCC? Speed Reorganized Setup

Centralizing Power

Washington, March 14.

President Truman asked Congress yesterday (13) to adopt a recommendation of the Hoover Commission to place greater responsibility for the administration of the FCC under its chairman. The President said the plan may not result in substantial immediate savings but will probably improve operations during the next few years "which will result in a reduction of expenditures as compared with those that would otherwise be necessary."

The plan reserves to the full Commission its functioning regarding revision of budget estimates and distribution of appropriated funds according to major programs and purposes.

Washington, March 14.

The FCC took the first step last week in a far-flung internal reorganization; when completed, it is expected to expedite processing of television applications, come the lifting of the freeze. The plan calls for the organization of the staff along functional rather than professional lines. It provides for the establishment of a Broadcast Bureau with its own engineering, legal and economic units. It conforms in general with certain recommendations made in a staff report of the Hoover Commisison on Reorganization of Government and certain provisions contained in pending legislation.

Agency is buzzing wth speculation as to who will be chief of the Broadcast Bureau. Name most mentioned is that of Harry Plotkin, assistant general counsel in charge of the broadcasting division of the present Law Bureau. Plotkin has been directing examination of witnesses from the Commisison's legal table at the current television hearings.

First of the four operating bureaus to be established is the Common Carrier Bureau, which begins operations April 3 with Harold J. Cohen, presently assistant general counsel, as chief. While concerned primarily with regulation of telephone and telegraph rates and services, the Bureau enters into television matters in connection with use of coaxial and microwave relays for video interconnection. It is also involved in use of transmission facilities for theatre television and Phonevision.

With the creation of the Common Carrier Bureau, the Commission abolished its present law, engineering and accounting bureaus, whose staffs will ultimately be assigned to the various operating bureaus. However, pending the establishment of the remaining three bureaus, broadcast functions of the old bureaus will be under the respective jurisdiction of new offices of general counsel, engineering and accounting, which will operate as major staff units.

Named to head the new Office of General Counsel was Benedict P. Cottone, presently general counsel. Curtis B. Plummer, now chief of the television broadcast division of the Bureau of Engineering, was named head of the Office of the Chief Engineer, with John A. Willoughby as Ascsistant Chief Engineeh. William J. Norfleet, now head of the Bureau of Accounting, was appointed to head the Office of Chief Accountant.

Others named were J. Fred Johnson as Chief Hearing Examiner and William K. Holl as Executive Officer. Johnson is presiding at the hearings in Los Angeles on the Richards case.

Will AFRA Win? Will Kay Return to WWJ? All Cleveland Is Tuned In

Cleveland, March 14.

By week's end, AFRA's local and WJW's top echelon including president William M. O'Neill are expected to have ironed out the Walt Kay dispute.

At the moment, station officials are standing pat that the Kay incident is finished, that Walt Kay and his "Kousin Kay's Korners" are no longer part of their program since Kay resigned following a dispute over whether a five-minute horse results and sports stanza should follow his 25-minute juvenile stint at 6:30.

AFRA's pitch is believed revolving around the possibility of a Hollywood ending; of being able to bring station and Kay together on behalf on all AM radio in Cleveland. AFRA has asked O'Neill for a meeting and the station president, who has returned from a Florida hiatus, is expected to meet with the local. Other station execs say if the request is made they'll be happy to sit down and talk.

Latest voice to be raised alongside the already hubbub of listeners, columnists, ministers, etc., is that of George H. Bender, former Congressman-at-large from Ohio and GOP chairman of Cuyahoga County. In a letter to O'Neill, Bender wrote: "I feel that the issue is one of such large public interest that you will accept this letter as the considered judgment of the executive leaders of the Republican Party in Greater Cleveland community

"I am in no way questioning the right which your station exercises in compelling Mr. Kay to resign, but I am sincerely hopeful that you will reconsider this position.

Kay resigned after station refused to permit him to state his position on sports program following his stanza and thus clear up his original editorialization (25) that raised the entire issue. Station had agreed to permit Kay to return if he would drop the entire matter, but Kay felt some explanation was in order.

Goebel Beer Network Again Set for Tigers

Detroit, March 14.

For the second year, WJBK has been assigned the key station role in the Goebel (Beer) Baseball Network of 28 stations blanketing Michigan for broadcasts of Detroit Tiger games.

Harry Heilmann, former Tiger outfielder and American League batting champion, will again handle the play-by-play. He'll be assisted by Van Patrick.

Using the successful programming formula which last summer gave WJBK as much as 50% of Detroit's afternoon radio audience, per Hooper, the station will schedule disk jockey Jack the Bellboy's show before and after all Tiger games.

CHI HOTFOOT ON TAP FOR NAB

What's Your Ideology?

Perhaps at no time since the "let's-keep-our-kilocycles-untainted" boys moved into the radio-TV picture, has there been such widespread apprehension and activity within network-agency circles designed to ferret out the so-called subversive elements.

Notably in television, top stars, supporting talent and bit players alike are being screened as to present or past political ideologies by the networks, clients and agencies involved. Oddly enough, in one known instance, a top Hollywood performer was designated "okay" for one TV guest dramatic shot, but nixed for another on the basis of some elusive left-to-centre sympathies in the past.

The widespread repercussions stemming from the recent appearance of Paul Draper on the Ed Sullivan "Toast of the Town" show on CBS has served particularly to alert others, especially since the reports have been circulating the trade that it almost cost Kenyon & Eckhardt the Lincoln-Mercury account. Nobody is going out on a billings limb, regardless of individual talent merits.

Chief spur in the current AM-TV loyalty campaign is Counterattack mag, which has been going to town with "case histories." Mag has practically become a Radio-TV Registry in servicing agencies and the webs with a "who's who" among alleged subversives. This was the mag which had to retract on Fredric March and Florence Eldridge, his wife.

Morning Checkouts Nicking NBC For $2,500,000; Nite Defection Too

Although NBC has been riding the crest on nighttime sales, with fewer time availabilities than any of the major networks, the web is taking it on the chin to the tune of nearly $2,500,000 in annual morning gross time sales via the cancellation route.

Both Kraft Foods and Sealtest have served notice that they're bowing out of the radio sponsorship picture, dropping the brace of morning Monday - through - Friday stanzas they've been bankrolling this season since exiting the Thursday night NBC roster.

Kraft is bowing out of the "Marriage For Two" serial in the 10:30 a.m. segment, and Sealtest is relinquishing the Dorothy Dix strip in the adjacent 10:45 period. Neither has been able to make a dent in the high-rated Arthur Godfrey competition on CBS, with "Marriage" currently settling for a 2.3 in the face of Godfrey's 8.2, and Dorothy Dix getting 2.5 opposite Godfrey's 8.4.

For years previously both clients have been identified with major nighttime radio programming (Kraft riding the Bing Crosby banner for years), but whether they'll return to radio next season is conjectural. It's been indicated that they may switch to video for the '50-'51 season.

On top of the two morning checkouts, NBC is also losing Mars sponsorship of the Wednesday night "Curtain Time" and the Anacin bankrolling of the Saturday night "Hollywood Theatre."

NBC Symph Faces Coinless Summer

NBC is still undecided how it will fill the 6:30 to 7:30 Saturday evening time during the six-week period that the NBC Symphony orchestra will be touring the major cities of the country during April and May.

However, one thing appears virtually certain—that U. S. Steel won't come in for the summer sponsorship ride of the symph at the end of its regular season as bankroller of the "Theatre Guild On the Air."

U. S. Steel picked up the symph tab last summer as a prelude to moving over the "Theatre Guild" dramatic show from ABC. The Steel directors have indicated that, come June and termination of the Guild contract, they'll beat a hasty retreat from radio.

Dave Taylor to Italy

Davidson Taylor, formerly of CBS, leaves tomorrow (Thursday) on the SS Saturnia for a four-month vacation in Italy, taking a villa in Florence with his wife, Mary Elizabeth Plummer, and daughter, Alison.

While primarily a holiday, Taylor may stay on to produce a film in Italy. He's also been offered a Government job.

'I'll Stand Pat'

Three years ago when Bud Stimson learned he was being transferred from ABC publicity to station relations he broke his leg skiing.

Last week Stimson learned he was to be moved to ABC-TV network sales. On the weekend he went skiing—and ended up with a badly bruised face.

Sterling Drug's $1,000,000 Hike In Radio Budget

Sterling Drug, considered one of the shrewdest buyers in radio (it's also one of the top spenders in the medium), is hiking its budget by $1,000,000 annually to strengthen its hold in the daytime radio picture.

Sterling is taking over all segments of the ABC "My True Story" program, the 25-minute Monday-through-Friday airer. Sterling has been sponsoring the program on a twice-weekly basis, but with Libby relinquishing its bankrolling on the other three days of the week, after a six-year identification with the program, the drug outfit is moving in for the fulltime spread. The three-day additional ride for Sterling adds up to between $950,000 and $1,000,000 in gross billings.

Sterling also sponsors the cross-the-board "Bride and Groom" on ABC and for years has been solidly entrenched in the daytime serial field. It also sponsors the Sunday night NBC "Album of Familiar Music."

HAYMES, JO STAFFORD TO 'CARNATION HOUR'

Dick Haymes and Jo Stafford will be the new starring team on "Carnation Contented Hour" starting March 19. Show has been using guest singers since the death of Buddy Clark. Haymes is dropping off "Club 15," which Miss Stafford is joining for twice weekly pairing with Bob Crosby.

On the new Carnation setup, Haymes will be the program's star and Miss Stafford the featured singer. Contracts are effective March 28, the singers making a guest appearance the previous Sunday. Carnation is one of radio's long run musicals, having been on the air since January of 1932.

MOUNTING GRIPES DUE FOR AIRING

Broadcasters around the nation appear to be storing up plenty of ammunition for the upcoming Chi convention of the National Assn. of Broadcasters, and from all indications both the small station operator and the bigleague network boys will be well represented on the firing squad.

With the NAB powwow deadline only a few weeks off, the gripes are mounting, and it's the opinion of many that the convention will resolve itself into a climactic showdown on the NAB leadership and administration.

The networks, with the possible exception of NBC, want to pull out completely. If they do, taking along with them the owned-and-operated stations, the NAB would be hard-pressed financially, since so much of the organization's income is derived from these highly-lucrative operations. The webs feel that they have little to gain from the industry's parent organization as it is presently set up. NBC, taking its cue from exec veepee Charles R. Denny, will string along not from any recognition that the NAB has the solution to its problems, but on the premise that "good or bad, the industry needs an organization and it must be supported."

Small Stations Griping

The small stations are griping because, it's felt, the NAB hasn't provided the necessary ammunition to translate success stories into sales in competing with other media. They point to the long-awaited, highly-touted all-industry film, "Lightning That Strikes," which was officially preemed at last week's luncheon of the N. Y. Radio Executives Club, and which got an almost universal panning from all segments of the industry. (Some of the boys have subtitled the film "Radio's Stromboli").

The current groping to find a general manager for NAB, a move authorized at the recent NAB board of directors meeting, with as yet

Bob Crosby Gets Off L.A.-to-N.Y. Hook By Exiting Pet Milk Show

Bob Crosby has obtained a release from the NBC Sunday night Pet Milk show, despite willingness of the sponsor to ink him to a firm 52-week deal for the '50-'51 season.

Crosby returns to the five-times-a-week Club 15 Campbell Soup show, which originates on the Coast. Since the Pet Milk musical emanates from N. Y., it would necessitate Crosby's L. A.-to-N. Y. junketing weekly. Milk client agreed to Crosby taping a couple shows monthly in advance to ease the burden, but bandleader asked out. However, he'll stay on until a substitute can be pacted.

Re: All-Industry Pic

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

The all-industry film, "Lightning That Speaks" is not quite as sad as some are saying, but the fact is that it would have been a lot better if the NAB committee members had asked their program people to sit in on some of the sessions. There are certain things which the industry's managerial and commercial brains just aren't equipped to tackle, and the creative side of our business ought to be given a chance to help.

Next time the committee goes to work on a project of this kind, it would be wisdom to invite men like Jim Gaines, Bob Saudek, Bob Heller, Bill Fineshreiber, Ted Cott and others (their omission here by name doesn't mean they shouldn't be there) to help shape it. Managers are really wonderful people, but they just can't know everything.

When The Smoke Clears, Ciggie Firms Expected to Leave a Flock Of Radio, TV Program Casualties

The radio-TV cigaret sponsorship picture will undergo radical and perhaps unprecedented changes by the time the '50-'51 broadcasting-telecasting curtain goes up in September. Agencies and clients alike are currently doing some overtime reappraising to balance the rating-cost charts and to stake a more impressive claim in the video sweepstakes.

Out of the current maneuvering and looking toward the new season, the picture shapes up thus:

Camels: The R. J. Reynolds and William Esty agency boys are reported looking closely at the Ed Wynn Saturday night situation on CBS-TV. It's all very well to ride the prestige tide in the wake of the critical acclaim accorded the Wynn kinescoped show, but those ratings, particularly now that NBC looks to rule the Saturday TV roost, aren't particularly conducive to rejoicing. A cancellation at the seasons' end, if the rating don't shape up more impressively, wouldn't surprise the trade. Meanwhile, Camel is shedding itself of the "Screen Guild Players" radio program and is shopping around for a new program deal.

Lucky Strike: Vincent Riggio and the America Tobacco hierarchy are so bullish on TV that they eventually envision a Monday-through-Sunday video representation. In the Monday night Robert Montgomery "Lucky Strike Theatre" on NBC, Luckies feels it's got TV's counterpart to radios' Lux dramatic stanza, and is now staking a Sunday night claim in sponsorship of CBS' "This Is Show Business."

On the other hand, Lucky Strike is looking twice at some of its radio properties, notably the cross-the-board Frank Sinatra "Light Up Time" on NBC. Ciggie company isn't too happy over the rating pull, considering the shows high cost, including the $10,000 weekly earmarked for Sinatra. Rumors as to the fate of the Saturday night "Hit Parade" crop up annually at this time, but best guess is that

The Ratner Touch

The show-minded merchandising hoopla attending those R. H. Macy's full-page advertisements in the New York dailies since Vic Ratner checked in as the $60,000-a-year ad-promotion veepee for the department store, is occasioning plenty of trade comment.

Last week's Bob Hope layout, for example, tying in the store's "Pays to be Thrifty" slogan with the star's b.o. record at the Paramount, N. Y., (on top of the Jack Benny ad a few weeks back) was recognized as a hangover from the Ratner CBS promotional technique. In terms of department store advertising, the show biz fillip is regarded as one of top merchandising stunts of recent vintage.

RCA's 250G Tab For Toscy Junket; Radio Gets Share

NBC affiliates in the 20 cities which Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony orchestra will visit in April and May have been asking "how come?" in view of the fact that RCA, which is sponsoring the tour, was allotting considerable coin for newspaper advertising but was expecting a free ride from the stations.

As a result, RCA last week earmarked an additional fat chunk of coin for a heavy schedule of spot announcements, starting this week, to precede and follow the regular Saturday night broadcasts.

As it stands now, the tour will cost RCA $250,000. That includes $150,000 for newspaper and radio advertising and another $100,000 for the 70 stand-in musicians NBC must hire for network programming for the six-week duration of the tour. NBC will hire the musicians, but will be reimbursed.

RCA estimates that the boxoffice take in the various cities will just about take care of the actual tour expenses, including traveling, etc. Toscanini, incidentally, will have his own private railroad car, with fully equipped kitchen, refrigeration, etc.

CAMPBELL GOES INTO ACTION ON CHI FRONT

Chicago, March 14.

First shakeup following arrival of Wendell Campbell, H. Leslie Atlass' protege who recently took over here as CBS radio sales manager, was slicing yesterday (13) of Howard Keith from sales staff.

Keith was replaced by Mackenzie Ward, moving over from Chi Mutual sales.

Ommerle to CBS

Harry Ommerle, who was a CBS producer 15 years ago, moves back into the Columbia fold effective March 20 when he becomes manager of radio program sales. He succeeds Tom Connolly, who has moved over into CBS television program sales.

Since leaving CBS in 1937, Ommerle has been identified with talent agencies, notably William Morris and A. & S. Lyons. For the past couple of years he's been operating his own package setup.

There's an NBC Future in Pepsi

Sheldon Coons, NBC consultant and closely identified with the David Sarnoff-Frank Folsom RCA management, has been projected into a sphere of importance within the Pepsi-Cola company, reportedly at the instigation of Milton Biow, who handles the Pepsi business.

As the new public relations-promotion minded board member of the reorganized soft drink company that is trying to reassert itself in competition with the more affluent Coca-Cola operation, Coons' move-in is seen as clinching an NBC future in Pepsi's advertising programming plans. Immediate conjecture within the trade was whether the company's present tenancy of ABC with its sponsorship of "Counterspy" would be affected.

In its present Thursday night 7:30 berth, program fetches ABC its highest rating for the night, 10.3, and outrates all competing shows in the same time period.

Ronson Prefers To Light Up TV; Drops AM

Ronson Lighters is dropping the Johnny Desmond five-minute show on ABC after tonight's (Wed.) broadcast.

Reason for the move is Ronson's use of TV, with the bankroller having placed the televersion of MBS' "20 Questions" on ABC-TV and WOR-TV, N. Y. Agency is Grey.

17th ANNUAL

VARIETY

SURVEY OF

RADIO—TELEVISION

SHOWMANAGEMENT

It's SHOWMANAGEMENT Time.

For the 17th year, VARIETY is conducting its annual SURVEY of SHOWMANAGEMENT in American broadcasting.

This, the mid-century mark, is a particularly good point for a reappraisal and stock-taking. Radio is no longer playing a "single." It's now AM-TV in the biggest, next-to-closing "sister act" in the history of show business. The younger member of the team may be grabbing the spotlight more often; but over the past year there has been growing realization that oldtimer AM is still smash boxoffice. Only a year ago some overexuberant trade gentry thought the video kid would relegate his partner to the small time. But 't'aint so.

And so VARIETY wants to find out in this survey of SHOWMANAGEMENT who are the outstanding leaders, innovators and creators in both sight and sound broadcasting; those radio broadcasters, stations and personalities who during the past year contributed the most in demonstrating that radio is still an effective and potent medium for entertainment, education and sales. We want to know about those shrewd and realistic radio showmen who didn't try to play King Canute in stemming the TV tide, but rather refused to write off their own great medium, and accepted video as a new—and tough—competitor that could be met by ingenuity and resourcefulness.

By the same token VARIETY wants to single out the imaginative leaders in TV who have played dominant roles in helping the young medium achieve its present stature; those who have in the post-war span of only four years parlayed video into its position as a major force on the American scene. Naturally VARIETY realizes that television is still a pioneering medium, searching for new techniques, new patterns and new formulas. It still doesn't know all the answers. But in appraising the contributions of the TV entrepreneurs and creators, VARIETY believes the pace of TV development has been so rapid that video must be judged by the same high professional standards as apply to radio broadcasting. What seemed fresh or daring only a year ago may be cliche today.

As usual, VARIETY has set no categories for awards. They may range from recognition for programming, promotion, public service, to sales effectiveness, technical advances and all-round managerial skill. Your entries will decide.

VARIETY will also reprise last year's Phi Beta Variety keys for outstanding personalities in both AM and TV.

So tune up. The downbeat is April 28. Don't bother over orchestrating your contribution. Keep its short and concise. How it sounds is more important than how it looks.

AFFILIATES CRY 'CHAIN GANG'

Savannah Stations' United Front Vs. Newcomer Cuing Future Problems

Washington, March 14.

Radio stations in Savannah, Ga., in a move to maintain "proper ethical standards" of broadcasting, banded together last week to protest an FCC grant of a permit for a new outlet in the city to Eurith D. Rivers, Jr., son of the former governor of the state. Under an association called Savannah Radio Council, the city's five stations told the Commission that Rivers' practices, in selling time for religious fund soliciting programs, raise "a serious question" as to his qualifications.

Council's petition, filed through Marcus Cohn, Washington counsel, was unprecedented in showing a united front by all existing stations in a community, to keep out a newcomer on grounds that he has failed to live up to previous commitments on programming. Action is considered to have broad implications in possibly setting an approach to the problem of overpopulation of stations in certain areas.

City's broadcasters are concerned that Rivers will establish in Savannah another WEAS which he operates in Decatur. Council informed the Commission that despite representations that WEAS would devote only 5% of its schedule to religious programs, all of which were to be carried sustaining, the station is now giving 27% of its time to such programs, the majority of which are sponsored by ministers soliciting funds.

WEAS Operation Checked

In support of its petition, the Council monitored Rivers' WEAS operation for a three-day period last month. It reported that 36.7% of the time was given over to religious programs, that all such pro-

Corwin-UN Show To Get Balto Airing

Baltimore, March 14.

Announcement last week by Charles Roeder, in charge of news and special events at WCBM, the Mutual affiliate in Baltimore, that the station would not carry Norman Corwin's United Nations documentary, scheduled for a March 26 airing, has brought a vehement denial from John Elmer, owner of the outlet.

Roeder's announcement, printed in last week's VARIETY, added that the station would send a letter of protest to Mutual execs. Both Mutual and United Nations officials expressed surprise over the reported move, but were given assurance by the station that the program nix was without official sanction.

Elmer cleared up the situation with the following statement:

"The announcement (that WCBM

Penna. Liquor Board Forces Pitt Nitery To Yank Luncheon B'casts

Pittsburgh, March 14.

A ruling of the State Liquor Control Board has forced Monte Carlo, downtown nitery, to discontinue its daily luncheon broadcasts over WPGH. Show, started couple of months ago to boost the noontime business, had Len Firestone and Paul Richardson interviewing guests and passing out assortment of prizes.

Booze licensees have a regulation which prohibits any giveaways in places were whisky is sold. Either WPGH and Monte Carlo managements were unaware of or had forgotten it, but investigators put the finger on the show and program was yanked. As a result, spot has dropped its luncheon sessions altogether, except for a Saturday matinee, when show is also presented, and doesn't open now until 5 p. m.

Junior Celebs' Show

"Junior Celebrities," a stanza on which children of show business and society figures will be interviewed at Billy Reed's Little Club on East 55th street, N. Y., will be aired shortly by WOR, N. Y., with probability that it will go network on Mutual after the fourth broadcast.

Parents will also appear on the airer, but the youngsters will be featured. Show is a Jack Barry-Dan Enright production and will be heard Sundays at noon. Barry-Enright outfit is also auditioning an amateur talent program, "Stars and Starters," for NBC, as a possible summer replacement.

Transit Radio Sees Bus Music As FM Builder

Washington, March 14.

Transit Radio joined with WWDC-FM last week in asking the FCC to throw out a petition by Franklin S. Pollak and Guy Martin, Washington lawyers, to have the music-as-you-ride service declared illegal. Transit charged the opposition with operating on the theory that "if they cry long and hard enough of constitutional violations, some people will believe their cries."

Transit told the Commission an investigatory hearing might be fatal to "a new endeavor which has not yet achieved the economic stability which is required to fight protracted legal battles." TR, it said, "is still in its infancy, and if it is to survive it must grow. This growth can be stunted by the pendency of an investigation by the Commission, and if the periods of indecision were sufficiently extended it could be fatal."

As for technical questions raised by Pollak and Martin, including use of a supersonic signal to boost commercials, Transit suggested that the Commission decide such matters immediately and not allow them to become the forum for nontechnical attacks on the service.

Transit said the Commission has given its approval to the music-news type of radio operation in areas served by a large number of stations. "It is submitted, therefore, that a station whose entire broadcast day is devoted to programs of a type which transit companies find suitable for their patrons is in all probability operating in the public interest. . . . No useful purpose could be served by a general hearing on this question."

TR said it didn't contend that a licensee should program solely for the riding public, but claimed its riders "constitute a large numerical segment of the public and represent a cross-section of various economic and social groups."

Company said the FM sets in

Neal WERE Switchover Cues Cleve. Browns Move

Cleveland, March 14.

Bob Neal has resigned from WGAR to move over to WERE, in what is believed to be the first step in bringing the Cleveland Browns' pro football games to WERE. Neal handled the Browns over WGAR for the past four years, and had been with the station for five years.

It is also expected that Neal will work with Jack Graney and Jim Dudley in broadcasting the Indians over WERE and he might also be utilized during the simulcast over WXEL.

GRIEVANCES PILE UP VS. NETWORKS

Several affiliated stations are complaining of a network "move-in" that may cut their revenues and tip the scales in favor of the chains. Latter, meanwhile, retort that what helps the webs benefits the outlets in the long run.

The station's gripes, covering both AM and TV, grow out of these developments:

(1) ABC's request to its stations to waive charges for local cut-ins for Trimount Clothes on "Stop the Music."

(2) NBC-TV's "Saturday Night Revue," which stations feel siphons off coin that would otherwise go into spot business, on which stations make more than network accounts.

(3) ABC-TV's request for outlets to give Procter & Gamble two-year rate protection for a televersion of "Beulah."

(4) ABC's "four by five" plan, according to which two sponsors exchange segments of time so that each gets four plugs daily on two shows at the cost of a half-hour weekly show, which is far below what comparable spot announcements would cost.

(5) Moves by all the webs, in both AM and TV, to sell clients restricted hookups, thus paying stations at the national rate for business which might otherwise be spot and paid for at a higher rate.

(6) Requests from chains for commercials in station-option time.

Behind these developments is the drop in web billings, impelling the nets to ink business which stations feel they should have. When a large soap company can get minute announcements for several products on a network airer, affiliates claim, it reduces spot expenditures. At the same time, it's charged, outlets yield to requests for free cut-ins and similar concessions, because "we're afraid to stand up to the networks."

The cuffo cut-ins have been used by Mutual for two years and, ABC argues, it has to follow suit in order to meet the competition. Additionally, ABC says, if it can garner more business by waiving cut-in charges, stations will get back many times the dough they waive. ABC adds that 200 stations have already agreed to waive those fees.

Stations' objections to rate protection on "Beulah," similar to beefs on General Mills "Lone Ranger" deal last year, is that they will be bound to low rates despite mounting costs and growing circulation. Then, it's argued, giving

D.C. Radio Correspondents Elect Bill McAndrew

Washington, March 14.

William R. McAndrew, general manager of WRC and WNBW, the NBC-owned outlets in the national capital, was elected president of the Radio Correspondents Assn. last week. A charter member of the association, he succeeds newscaster Elmer Davis.

Others chosen by the association which controls the radio galleries of Congress were: Francis W. Tully, Jr., Yankee Network, vice president; Bill Shadel, CBS, secretary; Hollis Seavey, Mutual, treasurer; members of the board at large, George Marder, of U.P. radio; George Reedy, Arrowhead Network; and Rex Goad, Transradio Press.

Headley Expands

H-R Representatives, Inc., station rep outfit formed last month by Frank M. Headley and Dwight S. Reed, has inked WGFG, Kalamazoo, and WJOM and WJIM-TV, Lansing.

WGFG is a 1 kw ABC affiliate and WJIM is a 250-watt ABC outlet. Latter's TV adjunct is skedding to preem around April 1.

H-R has appointed James M. Alspaugh as its San Francisco manager. Alspaugh was formerly with John Blair.

To Cleveland, TV Is Still Dessert To a Calory-Packed Radio Diet

By SANFORD MARKEY

Cleveland, March 14.

AM radio remains a healthy, vital, growing advertising media in the Greater Cleveland area despite television's soaring set sales that now stands at over 177,000.

What's more, radio officials aren't showing the slightest jitters about alleged television inroads. They point to the opening of two new AM stations; of increased billings as of a year ago and new programming.

Newest Cleveland indie, WERE, poo-poo's television. Station voice, Sid Andorn, points out that since WERE turned from FM to AM, it has moved into the black; is gaining new sponsors, and enticing those who have moved into television to move back into radio "'where they'll realize the greatest market for the dollar spent."

WEREs mushrooming position is due, to a great extent, on its getting the broadcasting rights for the Cleveland Indians, and apparently, the all-but-in-the-bag contract for the professional footballers, the Browns.

Andorn maintains, however, that the station's entire program policy will be so flexible that it will give to the public what the public wants and not be bound to the moribund network policy.

WGAR's John F. Patt maintains talk that AM radio is dead in Cleveland is like Mark Twain's famous retort to his passing. "It is," declares Patt, "a great exaggeration."

Recognizing that TV has nipped the sales market, Patt maintains "we found it necessary to sell harder . . radio was and is the greatest mass advertising media ever devised . . we have tried to punch a

Offhaus' WPIT Exit

Pittsburgh, March 14.

Russ Offhaus, who came to WPIT from Boston just a year ago to be local station's No. 1 disk jockey and headspinner on the Million Dollar Ballroom, and downtown indie have parted company. Offhaus is reported to be considering number of other connections, although there's nothing definite yet.

Nick Perry has temporarily replaced him on the Million Dollar Ballroom, but John Merdian, manager of WPIT, has dickers on with a local personality to take over Offhaus' old berth permanently. Expects the deal to materialize in next week or so.

Seattle Setting Pattern for New Pubservice Pay

Seattle, March 14.

A "public interest program" form, dreamed up some time ago by George Dean, public relations manager of KOMO, NBC outlet here, has aroused a great deal of interest nationally and has also brought new revenue to the station.

The form, which KOMO requires every applicant for free time to fill out, asks pertinent questions about the applying organization's aims, functions, what it expects radio to do, etc., and ends with a statement, which the applicant must sign, that states the organization is not spending any money in any other advertising medium, and that if it does it will pay KOMO for services rendered.

More than 50 stations throughout the country have requested copies of the form, and the Broadcast Advertising Bureau of the NAB has also expressed interest in its use.

Use of the form has not changed KOMO's policy on public service programs in any way, says Dean. Free time is only given to organizations and causes which deserve it, and he also says that the station does not care whether or not they are paid for such services. But he emphasizes the fact that if an organization is spending money for advertising in other media it should also pay for radio time. If it does not, then KOMO is happy to cooperate in giving time.

Pitt's Quickie Wrapup Of 2 Tune-O Sponsors

Pittsburgh, March 14.

KQV, which bought the local rights to the hotter-than-a-pistol Tune-O package, record-platter version of Bingo, has already disposed of the program to a couple of local sponsors. Across the board show will hit the air next week, in an afternoon slot, under joint auspices of Fashion Hosiery Shops and Brent's Cleaners.

Station had flock of prospects for Tune-O, but Fashion and Brent's were first on the line. Latter has been off the air since last May when it washed up a two-and-a-half-year deal with Harold V. Cohen, drama editor of Post-Gazette and VARIETY mugg here, who had been airing his Cohening the Town for cleaning shops every Saturday night over WJAS.

Lorain Anti-Trust Dismissal Nixed

Cleveland, March 14.

Federal Judge Emerich B. Freed turned down a defense plea to end the Government's anti-trust suit against the Lorain Journal after the prosecution had completed its case showing the Journal took accounts away from competing WEOL in nearby Elyria.

In asking for the dismissal, Defense Counsel Parker Fulton said the Government failed to establish (1) restraint of trade, (2) that interstate commerce was involved, and that even if such commerce was involved, there was no restraint on trade and (3) no conspiracy was involved to monopolize trade. In rejecting the plea, Judge Freed said he wanted the case carried through to its conclusion.

The Government, through antitrust attorney Victory Kramer, had sent more than 60 witnesses to the stand and introduced 256 exhibits

Radio Writers Living In 'Purgatory' State as TV Spreads, Sez D.C. Scribe

Washington, March 14.

Radio writers today are living in something of a "purgatory" between the advent of television and the threatened obsolescence of sound broadcasting, Louis Hazam, NBC documentary scripter, told the National League of American Pen Women here last week. But Hazam, who authors the web's weekly series, "Living 1950," which has won five major awards the past year for public service, said he is not yet convinced that radio writers "will pass out of the picture."

Most of the TV budget today, he pointed out, goes for technical improvements and equipment, leaving very little for creative

FCC Trying to Wind Up Color Hearings; Stanton Slated for All-Out CBS Bid

Washington, March 14.

After a two-week recess, FCC resumes its color television hearings tomorrow (15), with every indication the agency will push hard to get out a decision as soon as possible. Efforts of latecomers to join the proceedings are being turned down, except where a showing is made that something substantial can be contributed toward clarifying the issues.

Nine hearings have been scheduled for the balance of the month, and it is believed these should permit completion of direct testimony of the color phase of the proceedings. Cross-examination of witnesses will then take place, followed by rebuttal testimony. Barring unforeseen delays, it is likely the sessions will wind up by the end of April. Several months will then probably be required to analyze the testimony and prepare the case for Commission action.

Upon resumption of hearings this week, it is expected that Frank Stanton, CBS prexy, will take the stand in an all-out bid for adoption of Columbia color, on the grounds the system is ready for commercialization while others are still being perfected. Stanton called on President Truman last week and, while evasive on the purpose of his visit, admitted he discussed television. It's possible he may have talked on broad patent questions involved in the color controversy, from a standpoint of national policy.

That the Commission means business in its desire to wind up the hearings was shown in its denial last week of two requests to present testimony. To Wells-Gardner & Co., of Chicago, which wanted to testify regarding public demand for large-size screens and "probable" public reaction to the three proposed color systems, the Commission wrote that in view of its desire "to reach a determination at the earliest possible date with respect to the issues relating to color television," intervention at this late date "would not be warranted."

Similarly, to the Communications Measurements Laboratory of New York, which is working on a continuous dot sequential color system to operate with 8 mc, the agency said it has already speci-

Autry Burned at Atlanta Videoing of Show; Gate Seen Hurt as a Result

Atlanta, March 14.

Gene Autry was plenty burned when he found out that his matinee, starting at 4:30 p.m., was to be televised over WSB-TV, Atlanta Journal station, when he brought his own show here Tuesday (7). Most school kids hiked immediately from their classes to their TV sets, generously inviting non-set-owning cowpoke devotees to join them at Autry parties.

Cowboy star's beef had considerable basis in fact, since he drew but $4,000 worth of patrons into 5,000-seat Municipal Auditorium. The night performance attendance was a mere corporal's guard, since most of the moppets caught the show in the p.m. or on TV, and a $2.40 top at the night show proved to be a little steep for the natives hereabouts to pay out to see the Autry opus.

Alternate-Week Sponsor For 'What's My Line?'

Stop-Ett deodorant this week signed to pick up the tab on CBS-TV's "What My Line?" Mark Goodson-Bill Todman package which has been aired as a sustainer for the last several weeks. Show will occupy the Wednesday night 9 to 9:30 slot on alternate weeks, starting April 12. It will rotate with the show to be sponsored by Toni, which tees off a week earlier. What program Toni will buy has not yet been decided.

Wednesday night period is presently occupied by the "Abe Burrows Almanac." CBS has made no decision about whether to find another slot for the Burrows show or drop it from the air and try to peddle it from a kinescope print.

Enough's Enough

Washington, March 14.

Yesterday's (13) press demonstration of the color system of Color Television, Inc., turned into a news conference as a result of the presence of Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.) of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The senator, who is often credited with being responsible for the FCC color hearings, answered most questions freely.

But when he was asked when the Commission would act on the color question, he arose and said, "I better get out of here."

CTI Comes Back In Color Field With Okay Test

Washington, March 14.

Color Television, Inc., of San Francisco, put on a highly successful demonstration here yesterday (13) of its tint process and got back in the running for FCC consideration. Due to operational difficulties resulting from transfer of its laboratory equipment from the Coast, the system had failed to function properly when it was shown at comparative demonstrations before the Commission. But this time it was a different story. The colors were good and the pictures came through excellently on black and white receivers, proving the system's compatibility.

Chairman Edwin C. Johnson of the Senate Commerce Committee, who witnessed the performance, said: "I've seen a lot here that satisfied me. No one can discount CTI after this demonstration." Johnson told CTI prexy Arthur Matthews he would like to have other members of his committee, which has jurisdiction over FCC, as well as other Senators, see the system. "There's a great interest in these demonstrations," he said.

Matthews said he will ask for another opportunity to stage an official demonstration before the FCC. He said he would prefer to show the system in Frisco where CTI has better facilities and can operate at its best, but he indicated he would settle for another Washington test. Company demonstrated informally for Commission members last Friday (10) with satisfactory results. Additional demonstrations will be held this week.

Johnson told reporters he would like to see "a composite" of the

Dizzy Dean's Du Mont TVer (Fore & Aft Yanks) Gets Philip Morris Coin

Importance of sports to broadcasters in providing revenue not only through the games themselves but also in programs around them is pointed up in Philip Morris' purchase, via Biow agency, of Dizzy Dean on WABD, N. Y. The erstwhile pitcher will conduct 10-minute pre-game and post-game interviews with baseball players, writers and celebs at the N. Y. Yankees 63 daytime games. Before the 14 night frays Dean will stage a 25-minute telecast, with a 10-minute stanza after the game. This will be the fourth year WABD has carried the Yankee sked.

Philip Morris is backing the ex-hurler with coin saved by cancellation of the Herb Shriner cross-the-board show on CBS-TV. In order to take the PM assignment, Dean has dropped the midwest network he had for the St. Louis Browns ballcasts. WABD buy marks the ciggie outfit's bow in TV sports, a field in which Chesterfield (N. Y. Giants baseball) and Luckies (college football) have been active. PM backs "Candid Camera" on CBS-TV and has five AM network shows.

'Pat 'n' Johnny' Expands

Detroit, March 14.

The "Pat 'n' Johnny" show, which has picked up nearly a full quota of sponsors in less than a month on WXYZ-TV, has been expanded from five to six afternoons a week.

New Saturday show will feature music and interviews of special interest to teenagers and men with special emphasis on visits with sports celebrities, outdoor sports films and the like.

Candy Companies Sugar Up Video's Coffers; Rank 7th

Candy companies are moving into video in a big way and now rank seventh among all product groups in tele, according to Publishers Information Bureau data. Reason for the splurge is that confectionery commercials in the medium do so well that retailers are asking jobbers for orders of "those television bars." Trade is also pointing up the significance of TV's effectiveness in moving low-cost, large-volume merchandise.

Curtis Candy last week bought "Knot-hole Gang" on WOR-TV, N. Y., to precede baseball (see separate story) and M&M Candy dropped radio (CBS' "Joe DiMaggio Show") to pick up a segment of ABC-TV's "Super-Circus." Part of the latter series is also sponsored by Canada Dry for its soft drinks, in a similar classification, biggest spender in the group. Pepsi-Cola is also heavily in TV spots.

Among the companies already in are Powerhouse, sponsoring "Captain Video" on DuMont, and Mars backing part of "Howdy-Doody" on NBC-TV. Nestle, Clark and Fifth Avenue bars also are promoted via spots. In addition, New England Confectionery (Necco) and Peter Paul are looking over the field.

Another sign of activity is the sweets outfits' agency shifts. M&M Candy has just shifted from Lynn Baker to William Esty, and on April 1, Peter Paul will consolidate its account with Maxon because of its hiked budget for all media.

No TV Takers On Chi Sox at 110G

Chicago, March 14.

The possibility that TV cameras won't gain entry this summer into Comiskey park, home of Chi White Sox, loomed larger last week as station salesmen appeared to be losing their zest in their attempt to peddle the expensive package. With American League entry's opener skedded for April 18, time is growing short to land a bankroller or bankrollers willing to pick up $110,000 tab Sox owners are asking for video rights.

WGN-TV, which had an exclusive option on the Sox, has dropped the exclusive, having its hands full selling its remaining half of the Chi Cubs' telecast. Peter Hand Brewing Co., for Meisterbrau Beer, is lined up for sponsorship of half of WGN-TV's Cubs telecast. WBKB is off the hook on their Cub games, with two bankrollers pacted last month.

Besides the price, the 20 night games of the Sox schedule have weakened both WGN-TV and WBKB's enthusiasm in landing sponsors. To carry the night games this summer will mean displacing several advertisers with attendant problems. Possibility remains that the two stations still in the picture may work out a deal with Charles Comiskey, Sox prexy, to carry only day games for a reduced tab. WBKB, with its CBS tieup, would find the night games difficult to handle.

ASCAP Decree

Government consent decree in the ASCAP anti-trust suit was handed down in N.Y. federal district court yesterday (Tues.).

Coy on Color, Off-Color TV

Norman, Okla., March 14.

FCC Chairman Wayne Coy said here tonight (Tues.) he hoped but would not predict that the freeze on TV stations would be lifted before the year is out. Speaking at the annual conference on station problems at the U. of Oklahoma, Coy said he hoped that the RCA single-tube will be developed and perfected. "However," he said, "in the case of this tube, as in the case of other much-heralded color television marvels, neither the Commission nor the rest of the country can afford to count such eggs before they are hatched. In the past few months I have seen too many press releases describing perfect television badly mutilated by bad performance."

Taking a crack at bad taste in radio and teevee programming, Coy suggested that stations and nets "clean house before public opinion demands the more drastic remedy of governmental action." He referred to complaints received by the FCC on "vulgarity" and "degrading antics" and said, "When a comedian gets so big that his network can no longer handle him, then we have a case of the tail wagging the dog. The boy who used to express himself with chalk on a wall is now provided with a television screen. The world has moved from the horse-and-buggy days to the electronic age but this type of comedian is still peddling livery-stable humor. The radio and the television carry it straight into the home without having taken the precaution to see that he is house-broken. Propriety is sacrificed for profit. The result is off-color television—tainted television."

Coy also criticized broadcasters for overdoing crime on the air, saying that the FCC is receiving "mounting protests against the merchants of death and hawkers of horror." He added that the situation is worsening.

Hint Jukebox Interests at Work In Duluth TV Ban in Bars, Liquor Stores

Minneapolis, March 14.

Duluth, Minn., which hasn't any television broadcasts of its own but where the handful of TV receiving sets get the KSTP and WTCN programs from here about half of the time, has banned television not only from its barrooms, but also from stores that sell liquor by the bottle for consumption off the premises.

The city commission, wrestling with the problem for more than eight months, had petitions signed by more than 3,000 bar patrons in favor of the barroom TV and petitions against them signed by more than 500 church people, but it voted 3 to 2 to prohibit the television. The ban, effective April 10, was hailed by the Rev. J. J. Runyan, Duluth Council of Churches executive secretary, as a great victory. "We think the city council majority is willing to consider the churches' influence," he said.

Jean James Minneapolis Tribune staff writer, sent to Duluth to get the story, said in her yarn "there is a strong suspicion in Duluth that the jukebox interests, and maybe the theatre owners, are happy about it, too."

Miss James also wrote in her story that "several tavern owners predicted that the end of the barroom TV saga is yet to be written." One of them, she said, put it this way: "There's going to be a lot more stink before this thing is settled." She found that fewer than 10 of Duluth's beer and liquor establishments have TV sets now and that the opinion is that it'll probably be more than two years before television broadcasts are started there.

At least half of the tavern owners don't want television anyway, ban or no ban, because they fear patrons will come in, sit down, buy one bottle of beer and nurse it through a whole basketball game, for example, according to Miss James.

Cleve's Record Set Sale

Cleveland, March 14.

February television set sales totaled 22,134, an all-time high for any one month. This brings sets in this area to 176,474.

Previous high for any one month was December, when sales reached 18,197.

Pa. Liquor Board Nixes TV Tourneys On Licensed Spots

Philadelphia, March 13.

Weekend ruling of the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board prohibiting holders of liquor licenses from conducting contests for prizes on the licensed premises threatened three television programs here.

Coin machine operators have been using video as means of promoting product, notably by staging championship run-offs in various sections of city at recreation centers, clubs, fraternities, etc. In recent months "Q-Ball" and Shuffle Bowling have both set up TV tournaments, with selected contestants appearing on telecast to compete for grand prizes, as well as awards in the eliminations.

"Q-Ball" is carried by WFIL-TV and Shuffle Bowling has half-hour segments on both WFIL-TV and WCAU-TV. Liquor Board interest in the tele tournaments stems from fact that many of the "recreation centers," from which the contestants come, are saloons and neighborhood taprooms. Bars are obvious locations for coin machine games and the additional fact that most bars have television sets make medium ideal for promotion.

Frederick T. Gelder, chairman of Liquor Board, said regulations prohibiting "giving things of value" to get customers had been enlarged to include "contests for prizes." The order, Gelder said, includes all types of contests, such

BILLION TV BILLINGS BY 1955, SEZ VOGEL

Syracuse, March 14.

American business will be spending $1,000,000,000 annually to bring topnotch television programs into 24,600,000 homes by 1955, Ernest H. Vogel, manager of marketing for the General Electric electronics' department, predicted in a talk here to the Syracuse Advertising and Sales Club.

He estimated that over 500 television stations would be in operation at that time, interconnected by four major networks, and more than 28,500,000 television sets will be in use, with 3,600,000 homes having two receivers.

NBC, CBS TO SPARK EARLY SATURDAY NITE

Both NBC and CBS moved this week to strengthen their early Saturday evening programming as part of the intense competition for the Saturday night audience. NBC set a new half-hour program starring Hank Ladd as emcee to take over in the 7:30 to 8 p.m. slot, starting this week (18). Titled "Waiting for a Break," the show will feature understudies from current Broadway musicals and legiters, as well as outstanding chorus talent.

CBS, for its part, inked a program featuring magico-mind reader Kuda Bux for the 7:15 to 7:30 p.m. period. With Mason Candy Bars as sponsor, it tees off March 25. NBC show will be launched as a sustainer, with the initialer including Lisa Kirk, featured in "Kiss Me, Kate," who will introduce her understudy, Joan Kibring, as well as Rudy Tone, understudy for Harold Lang in "Kate."

NBC'S 'ME, TOO,' ON TV ALERTNESS

Four TV Webs' Audience Pull

NBC television, reflecting the greater number of its primary affiliates in comparison with competing networks, again led the other three major video webs in average sponsored program ratings in the January network Hoopers, most recent available. Web, in addition, led with more sponsored shows, more homes reached and more stations used. As a result of the larger ratings and greater number of stations available to NBC advertisers, the web claims it is able to deliver an average of 130,000 more homes per program than CBS-TV, its nearest competitor.

Following is the four-network breakdown in the various categories for January:

	Average Rating	No. of Programs	Average Homes Reached Per Program in Hooper Cities	Average Hooper City Stations Per Network Program
NBC	27.2	28	853,300	23
CBS	21	26	723,175	17
ABC	20	11	314,553	15
DuMont	14.7	6	305,908	12

TV Problems in Hectic Going-Over At Chi Confab; Theatre Angle Stressed

Chicago, March 14.

Problems facing the TV industry were given full airing at the three-day National Television Conference attended by 260 video officials which ended here last Wednesday (8). Station managers, wrestling with red-ink operations, presented divided viewpoints on programming methods. Agency people offered varying opinions as to the effectiveness of the medium for individual products. This diffuse quality of video success stories, ranging from strong approval to friendly skepticism, was echoed by advertiser representatives along with complaints against unstable program costs.

Morning session of closing day was enlivened by argument between Henry C. Bonfig, Zenith Corp. veepee, and Robert H. O'Brien, secretary-treasurer of United Paramount Theatres, over impact of video on theatre audiences. Bonfig, in describing Zenith's Phonevision, said tele viewers are going to film theatres less and less, and some will stop altogether. This, O'Brien denied, saying TV will result in no such drastic change in theatregoing habits. There will be changes, he admitted, but the theatre, "rooted as it is in our oldest and most cherished social practices, will survive them."

WNBT's Femme Daytime Spree

Pressing to round out its daytime television plans before the new schedule tees off May 2, WNBT, key N. Y. station of the NBC-TV web, has retained Martin Stone Associates, indie package agency, to supervise an hour-long audience participation show for women, which will probably be patterned after radio's "Breakfast in Hollywood." Show is to be aired from 10 to 11 a. m. cross-the-board, preceding Kathi Norris' "Television Shopper." Quarter-hour cooking show featuring Josephine McCarthy will probably follow the "Shopper" program, from noon to 12:15 p.m.

TILLSTROM PREPPING 'OZ' FOR FALL PREEM

"The Wizard of Oz" fantasy will probably emerge on television next fall when Burr Tillstrom, co-owner of the "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" TVer, puts it on out of Chicago. It will be a combo of live and puppetry, with an extensive production setup. It would be a half hour, weekly.

The teevee rights are owned by Al Levy.

'Beat the Clock' on TV

"Beat the Clock," radio quiz show which had a run on the CBS network last year, will be aired by the web as a television program starting next Thursday (23). It's to be slotted each Thursday at 9:45 p.m., starting off as a sustainer.

Show is a Mark Goodson-Bill Todman package.

Tuesday Bounces Back Into No. 1 Spot; Sunday 2d

Greater percentage of television setowners are now using their sets than ever before in the industry's history. That fact, revealed in a roundup of the most recent network Hooperatings, indicates not only that the so-called novelty factor in video viewing is less than was originally supposed, but that, if the trend continues as set circulation increases, other forms of show biz are in for a maximum of competition.

Hooper report for January, the latest available, also reveals Tuesday night regained its place as the top viewing night of the week, with Sunday a close second. In addition, the report underscores the heavier competition for audiences in N. Y. than in other network cities surveyed. Of 62 shows on which ratings for both are available, 49 showed a network rating bigger than its N. Y. rating, while eight had a difference of less than one point, and five had a higher rating in N. Y.

Steady increase in the percentage of sets tuned in during the month resulted in a sets-in-use figure for January of 60.3, highest of any month since network Hooperatings were instituted. Industry analysts point out that set sales enjoyed a tremendous spurt during the final three months of 1949, but believe the number of new sets was

CBS' 50G STUDIO NUT FOR STORK CLUB SHOW

CBS television will spend a reported $50,000 to build a studio on the third floor of the Stork Club, N. Y., from where it plans to originate a 15-minute across-the-board stanza. Faye Emerson will probably be tapped to femcee the show, in which she'll invite visiting celebs to chat with her before the cameras.

Deal for use of the Stork's facilities was inked last week with Sherman Billingsley, owner of the eatery, by CBS program veepee Hubbell Robinson, Jr. Starting date for the series has not been set but it will probably be slotted from 7:15 to 7:30 p. m.

WEB FEELS SURE OF ITS FUTURE

By GEORGE ROSEN

The old adage "the good that men do lives after them" carries an "even into TV" appendage in regards to NBC currently trying to peddle its highly-lauded "Saturday Night Revue" to potential clients.

In the face of the critical and lay acclaim accorded its Saturday night marathon video showcase, NBC had hoped that the burden of wrapping up the necessary 15 bankrollers would be considerably eased. But the going hasn't been easy, and even though the network last week signed its fourth sponsor—Whitman's Chocolates—NBC is frankly disturbed over the general agency-client attitude toward the web.

In effect, NBC is now feeling the TV repercussions of a recognized lack of creative braintrusters in its programming operations. For despite the avowed merits of the Saturday night show, prospective clients, it's known, have been throwing back at the network such comments as: "Why hasn't NBC got a Tony Miner?" Or, again, "Why hasn't NBC created a 'My Friend Irma' or 'Godfrey's Talent Scouts'?"

A Few Questions

While acknowledging such shortcomings in radio, NBC, however, feels such criticism is unwarranted as regards TV. Who, the network argues, was the first to innovate the arena theatre production technique in video? Who was the first to recognize the potentialities of a major dramatic showcase by sustaining the Theatre Guild TV series? Who was the first among the TV networks to bring championship prize fights to the view-

WBZ-TV Shaves 'Sat. Rev' To Pick Up Gillette Coin

Boston, March 14.

Three top basketball games which Gillette is sponsoring on 26 stations via ABC-TV will be seen in this city on WBZ-TV, the NBC-TV affiliate, because WNAC-TV, the ABC outlet, is tied up with a local commercial. To carry the games WBZ-TV will have to cancel the last half hour of NBC's "Saturday Night Revue." Cut into the big NBC show is reportedly being made because of Gillette's importance to both webs.

Telecasts, all of which start at 10 p. m. and originate in Madison Square Garden, will cover the National Invitation Tournament finals on Saturday (18); National Collegiate Athletic Assn. eastern regional finals, March 25; and the annual East-West all-star game, April 1. Agency is Maxon.

CBS-TV's $750,000 Saving Via Its Own Production-Line Technique

Taking a hefty swipe at gloomy predictions that television's skyrocketing production costs would soon drive out all but the top-spending advertisers, CBS-TV has come up with a new expense-saving technique that will save a total of $750,000 this year for its sponsors and its house-built sustainers.

Secret of the new system lies in the establishment of production-line methods for the usual production facilities, such as sets, props, costumes and other program necessities. Web now has 18 different weekly shows which require different scenery, and the production line has resulted in a weekly savings on these of $15,000, from which is derived the $750,000 per year. For another example, CBS points to "Studio One," a house package which is now bankrolled by Westinghouse. Through use of the new system, production costs on the show have been cut 26% over last year.

Cost-saving method is based on steady reemployment of sets and storage of props. Where the web at this time last year was building expensive sets, using them once and then destroying them, it now has a catalog of basic sets which can be repainted, rearranged and used over and over again. (Same situation holds true for props. Without adequate storage space, CBS last year was forced to rent props at consistently high rates. Web now has 1,800 square feet of space filled with props which it owns, and plans to have another 12,000 square feet by next fall. Consequent savings from the re-use of props alone is estimated at 20% over last year.

Decrease in costs, CBS emphasized, will be passed on to adver-

TV a 'Luxury'

Cleveland, March 14.

Television sets are a luxury and won't be tolerated by city and county relief officials in homes of persons receiving charity.

Furthermore, reliefers who have TV sets must either sell them or else be stricken off the roles. To return to relief, they'll have to be reinvestigated. Cleveland and Cuyahoga County relief heads turned up more than 25 sets among their 4,000 clients. Several had purchased sets before they had been forced into relief.

GF Hopping On 'Hoppy' in Every Available Market

General Foods, in the first move to spend some of that new $30,000,000 yearly ad budget on television, is working on a deal with NBC to take over sponsorship of the Hopalong Cassidy western films on stations throughout the country. Through Young & Rubicam, one of the three agencies sharing the account, GF is shopping for contracts on the westerns, buying them up on local stations as fast as the pacts with local sponsors expire. Series had been sold by NBC originally on a local participating basis.

Which of its many products GF will plug on the video films hasn't been determined, but it will probably be a breakfast cereal to be grooved for the moppet viewers. Outfit also is currently bankrolling a radio version of "Hoppy" Sunday afternoons on Mutual, which will give it a virtual monopoly on the services of Bill Boyd, who portrays the title role, on AM and TV. Move will also put GF in the video picture alongside General Mills, one of its chief competitors, since the latter firm sponsors the "Lone Ranger" series of vidfilms on ABC-TV.

Deal for the "Hoppy" westerns is believed to mark only the begining of GF's anticipated splurge into video. Food firm will undoubtedly increase its evening programming.

Mounting Squawks Cause Nix Of Robeson on Mrs. Roosevelt's Airer

Scheduled appearance of Paul Robeson on Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's NBC-TV show next Sunday (19) for a discussion of "The Negro's Position in the American Political Picture," threw the whole radio-television "loyalty" issue into Page 1 newspaper prominence Monday (13). Result was that within 24 hours after the announcement that Robeson had been booked, the scheduled program was yanked and NBC was breathing easier.

Fact that Robeson would appear next Sunday, along with Rev. Adam C. Powell, Jr., was announced by Mrs. Roosevelt at the close of her program last Sunday. No sooner had the show gone off the air than the NBC phones started buzzing, demanding "how come?" NBC started putting the heat on Elliott Roosevelt, who packages the program along with Martin Jones. The situation was intensified Monday when the N. Y. Journal-American projected the issue via a Page 1 story, pointing to mounting squawks over the scheduled appearance, particularly among Negro leaders.

NBC's discomfort increased, with the pressure on Elliott Roosevelt and his mother to "forget the whole thing," with the Roosevelts finally yielding, calling off the program. Another panel of speakers is being substituted with Mrs. Roosevelt discussing the State Dept.

NBC found itself in the middle, for on the one hand it found itself putting the pressure on Mrs. Roosevelt to yank Robeson but at the same time not desiring in any way to antagonize her in view of her standing and the fact that she's parlayed the program into considerable stature and one of the most prestige-laden in video.

Armstrong's NBC $1,000,000 TVer

Armstrong Cork has purchased the Tuesday night 9:30 to 10 slot on NBC-TV for a new half-hour dramatic series starting next month. Show will replace "Life of Riley," which leaves the air following expiration of the current cycle sponsored by Pabst Beer. Armstrong show, which will be packaged by NBC, has been set on a firm 52-week basis and will get a full ride on all the web's live and non-interconnected stations. Total time and talent budget for the year runs over $1,000,000.

Addition of Armstrong to the list of video advertisers underlines the growing importance of the floor covering companies to TV broadcasters. All of them represent "new" money in that they had almost completely shunned radio. Bonafide Mills now bankrolls the "Bonnie Maid Versatile Varieties" on NBC-TV, Congoleum-Nairn has that web's "Garroway at Large," NBC also has the "Mohawk Showroom" (Robert Quinlan), and Masland sponsors the Earl Wrightson "Masland at Home" show on CBS.

'CRUSADE,' WPIX COP DU PONT TV AWARDS

Television kudos, included for the first time in the Alfred I. duPont Awards, went last week to ABC-TV for its "Crusade in Europe" vidpic series and to WPIX, N. Y., for its telecasting of current news and events.

Cash awards of $1,000 apiece went to Morgan Beatty, NBC commentator, for news reporting and interpretation; WNOX, CBS affiliate in Knoxville, Tenn., for public service by a station of more than 5 kw; and WWJ, NBC's Detroit outlet, for public service by a station of 5-kw or less. DuPont awards have been made for eight successive years.

WHO NEEDS

Hope doesn't. When he arrived on Broadway two weeks ago, the Great White Way was darker than a clergyman's waistcoat. No coal.

There didn't seem to be many people around the city of Times Square, either. That is, not until the Paramount Theatre opened its doors to a record-smashing crowd eager to see and hear America's funniest comedian.

Where was Hope when the lights went out? Packing them in at the Paramount.

Almost a week went by before the lights went on again. When they were bright enough to read the small print at the bottom of the attendance ledger, Bob Hope had broken records by the theatre-full.

Since the marquee lights went on at the Paramount 23 years ago, the biggest box-office names in show business have played there. Now Hope has topped them all by smashing every existing b. o. record—daytime, nighttime, week-end and holidays. Not only a shot-in-the-arm for a show business sagging under dimmed-out lights, but Hope's jet landing on Broadway has hypoed business all along the street.

But that's not particularly unusual, either. Hope's visits to Boston and San Francisco create the same sensation they do in Father Knickerbocker's grown-up burg.

Hope gets around, but there's one place he visits regularly and he's plenty welcome. Every Tuesday at 9:00 pm (EST) Hope drops in on millions of American homes, where radio listeners are tuned to NBC. When Hope's at home in America's living room, he's not content with warming the cockles of an occasional heart; Hope's humor heats the whole darned house.

Hope's a great guy...at his greatest on... NB

UP FOR PAROLE

With Arthur Vinton, Chet Stratton, Rod Hendrickson, Jimmy Lipton, Mary Michael, Joe Julian, Ed Latimer, Susan Douglas; Harry Marble, narrator; Lee Vines, announcer
Producer-director: John Dietz
Writer: Allen Sloane
30 Mins.; Fri., 9 p.m.
CBS, from New York

"Up For Parole" is a twist on the usual whodunit. Instead of placing the emphasis on detection of crime, it stresses moral and ethical factors and listeners are asked to sit in judgment as a parole board sifts a convict's plea for release. After the dialer has made his decision, whether the prisoner remains in jail or goes free, he can compare his choice with the action of the parole board in the actual case.

The concept is good in that the stanza is dealing with human values rather than violence, and it impells audience participation and discussion on right and wrong. And where most suspense shows are weak in motivation, "Parole" explores the whys of lawbreaking. However, on the series opener Friday (10) the psychological insights lacked real depth and the drama tended in spots to hokiness.

Story concerned an interne, only two days away from getting his degrees, asked to help his brother who was shot in a holdup. Moved by family loyalty, he performed the operation, thus violating several laws, including practising without a license and harboring a criminal. But the questions were put, should society be deprived of his abilities as a doctor and were his motives good in trying to save his brother's life? It made an interesting moral poser and a realistically complicated one too, because the brother died as a result of inexperienced attention. However, case chosen to kickoff the series could have been more direct.

Format of a hearing before the parole board plunged into the yarn quickly and incisively, with flashbacks to earlier action and interrogation by the jurists varying the narration. Acting and scripting were generally good and had an authentic ring, although in some scenes the interne's conflict was over-dramatized. Harry Salter's musical bridges were highly effective. Bril.

THEATRE GUILD
WMCA, N. Y.

The Theatre Guild has a novel ticket selling device in "Radio Boxoffice," a 20-minute Monday-thru-Saturday series began on WMCA, N. Y. Monday night (13). Prospective patrons of the Guild's four current Broadway shows can reserve tickets by phoning the station, and ducats assertedly will be held for at least 48 hours in the caller's name.

While the program concededly will save theatregoers time in waiting on line or writing letters for seats, it goes about drumming up business by means of the same blatant, commercial techniques which are more in keeping with the exploitation of liver pills than the promotion of theatre tickets.

Format has emcee Larry Curtis doing a spiel for the quartet of Guild shows in every gap between records. Appropriately, the latter were culled from Guild musicals of the past — "Oklahoma!," "Carousel," etc. Sole bright spot was a brief interview with Shirley Booth of the "Come Back, Little Sheba" cast. However, it's doubtful that many dialers were still tuned in for her stint after those triphammer reminders to call "CIrcle 6-2500!" Gilb.

ONE GREAT HOUR OF SHARING

Producer Director Writer: Al Crews
30 Mins., Sat. (11), 6:30 p.m.
CBS, from N. Y.

Put on by CBS Saturday (11), this show served as a potent trailer for a chain of one-hour church services held Sunday (12), at 11 a.m. Program, like the prayer meets, was conducted in line with the Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Churches' appeal to secure funds for the resettlement of DPs and the furtherance of Christianity in Europe and Asia.

In presenting its case, broadcast hit an effective note in picturing U. S. living conditions as contrasted with those in foreign countries still suffering from the results of the recent war. Situations portrayed were dramatically handled with a realistic quality that should have had little trouble in fermenting sympathy among the listening audience.

Harold Stassen, Pennsylvania U. prexy, filled a brief spot with a pitch for the dialers to join in the Sunday services.
